INITIALLY FOR 2 MONTHS AND THEN THE DAILY COLLEGIAN AND CAMPUS AVE WILL DETERMINE IF THEY WOULD LIKE TO EXTEND THE CONTRACT.

PLEASE CONTACT GREG EDSON AT
greg@campusave.com
INCLUDE NAME, TELEPHONE, MAJOR AND YEAR AND A BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF YOUR QUALIFICATIONS.

Wildcats outrun UM

W. HOOPS from page 12

game early. The score was tied at 15 with 13 minutes remaining, but Villanova went on a 26-12 run to enter the locker room with a 41-27 lead. A comeback down 14 points is very much possible at home, but it becomes more difficult on the road, especially when your team's been struggling all season in this department.

One bright spot on the offensive side of the ball for UMass was Kate Mills. She hit 8-of-10 shots from the floor, including both attempts from the line. Dacko's game plan involved getting the balls to Mills often in the low post, but she was unpleased with the execution. Based on her success from the field, it seems it would have been beneficial.

The rest of the starting lineup didn't fare as well on offense. They combined to hit 6-of-27 field goals, including a 3-of-13 night from second-leading scorer Pam Rosario. She came into the game shooting .512 on the season but couldn't get her shots to fall.

Rebounding has been a focus of the Minutewomen this season, and they held their own against Villanova. They out-rebounded the Wildcats 34-29, and also held a nine to seven edge on the offensive glass, an area they've struggled this year.

"When they missed a basket, on occasion when they missed a basket," Dacko said, "they came up with the big [offensive] boards that really just broke our spirit."

Witman finished with a game-high 21 points, and was also the lead volume shooter in the game with 18 field goal attempts, including 11 3-point attempts in which she connected on four. Karcic, Villanova's second leading scorer finished with 18 points, but shot 7-of-10 from the floor and had a more efficient game than Witman.

Since Villanova relied so heavily on outside shots, it went to the line just five times, but didn't need good inside play due to its outside shooters hitting on all cylinders.

In order to beat the Wildcats, Dacko wanted the Minutewomen to engage in a defensive battle. In her first year at UMass, she beat Villanova, and that game was in the 50s for points. Harry Perretta has coached Villanova for 31 years and runs the Princeton offense, which utilizes lot of movement without the ball, screens, and cutting to the basket. It's difficult to defend, and the Minutewomen found this out first hand.

"They limited their dribbles," Dacko said. "It was almost like they played with the ball with no air in it because they never put the ball down initially, and they would just pass and cut hard."

UMass recorded no blocks or steals in the game while turning the ball over 15 times. The Minutewomen also had 13 assists on 21 made baskets, while Villanova registered 25 assists on 29 baskets with 6 turnovers ... Sakera Young contributed 8 points on 4-of-7 shooting as well leading UMass in rebounding with 6 ... Mills was the only member of the Minutewomen to score in double figures ... Dacko wanted to utilize her bench more, but this game each starter with the exception of Alisha Tatham played over 30 minutes.

Mike Connors can be reached at miconnor@student.umass.edu

Alisha Tatham netted just two points in the loss to Villanova, adding four assists.

Stefanie Gerardot scored four and grabbed four boards last night against the Wildcats.

Flyers win 8th straight

Xavier topples No. 24 N.C. State, Phillips continues hot streak

By Coley Michalik
Collegian Staff

The best way to shake off a losing streak is with a confidence-boosting win streak. That is just what Dayton has done since starting the season 0-2. The Flyers have won their last eight games, the program's second-longest win streak in school history, and are currently tied for the fourth-longest in the nation.

The Flyers (8-2) also boast another streak dating back to 2001. Dayton has registered at least one 3-point field goal in each of its past 199 games, the longest current streak in the A-10.

Dayton's senior forward Nikki Oakland recently won her second straight A-10 Player of the Week award. Her 19-point, 10-rebound average over the past week was enough to lead her team to a 2-0 record and keep their winning streak alive.

Her 13-point, nine-rebound, three-block effort allowed the Flyers to defeat Indiana, 67-59, on Dec. 5 while her 21-point, 11-rebound outburst against Drexel carried the Flyers to their conference-best 8-2 record.

A-10 W. Basketball

There is no reason the Flyers couldn't be 10-0, considering their first two losses of the season were by single-digits. There is also no reason the current eight-game winning streak should end anytime soon, with no ranked opponents on the horizon and no conference matchups until January.

The Flyers could potentially be 13-2 when they face off against well-tested Temple Jan. 12. The Owls have already faced five ranked opponents this season but could scrounge up just one win against No. 20 Purdue while keeping it close against No. 10 Georgia, 67-51, and No. 4 Stanford, 63-54.

Xavier tops No. 24 N.C. State

The Musketeers won their first game against a ranked opponent since 2001 when they knocked off No. 24 North Carolina State 51-49 on Dec. 4. Sophomore forward Amber Harris led the way with 19 points and 13 rebounds to lead Xavier (5-4) over N. State. This was Harris' 15th career double-double.

The last time Xavier beat a ranked opponent was in the 2001 NCAA Mideast Regional Semifinal when the Musketeers topped No. 3 Tennessee. This win against N.C. State ended Xavier's 10-game losing streak against ranked teams and brings their record to 6-17 all-time versus ranked foes.

The Musketeers held a 40-32 lead with 10:20 to go in the second half after freshman forward Ta'Shia Phillips nailed a turnaround jump shot. After this bucket, NC State started a 7-0 run to narrow the gap to one point and a 40-39 game with 5:10 left.

Sophomore forward Maureen Hester reversed the scoring streak by draining a 3-pointer that sparked an 8-4 burst by the Musketeers. Phillips would add a layup with two minutes left to bring the score to 51-45.

NC State held Xavier to only one point over the last two minutes but only scored four and saw a 3-pointer go in and out at the buzzer. The Musketeers shot a miserable 39.2 field goal percentage however NC State shot an abysmal 35.4 percent, including 1-for-14 from distance, in only their second loss of the season.

Phillips impressive again

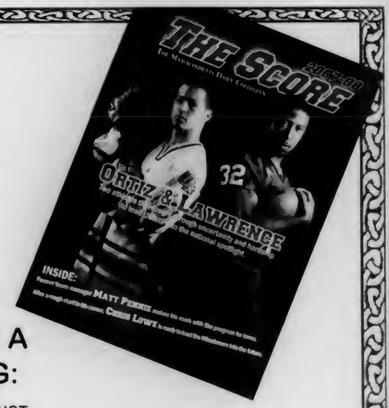
Xavier forward Ta'Shia Phillips scored 10 points in 28 foul-heavy minutes, but it was enough to register the win as well as her fourth-straight A-10 Rookie of the Week honor. Phillips had just 10 points and five boards in the win over NC State. However, her record-tying 20-rebound performance in the loss to Louisville boosted her average to 11.5 points and 12.5 rebounds over the short week and gave her rookie of the week honors for the first four weeks of the season.

Phillips leads the A-10 with five double-doubles and is ranked second nationally in rebounds. Phillips set and tied the Musketeers school record for rebounds in a game, with 20, and continued Xavier's streak of dominating freshman with the school's seventh-straight rookie of the week selection. Sophomore Amber Harris claimed the honor the final three weeks of last season as Phillips has grabbed the first month's worth of titles.

While Phillips was putting up numbers for Xavier, another freshman was putting in work over a three-game stretch. Saint Joseph's freshman center Sarah Acker shot 78 percent from the floor last week as the Hawks (5-5) dropped three in a row to Villanova, No. 22 Wyoming and Northern Illinois. Acker averaged 17 points along with seven boards and two assists while posting her third double-double of the year in the tough 66-64 loss to Wyoming. This is Acker's first A-10 Rookie of the Week award while dropping a career-high 26 points against Northern Illinois and a career-high five assists versus Wyoming.

Back on track

After starting the season 5-0, the Bonnies dropped two in a row and were slipping after an embarrassing 64-37 romping to No. 16 West Virginia on Dec. 1. The Bonnies (7-2) defeated Florida Atlantic, 78-72, and Colgate, 64-41, in a six-day span. St. Bonaventure does not face any more ranked opponents until No. 21 George Washington on Feb. 16.



George Washington also got back in the win column, defeating Villanova Sunday, 67-52. The Colonials (7-3) shot 48 percent from 3-point range and were carried by a 34-point burst in the first half while holding Villanova to just 19 first-half points. The two teams split the second half with both squads putting up 33 each.

George Washington was held in high regard this pre-season, being ranked as high as No. 10 by some predictions — No. 10 by Slam Magazine, No. 11 by Sporting News, No. 13 in Lindy's, and No. 24 in Athlon Sports.

The Colonials look to improve on their record and ranking as they face off against Loyola-Maryland on Dec. 18 and No. 11 Texas A&M on Dec. 20. With two wins this week, the Colonials will likely climb the rankings and could find themselves in the top 15 with a 9-3 spot. However, the team has to do it on the court in order to earn the jump. GW closes out the calendar year against Pepperdine at home on Dec. 30 and would help out their cause riding out the year on a five-game win streak.

Coley Michalik can be reached at cmichalik@student.umass.edu

SPORTS NIGHT WITH THE DAILY COLLEGIAN At THE HARP

JOIN US FRIDAY NIGHT AT 7PM FOR A SPORTS SPECTACULAR FEATURING:

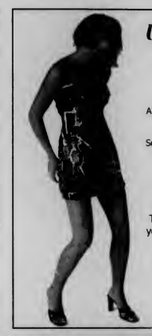
- UMass Men's Soccer Final Four Showdown Against Ohio State on the Large Indoor Projector
- The Daily Collegian's "The Score" 2007-'08 Release
- Appearances and Autographs from Featured UMass Athletes

THE HARP
Home of the GREAT TUESDAY TRIVIA

The Harp accepts OCMP, VISA, MasterCard, AmEx, Discover & Debit cards.

HOLIDAY GIFT PAGE

ATKINS FARMS Country Market
Rt. 116 & Bay Road, South Amherst, MA
(413) 253-9528 * (800) 254-1972



Gifts of Good Taste

Let Atkins deliver a Specialty Gift Basket or Gift Box to friends and family locally or anywhere in the U.S.

Food gifts are hand selected and packed to preserve freshness.

Local delivery orders still being accepted.
Order online at: www.atkinsfarms.com

Urban Exchange
Brand Name & Designer Clothing and Accessories
resale/consignment

Abercrombie & Fitch, GAP, J. Crew, Citizens, Coach, Seven for all Mankind, Rock & Republic, Dior, BEBE

Banana Republic, Hollister, Juicy Couture, American Eagle, Betsey Johnson, Marc Jacobs

Drop & Shop Weekend
December 14th, 15th & 16th
Take 20% off your favorite item when you drop off clothes this weekend only, earn Holiday Cash!

No appointment necessary

413-585-8729
233 Main St.
Northampton MA

WINTER SPECIAL
10x20 FOR $60 A MONTH TILL MAY

AMHERST SELF STORAGE
(413) 253-0664
1270 Federal St. (rt. 9)
Belchertown, MA
01007

Office at Stadium Storage
333 Rock Hill Rd Hadley

Security Gate • Surveillance Cameras
Well Lit • Lock Check
Access 24/7
Office Hours 9am-3pm
Pallets Included
Moving Supplies Sold
U-Haul Rental Available
5x10 Motorcycle Winter Special
$30 till may 1st at both facilities:
Stadium & Amherst Self Storage

QUALITY AFFORDABLE BICYCLES

Still featuring end of season sales!

See us for great gift ideas...

bikes, lights, fenders, winter clothes, books, calenders, gift certificates, and much more!

Sales - Service - Rentals

Trailside Bicycles
413-582-0733 or 413-265-6055

GIFTS · JEWELRY · FASHION · DESIGN

WARM UP FOR THE HOLIDAYS AT Scandinavians

25 S. Pleasant St., Amherst
22 Strong Avenue, Northampton
(413) 256-0004
WWW.SCANDINAVIANS.COM

Newman Cafe & Catering

Breakfast served all day!
Daily lunch & Dinner Specials
Over 100 menu items!

A GREAT PLACE TO STUDY, RELAX, AND EAT!

WE DO CATERING
For all types of events, we can design a menu to suit your needs

Open over Winter Break!
Hours: M-F 8 AM - 2PM

Located on UMass campus, next to ROM

413-549-0401 413-263-6798
472 NORTH PLEASANT ST • WWW.NEWMANCAFE.COM

OFF THE WALL GAMES
Refer to this ad and receive 10% off

41 Russell St. (Rt. 9) Hadley, MA 01035 Phone: 586-5431
Mon - 3-9pm, Wed., Thurs. 1 to 3:30pm, Sat & Sun 11am - 8pm

Weekly Gaming Schedule

Monday
World of Warcraft TCG 4pm FREE
Board Game Night 5pm - 9pm FREE

Tuesday
CLOSED

Wednesday
Warhammer 40K 5pm - 10 pm FREE
Casual Magic Night 6pm - 10pm

Thursday
Warhammer Fantasy 5pm - 10 pm FREE
Warmachine Hordes 5pm - 10pm FREE

Friday
Magic: The Gathering LNM Booster Draft 6:30pm
$10.00 Entrance
(You keep what you draft - Packs for 1st and 2nd Place)

Saturday
Magic: The Gathering Legacy Tournament 1:00pm
$5.00 Entrance

Sunday
Magic: The Gathering Constructed type II
Tournament 1:00pm
$5.00 Entrance

Tables are always open for gaming anytime during the week!
Free Wireless Internet Service

Hometown feel to Classic for UM

M. HOOPS from page 12

UMass (6-2) has played solid basketball of late also, bouncing back well from its disappointing loss to IUPUI on Dec. 1. After an 11-day layoff, the Minutemen played their best defensive basketball of the season, defeating Marist, 83-68, at Mohegan Sun Arena in Uncasville, Conn., on Sunday. UMass upended Syracuse, 107-100, three days prior to falling to the Jaguars.

Ford feels his team can keep up its recent success, provided the defensive effort Gaffney and others displayed against Marist isn't a one-time deal.

"It's something that we've tried to stress to them so they can understand that we won with our defense the other night," Ford said. "The only reason why we won the game was because our defense propelled our offense. And we need more of that; it's no secret that our offense is our strength, but the first seven games of the year I don't think we played much defense at all."

The main responsibility for the UMass defense will be to slow down dynamic BC point guard Tyrese Rice. The junior floor general breaks down defenses with his scoring abilities as well as his ball handling and passing. His 20.9 scoring average and 6.3 assists per game are easily tops on the team.

One aspect of the team defense that concerns Ford is rebounding. UMass is a relatively undersized team and will have to step up its efforts on the glass to contend with the strong rebounding team that coach Al Skinner has in Chestnut Hill. The Eagles are out-rebounding their opponents by over four per game (39.9 to 35.4), while the Minutemen are the opposite – getting out-rebounded 38.5 to 33.2.

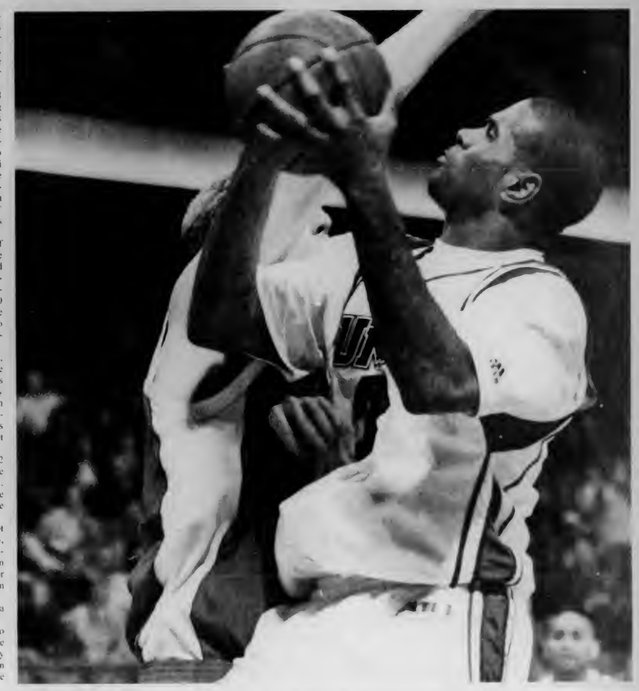
"We're not a great rebounding team and this is by far our biggest challenge we've had all year long," Ford said. "They are the biggest, most physical team that we will play against. They rebound at several different positions and that's one of my biggest concerns right now."

The Eagles are led in the frontcourt by forward Shamari Spears (13.9 points and 9.1 rebounds per game) and center Tyrelle Blair, who is becoming a defensive force with over five blocks per game.

Forward Tyler Roche (5.8 points per game) and shooting guard Rakim Sanders (11.5 points and 5.5 rebounds per game) are the other members of the starting lineup. Reserve guard Biko Paris and forward Corey Raji are the two main players off the bench for Skinner, who will typically utilize an eight-to-nine-man rotation. Raji is one of four BC players averaging double-digits in scoring (10.5).

While the Eagles play more of a half-court style of offense, the Minutemen are more predicated on the up-tempo brand of basketball, where they shoot many outside shots. UMass is 88-of-210 (38.1 percent) from beyond the arc, while BC has hit 47-of-136 of its outside shots for a percentage of 34.6.

In last year's matchup, the Eagles got the best of the Minutemen, 84-73, at the Mullins Center. UMass struggled mightily from the field, particularly from 3-point range where it shot 4-for-23. Gary Forbes had one of his worst games, connecting on just 4-of-17 shots.



UMass had an incredible 22 offensive rebounds in that game and out-rebounded BC, 43-32. But the Eagles hit 18 more free throws, essentially winning the game at the charity stripe.

The Minutemen have not defeated the Eagles since Dec. 4, 1999. BC has won eight consecutive meetings since that game in Chestnut Hill. That victory for UMass capped off a six-game win streak over the Eagles.

Gaffney would love to start a new win streak for UMass.

"With BC being closer to home to me, all my friends are die-hard Eagles fans," Gaffney said. "Obviously it would mean a lot to shut them up and get the win [tonight]."

Eli Rosenwasser can be reached at erosenwa@student.umass.edu

Senior Gary Forbes is averaging an even 21 points per game this season, tying him atop the Atlantic 10 with St. Bonaventure's Michael Young. Forbes is also third in the A-10 in rebounds, averaging 7.8 per game.

UMass vs. Boston College – all-time series

Date	Score	Winner	Date	Score	Winner
12/02/06	84-73	BC	2/06/74	78-74(OT)	BC
1/03/06	91-62	BC	2/07/73	76-52	UMass
1/02/05	67-48	BC	2/09/72	75-74	BC
12/06/03	76-75(OT)	BC	2/09/71	85-77	UMass
12/07/02	80-62	BC	2/03/70	83-76	BC
12/08/01	80-78	BC	2/05/69	78-67	BC
12/17/00	74-65	BC	2/06/68	94-70	BC
12/23/99	83-59	BC	12/21/66	75-67	BC
12/04/99	74-67	UMass	12/03/66	86-63	BC
12/12/98	75-45	UMass	2/08/66	101-80	BC
12/14/97	65-57	UMass	2/02/65	109-97	BC
1/18/97	90-78	UMass	12/12/63	93-74	UMass
12/09/95	65-57	UMass	2/19/59	68-65	UMass
12/29/90	83-81	UMass	1/28/60	74-51	BC
1/26/79	82-70	BC	1/28/58	71-67	BC
1/27/78	88-64	UMass	1/30/57	68-66	BC
2/02/77	85-69	UMass	12/19/55	91-73	UMass
12/12/76	94-71	UMass	12/10/51	76-52	BC
2/04/76	77-70	UMass	2/26/51	59-43	BC
2/05/75	80-71	UMass	12/08/05	20-15	UMass

Lowe should get help trying to shut down Eagles' Rice game average is only a three-point increase from 2006-07, his scoring statistics are well above his teammates. The next-leading scorer on BC's roster is stout forward Shamari Spears with his 13.6 points a game.

LOWE-RICE from page 12

Rice may be known for his ability to make the 3-point shot, but he's averaging a pedestrian 34 percent from beyond the arc. His real danger as a scorer derives from the ability to get to the foul line and penetrate toward the basket.

And he's also an exceptional ball-handler who's not afraid to pass the ball to open teammates, as evidenced by his team-leading 44 assists.

Essentially the only area in which Rice is not called upon to carry his team is the frontcourt. Yet even his rebounding average of 3.6 per game is better than every UMass guard and also surpasses that of center Luke Hohner.

Not surprisingly, it's going to be Lowe's responsibility to stop his BC counterpart. But with such a dynamic offensive talent, it will require an effort beyond what a single player can offer.

"This guy is not going to be able to do that – that's for sure," said UMass coach Travis Ford. "We'll be in trouble if we rely on just one guy [to guard Rice]."

Ford is not shy to characterize Lowe as his best defender and one of the quickest guards in the country. But even Lowe admits he can't do it by himself.

"It's not just me versus him – it's a team," Lowe said. "If I play good defense and my team helps me out with good defense, I think we can shut him down."

Since Lowe's primary defensive assignment will be to guard Rice, fatigue may become an issue for the junior. And with the development of backup point guard Gary Correia, the freshman should see some minutes against the Eagles spelling Lowe.

In fact, Correia's performance impressed Ford enough to consider giving the freshman time at both guard positions.

"Correia can easily play one or two the way he shoots the basketball," Ford said. "He's a guy who is a good defender and I'm very comfortable with Correia at either guard position.

It's a good thing Ford is comfortable with Correia's defense, as he rarely sees the benefit of Rice averages nearly 40 minutes per game and he has played all 40 several times this season.

Beyond the hype and potential of Rice's game, it will have to continue to play on the other end of the court. The point guard is largely responsible for his team's defense, and he has served as the Minutemen's point guard the last week and a half.

He doesn't appear to be ready to fold up his defensive tent just yet, and with the Minutemen's opponent's propensity to shoot from beyond the arc, Lowe will have the opportunity to show off his defensive skills.

The Daily Collegian now offers free online classifieds for students at WWW.UMASSLIST.COM

- Categories ranging from intramurals to extracurricular activities to study groups to student internships
- More complete, local and relevant category listings than any and all competitor web sites combined
- Users can setup daily e-mail updates for relevant listings. No more searching for apartments, now they come to you.
- Post unlimited online listings
- Little to no spam
- By listing on this site you are supporting your local college newspaper, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

The semester is ending soon so find yourself a winter job or sell some stuff to get some green!

Rampage

Discout with college ID • Buy 10 pairs of sneakers, get one FREE •
"If we don't have it, we'll get it for you."

ask about Nutrition 101

DEC 12 2007

Louisville plummets in polls

Saint Mary's cracks Top 25, Pitt survives after further review

By Jeff Larnard
Collegian Correspondent

Dayton made a statement over the weekend when it beat a tough Louisville team on the road this Saturday, 70-65.

Rick Pitino's Cardinals suffered a devastating loss to Dayton last weekend, which dropped them eight spots in the AP Top 25.

Louisville (5-2) fell to No. 22 in the Associated Press Top 25 following the loss to Dayton (7-1), eight spots lower than last week's poll. Dayton got recognition in the polls for the first time this season, garnering 36 points.

As for the Cardinals, they took the largest drop of the week in an otherwise relative steady poll. Louisville should have no problem rebounding with a fairly light schedule and five of its next six games at home.

Louisville sophomore center/forward Derrick Caracter will miss an undetermined amount of time after being suspended indefinitely by the team. The punishment is coming after he broke a set of rules he agreed to obey so he could stay with the team.

Caracter will be a big loss for the Cardinals, providing the team with 13.4 points and 7.4 rebounds per game. He has started four games this season and is the second-leading scorer and third-best on the boards for the team.

The Flyers, on the other hand, have drawn a lot of attention. With a strong record and two impressive road wins against Louisville and Miami (OH), a team on the brink of the Top 25, Dayton has made a strong case for its own spot in the polls.

Top 25 Basketball

With seven of their next eight games at home, Dayton has a prime opportunity to break onto the national scene. The Flyers do have a tougher schedule than the Cardinals, with No. 9 Pittsburg coming to visit and also a conference game against a Rhode Island team that has an impressive 10-1 record.

If Dayton can pull off more upsets against some of its tougher opponents, look for them keep pushing to get into the top 25.

St. Mary's cracks poll

Saint Mary's College was the only new team to get into this week's rankings, settling in at No. 24.

The Gaels (7-0) boast a balanced attack, scoring 83.6 points per game while holding their opponents to 67.6 ppg. Only once has an opponent scored more then 70 points against the Gaels' defense, a 99-87 win over the Ducks.

In addition, Saint Mary's has been held under 70 points once, a 69-64 road victory over San Diego State.

Saint Mary's seldom fouls its opponents. In five of the Gaels' seven games, opponents went to the foul line less then 19 times a game. They do not let their opponents get easy points by going to the foul line, a spot on the court they score from very often.

Buzzer Beaten

Pittsburgh needed the buzzer to help them pull out a victory and stay undefeated this past Saturday against Washington, winning 75-74 when Justin Denton's shot came after time expired.

With the clock reaching zero, Washington's (4-4) junior guard put up a shot that fell through, giving Washington a 76-75 win.

But after several minutes of watching the film the referees ruled that Denton still had the ball in his hand as the clock reached zero. Pittsburgh moved up to No. 11 with the win.

The Panthers have tough tests coming up in the coming weeks that will challenge their perfect slate. Pitt hosts No. 7 Duke on Dec. 20, then go on the road to face the one-loss Flyers.

Pitt has had the luxury of an easy schedule in their first nine games, seven of which were at home. The Panthers' last two victories, both on the road, were their slimmest margins of victory this season – a one-point win against Washington and a five-point decision over Duquesne.

At home the Panthers have had much greater success, winning each of their first seven games by double figures and six out of seven by at least 26 points.

USC drops from polls

In a showdown of freshman stars, O.J. Mayo for Southern California and Derrick Rose for Memphis, it was USC who came up short in over time, losing 62-58.

Full-court pressure from Memphis (7-0) was too much for USC (6-3), who held a lead for most of the game. The loss was the Trojans' second straight. USC fell out of the AP polls after being ranked for the past two weeks.

USC still received 118 points in this week's poll, due in large part to the quality of its losses. The Trojans have a chance to get back on track with their next three contests at home.

In a packed Pacific 10, the Trojans will be hard-pressed to recover from an early fall, but have plenty of chances for quality wins.

Jeff Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

Associated Press Top 25

1. North Carolina
2. Memphis
3. Kansas
4. Texas
5. Georgetown
6. Duke
7. Washington State
8. UCLA
9. Michigan State
10. Marquette
11. Pittsburgh
12. Tennessee
13. Indiana
14. Texas A&M
15. Clemson
16. Oregon
17. Xavier
18. Butler
19. Gonzaga
20. Vanderbilt
21. Arizona
22. Louisville
23. Villanova
24. Saint Mary's
25. Brigham Young

Musketeers continue climb in polls, Rams, Flyers chasing

By Mike Barba
Collegian Correspondent

As Xavier continues to move up in the national polls and Rhode Island and Dayton gain national recognition, some stories in the Atlantic 10 Conference go unnoticed.

In an age where talented athletes typically leave for the professional level after their first year or two of college, if not immediately after high school, few players stay enrolled in college long enough to acquire their diplomas.

During the 2001-2002 season, the Lowe's Senior CLASS (Celebrating Loyalty and Achievement for Staying in School) Award was created to honor college basketball seniors who are committed to staying in school and receiving a degree. Three such players have been nominated this year from the A-10.

Staying in school having its benefits

Seniors Kieron Achara of Duquesne, Will Daniels of Rhode Island and Dayton's Brian Roberts have all received nominations for the 2007-2008 Lowe's Senior CLASS Award.

Duquesne's forward-center, Kieron Achara, is a fifth-year senior currently taking graduate level classes, and is coming off a 2006-2007 season in which he averaged 15.8 points and 7.3 rebounds per game. Aside from his offensive accomplishments, Achara was also named to the A-10 All-Defensive Team last season. He completed his undergraduate degree in management in May.

Rhode Island forward Will Daniels cemented himself as one of the top players in the A-10 Conference last season when he earned First Team All-A-10 honors. Daniels ranked fifth in the conference in scoring with 17.4 points per game and 18th in rebounding with 5.6 rebounds per game. The senior, a native of Poughkeepsie, N.Y., is a business management major.

Drew Lavender is averaging 12.6 points per game this season, second best on the team.

A–10 M. Basketball

On top of his Lowe's Senior Class Award nomination, the Dayton Flyers' senior guard, Brian Roberts, was also recognized by ESPN college basketball analyst Andy Katz for his play this year. Katz named Roberts the national player of the week in his "Weekly Watch" column on ESPN.com. Roberts scored 28 points on 10-of-17 shooting in the Flyers' 70-65 win at No. 11/14 Louisville on Saturday. He also tallied five rebounds, three assists and while not turning the ball over once in the win. The Ohio Basketball stand-out is a marketing major at Dayton.

Former A-10 winners of the award include Xavier's David West (2003) and St. Joseph's Jameer Nelson (2004).

Rolling Along

Xavier is proving to be more than just a talented team this year. As the Musketeers continue to climb the national polls, they are convincing a lot of people in the basketball world that they will still be contending come March.

Stanley Burrell is one of six players averaging 10 or more points per game for the No. 17 Musketeers.

The Musketeers have moved up in the polls from No. 21/20 to No. 17 in both the Associated Press and ESPN/USA Today National Polls.

Xavier has six players currently averaging double figures in points per game. Of the six players are junior B.J. Raymond (13.5 ppg), senior Drew Lavender (12.6 ppg), junior C.J. Anderson (12.5 ppg), senior Josh Duncan (11.5 ppg), sophomore Derrick Brown (11.1 ppg) and senior Stanley Burrell (11.0 ppg).

Xavier's stand-out guard forward, B.J. Raymond, entered the season averaging 3.8 points per game. Raymond is making strides in his junior season, and is the only Musketeer to score in double digits through the first nine contests this season.

Tonight Xavier hosts cross-town rival the Cincinnati Bearcats on ESPN2 at 7 p.m. This is the 75th meeting between the two Ohio teams and the 19th straight year that it has been known as the Skyline Chili Cross-town Shootout. Xavier has won six straight games overall and 13 straight on its home court, the Cintas Center.

Atlantic 10 breaking the mold

Non-conference games against A-10 schools just don't look the same on the schedule any more.

After going 57-30 in non-conference action in November, the Atlantic 10 has notched eight non-conference victories in the past week. All eight of which came against opponents who advanced to the postseason last season.

One game that stood out in particular this past week was Dayton at No. 11/14 Louisville. The Flyers took down Louisville coach Rick Pitino and the heavily favored Cardinals, 70-65, on Dec. 8. The victory marked the first time Dayton beat a ranked opponent at home since upsetting No. 18 DePaul, 67-63, on Feb. 6, 1985.

The A-10 currently stands fifth out of eight teams in the 2008 College Basketball Ratings Percentage Index (RPI) behind the ACC, Pac-10, Big 12 and Big East.

Although the No. 17 Xavier Musketeers are currently the only team in the polls they are not the only team getting consideration. Rhode Island and Dayton are both receiving votes in the national polls. The Rams received 41 votes in the Associated Press and 23 in the ESPN/USA Today Poll, while the Flyers received 36 votes in the AP Poll and one in the ESPN/USA Today Poll.

Mike Barba can be reached at mbarba@student.umass.edu.

Looking for a Job?
The Daily Collegian
is seeking a hard-working, motivated undergrad to fill our Advertising Executive Positions.
To Apply:
Contact Jaime Porter @ 545-3500 for more information.
•Excellent business experience!
•Meet and network with great people like yourself
•Build your resume
Freshman strongly encouraged to apply

DEC 12 2007

Seven O's
Every Wednesday Karaoke
Thursday, 12/12/07
The True Jacquelyn
Friday, 12/14/07
Legal Lies
Saturday, 12/15/07
Art Steel Band
Looking for a place to have a private event/party?
Call 413-530-6996
Route 116, 330 Amherst Rd, Sunderland, MA 01375 (413) 665-6786
3 PM to 1 AM M-F
1 PM to 1 AM Sat/Sun
Rt 63, 76 Gulf Road, Apts.

Trying to fill in the blanks of your life?

2		3	8	7	9
				5			9
1			4	2				7
		1				6	8
				1
	2	4				1
4				9	2			6
	9			8
			6	3	1	5		9

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Blackthorn fruit
5 Valuable violin briefly
10 Touch against 14 Hilary's partner
15 Somber
16 Skeleton segment
17 Hebrew month
18 George who played Sulu
19 Dismounted
20 Jeans material
22 Fiber
24 Make beloved
26 Off skill
27 Bacon buy
29 Play an improper card
33 Chicken choice
38 Passover feast
39 Slashed away
40 Peels
42 Lyrical Gershwin
43 Got up
46 Dodgers to Dodgers
49 Bank worker
51 Virginia's dance?
52 Upper crust
55 Goes in
59 Academic divisions
63 Exit spirit
64 Hold up
65 Musical syllables
67 Phillies co-host
68 Helper
69 English assignment
70 AC/DC power
71 Prognosticator
72 Actor Cannon
73 Excessive

DOWN
1 Shadow cast
2 Encumbered
3 Man who played Chan
4 Mold world
5 NCO rank
6 Lobster pot
7 Does yard work
8 Keep from happening
9 Wintertime windshield stuff
10 Sea otter's meal
11 Gaucho's weapon
12 Military group
13 Bend lilter
21 Maldives capital
23 Change for a live
25 Freeway entrance
28 Rhythm
30 Cut and spice
31 "Pretty Woman" star
32 Important times
33 Hush!
34 Take on
35 Object of devotion
36 Win the Weird!
37 Salty drupes
41 Hook's mate
44 Surprise foil
45 Snuggler's prey
47 Repair
48 Mottled
50 Tex or John
53 To the point
54 Dafoe
56 French writer Zola
57 Uses a ladder
58 Late-night bite
59 Hot lists
60 HOMES part
61 Method
62 Serb or Croat
66 Affirmative vote

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Vital Information if you ever hope to succeed in life.

Quote of the Day

"A joyful life is an individual creation that cannot be copied from a recipe."

– Mihaly Csikszentmihalyi

Paul By Billy O'Keefe

Welcome to Falling Rock National Park By Josh Shalek

Cognitive Dissonance By Dan Moriarty III

Continuing & Professional Education
Winter Session
Classes start January 2nd
Plan Now for Winter Break
Get ahead this Winter wherever you are!
Online classes or on campus classes?
YOU DECIDE!!!
Registration begins Tuesday Nov. 13th
www.UMassULearn.net

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Relax with some fine knitting, a warm fireplace and a nice lap-dog. A lhasa apso, perhaps?

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Spend more time acting like a twelve year old and less time acting like a stressed out 42-year-old jerk.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Even the Pink Ranger, as hot as she was and as cool as pterodactyls are, was nearly powerless without her cohorts.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You can do it but don't put your back into it. Lift with the knees.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
When the going gets tough, wombats always keep going, and you should too.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You need Space.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You are a sophisticated machine sent to a large, overpriced university to protect your GPA from finals and papers.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
It is more frugal to burn your textbooks and save money on heat than it is to sell them back to Follet.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You are a happy helping of Mu-Shoo pork, put on this earth to make a pu-pu platter with a scallion pancake-arrific libra.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Brainwashing may seem like a good idea, but let's face it, dirty thoughts are fun.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You are destined to be a carny but at least you'll be great at all the games.

capricorn Dec. 22 Jan. 19
The measure of a man's wealth is not the kind of car he drives, but the amount of gas in his tank.

3 days left of classes...

comics@dailycollegian.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Come in on Dec. 17th and recieve a Wachusett Mtn Ski Pass! Volunteer donations are needed. We are open from 10am-4pm. Sign up by calling 1-800-GIVE-LIFE or www.givelife.org. Walk-ins are welcome. positive ID required.

Apt. for rent

Brandywine Apt. JAN-MAY. 1 Bdrm New Carpets/Paint-conact mlalli@student.umass.edu for information.

Apt. for rent

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jan. 1 First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com or stop by or call 549-0600

New 2 bedroom condo 30 minutes from campus. Gas fireplace drive under garage country setting must see! $159,000. Call 413-887-7691.

Employment

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

The Boston University Bookstore in Kenmore Square has a job for you during Winterbreak if you have Starbucks Coffee experience! Email bdinolo@bu.edu

Lost

REWARD Women's Ring. Silver with garnet (Red) stone. Campus Center Nov 1. Contact Donald Depiro 516-456-7662

Room for rent

Hillel's Jewish Living Community 388 N Pleasant. Winter session or Spring term Single/Double. Any 5 college student (except freshmen) Laundry, internet, pool table, big rooms. Walk to UM. Parking, cable avail. Quiet 549-1710 x 205 or www.UMASSHILLEL.ORG/JLLC.

Services

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906,1-800-550-4900 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic 577-5101

Free Rapid HIV Testing at the UMASS Campus Center (168c)

Services

this Friday, Nov. 30th from 9 am - 3 pm provided by Tapestry Health. Always confidential, always affordable, always safe. Located at 27 Pray St., Amherst. Call 413-548-9992 www.tapestryhealth.org

Travel

#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 12, 2007

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Kate Mills scored a team-high 18 points in the losing effort against Villanova. The senior added four rebounds and three assists as the Minutewomen squandered a chance to reach .500 on the season.

UM falls to Wildcats

Struggling defense dooms Minutewomen once again

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Villanova	75
UMass	51

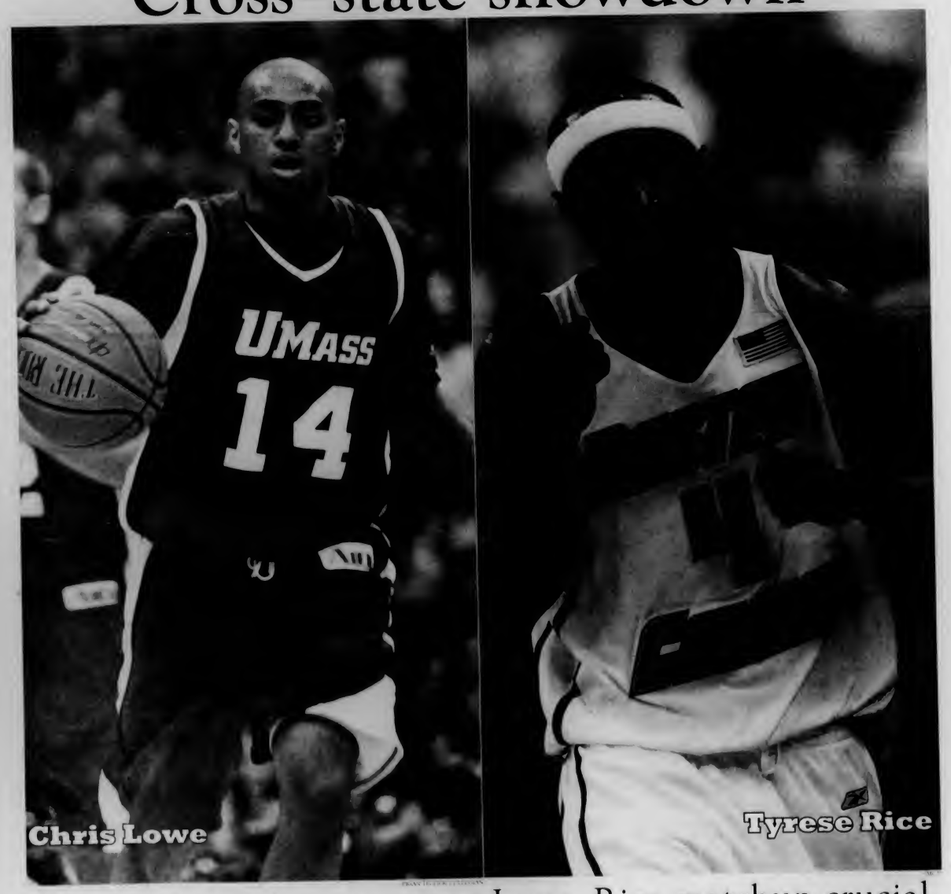
Though they defeated Maine on Saturday, Massachusetts women's basketball coach Marnie Dacko was unhappy with how her team defended the perimeter. The Black Bears hit 7-of-18 from beyond the arc, including 6-of-8 from Tanna Ross.

It wasn't any better last night in a 75-51 loss at Villanova.

The Wildcats entered last night's contest 25th in the NCAA Division I women's basketball in 3-point percentage beyond the arc at .382, as well as leading the country in makes per game at 10.7, a whopping 1.6 ahead of its closest competitor, Colorado. However, against the Minutewomen they improved upon both of these.

The Wildcats hit 15-of-36 shots from deep, which is good for a .417 percentage, and 60 percent of their points came from the 3-point line. Meanwhile, UMass (4-6) could not match their torrid pace from beyond the arc, and hit 3-of-10.

"We played three different defenses," Dacko said. "We looked to run and jump. I mean, everything we threw at them they had a counter for. They were in the zone and we just couldn't get it going. All credit goes to Villanova."



UMass travels to Staten Island, N.Y., next to play Wagner on Saturday.

Entering the game, Villanova had four players who were shooting the ball over 40 percent from behind the 3-point line. These players, Stacie Witman, Laura Kurz, Lisa Karcic and Maria Getty, combined to go 13-of-26 from deep and accounted for 63 of the team's points.

Similarly to their last road loss against St. John's a week ago, the Minutewomen remained in the

See W. HOOPS on page 7

Cross-state showdown

Minutemen take on Eagles in Commonwealth Classic

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Ask Travis Ford about tonight's game against Boston College and he'll downplay the rivalry aspect of the matchup.

"I don't know how much of a rivalry it is; I guess it's hard to have a rivalry when it's as lopsided as it's been," said Ford. "For us it's a big game because of the reputation of Boston College and the success they've had, they're just a great basketball team."

Ask the players on the Massachusetts men's basketball team what they think, however, and you'll get a much different answer.

"My whole life I've loved watching the UMass-BC basketball games; that's what I lived for," Tony Gaffney, a transfer from Boston University, said during practice Tuesday. "I have a soft spot for BC football; I probably shouldn't say that too loud that I've always been a diehard UMass fan, so this is going to be really fun."

This year's Commonwealth Classic will tip off today at 9 p.m. in Chestnut Hill at the Conte Forum, where BC is a perfect 5-0 this season.

The Eagles (7-1, 1-0 Atlantic Coast Conference) are playing their best basketball right now, defeating a solid Maryland team, 81-78, on Sunday in College Park, Md. Their only loss this year came on Dec. 1 against Providence in overtime. Along with the victory over the Terrapins and over Michigan on the road, one of the marquee wins for the Eagles came against Rhode Island on Nov. 21. That game is the only blemish on URI's 10-1 start this season.

See M. HOOPS on page 9

Lowe-Rice matchup crucial

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

At the season's start, junior Chris Lowe knew his best competition at point guard would come on a December evening in Chestnut Hill. As the Massachusetts men's basketball team prepares for its annual game with Boston College, the Lowe-Tyrese Rice matchup will exceed the intensity of a standard position battle.

It will have a greater impact on the outcome of the Commonwealth Classic than any other struggle on the hardwood.

"It's going to be a good matchup because he's a good guard," Lowe said. "But I've got a good team behind me and it's going to be fun to see who prevails."

Regardless of the Rice's production, the junior knows he'll have bested the BC guard if the Minutemen leave Conte Forum with the victory.

"I'm just trying to lead my team to the win and not think about the one-on-one matchup," Lowe said.

Lowe's importance to the Minutemen should not be understated. Though the junior ranks fourth in scoring, he's responsible for directing his teammates on offense and coordinating the team's ever-changing set of defenses. His responsibilities may appear diminished from the years when UMass ran a half-court offense, but in reality Lowe has increased duties this season.

Yet standing across from Lowe in tonight's game will be a point guard equal in talent, but with a different style of play. Rice carries the BC offense not just with leadership, but with his jump shot.

The departure of forwards Jared Dudley and Sean Marshall from last year's squad resulted in the necessary anointment of Rice as the Eagles' leading scorer. Even though Rice's average of 20.9 points per

See LOWE-RICE on page 9

KANYE ON TOP ALBUMS OF '07 | PAGE 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SNOW : HI: 27 LO: 21 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | THURSDAY, DECEMBER 13, 2007

Bursar's office offers online billing option

Students now able to pay through Internet

BY NICHOLAS O'MALLEY
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Constantly mailing checks for school fees has always been frustrating for students and a tough task to handle for the Bursar's office. But now, the University of Massachusetts is offering QuikPAY, a free online service that allows students and parents to pay bills instantaneously.

Faster and more convenient than paying bills in person, the QuikPAY system provides an alternative to writing checks at the Bursar's office.

According to bursar Tom Mathers, each student is sent an electronic copy of each bill that can be accessed through SPIRE and either printed out or viewed online. The service, available 24-7, eliminates any postage and is must faster and more efficient than conventional bill paying.

Active since October, the QuikPAY system allows students to make payments online, and without using the conventional method of writing a check. The Bursar's office has received roughly 700 online transactions at about $1,000 per payment, said Mathers, described how payments could be made.

"The QuikPAY system provides two methods

See QUICKPAY on page 3

'Give War a Chance'

Jonah Goldberg, editor of the National Review Online, spoke on the successes of the Iraq War during an event hosted by the UMass Republican Club last night.

New Web site encourages youth voters

BY HANNAH NELSON
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Harvard Institute of Politics (IOP) announced the launch of the Web site novotenovoice.com on Monday with the goal of keeping young people involved in the electoral process.

The creators of the site are taking advantage of the social networking phenomenon by using a Facebook application available for download onto profiles allowing participants to encourage their friends to "pledge" to vote and sign up for e-mail updates or to receive text messages about upcoming election-related dates and deadlines.

Part of the incentive includes the weekly raffling of iPod Touch's and gift cards for those who download the Facebook application and add it to their profile. All participants will be entered to win an all-expense-paid trip to watch a taping of "The Colbert Report" this spring in New York City.

There is also a second chance to win an iPod Touch by creating a video for the "Why Voting Matters" contest and submitting the final product to the "No Vote, No Voice" video channel on YouTube.

"No Vote, No Voice" gives visitors the option of filling out a voter registration form, and learning how to be an absentee voter if, like most college students, the student will be away from home during primaries and the presidential election.

The Web site starts with a statement by Jim Leach, Director of IOP and Member of Congress from 1977-2006.

"The most glaring weakness of American democracy is the primary process where candidates are chosen and platforms established," he said.

Past youth voting initiatives have proven to increase the number

See VOTE on page 2

Final SGA meeting of 2007

The University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Senate met last night at in room 163 of the Campus Center for its 1538th regular meeting, the last of the semester.

The Senate voted unanimously to accept the nomination of Elizabeth Protzman to a previously vacant Commuter Area Seat of the Senate. The newly-appointed senator explained that she was excited to continue her service to the SGA after a serving on the senate last year.

She added representing the off-campus and commuting population of the student body was particularly important as older students serve as its "backbone."

The senate also approved Speaker Carla Dominguez's appointment of Trevor Beck and Amanda Wilson to the Coordinating Council.

The group voted unanimously to loan $3,000 from the finance reserves to Zeta Phi Beta Sorority to fund a carpet needed for the floor of the Curry Hicks Cage. The sorority is planning a fundraiser, and a lack of space has limited their options to the Cage, which requires a carpet over the floor during all non-athletic events. Zeta Phi Beta must repay the loan before the end of the spring semester.

While motion F-29 was initially passed by the Finance Committee, Speaker Dominguez designated the motion to allocate $2,000 from the finance reserves to the Fellowship of Catholic University Students (FOCUS) dilatory. The vote was thrown out as the group originally stated it has been a Registered Student Organization (RSO) for five years, it instead has been in existence for five years but only recognized as a RSO since the spring.

Dominguez said the ruling was passed down because as a new group, they should have appealed to the new group fund, which has an allocation limit per organization.

Will McGuinness

Amherst using endowments as student loan alternative

BY DEVIN COURTNEY
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

As part of a growing trend in financial assistance, schools like Amherst College are using portions of their annual endowments to help students get through college without having to repay any loans.

"We were the first to go with dropping loans in '99," said Joe Paul Case, director of financial aid at Amherst College. "We're very fortunate to have the resources to devote to this."

Amherst College, which is a private higher-education institution, used 4.4 percent of its endowment last year to remove loans from accepted applicants whose family incomes total below $50,000 per year.

The reasons for this include the need to counteract both rising inflation rates and the increasing costs of higher education, not to mention an interest in helping students bear the burdens of credit damages later on in their lives.

"Let's say you have to borrow $5,000 in alternative loans each year," continued Case, referring to outside loans not offered through federal programs. "It's probably going to grow to $6,000 by the end of that year, and the interest rates themselves are subject to change over time.

"You'll probably be paying that off for the next 10 years," said Case.

An important question is where

Amherst College has begun using funds from annual endowments rather than loans as a source of financial aid available to students.

...MENTS on page 3

Newspapers update image to attract new, younger readers

BY KERI LETOURNEAU
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

As a junior majoring in psychology at the University of Massachusetts, Brandon Tusco, 20, is the go-to guy to analyze, decrypt and otherwise maneuver through the complexities of the human psyche.

Nicole Cameron, 20, also a UMass junior, is a pre-med biochemistry major with a concentration in molecular biology who recently passed her MCATS with flying colors.

What do these two have in common? They are intelligent, educated, and ambitious students who cannot be bothered to pick up a newspaper.

"Fatah? Never heard of him," said Tusco with a grin.

"Where's Darfur?" Cameron asks herself. "Must be in the Middle East somewhere but that where everything happens?"

Even a UMass journalism class full of honors students were stumped when asked to name the Supreme Court justices or the attorney general.

This trend isn't just found on the state or community campuses around the country but extend

See NEWSPAPERS on page 3

UM scientists study baby brain functions

BY ANDY SMITH
COLLEGIAN WRITER

Researchers at the University of Massachusetts believe the observed process used by infants may be an important recalibration of developing brain functions that prepares them for later life.

Infants refine and narrow their ability to discriminate between things they see and hear in their first year, revealing what appears to be a decline in ability at a time when most other skills and functions are dramatically increasing, said Lisa S. Scott, assistant professor of psychology at UMass.

In one of Scott's studies, six-month-old infants were able to differentiate between two human faces as easily as two monkey faces, but nine-month-olds could only differentiate between two human faces. However, it was also shown that if infants are familiarized with monkey faces from age six-months to nine-months they maintain the ability to tell the difference between two monkey faces.

"Within weeks, newborn vision improves dramati-

See INFANT on page 2

Buckeyes up next on road to national title

Minutemen in Raleigh, N.C., for NCAA College Cup

The Massachusetts men's soccer team takes on Ohio State in the semifinals of the 2007 College Cup in Raleigh, N.C., Friday night. See page 14 for more coverage.

BY JOE MELONE

Although the ... men's soccer team has ... tossed to playing ... ered field, UMass ... says Koch ... hopes to stay in Raleigh, N.C., for as long as possible.

The Minutemen ... their quest for a national championship Friday night against sixth-seeded Ohio State in the second game of the 2007 College Cup. The Big Ten champion Buckeyes have not lost since Sept. 23, when Northwestern defeated them, 4-0. The two soccer programs have never met.

A win for the Minutemen could ... a berth in Sunday's national championship game. Virginia Tech and Wake Forest play in the other semifinal game at 5 p.m.

The Buckeyes' offense scored eight goals in its last two games, a 4-0 win over Bradley in the national quarterfinal and a 4-3 victory ...

See ... ER on page 10

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
Issue 69
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Exter
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Arts & Living Editor Tim McCall
Comics Editor Adam Staigin
Editorial Editor S.P. Sullivan
News Editor Will McGuinness
Sports Editor Jeremy Rice
Asst. Business Manager Eric Szymczak
Assistant Advertising Marsey Whooten
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Stephanie McPherson
Asst. Arts & Living Ryan McAskill
Asst. Arts & Living Teresa Reilly
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Kate O'Brien
Assistant News Derrick Perkins
Assistant News Holly Seabury
Assistant Sports Michael King
Assistant Sports Joe Mekeni
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenzweike
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Tom Trinh
Asst. Photo Editor Michael Phillis
Asst. Photo Editor Brian Todder

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating as a nonprofit business. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

Night Editor
Jeremy Rice

Copy Editor
Nichole Amaral

Production Supervisor
Michael Sarkes

Professor backs standardized testing

Sireci presented with highest UMass honor by Chancellor

By Lucas Correia
Collegian Staff

Standardized academic tests can improve the education of a student if applied correctly, according to a professor at the University of Massachusetts.

Professor of education Stephen G. Sireci presented his information Tuesday night during a distinguished faculty lecture entitled "Are Academic Tests Inherently Evil?"

Sireci argued in favor of academic tests, such as the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System (MCAS), but admitted that there is still much work to be done to improve them.

Sireci explained that the administering of these tests helps to provide data showing how much students are learning and which areas need improvement. It helps administrators make appropriate curriculum changes, helps teachers take a look at their practice and helps teacher supervision. He says he feels the tests provide "another dimension of information in addition to what we get from teachers."

However, at the same time the tests can put too much pressure on students and teachers, take up too much class time and label students in a negative way. Standardized tests can also put a "big black mark" on public schools and deter first-rate teachers from wanting to work at those schools.

Sireci also says that the test results come out too late and do not provide data beyond 10th grade.

The statistics Sireci presented show much improvement in student performance on these tests. They measured the number of students who scored "advanced" compared to the number that scored "warning/failing."

Sireci has been a psychometrician for 20 years, and is also a parent self-described as being concerned for the education of his own children. His main worry is that there exists "a great disconnect between developing and evaluating tests and how the information is actually used."

His presentation served to bridge the gap between the views of concerned parents and educators and those of the people who make these tests.

In 1998, when the MCAS was first introduced, 52 percent of 10th graders in Massachusetts fell into the "warning/failing" category in math. In 2006, the number dropped to 12 percent.

In English language arts, the same age group went from 29 percent in 1998 to eight percent in 2006. Subsequently, the number of students scoring in the "advanced/proficient" range in both subjects has increased.

After the lecture, Chancellor Thomas W Cole presented Professor Sireci with the Chancellor's Medal. This award is the highest honor acknowledging extraordinary service at the UMass campus.

Lucas Correia can be reached at ljcorrei@student.umass.edu

Dr. Sandra Scarpa/Collegian
Professor Stephen Sireci delivered his distinguished faculty lecture on the use of information gained through standardized tests.

UMass Researcher studies infant mental development

INFANT from page 1

calls, and by four-months-old, the ability to appreciate stereoscopic depth emerges. The field of view expands progressively, becoming equivalent to that in adults by the end of the first year of life," wrote Ruxandra Sireteanu, a member of the Department of Neurophysiology at the Max-Planck-Institute for Brain Research, in an issue of Science Magazine. "Visual acuity of the newborn improves steadily, changing rapidly during the first six-months of life, and then more slowly thereafter. The ability to fix, follow, and focus on objects of interest improves daily from birth. Around a baby's first birthday, its visual world differs only slightly from that of a normal adult."

Scott and her colleagues, Olivier Pascalis of the University of Sheffield in England, and Charles A. Nelson of Harvard Medical School and Children's Hospital in Boston, believe this can also happen with sound.

In a test involving the development of hearing, six-month-old infants could discriminate one sound from another from virtually every language, but at nine-months-old, this ability declines, unless the child receives prior experience with such sounds.

This happens because, according to Scott and her colleagues, between ages six-months and one-year, infants undergo what is known as perceptual narrowing, where the discrimination of perceptual information is broadly tuned at first and then declines to more selective levels with experience.

"During (development) the brain is sensitive and responsive to the surrounding environment," said Scott. "A dominant theme of this research is to understand how both typical and atypical experience influences the course of development and the organization of the brain."

According to Scott, her research suggests that infants are not undergoing a developmental regression, but rather a move toward a greater efficiency in perceiving and processing information rather than less salient environmental input."

She also said her research examines "how we fine-tune our brains in an ever-changing world and how specific early experiences influence later abilities."

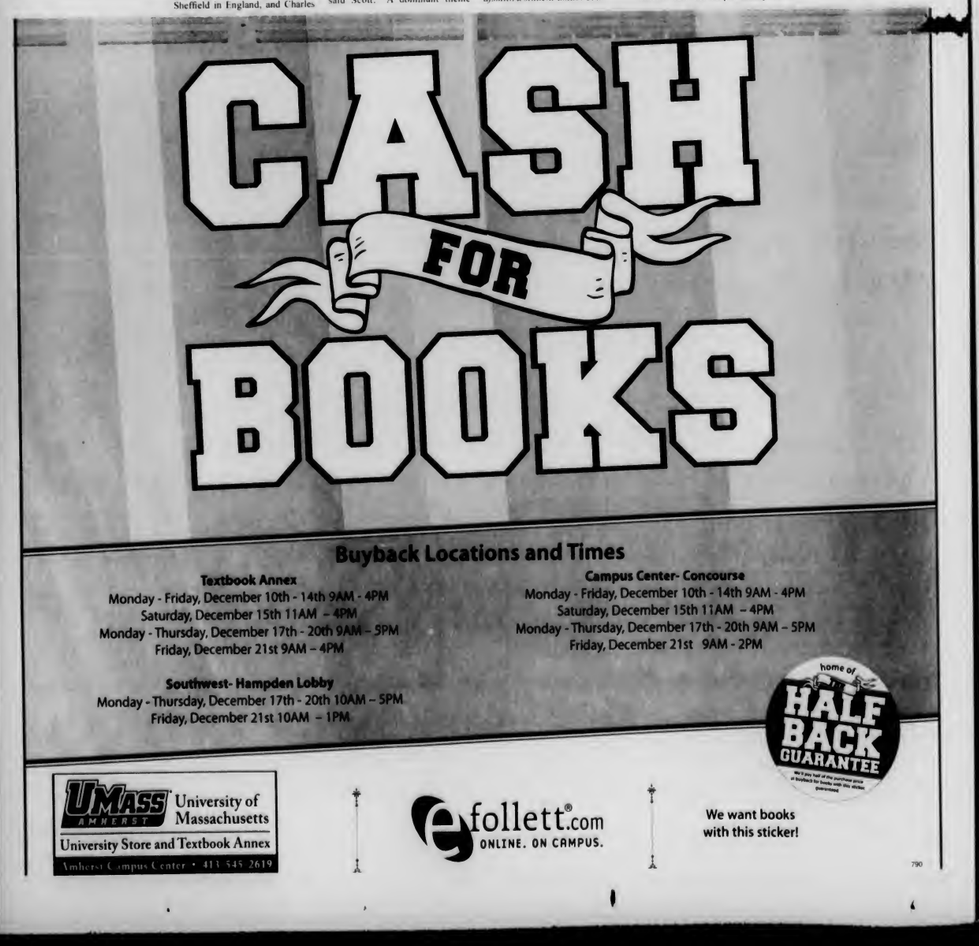
Her findings were published in a recent issue of current Directions in Psychological Science, a journal of the Association for Psychological Science.

Andy Smith can be reached at ajsmith@student.umass.edu

Harvard institute makes voting easy

VOTE from page 1

of 18-29 year olds showing up in both the 2000 and 2004 elections. In 2004 they proved their ability to outvote their grandparents in the 65-and-over crowd.



According to the Youth Vote Coalition's Web site, there are 42,834,082 U.S. citizens age 18 to 30 years old. Of that number, 64 percent are registered to vote and are 24 percent of the eligible voting populous. IOP is hopeful that their voting initiative will have an even greater impact come Election Day. The Web site will be updated as the countdowns to election events continue.

"Americans like choice and the chance to participate in decision making, but the irony is that the vast majority of citizens, particularly young people, have left to a narrow few the responsibility of choosing who will represent the political parties in general elections. Youth is about preparing for the future, but citizenship can't be put off," Leach said.

One of the features the site provides is a link to votegopher.com, where young voters can educate themselves on the issues and the candidates. The Web site provides numerous links to other online sources for new voters to go so that they can find out the concerns involved in the 2008 election.

Another feature on the Web site is the link to "Campus Voices" which enable anyone to "follow the last 100 days of the New Hampshire primary through the eyes of young people." With election.tv, visitors can view videos of candidates speaking on their platform issues.

Hannah Nelson can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu

Student bills payable online

QUICKPAY from page 1

for payments. The first option is to process an electronic check, which is how the majority of payments are made – there is no convenience fee accessed. The second option is to process a payment using a credit card and paying a convenience fee," he said.

Although credit cards are a valid method of payment, the QuikPAY system does not accept VISA because the company disallows the convenience fees that the system employs. Some students, like Jake DiGregorio, found the omission an inconvenience.

"I can't believe they don't take a card that almost everyone has," said DiGregorio, a freshman.

In addition to being more efficient and conveniently online, QuikPAY has proven to be reliable as well.

"Thus far, I haven't heard any complaints," said Mathers. "The students working here in the office it love it, they can get it instantly. All the feedback I've received is positive."

The Bursar's office is anticipating a flood of bills for next semester, when many students will be using the service for the first time.

"This January will be an excellent test of the QuikPAY system," said Mathers.

The online software program was acquired from Nelnet Education Planning & Finances, located in Lincoln, Nebraska. Choosing from a group of four potential vendors, Mathers eventually chose QuikPAY, calling it the "Cadillac" of online payment systems. "It's a pretty well developed product," he said.

Out of the system's many features, Mathers was most excited about the ability to designate a parent or other individual as the bill payer. Even though billing information is currently billed to the student, many rely on their parents for paying for tuition and fees. QuikPAY allows for bills and information to be sent to that individual.

Due to the speed and efficiency of the system, Mathers expects there to be a drop in non-payment holds for students.

As for the Bursar's office nowadays, a decrease of student activity has been noticeable.

"There has been a definite drop-off in the office, around 10 percent, which correlates with the amount of transactions online," Mathers said.

The Bursar's office will still mail hard copies of tuition bills to students while the new system is being implemented. The eventual goal of the system is to eliminate most of the paper transactions. The Bursar's office is forced to hire temps to deal with the increased work load that they face during the busy months of the year, specifically early January and late August.

The University of Massachusetts is not the first school to introduce the QuikPAY system to its campus. According to Mathers, hundreds of schools, including Michigan State and Indiana State, already have similar systems running.

"We're a little behind the times," he said.

Use of endowments allows students to pursue interests

ENDOWMENTS from page 1

"Public school bills in New England are based primarily on substantial fees," said Case. "The pressure is on state legislature to step up to the plate and provide proper appropriations."

Representatives from Governor Deval Patrick's press office could not be reached in time for comment.

Columbia University in New York is one of the private schools which adopted the student debt assistance program last year. It was in part due to a donation of $400 million from John Kluge, an alumnus of the university. It was the largest donation exclusive to student aid in history.

"I'm still working with about the same amount of funds on a day to day level," said Columbia sophomore Grace Duffy. "But in terms of my future, this means I'll be able to graduate completely free from loans, which is amazing."

This program opens up more possibilities for university students, because of the financial freedom it allows.

"I feel free to pursue something I'm really interested in even though it's not really financially viable immediately after graduating," Duffy said, referring to her concentration of study in art history.

"I decided my major after hearing about this program," she said.

Other state and public colleges and universities have been conferring forward with similar efforts across the country. Schools like the University of Virginia, University of North Carolina, and the University of Maryland have adopted similar programs intended to eradicate the potential loans for lower income students at their own schools.

If other public universities are capable of getting rid of loans for students with lower-income families, then the University of Massachusetts might soon be right behind. Students are typically given financial aid packages which reflect their degree of financial need.

According to the Federal Financial Aid Web site, each FAFSA report calculates the student's "expected family contribution," or "EFC." That amount is then subtracted from the bill the university gives each student, giving an estimation of what the student needs. After that, a financial aid package is assembled from loans, grants, and a student job if applicable.

If the student's financial aid at schools like Columbia and Amherst totals less than $50,000, then the loans are paid for through the university endowment and other short-term sources.

"It's a significant extension for students with families in need," said Case. "I'm hoping [students] will feel freer to apply here, and that it will take off at more public universities."

Devon Courtney can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu

Print media reacts to falling circulation among youth upwards unto the ivory towers of the Ivy League.

NEWSPAPERS from page 1

New York University Professor Michael Rosenblum, who helped launch Al Gore's digital cable channel "Current" in August aimed at younger viewers, vented his frustration to The Sacramento Bee.

"They [college students] totally don't care," he said. "They are so thoroughly disconnected to the news that there's no intellectual foundation upon which to build. I have 350 students at NYU, a good school. They are smart. But they have no sense of history or what's news. There's a disconnect between the realities of their lives and what the news presents."

According to the annual report, "The State of the News Media 2007" by the Project for Excellence in Journalism, reaching college students and the young adult demographic in general has been the media's biggest challenge. Newspaper circulation began declining by as much as one percent every year from 1990 to 2002. Recent years have seen an even greater drop in circulation as recently as 2006 when daily circulation fell 2.8 percent and Sundas circulation fell another 3.4 percent.

A recent survey conducted by Scarborough Research, a consumer market company, found that higher education does correlate to a higher instance of readership with 64 percent of Post Graduates reading the newspaper on a weekly basis.

Compared to past generations, however, Scarborough found that this generation of able-minded college students; the largest in history; cannot compete with its predecessors. Only 16 percent of the demographic – ages 18 to 34 – read a newspaper every day. Compare this to the previous generations which saw upwards of 53 percent of young adults dedicated to remaining informed.

Newspapers have tried to combat this downward trend by revamping their layout, changing size, color, and content, to cater to a younger demographic. The LA Times recently announced that it would display a "more dramatic look" with bolder headlines and a front page with added and enlarged pictures that leave room for only four stories on the front page instead of the usual six or seven.

Pages two and three are also set aside for "navigational aids" and quick "briefing" items all in hopes of enticing the younger reader.

Dan Kennedy, a professor of journalism at Northeastern University, believes that newspapers should do all they can to gain the attention of the younger generation.

"Special sections aimed at young people and coverage of stories that affect or interest young people are a good idea," said Kennedy. "I'm not aware of any political junkies canceling the paper because they're sick of having to throw out the sports section every day. Any newspaper editor who would give up young adults as a lost cause should lose their job immediately."

Many young adults have turned to the internet for their source of current events, because it offers such a wide variety of options.

According to Jupiter Media, a media resource company, 33 percent of online young adults said they prefer the Internet as their primary source of news and that number is growing rapidly. With customizable Web sites that cater to the consumer's every interest, people no longer have to rely on the newspaper to dictate what it deems relevant; the consumer can decide what kinds of stories should pop up when they log on.

In the book Tuned Out: Why Americans Under 40 Don't Follow the News by David T.Z. Mindich, the author interviewed college students at Brandeis University and tried to get them to explain why it is that America's youth is tuning out of news and tuning into entertainment.

"With 'Friends,' one student said, there is a 'sense of emotional investment and instant gratification,'" Mindich writes. "Against this is the 'detachment' of 'campaign finance reform CNN ... [and] Peter Jennings.'"

Given the choice between the two paradigms, said another, you are going to choose entertainment because "it's instantly gratifying and resolved immediately."

The problem facing journalism now is that the younger generation does not understand the importance of being politically informed and are thus less likely to participate in a rally, vote, or go into politics.

Ralph Whitehead, a professor of journalism at Northeastern University, believes that newspapers should do all they can to gain the attention of the younger generation.

"We're beginning to see what might have been a loophole of sorts in the founding father's design of the American system," Whitehead said. "Democracy can't exist without an informed citizenry and an informed citizenry cannot exist without journalism."

"It's absolutely vital that something like newspapers as we have come to know them continue to exist, because it is newspapers that are responsible for most of the public-service journalism that we depend on if we are to be a self-governing democracy," Kennedy said.

Lusco and Cameron tend to disagree with Kennedy on the importance of newspapers.

"I don't see what's so bad about moving the newspaper to a solely online format. I mean said. "People are just going to have to trust that we care or will care about current events in the near future."

"I think people can get a better experience online because news is not just a story anymore it's a video or a blog or a podcast," Cameron said.

Whitehead is less than optimistic about the future of print media in popular culture.

"Thus, even though print has weathered rain before, and even though it has survived after it in diminished form – high winds before, it might not hold up against a perfect storm that consists of several threats not the least of which is the lack of young adult readers," Whitehead said

DEC 13 2007

Citizenship for Christmas

Nick Milano

As the Christmas season arrives, stockpiles at food pantries fill up and help at shelters peaks, this time of the year really encourages people to treat others with sincere kindness. In this spirit, the debate on illegal immigration should be given a second look. From the moment Columbus stepped onto the shores of Hispaniola to this present day, the Americas, with the United States as no exception to the rule, have been marred by years of slavery, manipulation and racism.

The blatant exploitation of Native Americans went hand in hand with the importation of African slaves. The Civil War was followed by more wars with Native Americans and Jim Crow ruled segregation. The human rights issue that plagues our generation is the treatment of illegal immigrants. Republicans on the national presidential stage and all across the country are calling for the construction of a magnificent wall across the border. Debates have seen other, more peculiar stances taken on the issue.

Mitt Romney and Rudy Giuliani take extreme measures to prove they each treated illegal immigrants worse than the other. But Romney continued to hire a landscaping company that was caught employing illegal immigrants while he was the governor of Massachusetts. For a man so gung-ho on tossing illegal immigrants out of the country, he was reluctant to double check on the men working on his own home. As with a multitude of other political positions Romney likes to take, it seems he only does so for the political gains.

Presidential candidate Tom Tancredo has led the charge against illegal immigration with tirades against the refusal of the people to learn English. In the Republican CNN YouTube Debate, he refused to even allow for guest workers to come in and help small business owners who rely on their cheap labor. He claimed that there are plenty of Americans who would do the work, but for higher wages.

His is a common argument: the illegals are here to steal our jobs! But really, look at the situation logically. There are simple reasons we pay less than two dollars a pound at the grocery store for apples, bananas, oranges and other fruit and vegetables. The person picking the food is not making minimum wage. He does not have the right to limit himself to a humane 40-hour work week. He does not receive healthcare benefits. He most certainly is not going to collect social security nor retirement benefits from his employer. They sacrifice a great deal, the least of which is their back from the strenuous labor of unskilled jobs.

It is just too much to stomach when politicians dismiss illegal immigrants merely because they are seeking a new life.

Are they really taking jobs Americans would willingly work?

Lost in all the debate over who would treat illegal immigrants the worst is the fact that they are very real people. Granted, they have broken the law by coming to the United States. But for the most part these people embarked on a ruthless journey to the United States in the hopes of giving their children a better shot at life. No doubt there are some who harmed the image of the group as a whole by committing violent crimes or joining gangs like MS-13. Every population has a group who breaks laws and engages in criminal behavior. But just because some Italians may be in the La Cosa Nostra, not all Italians engage in bookmaking and drug running.

Illegal immigrants who commit violent crimes upon their arrival here should be deported without a second thought. Those who get caught driving drunk should be deported. Those who get caught running with gangs should be sent home. These are simple straightforward guidelines, but it is just too much to stomach when politicians dismiss illegal immigrants merely because they are seeking a new life.

It is the Christmas season, a time for reflection on how to better treat people coming here in pursuit of the American Dream. As Mike Huckabee has mentioned time and time again, the United States has a poor history when it comes to human rights and "we're a better country than" one that punishes children. He has made mention of his fear that there are people who want to treat the people poor because they are different, for racist reasons.

The politicians hoping to lead this country into the future better take a step back and consider the motivations for the animosity towards these migrant peoples merely trying to better their lives. Is it really because they broke a law by coming to the United States? Can we really blame them for wanting to become part of this great country? The borders must be made secure, but the nation must also embark on a journey towards granting amnesty and citizenship. The United States has a chance to prove it is not a racist country. Let us not allow history to repeat itself yet again. Immigrants leave dire circumstances in the search of a more hopeful future. Who in their shoes would not sacrifice so much for the betterment of their children's lives?

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

Your poli-sci professor is tired of listening to you rant...

But we're not.

Ed/Op is now accepting columnist applications for next semester.

editorial@dailycollegian.com

The condition my condition is in

Devon Courtney

There are too many new diseases and syndromes coming out of the woodwork these days. Flipping through television channels on your couch will probably give you all the information you need about Attention Deficit Disorder, Manic Depression, Anxiety, Imminent Death Syndrome, Restless Leg Syndrome, and so on down the line.

At first, I thought that all of these "diseases" and "disorders" were imaginary. They must have been crafted by accidental discoveries in medications made by the multi-billion dollar pharmaceutical industry. The corniness factor shot up to maximum when I stumbled upon a support group website for people with Restless Leg Syndrome. At www.rls.org, they talk about "RLS" as a devastating "disease which severely affects the lives of millions of Americans."

This had to be the most bogus thing I had ever heard. This severe, life-shattering "disease," which is described as "a neurological condition that is characterized by the irresistible urge to move the legs," had to have been created only a few years ago, yet sufferers allegedly already number in the millions. I refused to believe that this was a legitimate condition, and surmised that it must have been another opportunity for drug companies to use fear to market yet another pill. I believed this blindly.

That is until I was diagnosed with a similar disease.

You can probably imagine the comic irony, the blind fear I experienced, and the long lines of people with similar diseases lining up at my front door to say "I told you so!"

This year, I was diagnosed with SES, or Spontaneous Erection Syndrome, a disease which affects mostly males. Before you share your reactions with me, I would first like to say that this has been a difficult and trying week for me. I am actively fighting this debilitating syndrome with the love and support of friends, family, and household pets. I am participating in a strict regimen of healthy eating, active exercising, and specific medications that are between 15 percent and 80 percent alcoholic. I won't be going down without a fight.

You might be curious to know what some of my symptoms are, so that you know what to be prepared for. I experience such terrifying symptoms each day ...

I must address those of you who will attack me with my own argument. This disease is not new, or a fad; it's at least 10-years-old. I know this because my doctor informed me with a heavy heart that I (whether I knew it or not) have been suffering from SES since the onset of puberty.

You might be curious to know what some of my symptoms are, so that you know what to be prepared for. I experience such terrifying symptoms each day such as the swelling of my groin area, breakouts of conversational ties about the hotness levels of certain females who pass me by, an exponential increase in the frequency of masturbation, and a strong desire to have sexual intercourse with females in my vicinity (which is exacerbated by excessive alcohol consumption).

However unjust this all may seem, I have been assured that science, research, and medicine are all teaming up to help slow the onset of SES. Scientists are performing research to see if lifestyle changes or medicinal cures can assist people like me. Different methods have been experimented with, including displacement of male subjects to all male schools and living communities, tying the subject's member with twine to one of the legs, cold showers or ice water on the groin, and routine viewings of highly unattractive people in the nude.

Progress has been slow, which is sad news for the millions and millions of sufferers in the United States alone. Not much has been achieved with modern medicine. Even drugs which render the subject unconscious have yielded few positive results. If the afflicted person is sedated while lying on their front side, the ensuing "wet-dream" that the subject will inevitably experience will seemingly cause the subject to levitate approximately six inches in the air. As one might imagine, this can be very frightening for loved ones to witness.

I am taking better care of myself in a combative effort to reduce the dramatic effects of this condition. In staged therapy sessions, I am giving the parts of my body which are most affected massages with lubricating oils. I am trying hard to keep my spirits up. It will be a long and hard journey, but I plan on staying hands-on and resisting the friction of life's challenges with my best efforts. I plan on giving it a good whack, and if anything, I'll at least know that I have given it my best shot.

Until this situation comes to a conclusion, I've created a support group of my own. At my groups' website, www.SpontaneousErectionSyndrome.org, people can learn about all of the symptoms and characteristics of the disease, read a catchy slogan that exaggerates the effects of this condition on loved ones, join forums to discuss their experiences, or write an editorial making fun of it.

Unfortunately, the site has only had a handful of visitors, and i have speculated a couple of reasons for this: either the name is too long to type into a web browser, or people think it's porn.

No one should have to suffer.

Devon Courtney is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

USPS: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003

Mitt's no fun on the candidates' playground

C.A. Chase

Poor Mormon Mitt. He isn't alone in his political handicap or ability to compete for pity points. He has to compete with Clinton, who is swimming in the sausage-fest from hell, Obama, who a) hails from tiki-torch land and b) is stuck in the gray purgatory of not-so-whiteness, but somehow remains "not black enough."

John Edwards has a sissy haircut, Guiliani kissed too many girls and needs a cootie shot, and Huckabee is a former classroom fatty. So that's the score in the political schoolyard, where everyone beats the crap out of one another, by using their words and raising in their hands.

Bizarre? Yes.

This is what happens when you take naptime away from adults who aren't grownups, otherwise known as politicians. The elementary school comparison can be further extended to middle-aged goody-two-shoes competing in back-room deals to be president of student council. This time, however, their money comes from Hollywood and Whitewater, not from some sleazy (that's right, I called it by its true name) school bake sale. And even better, Romney et al are all of legal drinking age. May the games begin.

The 2008 presidential race is turning out to be kind of like "Election," but with no Reese Witherspoon or Matthew Broderick, and thus vastly less photogenic. To the Christian conservatives leery of Romney's Mormonism, Mitt is one of those kids who doesn't celebrate Halloween and can't have cupcakes when it's someone's birthday because of their religion, and thus gets chosen last for dodgeball.

Apparently, then, the evangelicals think that Romney is against cupcakes, or at least the kind frosted with straight-laced Protestant conservatism. They seem to think, in fact, that Romney wants to do away with cupcakes altogether and instead force-feed us some nasty splinter-sect gluten-free baked goods. In fact, in this aspect, Romney isn't even like one of those quiet loser-kids at recess. He's like a quiet loser-kid at lunch. His Mormonism (suspect to the rest of the country), is like a bagel with lox at a church potluck. A Protestant church potluck.

One candidate who faced a similar problem with playground politics was John F. Kennedy, who insisted upon his dedication to maintain a separation of church and state: "I am not the Catholic candidate for president. I am the Democratic Party's candidate for president who happens also to be a Catholic." Under his administration, "no Catholic prelate would tell the president how to act, and no Protestant minister would tell his parishioners for whom to vote," as he said in his landmark Houston speech in 1960.

JFK had two things on his side: sex appeal and Jacqueline Bouvier Kennedy. Romney has neither of these. He doesn't even have impressive initials.

However, JFK had two things on his side: sex appeal and Jacqueline Bouvier Kennedy. Romney has neither of these. He doesn't even have impressive initials. Romney's wife, Ann – unfortunately for our friend Mitt – is no Jackie O. When your wife is considered to be the brunette alternative to Marilyn Monroe, then you have a fair amount of religious wiggle-room. And when you're schtupping them both, then no one but a conspiracy theorist's crazed disciple can take you out.

Compared to Kennedy's, Romney's speech last week at Texas A&M was lukewarm at best. He discussed, among other things, Chinese economic superiority, the decline of the American family, and the threat of radical Islam.

To combat fervent anti-Mormonism, he gave his "Faith in America" address. It read like a weird civics class report. "Mormonism, the White House, and Me." Considering that 28 percent of voters, according to the Times (UK), say they are less likely to vote for a Mormon, Romney should be worried. Even more troubling is how Minister Mike Huckabee, Romney's rival for the Republican slot, refuse to point-blank to even say if his opponent was a Christian:

"Mitt Romney has to answer that," he said "It's not for me to determine."

Harry Reid, the (Democratic) Senate Majority Leader, is a Mormon as well, though this is rarely mentioned, and he is never singled out for any "Big Love."

America is much more religiously politicized than in Jack Kennedy's day. Catholicism is and was seen as a "legitimate" religion, even though

Kennedy faced questions of being a papal puppet. There are a substantial amount of Americans who view Mormonism as, at best, a strange splinter of Christianity, and at worst, a cult. Few people know much about Mormonism beyond the fact that it used to practice polygamy, which it has now renounced.

As Kenneth L. Woodward, a contributing editor at Newsweek and a guest columnist for the New York Times, wrote in his Dec. 5 column entitled "Mitt Romney is no Jack Kennedy," "Mormons, having experienced governmental persecution for their beliefs and practices ... are strong supporters of religious liberty and opposed on principle to accepting government funds for their institutions."

White Protestant evangelicals are much more politically prominent than they were forty-odd years ago. Unfortunately for Romney, regardless of his political legitimacy or viability, it seems the Bible beats all in this race. In the 2008 campaign bake sale from Hell, all of the candidates seem kind of stale and suspect to the American customer.

Romney has cupcakes, but they're just not vanilla enough. And as it stands, Romney doesn't have a prayer, Mormon or otherwise. Religious tolerance proves to be shallower than we all thought.

C.A Chase is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at cchase@student.umass.edu.

In memoriam: Nanking

Dear Editor:

I am a Chinese graduate student from the city of Nanking, China, and my grandparents survived the Nanking Massacre. Although many UMass students are probably unfamiliar with this horrific historical event, it bears remembrance. The year 2007 marks the 70th anniversary of one of the greatest tragedies of World War II.

Exactly 70 years ago today, on Dec. 13, 1937, the Japanese Imperial Army began a six-week atrocity in my city, executing over 300,000 Chinese soldiers and civilians. Comparably, the number of victims is about one fourth of those who were murdered in the notorious Auschwitz concentration camp, from 1940 to 1945. The Nazis destroyed about 1.1 million people at that camp over a period of four years. The Japanese murdered 300,000 Chinese in a period of six weeks. Although the Nanking Massacre is not an exact analogy to the Nazis' ethnic genocide, it could be viewed as the climax of a killing spree that released the bestial nature buried deep in our humanity. The Japanese soldiers celebrated when they gazed upon their deeds – their rapes (over 20,000 women), beheadings, their burning and their burying of still-living human beings. The Nanking Massacre was a planned atrocity performed in the capital of China, with the express intention of intimidating the Chinese government and people. Unfortunately for the Japanese, their plan backfired and only served to stir up massive resistance among the Chinese population. The Chinese managed to endure Japanese occupation, not because of their lacks of toughness and resistant nature, but because they had already been desensitized to tribulation, blood, and death since the Opium Wars of the 19th Century.

I have little faith in my own Chinese government to tell the truth about much of anything, including Nanking Massacre.

Even today, there is an invisible gap between China and Japan. Most Chinese youth have no memory of a war that they never experienced, but only learned about through their history classes. Sometimes they unleash their anger toward Japan by boycotting Japanese products, but this is largely a meaningless gesture designed to make themselves appear unique and patriotic. If you ask a young Chinese person why he dislikes Japan so much, he may answer: "Well, because the Japanese killed so many Chinese before." Furthermore, if you ask how many victims perished in the Nanking Massacre, the young Chinese person will probably not be able to answer. In China, a pictographic memorial to the victims of Nanking Massacre was "softened" due to diplomatic concerns related to Chinese President Hu Jin Tao's planned visit to Japan next year.

The Chinese economy has grown rapidly since the Cultural Revolution of the 1960s, but political reformations and moral standards have not kept pace. I have little faith in my own Chinese government to tell the truth about much of anything, including Nanking Massacre.

In 1937, the Tokyo Daily News reported that two Japanese officers in Nanking were competing to be the first to behead 100 people with a sword. Although Toshiaki Mukai defeated his opponent in sheer numbers – 106 to 105 – it was unknown who was the first to pass the one hundred mark, and so they decided to extend their competition to 150 severed heads. The Japanese may remember the two separate figures as a topic of conversation, but the Chinese should remember the sum of the two numbers – the 211 heads that were separated from their bodies.

It is for this reason that I write this article – not to agitate further hostility between China and Japan, but to memorialize the victims of the Nanking Massacre. Albert Einstein proposed on 1905 that the speed of light is a constant 300,000 kilometers per second. Just like Einstein's calculations, the number of victims at Nanking was 300,000 and this figure is nowadays accepted as historical fact rather than hypothesis. As fast as history is forgotten, history will repeat itself. We are always able to consider if those things that we remember truly deserve to be remembered, but we never have the chance to consider whether those things we have forgotten really deserved to be forgotten.

Weining Zhu
Ph.d Student
Department of Geosciences

For number seven, it's 23 months

Brad Leibowitz

On Dec. 10, 2007 the former quarterback for the Atlanta Falcons, Michael Vick, was sentenced to 23 months in prison. Vick, a former superstar of the NFL, is going to prison for just under two years, and for what?

If you don't know the story, you might be guessing that Vick pled guilty to manslaughter or evading tax payments to the I.R.S. Twenty-three months is no joke. However, the former QB did no such thing. Vick did not kill anyone, nor did he evade taxes. Vick was sentenced to 23 months behind bars for funding, betting on and possibly taking part in the underground world of dog fighting.

23 months in prison seems a bit harsh to me.

In August, according to testimony, Vick pled guilty and admitted that he funded the illegal dog fighting operations and that he helped kill six to eight dogs.

So the man knows he is guilty of an inhuman practice. However, 23 months? Am I the only one who finds the fact that he is going to jail for killing dogs to be a bit ... ludicrous?

Now, it's not that I don't like dogs. On the contrary, I love dogs and have one as a pet. However, 23 months in prison seems a bit harsh to me. When Vick goes to jail he will be around other inmates who have done far worse, such as tax evasion (well, that's actually not too bad...no one likes the I.R.S.), or killing another human.

So then, why is it that Vick received 23 months in prison for his crimes? I think it has to do with personality – not his – the dogs' personalities. I wonder – if he had taken part in a ritualized event in which cats or cows were slaughtered, would he find himself in the situation he is currently in?

They say that a dog is a man's best friend. Again, I have a dog and I love her with all my heart. But honestly, dogs are pretty stupid. They might be cute, extremely loyal and able to provide a smile when one is needed, but they are pretty dumb animals. For a mere cowdog, any dog in the world will do pretty much anything – chase its tail, give you its paw, run across the street and get hit by a car ... anything.

I suppose this is why we love them. They love us unconditionally for providing them with company and cookies and we love them because they provide us with solace while at the same time being slaves to our wills and requests. We love dogs, yet we don't share the same affinity for other animals.

People like cats, but I would wager there are more dog-people than cat-people because cats just don't seem to give a damn. Cats don't need humans like dogs do. They go off on their own for hours to days at a time, only come around when they need food and generally in every interaction with humans act like a rich silver-spoon kid talking down to a poor rusty-lunk kid.

Cows – we slaughter them. Hamburgers taste delicious and even though milk seems to be needed less and less these days, you can't comfortably eat cereal with orange juice. Also, we like leather and suede. Cows are too passive. They moo and graze for a living.

Horses? We love horses almost as much as we love dogs because like dogs, horses are loyal and personable. Like dogs, a horse's feelings can be deduced from tail movements, showing of teeth and growling. Plus, if you're a cowboy, you live in Montana or feel the need to visit a dude ranch, they get you around. Hut then again, horses are big enough and dirty enough to be kept in a barn and also, we need glue.

Snakes? We like snakes, but I think that comes from that fact that we are scared of them. If snakes all got the feeling that we only wanted to kill them, every snake owner in the world would be bit or choked to death by constriction at the exact same moment.

Birds? They provide dreams of flying and mimic our speech. But people need to hunt and we already have airplanes.

Dogs stand alone in this respect. We hate hurting dogs – they are simply too damn loyal and nice.

We don't hunt dogs. Rather, they help us hunt. We don't make anything out of dogs like leather coats, which we make from cowhides. Shoes, we make from snakeskin. We keep dogs for company and pleasure.

When Vick is sitting in the cafeteria of whatever jail he will serve his time in, eventually some inmate who doesn't know who Vick is will ask him why he is in jail. To this he will respond, "Got convicted of dog fighting. Two years." When Vick asks the same question, he might get a response like this. "Two years for dog fighting? I got five for involuntary manslaughter."

I'm sorry, but killing dogs, as inhumane as it is, will never measure up to killing your Aunt Thelma. Furthermore, it's not like Vick is the Stalin of dog killing and decided to slaughter a few million for the hell of it.

Twenty-three months? Please. At most, if I were the judge I would have sentenced him to a year of doggy community service in which he would be a professional dog groomer. Wouldn't you love to hear Michael Vick explain why it's important to get to those hard to reach places on a Shih Tzu with Zest soap? I know I would.

Brad Leibowitz is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bleibowi@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

THE BADGE IS ALRIGHT

Dear Editor:

Re: "The dorm, the office, the slippery slope," Ted Rogers, Ed/Op, December 3, 2007

As a Criminal Justice Major with intentions to become a member of law enforcement I feel very strongly on this issue. When it comes to police and undercover officers in the dorms I think you need to get the facts straight. The dorms are a private residence, except for the first floor (lobby) of buildings. Ask yourself, when was the last time you saw a police officer, uniformed or plainclothes, that was unaccompanied or illegally in your hallway? As a resident of Orchard Hill I can honestly say I have never seen a police officer in any area of the building where he or she wasn't welcome.

According to an anonymous RA in O-Hill, police are not allowed in the hallway without a civilian escort, or probable cause such as a call from an RA or Housing Employee or requests for emergency services. So many people seem to complain about the presence of police, but I feel that it is unjustified.

Even if police were present in dorms, why is it that an issue? Guess what, if something is illegal in this country, it's illegal everywhere – in a dorm room, in your house at home, or deep in the woods somewhere. If you're afraid of being caught, make sure what you're doing is not illegal. If police were in the dorms, tragic events such as that of Virginia Tech could be prevented. Before you begin to protest the men and women who put their lives on the line every day for our safety, make sure you get the facts straight.

Phil Southworth
UMass student

RE-DEFINITION

Dear Editor:

Re: "I have a nightmare" Ben Duffy, Ed/Op, December 12, 2007

First of all, let me just preface this response with saying thank you Ben Duffy, for giving me the reinforcement for why I have dedicated myself to a life of social justice.

His argument that Don Imus' comments were debatably racist blows my mind. Not only were these comments blatantly racist, they were derogatory to young women who are daughters, sisters, and cousins, whose families had to listen to an ignorant radio personality cut them down to a horrific single stereotype. Their "only crime" was not simply a love for basketball.

As for his poorly constructed statements about Bob Green being racist against white people, there is no way for any person of color to be considered racist. I understand this may be hard for him to grasp because he is a white male who feels this society has turned against him, resulting in what Mr. Duffy has claimed is "the new minority of America," but bear with me. Linda Stout, an author and grassroots organizer, said it best:

"By definition, a person of color cannot be racist, or a woman sexist, because they do not have the institutionalized power to act on their prejudices. Also, by definition, all white people are racist, not just because of the personal attitudes we think of as being racist, but because of the privilege white skin brings in our society. Whites cannot say they are not racist because they are born into a society that teaches racism and reinforces white privilege every day, even before they can be aware of it. Whites can choose how, or how far, to antiracism, which means making a commitment to a lifelong process of learning to recognize racism in themselves and in the institutions they are a part of, and taking steps to stop it."

Mr. Duffy paragraph on the hugely generalized, leftist idea on racism raises many concerns for me. IQ and standardized tests are in fact, racially biased, and if you've ever walked into a school in any inner city to see the disparity manifested as lack of supplies, holes in the walls, rats, leaking water, and a general sense of hopelessness among those students, you would understand the root of the problems in dissenting that those school districts compared to an affluent white district would do equally as well on tests. There is a reason that different races don't do equally as well on IQ and standardized tests, and it is based in structural oppression and disenfranchisement, not intelligence level. As for immigration, it is a racial issue, because the discrimination is happening against Latino/a culture including their native language. Our nation is no longer that of the 1950s, when the white nuclear family consisted of the male patriarch bread-winner, stay-at-home mother, kids, and golden retriever. Our nation is one that is changing and being molded into a country with not just one culture, language or skin color, but many.

Duffy's one-dimensional conception of racism is entirely unsatisfactory and needs to be revised. I hope that this response can help you open your eyes, because that's the first step. By the way, Linda Stout is white.

Liz Casey
UMass student

YOU DID MISS SOMETHING

Dear Editor:

Re: "Did Imus say something?" Letters to the editor, Dec. 5, 2007

Not only has the Daily Collegian decided that they're willing to print the ignorance of their own staff (I assume you know of whom I am speaking, describing all libertarians as "dirty hippies" [kind of speaks for itself], now they feel the need to print the ignorance of the general student population.

I plan reading Mr. Chris Rice's letter to the editor, I began to wonder when I, Imus, and possibly just the population of the United States, became so ignorant of black culture. Firstly, a "nappy headed ho" is not a term that could ever be directed towards a white woman, and the fact that Mr. Rio has never heard the term does not in any way surprise me.

When one is "nappy headed" it is a direct attack on the fact that it was once believed that black women had extremely curly, untidy hair, inferior to that of white women. Obviously, we have moved on from this disgusting stereotype, but the term remains. The fact that most white people have never heard this term seems typical, considering it is predominantly used in black culture, and for some reason the majority of people in this country and chosen to shut their noses up at a culture they consider beneath their own.

Secondly, the "n-word". It will not pretend I am in any was allowed to use this term, and I will not use it as, considering my race, it is entirely offensive is used by the black community in order to take back some control. By using this term in a brotherly fashion, it allows black culture to embrace a word that for so long was derogatory.

If Mr. Rio has a problem with that fact, possibly he should consider this: A large number of lesbian women consider themselves "dykes" (not all, obviously, I am not one for stereotyping, but as a heterosexual woman, I would never assume it is okay for me to refer to them as such.

By using a word that had a negative connotation for so long, it allows them to embrace it and make it their own. Thirdly, what gives Mr. Rio the right to decide whether or not something is racist?

Quite obviously, the remark was in no way directed towards him or "his people," and he could never understand the pain that came from those words. Had someone said, "That cracker ass bitch," possibly, he would be singing a different tune.

And lastly, no self respecting human being would ever use the words "hella pimp." "Hella" is a slang word used by West Coast skaters, and has absolutely nothing to do with black culture. Possibly Mr. Rio should spend a few weeks in the heart of Washington Heights, NYC, as to understand exactly what all of this really means.

As usual, the world is ignorant of what it does not understand, and instead of making an effort to educate oneself, we hate what we do not know. It pains me to think that we have made such little progress in terms of equality, but whenever someone like Mr. Rio feels the need to write such filth, we see that progress has done little to none for those who are not within the majority.

Trying to learn instead of assuming the right to ignorance would make this campus – and this country, a much more enjoyable place to be.

Elena Horwath
UMass student

PARENTS ARISE

Parents throughout the United States need to wake up and fight back. Schools and states are attempting to usurp the rights of parents and indoctrinate children. The First Amendment to the Constitution is routinely violated by prohibiting the free exercise thereof of religion, and abridging the freedom of speech.

Young children without parents permission are given birth control and contraceptives, essentially telling them that the practice of sex is acceptable, given sex education including instruction that anti-life sexual orientation is acceptable and offering assistance to abortions without parents knowledge. Further, they are forcing students to learn and accept that evolution is the only origin of the human race using textbooks and instruction that models, denigrate, and labels our history as a nation, influencing students against patriotism, displaying any recognition of our national or patriotic holidays and placing students in a state of anxiety by forcing them to read and watch movies concerning unproven environmental and climate scares.

States are even attempting to interfere with a parent's right to discipline their children. All of this is being done without parents' involvement and consent.

All this is a violation of both natural human law and the First Amendment freedom of speech is violated by not allowing alternate viewpoints, for example creation by God as the origin of our species. Freedom of speech is violated by not allowing parents a voice or a choice in the education of their children in our public school systems. Freedom of speech is violated by altering the history of our nation in educational instruction. Freedom of speech is violated by not allowing the observation of national holidays. Freedom of speech is violated when alternate views concerning the environment and climate are disallowed. Whenever only one point of view is allowed, and others disallowed, particularly when there are very strong counter arguments, this is certainly a violation of freedom of speech. Yet this is what we have going on in our public schools today.

The free exercise of religion is being violated by attempting to indoctrinate young children against the teachings of most major religions and the Bible. The severing of the responsibility of the parent with their child is a violation of honoring thy father and mother – one of the Ten Commandments. Forcing the teaching of evolution directly contradicts the Bible on creation. Giving assistance toward abortions violates the teachings of the Catholic Church and other major religions. Encouraging sex by offering contraception to young children and the types of sex education given is also contrary to many religious beliefs and teachings. Disallowing even the mention of God in schools is preventing free exercise of religion as stated in the Constitution. In fact, all of this is essentially an undermining of religion and its free practice by public schools and the state.

It is time for parents to wake up, take action and fight back. The rights of parents are being usurped, the Constitution is consistently violated, and most importantly our young children are being indoctrinated in a direction that is not only extremely detrimental but downright evil. There is a drive to have the state take complete control of children and they in turn form socialists, but communists. Parents, don't let this happen to your children.

Al DeLuca
Chicopee, MA

The Daily Collegian welcomes reader responses. Letters must be about 300 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com. Letters to the editor do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian editorial board.

HOLIDAY Gift Page

ATKINS FARMS Country Market
Rt. 116 & Bay Road, South Amherst, MA
(413) 253-9528 • (800) 254-1972

Gifts of Good Taste

Let Atkins deliver a Specialty Gift Basket or Gift Box to friends and family locally or anywhere in the U.S.

Food gifts are hand selected and packed to preserve freshness.

Local delivery orders still being accepted.
Order online at: www.atkinsfarms.com

Urban Exchange
Brand Name & Designer Clothing and Accessories
resale / consignment

Abercrombie & Fitch, GAP, J. Crew, Citizens, Coach, Seven for all Mankind, Rock & Republic, Dior, BEBE

Banana Republic, Hollister, Juicy Couture, American Eagle, Betsey Johnson, Marc Jacobs

Drop & Shop Weekend
December 14th, 15th & 16th
Take 20% off your favorite item when you drop off clothes this weekend.
Earn Holiday Cash!

No appointment necessary

413-585-8729
233 Main St.
Northampton MA

WINTER SPECIAL
10x20 FOR $60 A MONTH TILL MAY

AMHERST SELF STORAGE
(413) 253-0664
1270 Federal St. (rt 9)
Belchertown, MA
01007

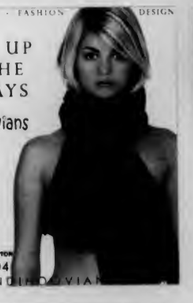
OFFICE AT STADIUM STORAGE
333 ROCK HILL RD HADLEY

SECURITY GATE • SURVEILLANCE CAMERAS
WELL LIT • LOCK CHECK
ACCESS 24/7
OFFICE HOURS 9AM-3PM
PALLETS INCLUDED
MOVING SUPPLIES SOLD
U-HAUL RENTAL AVAILABLE
5x10 MOTORCYCLE WINTER SPECIAL
$30 TILL MAY 1ST AT BOTH FACILITIES:
STADIUM & AMHERST SELF STORAGE

QUALITY · AFFORDABLE · BICYCLES

Still featuring end of season sales!

See us for great gift ideas...



bikes, lights, fenders, winter clothes, books, calenders, gift certificates, and much more!

Sales - Service - Rentals

Trailside Bicycles
18 Route 63 Street, Hadley MA
413-582-0733 or 413 265-6055

GIFTS · JEWELRY · FASHION · DESIGN

WARM UP FOR THE HOLIDAYS AT Scandihoovians

25 S. Pleasant St., Amherst
22 Strong Avenue, Northampton
(413) 256-0004
WWW.SCANDINAVIAN

OFF THE WALL GAMES

Refer to this ad and receive 10% off

"Weekly Gaming Schedule"

Monday
World of Warcraft TCG 4pm - 8pm FREE
Board Game Night 5pm - 9pm FREE

Tuesday
CLOSED

Wednesday
Warhammer 40k 5pm - 10 pm FREE
Casual Magic Night 6pm - 10pm

Thursday
Warhammer Fantasy 5pm - 10 pm FREE
Warmachine/Hordes 5pm - 10pm FREE

Friday
Magic: The Gathering FNM Booster Draft 6:30pm
$10.00 Entrance
(Win keep what you draft - Packs for 1st and 2nd Place)

Saturday
Magic: The Gathering Legacy Tournament 1:00pm
$5.00 Entrance

Sunday
Magic: The Gathering Constructed type II Tournament 1:00pm
$5.00 Entrance

Rampage

Discount with college ID • Buy 10 pairs of sneakers, get one FREE • women's clothing too: accesories handbags, lingerie.
"If we don't have it, we'll get it for you."

Ask about Nutrition 101

Newman Cafe & Catering

Breakfast served all day!
Daily lunch & Dinner Specials
Over 100 menu items!

A GREAT PLACE TO STUDY, RELAX, AND EAT!

WE DO CATERING
For all types of events, we can design a menu to suit your needs

Open over Winter Break!
Hours: M-F 8 AM - 2PM

Located on UMass campus, next to SOM building

413-549-0401 413-263-6798
472 NORTH PLEASANT ST • WWW.NEWMANCAT...

DEC 13 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 13, 2007 — ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Headliners up to students

Online voting to determine UMass spring concert line-up

By Michelle Abbasciano
Collegian Staff

Have you ever wanted to choose who you wanted to see at the annual spring concert? Have you felt disappointed in the lineup that the school chose to play the fest? Well if you answered yes to either of the above questions, then you are in luck.

This year, the University Programming Council (UPC) of the University of Massachusetts, formerly known as the University Productions and Concerts, has decided to do things differently. They are currently in the process of organizing the University's annual spring concert and are allowing students to decide who they want on the lineup.

"It's the first year doing it this way and they are excited to give people this opportunity.

"Typically when planning the spring concert, our organization sits down and makes a list of the bands we think would be most appealing to the student body," says UPC's executive assistant Beverly Arzu-Guerrero. "We wanted to give students an opportunity this year to voice their opinions, so we decided to come up with a poll with popular artists who are hot ticket sellers right now. The student's input as to who they want to see is important."

The UPC has assembled a lengthy poll assembled on the Center for Student Development's Web site that includes 45 different artists. The list spans across nearly every genre of music, to satisfy the taste of each community on campus. Whether you prefer the soulful beats of Common, or the heavy guitar riffs of Coheed and Cambria, the choice is yours for the making.

Although the Council cannot guarantee that the top-voted artists will play the spring concert due to the busy, ever-changing schedule of bands, they can promise that they will do their absolute best to bring the students of UMass quite simply "the best concert we can offer, with a memorable lineup and amazing artists."

According to Arzu-Guerrero, other colleges such as University of Connecticut have done events similar to this, where they have the students more involved and get to have a say in the type of programming they want on campus. Since the voting was so successful at UConn, coupled with the ongoing concerns that have been voiced here at Amherst in the last couple years about the lineup of the spring concert, UPC felt it would be in everyone's best interest to do things differently and give the students a voice.

If students for whatever reason do not get the opportunity to vote this time around, there will be another chance in the beginning of next year. The UPC is hoping to have this become a staple for spring planning.

"We are going to work on making a more sophisticated way for students to vote. We want students to have a voice in everything. We want to open it up for the students to be heard, especially since it's a student run organization" said Arzu-Guerrero.

The spring concert typically has two headliners, with an opening act. Around March of next year, UPC is going to hold a contest and invite local bands to submit demos. Between eight and 10 of the top bands will be chosen, and a battle of the bands type event will follow. This will give local aspiring bands an opportunity to get their music heard. Whichever group comes out on top will play before the opening acts in front of thousands of students. There will also be some guest emcees at the event.

Voting for the poll will end today at 5 p.m. Make sure you head over to www.umass.edu/csd/upc/spring-concert to choose who you want to see play and try to get your favorite artist. The spring concert is scheduled to take place on May 4, 2008 at the Mullins Center and is sponsored by the University Programming Council and the Student Government Association.

Michelle Abbasciano can be reached at mabbasci@student.umass.edu

Last year the Spring Concert was headlined by OK Go and Ben Folds. This year students are able to vote on who they want to see play the Mullins Center.

A fabulous, fashionable year in review

Emma Lifvergren

As 2007 draws to a close, it's time for the fashion-savvy to reflect on the events of the past year and take them into the next. This year has seen some of the most inspiring collections and thrilling events yet, and in a world where the current season is all about topping the last, the spring and winter seasons have definitely taken their places on the list of ones to remember. It's time to look at the top seven fashion moments of '07.

Coco's Jig

Jean Paul Gaultier's Fall/Winter 2007 show in February literally opened to rave reviews, and not just because of the clothes. Nineteen-year-old Canadian model Coco Rocha did not merely strut onto the runway when opening Gaultier's show – she jigged, much to the surprise of the audience. Before Rocha began modeling, she was an Irish dancer and was discovered at a dance competition in British Columbia in 2002.

Cavalli Craze

In early November, celebrated designer Roberto Cavalli added yet another item to his list of endeavors: an exclusive collection for Swedish mega store H&M. The collection consisted of men's and women's wear, accessories and, of course, lingerie.

Much of the collection was covered in Cavalli's signature animal print, from leopard to zebra, and was only available in a select 200 stores worldwide. Rabid Cavalli fans lined up for blocks before stores opened, and the collection sold out in less than a day.

"Airborne" by Hussein Chalayan

Hussein Chalayan's Fall/Winter 2007 show, dubbed "Airborne" was less of a mere fashion show and more of an extraterrestrial, technologically advanced look into the future.

The end of the runway swirled in clouds of steam emanating from a void in the center, around which models stalked, wearing Chalayan's designs. Model Lily Cromber opened the show clad in a shift that lit up and played its own movie: a pixilated grid of a cityscape as seen from Google Earth. Other models donned Plexiglas fishbowl and saucer shaped headwear that both theirs faces in a warm, mood-enhancing glow, while another wore a bell jar-like contraption that was filled with what appeared to be a swarm of bees.

In one of the more entertaining fashion moments of 2007, Coco Rocha performed an Irish jig during Alexander McQueen's Autumn/Winter show.

Toward the end of her life, Blow became severely depressed. According to close sources, Blow was crushed when McQueen didn't take her along when he sold his brand to Gucci. She was also having trouble conceiving a child with then husband, Dermar Blow, who eventually left her to find a more fertile woman.

In 2006, Blow attempted suicide by sleeping pills, and later by jumping from the Hammersmith Flyover in London, resulting in two broken ankles.

In 2007, she tried to kill herself several more times by driving her car into the back of a truck, overdosing on horse tranquilizers, drowning herself in a lake and overdosing on a beach in India.

On May 6, Blow announced that she was going shopping and was later found on a bathroom floor. Doctors later confirmed that she had drank 20 times the lethal amount of the weed killer Paraquat, and Blow died in the hospital two days later.

Isabella Blow's coffin was topped with one of her signature Philip Treacy hats in lieu of the traditional flowers, and the icon inspired Alexander McQueen's S/S 2008 collection.

Happy Birthday, Dior!

2007 marked the sixtieth anniversary of legendary French design house Christian Dior.

Dior has dressed stylish women since 1947 when his premiere collection, later called "The New Look," revolutionized post-war fashion.

I have designed flower women," Dior said of his collection, where tiny-waisted dresses, voluminous skirts and still corsets created an hourglass, womanly shape that squashed the boxy, standard of war fashion.

Now, 60 years later, the legacy of Dior is still strong, under the creative direction of English designer John Galliano. The heart of the celebration was the A/W 2007 couture show.

This past July, the Orangerie of Versailles was alive with the spirit of Dior. Models from Gisele Bundchen to Irina Lazareanu graced the runway, decked in garments inspired by great art. Bundchen opened the show in a shimmering version of Dior's original 1947 design, and the looks became more exotic and inspired as the show went on.

Goya, Picasso, Bérard and Cocteau were all there in spirit, their visions and color palettes recreated in voluminous, over-the-top dresses and, in one case, a harlequin-patterned jester suit.

Tie at the CFDA Awards

This year, at the Council of Fashion Designers of America's annual awards ceremony, there was a surprising twist: there were three winners for women's wear designer of the year.

Oscar de le Renta was called to the stage to accept the award when the CFDA's executive director Steven Colb, announced that when the results had been calculated, there had been a tie between de la Renta and Jack McCollough and Lazaro Hernandez of Proenza Schouler.

Founded in 1962, the CFDA honors great designers within the industry each year.

The three main categories (Women's wear, Menswear and Emerging Talent for ready-to-wear) have bonded such winners within the last seven years as Tom Ford for Gucci, Calvin Klein, Marc Jacobs, Zach Posen, and Derek Lam, among others.

Arrivederci, Valentino

The fashion industry said goodbye to a legend in October. After 45 years at the age of 75, Italian designer Valentino Garavani announced his retirement during what was his last Spring/Summer show.

After working for Guy Laroche in Paris until 1956, Valentino moved back to his native Italy and opened a haute-couture shop in Rome and staged his first fashion show at the Palazzo Pitti in Florence.

Valentino is known for his luxurious evening gowns in his signature "Valentino Red", which debuted in 1967. His is a world that is filled to the brim with glittering socialites and jet-setting celebrities. Glamour for the sake of glamour is Valentino's signature.

The designer's stunning final collection of a whopping 87 looks left nothing to be desired and everything to be wanted. The show opened with a group of bubble-gum pink, lilac and daffodil-colored coats and dresses, and flawlessly transitioned into ruched and draped evening gowns. His Valentino Red made an appearance, of course.

There you have it, the top seven fashion moments of '07. Hopefully next year will be as eventful and exciting at this one. Have a very happy and fashionable holiday!

Emma Lifvergren can be reached at elifverg@student.umass.edu

Tribute to a fallen, funny confidant

Ben Duffy

Comedian Chris Farley died nearly 10 years ago, on Dec. 18, 1997. The cause of death was a drug overdose of cocaine and heroine. He was 33-years-old.

I'll never forget the way that Chris Farley made me laugh. Who can forget the Chris Farley 'Adam Sandler "Smutts Guy" beer commercial.' Or the time he played the bus driver on "Billy Madison?" Of course there was also Chris Farley the Superfan from Chicago who loved "da Bears" and "da Bulls," as well as Chris Farley the lunchlady who danced around in rubber gloves as Adam Sandler strummed his famous ode to cafeteria workers.

What about Farley's "Matt Foley" character who lived "in a van down by the river?" In Matt Foley's most memorable skit, he gave his motivational speech to David Spade and Christina Applegate, two teenagers who had been caught by their parents with marijuana. Matt Foley asked David Spade's character, "Now young man, what do you want to do with your life?" Spade's character replied, "Actually Matt, I kinda want to be a writer." "Well, baddy-frickin-da, we've got ourselves a writer here," said Matt Foley. He continued, "Hey dad, I can't see real good, is that Bill Shakespeare over there?" Farley then advised Spade's character, "Now I wonder, Brian – from what I've heard, you've been using your paper not for writing, but for rollin' doobies. You're going to be doing a lot of doobie-rolling when you're living in a van down by the river." The skit was so funny that David Spade and Christina Applegate had to struggle to contain their laughter.

Chris's departure from this world moved me in a way that some of the other high-profile deaths of the '90s did not. When I was in seventh grade, Kurt Cobain killed himself, but I didn't shed a tear. In fact, I was a little annoyed that so many people learned to love Cobain overnight. I was never much of a Nirvana fan, and I wasn't going to pretend to be a fan just because he killed himself.

River Phoenix also died of an overdose that same year that I was in seventh grade. Even though River Phoenix starred in "Stand by Me," the greatest movie of all time, he hardly stole the show. Other than that monumental film, I probably couldn't name a single River Phoenix movie off the top of my head. Then there were the murders of East Coast and West Coast rappers Biggie Smalls and Tupac Shakur. For the record, Tupac was the superior musician, but neither death impacted my life in any significant way.

Chris's death was different. Chris was a guy like me, or at least I think he was. I wasn't his closest confidant, but I watched him so long that I felt as if I knew him. He was big, goofy and Irish, just like me. It's not very often that a big, goofy, Irish guy gets a spot on TV. Besides Chris Farley, other big, goofy, Irish actors include ... well, I'm sure I'll think of someone. There must be someone Chris couldn't have been the only one, but he sure seemed that way.

Chris Farley died when I was a junior in high school. Throughout high school, I worked on weekends as a dishwasher at a local restaurant. Every Saturday night, I would come home, take a shower to wash off the kitchen grime, and switch on "Saturday Night Live."

That was one of "Saturday Night Live's" golden ages and Chris Farley was an asset to the show. He distinguished himself as an outstanding comedian among a cast of stars. Chris's contemporaries included Molly Shannon, Dana Carvey, Phil Hartman, Ellen Cleghorne, Mike Myers, Kevin Nealon, Adam Sandler, and of course, Chris Rock.

The two Chrises – Chris Rock and Chris Farley – were brought on board at SNL for the 1990-91 season. They were the only two comedians hired that year.

"He was one of my best friends and one of the funniest guys I've ever known. I love him and I'm going to miss him," said Mr. Rock.

His fellow SNL cast members adored him. Although more than 500 people attended his funeral in Madison, Wisconsin, close friend and fellow cast member David Spade was not one of them.

"I just couldn't have gone into a room where Chris was in a box," Spade commented. The funeral could have been much larger, but the ceremony was a private affair and uninvited guests were turned away at the door.

Even prior to his death, friends and family members tried to talk to Chris about his drinking, drugs, and excessive eating. Chrises manager, Marc Gurvitz, foreshadowed Chris's death in a magazine interview.

"He's got a big career and a great life ahead of him. But will he go the route of John Candy if he's not careful?" Of course, he will. Fellow cast member Al Franken claimed that SNL producer Lorne Michaels had repeatedly suspended Chris and told him to get help with his various addictions.

David Spade recounted in a Rolling Stone article that, "even when Chris was straight he looked totally out of his mind, sweating and with his hair all wet." Spade noted that Chris's death meant the Chris could "finally relax." He went on to say, "Chris tried too hard to get everyone to like him. Meanwhile the truth was that everyone already liked him too much."

Chris Farley was a funny fellow with a lot of problems. His life was cut tragically short by drugs and obesity at the young age of 33. He didn't tell a ton of laughter in the world. His just hasn't been as funny since. Chris Farley died. When I think about high school, I think about that job I had washing dishes, and when I think about that job, I think about that big hug Chris Farley. It's hard to believe that almost ten years have passed since the big man lost his life. I miss him more than ever. Rest in peace, Chris.

Ben Duffy can be reached at bduffy@student.umass.edu

Comedian actor and all around funny man Chris Farley passed away from a cocaine overdose nearly 10 years ago on Dec. 18, 1997.

Collegian music critics present

By Allie Roth
Collegian Staff

A lot happened in music this year. Rihanna took it upon herself to add an extra syllable to an item commonly used in the rain and created one of the catchiest songs of the year. Amy Winehouse explored the world of black eyeliner, crazy on-stage antics and over and over again, boasted that she would never go to rehab. Justin Timberlake, without a new album, added his two cents to a variety of projects, including joining Timbaland to produce for Duran Duran, and has achieved levels of street-cred never thought possible by a former member of a boy band.

Although these events inevitably caused some great music, my top-seven list of 2007 comes from another place: albums made by bands flying somewhat outside and below the radar of mainstream rock music.

The Shins "Wincing the Night Away"

No one does quirky, happy rock like Portland-based folk-indie band The Shins. And this new album is one of their best to date. Each song has an element of maturity, both lyrically and melodically. It's not so easy to understand the train of thought of the Shins, but all the songs are accessible with whimsical elements like an abundance of "ooh oohs" especially on "Phantom Limb." "Sea Legs" is their try at an arena rock track. The Shins are not just that band that changed Natalie Portman's character in "Garden State." This album shows they are capable of being a major player in the rock universe and change a lot of people's lives.

The Shout Out Louds "Our Ill Wills"

Sure Adam Olenius, the lead singer of this Swedish band, emulates Robert Smith of the Cure most of the time, especially when he sings "I don't want to wake up knowing I don't have a future" on the track "Impossible." The sound of The Shout Out Louds is retro, upbeat indie with a twist. The sad lyrics are perfectly upset by catchy foot-tapping melodies. This album is kind of like The Hold Steady meets the Cure. As a follow up to 2003's "Howl Howl Gaff Gaff," it's a fun album with a lot of fun songs, especially "You are Dreaming" and "Parents Livingroom." There is a lot of heart shoved into the 12 songs. In the end, it can function as party CD as much as any of the mainstream dance music out there.

Okkervil River "The Stage Names"

Although it's only nine tracks, it highlights the ability of Okkervil River to draw on a variety of influences to create a varied group of songs that range from happy to sad to kitschy. Their instrumentation is strong and their sound is compellingly real. Will Sheff's voice is quite unique as it sucks in the listener. "Plus Ones," "Savannah Smiles" and "John Alynn Smith Sails" are complicated story-board tunes while "A Girl in Port" is a more straight-forward acoustic ballad. This album is unlike anything else out there right now.

Bright Eyes "Cassadega"

This album appears to be an effort at a more accessible sound for Bright Eyes. The songs are rooted in an alt-country sound while maintaining the slightly-sad persona of Saddle Creek bands. As expected, the lyrics are laced with words of disappointment and Oberst's own yearning for self-discovery. In "Hot Knives," the albums' second single, violins are coupled with lovely back-up vocals that emphasize the subject matter presented. "Cleanse Song" and "If the Breakman Turns My Way" are just two examples of the song writing style of Oberst continues to strengthen with each subsequent album. This album is a more wide-ranging and grown-up version of "I'm Wide Awake, Its Morning."

Thurston Moore "Trees Outside the Academy"

This album is Moore's first solo effort in over 10 years. It's a solid mix of instrumentals and acoustic songs all highlighting the musical skills of Moore. There are elements of experimentation, as one might expect, but overall, the album shows the softer side to this Sonic Youth frontman, especially on "Silver Blue." "Fri/End" is another solid track that starts off with distortion and then goes straight into an acoustic song about friendship and love. Any time an artist is brave enough to end his album with a track recorded at age 13 must be an example of a fine work. And this album most definitely is.

Limbeck "Limbeck"

Limbeck is a fun and charming alternative-country band who is all about traveling, friendship and having fun. Their latest album accomplishes those three things. It's right in line with their past two albums, "Hi, Everything's Great" and "Let Me Come Home." All of the songs remind the listener what joyous music sounds like with a mix of tambourines, harmonies, clapping and enough "ooh ooh oohs" to make one yearn for simpler times. "Trouble," "Let Me Come Home" and "Friends" really highlight Limbeck's ability to draw from folk and country and create something new. Anyone who listens to this album can not help but smile.

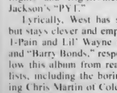
The National "Boxer"

This New York-based band has received an overwhelming amount of buzz this year from just about every music magazine, blogger, newspaper, and critic. They live up to it, for the most part, with "Boxer." Throughout the 12 songs, it's mellow and surprisingly refreshing at the same time. Matt Berninger's voice is something along the lines of Stephin Merritt of the Magnetic Fields. His baritone vocal style is monotone at times and does not illuminate the lyrics of the songs. Instead the instrumental arrangements, especially the horns, cue the listener to the most important parts of the songs. The songs are understated and slightly political, yet charming so to leave a lasting impression, especially "Apartment Story" and "Slow Show."

Allie Roth can be reached at allie.roth@gmail.com

By Ian Nelson
Collegian Correspondent

With the year inching towards an end, it has become apparent that a long awaited year in music has produced some fantastic albums from likely and unlikely sources. With all ends of the musical spectrum being manipulated and transformed, many artists were able to exercise total control over not only their designated genre, but over the music industry as a whole.



Panda Bear "Person Pitch"

Kanye West's album "Graduation" has a strong case for album of the year for 2007.

Animal Collective member Noah Lennox, a.k.a. Panda Bear, broke ever so slightly from the pounding, chanting euphoria of his Collective comrades to fully embrace a golden shade of psychedelic pop music. "Person Pitch" differs from Animal Collective releases by ditching the tribal shrieking and lengthy drones in favor of soaring, layered vocals, chiming guitars, and eclectic percussion. key tracks include the epic twelve and a half minute "Bros," whose tambourine and acoustic guitar drive the communal beat while washes of sound and vocal repetitions glaze over the last five minutes. The uplifting opener "Comfy In Nautica" stomps along as choruses of vocals pulsate, and real tribal leanings show through in the first half of the other twelve-minute monster "Good Girl/Carrots."

Kanye West "Graduation"

Though Kanye West may never live up to the glory of his debut record "The College Dropout," his 2007 release comes close. West's soulful samples on the opening track "Good Morning," as well as on "Everything I Am" reach back to decades passed while he updates them, splicing in modern hip-hop backbeats and catchy verses. "Graduation" feels as though West made the record to be played in the club, choosing swelling synths to power tracks such as "Flashing Lights" and "Big Brother," which samples Michael Jackson's "PYT."

Lyrically, West has slowed some since 2004, but stays clever and employs contemporary guests I-Pain and Lil' Wayne for spots on "Good Life" and "Barry Bonds," respectively. A few duds disallow this album from reaching higher on year-end lists, including the boring "Homecoming" featuring Chris Martin of Coldplay and "Drunk and Hot Girls," which is too satirical for its own good.

Justice "†"

One of the most important dance releases to arrive in 2007, Justice's first full length album flexes convoluted, yet infectious beats. At first it's difficult to tell whether you're listening to Daft Punk on fast forward or an alien party spacecraft landing outside your window.

The French duo have a knack for dynamics, using contorted synth tones over extremely solid drum sounds and blips to build up layers in the mix, then drop them quicker than you can spell d-a-n-c-e. The opening track "Genesis" lets there be light, with huge horns sounding like the signifying of some great, approaching royalty. The only thing that potentially hurt the album is the single "D.A.N.C.E.," with overplay sadly felling the song victim to the burden of going through the motions.

Wilco "Sky Blue Sky"

Wilco managed to drum up much criticism for this year's release "Sky Blue Sky." Through all the accusations of being too straight-forward and bland (and don't forget those cute Volkswagen commercials), Jeff Tweedy has actually collaborated with his fellow band members, easily crafting one of the best rock 'n' roll records of the year. The songs may be simpler, more mature, and less experimental, but Wilco has not forgotten how to completely rock out.

Songs like "You Are My Face" and "Impossible Germany" rip with larger than life guitar tones, while a quieter side is also perfectly acceptable such as on opening track "Either Way" and on the lonely ballad "Hate It Here." Overall, Wilco's 2007 release never ceases to amaze through multiple pristine guitar tones and a certain fullness rarely seen in rock music today.

M.I.A. "Kala"

With more production from Diplo, what did you expect? With other help from producer Switch, M.I.A. comes back "with power power" to follow up her stellar debut record "Arular" with more of the same sexy beats, heavily accented English, and cultural overtones enough off-the-wall samples and vocal overtones to scare off a small child. It's hard to say whether or not M.I.A. has out done her first record, though "Kala" is jam-packed with exciting club tracks which don't go stale. Her only downside is the tendency for certain elements of her style to get, for lack of a better word, annoying. "World Town" showcases this ailment with its fierce, nasal horns and doesn't give the listener a chance to enjoy the finer moments of the track. Another miss comes, surprisingly, at the hands of Timbaland, whose last track "Come Around" lopes and lingers and is hardly interesting.

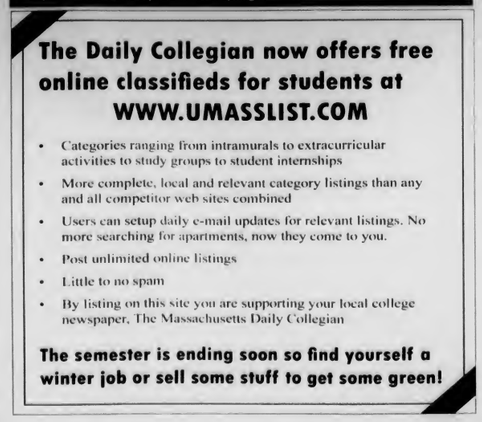
Radiohead "In Rainbows"

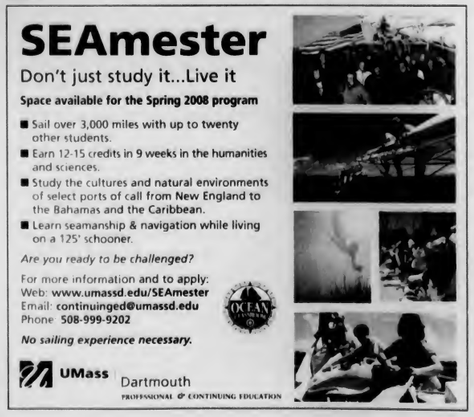
One of the biggest stories in music this year was Radiohead's decision to issue their first album in four years themselves, bypassing the norm of a record label release with an MP3 release and allowing fans to choose the price.

Aside from stirring up the record industry a bit, "In Rainbows" is a brilliant record meticulously produced by perennial Radiohead producer Nigel Godrich.

Expectedly, every guitar, bass and drum sound is perfectly in line, forming circles around the heart of the songs, lifting them up and up until they melt away. If it were not for a couple misses, this record may have had more impact. "House Of Cards" never really ends up going anywhere and "Faust Arp," while appealing with swaying strings and a sunny acoustic guitar, doesn't amount to much either at just over two minutes in length. Winners are bountiful, however, as the opener "15 Step" kicks right out with strange guitar phrases and a staggering backbeat sprinkled with a cheering children's chorus. The following track, "Bodysnatchers," rocks the hardest on the album, allowing Thom Yorke's sneer to shine through his first lazy then excited vocals.

LCD Soundsystem "Sound Of Silver"





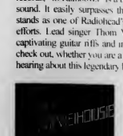
James Murphy knows how to please the clubs across the pond. He knows how to be clever, witty and get away with it. Sarcasm and satire spill into the lyrics which are never really sung, but more shouted or proclaimed clearly and flatly in the style of David Byrne as in the track "Get Innocuous."

Talking Heads references fly around this album, which at times shares the same building percussion and world beat feel, but is electronic in nature. Also Talking Heads-like is the mere nine tracks, many of which are pulled out into six-plus minute grooves. Murphy kept some of what critics call a punk rock feel in tracks such as the playful "North American Scum" and "Watch the Tapes." The album begins with "Get Innocuous," which builds with layers coming and going with ease. "All My Friends" is a commentary on belonging, using up all seven and a half minutes to grow and become fully realized. "Us v Them" brings the funk like it was prescribed. This record never lets up, doesn't get old and gets the party started. What more could you ask for?

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu.

the best releases of the past year

By Michelle Arbasciano
Collegian Staff



In a year where Disney's smash hits Hannah Montana and "High School Musical" ruled the sound waves and seemingly hundreds of neo pop-rock artists emerged onto the music scene, it may have been hard for some people to distinguish one decent album from the rest. Consequently, that may have made it even harder to notice when the best of 2007 dropped in a local record store near you.

Well worry not, because a comprehensive list of the standout albums of the past 12 months has been compiled for your convenience, so now all you have to do after reading this article is go out and listen to the tunes you've missed out on this year.

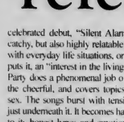
Radiohead "In Rainbows"

When Radiohead released their latest album, "In Rainbows," most got so caught up in the discussion over its form of release (via optional-pay download), and forgot all about what was really important: the music. Although the album might not be as artistically exuberant as their earlier records, "In Rainbows" is a brilliant twist on the unique rock sound. It easily surpasses the band's last two releases and stands as one of Radiohead's strongest and most consistent efforts. Lead singer Thom Yorke's vocals compliment the captivating guitar riffs and makes this album a necessity to check out, whether you are a hardcore Radiohead fan, or just hearing about this legendary band for the first time today.

Amy Winehouse "Back to Black"

You may or may not have seen the latest shenanigans of Amy Winehouse displayed on Entertainment Tonight, or heard about her drunk, incomplete concerts through the grape vine, but chances are, you have heard her catchy single "Rehab" on the radio at some point in the past few months.

"Back to Black", which is Winehouse's second effort, was received enthusiastically as a breath of fresh, soulful air for those hearing her music for the first time. This record shows the songstress' transition from a jazz-influenced style to an emphasis on R&B/Soul. Her powerfully emotional vocal style combines with the array of instruments including tambourines, saxophones, drums, and horns to provide a unique, bluesy sound that is all her own. Even though Winehouse herself may be a trainwreck waiting to happen, her music is unique, and her lyrics are powerful and honest, making "Back to Black" a sultry, witty performance deserving of your attention.



Paramore "Riot!"

In 2005, a pop-rock band called Paramore released their debut, "All We Know Is Falling," to a small, loyal fan base. If this first effort made a small splash, their sophomore album, "Riot!" was a tidal wave. The production on this record has taken an enormous step up from their debut. "Riot!" has a great deal more attitude, emanating especially from the incredibly gifted vocalist, Hayley Williams. She packs a mean punch in each and every song, especially on the record's stand out tracks "crushcrushcrush" and "Misery Business." The music is fast-paced and fun, but the record is also versatile and includes much slower and softer songs as well. Despite the young age of the band and its fans, "Riot!" has more passion and catchy beats on it than 90 percent of the records released along side of it this year.

Bloc Party "A Weekend in the City"

Bloc Party's newest collection of songs, "A Weekend in the City," is a stunning and brilliant follow-up to their celebrated debut, "Silent Alarm." This album is not only catchy, but also highly relatable to people of all ages. It deals with everyday life situations, or as lead singer Kele Okereke puts it, an "interest in the living noise of a metropolis." Bloc Party does a phenomenal job of capturing the mundane and the cheerful, and covers topics from commuting to casual sex. The songs burst with tension along with passion lying just underneath it. It becomes hard not to like "Weekend" due to its honest lyrics and emotion-filled content. Overall, this record is very well done, exploring modernity to the fullest.

Say Anything "In Defense of the Genre"

"Say Anything" might ring a bell for some people as being the popular cult classic movie starring the young John Cusack. However, Say Anything is also the moniker used by the popular indie rock band from Los Angeles. Despite only being together for a couple of years, the band released their second record cleverly named "In Defense of the Genre." The record includes 27 monumental tracks with almost as many celebrity guests performing on it.

Max Bemis, the bipolar and slightly insane vocalist for the group, sat down while recording this latest record to make a list of all the different friends of his that he wanted to guest on the album. In the end, he accrued about 30 names including Gerard Way of My Chemical Romance, Anthony Green of Circa Survive and New Found Glory's Jordan Pundik. It's a fun, collaborative project, which is rare these days and the result is a truly unique record.

Kanye West "Graduation"

"Graduation," the third installment in the Kanye West series of ground breaking albums, targets every school kid, from drop-outs, to late registrants, to graduates. The album is probably West's strongest yet, as he continues to prove his understanding for a wide array of music and musical influences alike. Although this record shows West maturing, it still includes his arrogant attitude and fearlessness. Coupled with his lack of attention to inhibiting boundaries and devoted fan base, it is evident that he knows exactly what people yearn for: catchy beats, perspective and an honest voice to be heard. This is a fresh album that really delivers, as West steps up his lyrical game and provides something for everyone.

Bayside "The Walking Wounded"

On the whole, this album is exactly what could have been expected from an indie rock band like Bayside. Dark, brooding lyrics, painted on a canvas of unique melodies that is reminiscent of Alkaline Trio and the Smiths. The record includes catchy, upbeat tunes, driving guitar riffs and boom-bap drums, the band has been struggling to make a bold statement in their genre for years, touring relentlessly, while staying true to their roots and fans.

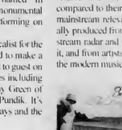
"The Walking Wounded" is quite a change from previous albums, but really allowed the band to make the declaration they wanted, earning them some much deserved respect and popularity. The record tells the story of their lives and doesn't hold back from showing true emotion. Bayside have finally lived up to the potential shown on their debut "Sirens and Condolences," and offer by far their best record to date.

Michelle Arbasciano can be reached at marbasci@student.umass.edu.

By Brian Wood
Collegian Correspondent

On paper, 2007 was a dream year for fans of most any musical genre.

Indie-rock saw news releases from some of the bands that helped shape the now heavily saturated genre. Efforts from The Shins, Modest Mouse, and Arcade Fire all hit the shelves and were subsequently greeted with heavy fan fare.



Millions of Radiohead fans were delighted by the news that the bands latest album "In Rainbows" would be given away Online for any price they saw fit, only to feel slightly duped by the marketing gimmick when the band announced it would release the album in higher bit rate quality with additional songs in retail stores on compact disc.

The world of hip-hop received new albums from heavyweights Kanye West and 50 Cent and was treated to the war of words and sales that followed.

And yes, even contemporary country enthusiasts received a new offering from chart topper Kenny Chesney.

While there was certainly no shortage of big name releases in 2007, most, unfortunately, fell relatively flat when compared to their earlier works that had garnered them their mainstream relevance. The top releases of 2007 were generally produced from artists that hovered just beneath the mainstream radar and the intense magnification that accompanies it, and from artists who were unafraid to breathe new life into the modern musical landscape.

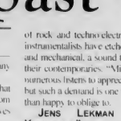
Beirut "The Flying Club Cup"

After substantial buzz was generated by his Balkan-folk inspired 2006 debut "Gulag Orkestar" and subsequent follow up LP "Lon Gisland," Beirut front-man Zach Condon retreated to France with his trumpet and trusty ukulele. The result of his pilgrimage was the undeniable masterpiece of 2007, "The Flying Club Cup." Drifting away from the heavy folk qualities that made his debut so unique, the album instead wraps its listeners in traditional French flavors with its lush instrumentation and gorgeously layered vocal melodies. Condon displays his strongest songwriting skills to date with such standouts as "Elephant" and "Le Mariniere," while the miniaturist vocal and ukulele pairing on "The Penalty" illustrates that Condon's musicianship extends far beyond the generally complex ensembles that accompany the majority of his works.

Okkervil River "The Stage Names"

"The Stage Names" is the fullest and most accessible album from this sextet from Texas. Blending the elements of country and folk that dominated their debut release "I Don't Fall In Love With Everyone You See" with rock influenced hooks and mellower compositions that were filtered throughout their last album "Black Sheep Boy," "The Stage Names" successfully strikes a chord with most any listener.

Upbeat numbers such as "Plus Ones" and "Our Life Is Not A Movie Or Maybe" transition into slower more harmonious melodic songs such as "A Girl In Port" and "Savannah Smiles" without a hitch, leaving a finished product that inspires listeners to get up and move, while tugging at their heartstrings. Will Sheff's lyrics are as sharp as ever on the album, as his unique ability to craft songs with such profound literary qualities continues to impress with each album.



Battles "Mirrored"

The first full length album from Battles draws on the complexities of their earlier EPs while incorporating vastly catchier hooks and melodies. Seamlessly combining elements of rock and techno/electronica the four-piece ensemble of instrumentalists have etched out a sound that is both organic and mechanical, a sound that puts them light years ahead of their contemporaries. "Mirrored" is an album that demands numerous listens to appreciate the subtle nuances through out, but such a demand is one that any music fan should be more than happy to oblige to.

Jens Lekman "Night Falls Over Kortedala"

"Night Falls Over Kortedala" is by far the most complete and well rounded offering from the Swedish songwriter to date. With Lekman's wholesome baritone vocals, infectiously catchy hooks, heavy usage of looping and classic samples, and lyrics that often teeter between heart wrenching and bubbly, "Night Falls Over Kortedala" is an album that is as unclassifiable as it is unforgettable. Highlights "It Was a Strange Time in My Life" and "Opposite of Hallelujah" demonstrate Lekman's ability to incorporate more classical instrumental samples to accompany his velvety vocal melodies and biting lyricism, while "Friday Night At The Drive-In Bingo" offers a upbeat, and purposefully sloppy take on a 1950s sock-hop jam with its roaring saxophonic solos and pull pastry lyrics. This wide range of stylistic delivery keeps listeners on their toes, while they struggle with the unrelenting urge to be tapping them as well.

Kanye West "Graduation"

Kanye's latest album shows growth and a willingness to be daring, something that hip-hop has lacked for years, and what separates his release from the likes of relished gangster garbage such as 50 Cent's latest "Curtis." Instead of beating a dead horse, Kanye delivers fresh ideas with tact unmatched to the majority of his peers. With excellent cameo appearances by the likes of the always entertaining Daft Warren on "Barry Bonds" and Daft Punk on the invariably catchy, yet tragically over-killed "Stronger," Kanye demonstrates his willingness to enlist the services of a vast array of talent to put out unique material in a genre congested with the same old, same old.

Andrew Bird "Armchair Apocrypha"

Bird's latest album shows a shift into more electric elements while maintaining his educational prowess in his lyrics. "Fiatuur" and "Fit Banlieu," while the miniaturist vocal and ukulele pairing on "The Penalty" illustrates that Condon's musicianship extends far beyond the generally complex ensembles that accompany the majority of his works.

Okkervil River "The Stage Names"

"The Stage Names" is the fullest and most accessible album from this sextet from Texas. Blending the elements of country and folk that dominated their debut release "I Don't Fall In Love With Everyone You See" with rock influenced hooks and mellower compositions that were filtered throughout their last album "Black Sheep Boy," "The Stage Names" successfully strikes a chord with most any listener.

Upbeat numbers such as "Plus Ones" and "Our Life Is Not A Movie Or Maybe" transition into slower more harmonious melodic songs such as "A Girl In Port" and "Savannah Smiles" without a hitch, leaving a finished product that inspires listeners to get up and move, while tugging at their heartstrings. Will Sheff's lyrics are as sharp as ever on the album, as his unique ability to craft songs with such profound literary qualities continues to impress with each album.

Battles "Mirrored"

The first full length album from Battles draws on the complexities of their earlier EPs while incorporating vastly catchier hooks and melodies. Seamlessly combining elements

Brian Wood can be reached at bmwood@student.umass.edu

Jens Lekman "Night Falls Over Kortedala"

"Night Falls Over Kortedala" is by far the most complete and well rounded offering from the Swedish songwriter to date. With Lekman's wholesome baritone vocals, infectiously catchy hooks, heavy usage of looping and classic samples, and lyrics that often teeter between heart wrenching and bubbly, "Night Falls Over Kortedala" is an album that is as unclassifiable as it is unforgettable. Highlights "It Was a Strange Time in My Life" and "Opposite of Hallelujah" demonstrate Lekman's ability to incorporate more classical instrumental samples to accompany his velvety vocal melodies and biting lyricism, while "Friday Night At The Drive-In Bingo" offers a upbeat, and purposefully sloppy take on a 1950s sock-hop jam with its roaring saxophonic solos and pull pastry lyrics. This wide range of stylistic delivery keeps listeners on their toes, while they struggle with the unrelenting urge to be tapping them as well.

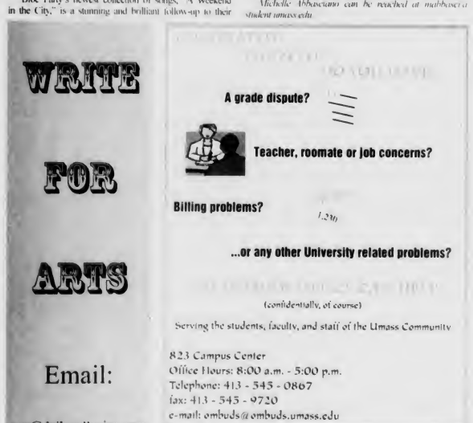
Kanye West "Graduation"

Kanye's latest album shows growth and a willingness to be daring, something that hip-hop has lacked for years, and what separates his release from the likes of relished gangster garbage such as 50 Cent's latest "Curtis." Instead of beating a dead horse, Kanye delivers fresh ideas with tact unmatched to the majority of his peers. With excellent cameo appearances by the likes of the always entertaining Daft Warren on "Barry Bonds" and Daft Punk on the invariably catchy, yet tragically over-killed "Stronger," Kanye demonstrates his willingness to enlist the services of a vast array of talent to put out unique material in a genre congested with the same old, same old.

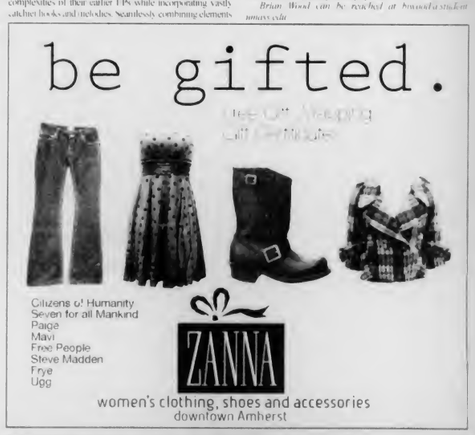
Andrew Bird "Armchair Apocrypha"

Bird's latest album shows a shift into more electric elements while maintaining his educational prowess in his lyrics. "Fiatuur" and "Fit Banlieu," while the miniaturist vocal and ukulele pairing on "The Penalty" illustrates that Condon's musicianship extends far beyond the generally complex ensembles that accompany the majority of his works.

Okkervil River "The Stage Names"

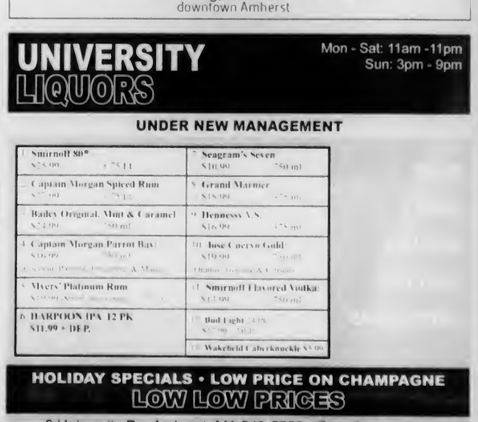


"The Stage Names" is the fullest and most accessible album from this sextet from Texas. Blending the elements of country and folk that dominated their debut release "I Don't Fall In Love With Everyone You See" with rock influenced hooks and mellower compositions that were filtered throughout their last album "Black Sheep Boy," "The Stage Names" successfully strikes a chord with most any listener.



Upbeat numbers such as "Plus Ones" and "Our Life Is Not A Movie Or Maybe" transition into slower more harmonious melodic songs such as "A Girl In Port" and "Savannah Smiles" without a hitch, leaving a finished product that inspires listeners to get up and move, while tugging at their heartstrings. Will Sheff's lyrics are as sharp as ever on the album, as his unique ability to craft songs with such profound literary qualities continues to impress with each album.

Battles "Mirrored"



The first full length album from Battles draws on the complexities of their earlier EPs while incorporating vastly catchier hooks and melodies. Seamlessly combining elements

Brian Wood can be reached at bmwood@student.umass.edu

DEC 13 2007

Buckeyes pose threat for Minutemen

SOCCER from page 1

that his team matches up well.

"We have a good idea already of what we need to do as a team, and we need to make [our game plan] as simple as we can," he said. "We're not going to change much, we don't want to change. The way they play with their strengths will fit into the way we play, I feel. We'll have to make a few adjustments, and focus on a few of their tendencies. But overall, we need to focus on how we're going to create scoring chances."

Those scoring chances may prove more difficult to come by for the Minutemen against The Buckeyes. Since the postseason began, the Minutemen have developed great chemistry on set pieces. But OSU's backfield is among the best in the nation at defending services from the wings. Senior back Eric Brunner is one of the most talented center backs in the country on the air and ground. A three-year starter, Brunner can also figure on offense. His six goals are third on the Buckeyes.

Although the size of their defenders isn't as impressive of some previous opponents, the positioning and technique are flawless.

The Minutemen give several different looks on set pieces, which makes them very difficult to defend. Against Illinois-Chicago, the Minutemen worked a set piece into a scoring chance, and eventually a goal.

Mike DeSantis plays a large role in UMass's execution on all set pieces; this may also result in chances on the counterattack for the Buckeyes. Redshirt junior back Doug Rappaport is UMass's primary corner kick taker on kicks from the goalkeeper's right. Although he's had no problems getting back into position after his services this season, the speed at which OSU operates is something he must consider.

The Minutemen have found their way without the benefit of set pieces in recent weeks. Sophomore forwards Bryan Hogan and Mark DeSantis have both become great finishers on the UMass front line.

"Our offense has gotten better and better each week," Koch said. "The ability of Bryan and Mark to find each other improves and they become more comfortable each week. Ben Arikian and Mike DeSantis have done a better and better job in their roles behind them each week. We're as good as I can remember us being as far as our attack goes right now."

Koch relies heavily on his upperclassmen to make plays offensively – four of UMass top six scorers are freshmen or sophomores. Early in the season, they struggled to find a rhythm with each other, but have found their stride as the perfect time for UMass.

"These guys have grown more than anybody. They've been producing all season, on both sides of the field," senior captain Kenny Cook said.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu

Sophomore Mark DeSantis is second on UMass with 14 points after recording two as a freshman last season.

DeSantis, Hogan adapt in a hurry

HOGAN from page 14

set DeSantis up for the game-winner with a beautiful pass that split the Billiken defenders and allowed DeSantis to walk in alone on the goalkeeper.

It can take time for forwards to become a cohesive unit, but Hogan and DeSantis didn't need much.

"Playing with another forward is kind of like getting a new roommate. You have no idea how it's going to work," Hogan said. "We worked really well off each other. It developed over the season. We didn't even play together at the beginning of the season. I'm excited because we have time to grow; we have two more years together. It's important to find someone you work well with."

The addition of freshman midfielders Ben Arikian and Stuart Arnick guaranteed Hogan a stream of chances to give the Minutemen leads. The increase in opportunities led to more goals which only increased his confidence. But he knew that the confidence had to extend beyond him. He drew from the struggles of 2006; everything that affected him then became irrelevant. All that matters on the field is winning.

He struggled with traveling and the academic adjustment of college life last season, and they still give him some problems.

"The traveling didn't bother me as much. Last year in the beginning of the season, we traveled a lot the first month, and it was my freshman year," Hogan said. "Coming in as a freshman playing a full sport, everything gets thrown at you right away. I knew the ropes, so I was able to go about my business like it was normal instead of having to get used to everything right away."

The greatest distraction from soccer for Hogan right now has everything to do with the sport. Friday's matchup with Ohio State has UMass one win away from the NCAA National Championship Game.

But it's not the type of distraction that Hogan feels will bother him too much.

"I'm going to go out there, and give everything I can. [On Friday], if I get tired, I'll think about the national championship game. That should be enough to get me going," Hogan said.

For most of the tournament, the Minutemen played the role of underdog. They've shot down any mention of their status as the season's Cinderella team. Hogan believes UMass is the best team in the country, and that everything they have accomplished so far is proof of that.

The only thing that bothers him at this point is losing.

The traveling and the balance of soccer, school and social life still bothers Bryan, but for the last month, more plane rides meant more soccer.

"It still sucks. I hate going through security, and taking off my jacket and shoes," he said. "But you can bet that I'm excited to travel down to North Carolina this weekend. I wouldn't want to be going anywhere else."

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu

First goal key for momentum

FIRST from page 14

wasn't a situation where we panicked, and I think you saw the result of that when we got the second goal," Koch said.

Without a doubt, each goal changes the way the rest of the game is played. The challenge is to avoid pressing too much when the team falls behind and not allow itself to get comfortable if it takes a lead.

"It's very important and takes the loads off of your back, but you still have to stay focused," Mike DeSantis said about getting the first goal. "If you don't stay focused, you can easily give up a goal. You still have to play to score again."

When the Maroon and White manages to be the first to crack the scoreboard, Koch doesn't make any drastic tactical changes. He may drop Mark DeSantis back to the center midfield, but is more apt to give his forwards a rest by replacing Bryan Hogan and Mark DeSantis with Prince Ofosu and Michael Jejna.

"That's one way we've grown over the season," Cook said. "It's hard mentally when you go up a goal not to just sit back and defend. Every game when we go up a goal, we try to keep the momentum going and get one or two more."

Even when the Minutemen have not scored first, they have still enjoyed success. Against No. 1 overall seed Boston College in the tournament's second round, the Eagles tallied a first-half goal. But UMass responded with two of its own in the second to upset the ACC power.

"When we went down 1-0 against BC, we looked at each other like, 'Whoa,'" Koch said. "But it didn't faze them as they knew it was a 90-minute game and that we could come back."

If the Minutemen fall behind Ohio State in Friday's match, they will need to make sure that the Buckeyes don't quickly increase their deficit. OSU scored all of its four goals within a 14-minute span in its quarterfinal victory over Bradley.

Regardless of which team scores first in Friday's match, Cook and the UMass defense know that if they can succeed at their end, their offensive counterparts will put the Minutemen on the scoreboard.

"It's a lot easier to be relaxed and composed when you know that you can score goals," Cook said. "We've been getting a lot of opportunities and it's only a matter of time before you punch. It's comforting knowing that you are going to get more than just one or two chances per game."

And that confidence has spread has spread to the forward themselves as well.

"I like to score first because it gives you a cushion, and when you don't, you start questioning yourself," Hogan said. "It's tough to come from behind. But, recently, even when we haven't scored first, it's still worked out pretty well for us."

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu

Additions key for UMass

SKIING from page 14

along with Shilletto for the 2008 season. Fox was excited about Shilletto's progress saying that she was highly-ranked and hopes she can contribute to the team.

A couple of the new faces for the Minutewomen are freshman Jamie Taloumis and sophomore Heidi Skinner. Taloumis was a stand-out at Burke Mountain Academy and points-wise ranks close to Hawkins nationally. Skinner is a transfer from Alfred University which is also highly nationally ranked.

Fox said he learned a lot in his first year of collegiate coaching. Though he has been coaching for over 20 years, it was his first experience at the collegiate level, and he enjoyed it. He said that he will be more disciplined with the team this year and spent a lot time with a conditioning coach during the off-season to make sure that both teams are in the best shape they can be.

The aspect of team racing is something that Fox wants to stress a lot more in 2008. He wants to make sure that every racer finishes every race, even if there's a fall or a disqualification.

"If you don't stand up and don't finish the course, then you don't count. That's the way it works in collegiate racing," Fox said.

A combination of fresh faces, hungry veterans and a mentality that puts the team first could be just what the men's and women's ski teams need to duplicate the success of 2007.

Justin McGrail can be reached at jmcgrail@student.umass.edu

WRITE FOR NEWS
NEWS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Looking for a Job?
The Daily Collegian
is seeking a hard-working, motivated undergrad to fill our Advertising Representative Positions.
To Apply:
Contact Alex Bender or Marsea Whooten @ 545-3500 for
•Excellent business experience!
•Gain valuable sales experience
•Get credits for work
•Build your resume
*SOM students strongly encouraged to apply.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.potterauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

Great Gifts
Bags Stocking Stuffers Hats
Jewelry Natural Fiber Scarves
Blouses Skirts Dresses
Earrings Rings Bracelets Chains Sweaters Toys India Print Bedspreads Candles
Merry X'mas Cards Gloves Socks Leather Sole Chinese Shoes Dresses Mugs
Sale 20 to 50% off selected Clothing
The Mercantile
Vesknights 9PM Dec. 5 - 22
Sun 12-5 Daily 10-6
Amherst-Carriage Shops

Harris' 25 enough in win over BC

BASKETBALL from page 14

trying to go about our business underground if we can and not make too much noise."

The Eagles struggled offensively trying to keep up with the tempo that UMass set early. BC turned the ball over 16 times, giving the Minutemen a 19-6 edge in points off turnovers. BC (29-of-59 field goals) shot much better than UMass did (32-of-73), but 15 offensive rebounds for the Minutemen helped them get easy second-chance points.

Harris was terrific on the offensive end for the entire night, hitting 3-of-5 from outside in the first half. But Harris and the rest of the Minutemen changed their offensive philosophy in the second half, consistently cutting to the basket for lay-ups rather than settling for long jumpers.

Harris finished with 25 points, while Forbes added 22 (17 in the second half) and Lowe notched 17. Rice easily led three BC players in double figures, scoring a game-high 26 points. John Oates scored 11 off the bench and Tyler Roche had 10.

UMass led for most of the first half before BC came storming back with a 16-2 run. The Eagles led at the break, 37-34, but the Minutemen quickly went on a 15-3 run to regain control. During that spurt, UMass took the lead at 45-44, and BC never got it back.

The Minutemen appeared to have the game in hand at various points in the second half, but the Eagles got within two points at 76-74 with two minutes remaining.

But four made free throws by Forbes and lay-ups by Lowe and Gary Correia in the final two minutes helped UMass fend off the Eagles.

Eli Rosenwalk can be reached at erosenwa@student.umass.edu

Sophomore guard Ricky Harris had a team-high 25 points in UMass's win over BC in the Commonwealth Classic last night.

Half-court offense key

OFFENSE from page 14

driving lanes by spreading its players over the court and passing the ball around until the team found an open player. A product of its aggressive pressing on defense and ability to quickly move the ball up the court on offense, UMass struggled to establish an offensive physical presence; the Minutemen scored 10 points off turnovers and 46 in the paint.

As BC closed the gap within the final four minutes, Forbes and junior point guard Chris Lowe made several important plays. On one possession, Lowe penetrated toward the basket and kicked the ball out to an open teammate as the defense collapsed on the point guard.

Ford acknowledges that he refrained from explicitly telling his players to avoid the 3-pointer. But he also wasn't shy to encourage his team to look for other opportunities.

"It was an adjustment we made at halftime," Ford said. "I did it as conspicuously as I could without telling the guys 'I don't want to keep shooting 3-pointers.' I would never tell them to do that; I wanted to get more penetration. I thought it was a big key for us when we went to a spread offense."

In the team's two losses, the Minutemen struggled to make shots from beyond the arc. UMass experienced trouble against Northern Iowa on Nov. 10, making only five of 28 3-pointers.

Judging by the team's performance in the first half, the Minutemen could have easily fell into that same trap. UMass made only five of 18 3-point attempts in the 20 minutes. The team would have fallen behind by a greater margin if it hadn't been for its effort on the offensive glass and the turnovers it created against the Eagles.

"We shot 25 3-pointers and our goal is about 26 a game. We learned from the Northern Iowa game how to adjust when the 3-pointers aren't falling," Forbes said.

The win was also in sharp contrast to some of the Minutemen's other victories. Against Syracuse, UMass made 14 3-pointers, including several important ones down the stretch.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu

Christina DeRosa leads the Minutewomen into the 2007 indoor track season after winning the individual A-10 Championship in cross country during the fall.

DeRosa looks to build on fall

TRACK from page 14

they were in the past," said assistant coach Mark Gottdenker.

DeRosa is coming off of an impressive cross country season, finishing first for her team in every race. She placed in the top five overall in every race except for one, winning two of them. The Albany Invitational and the Atlantic 10 Championships.

During her cross country season DeRosa was named A-10 Student Athlete of the Year and Most Outstanding Performer at the 2007 Atlantic 10 Championships.

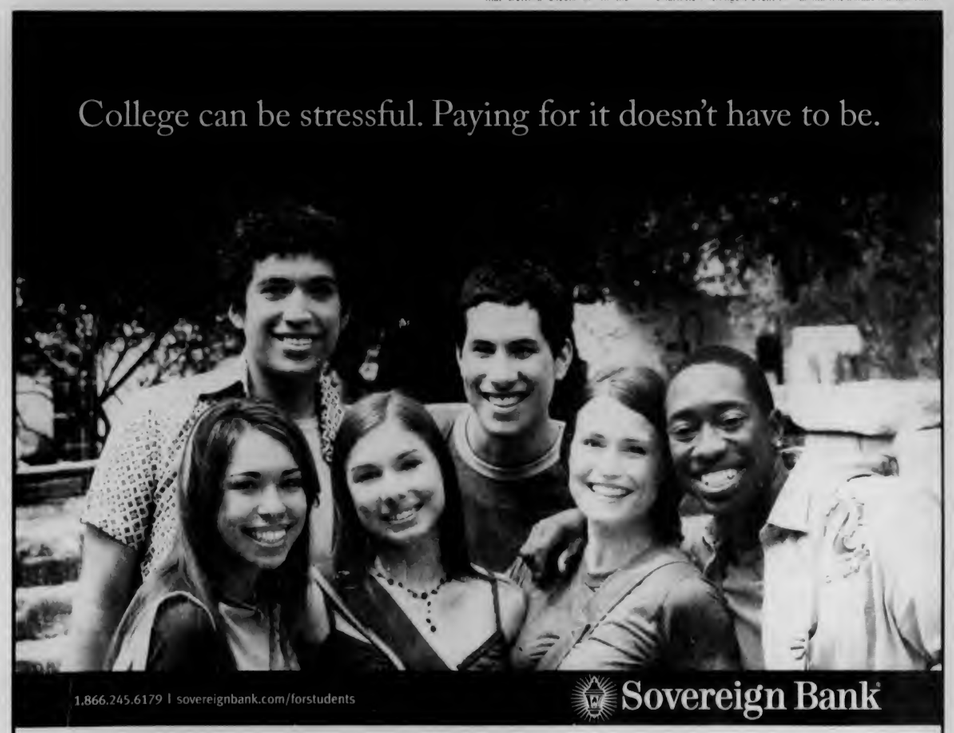
"Christina DeRosa is one of the highest quality athletes on our team," said Gottdenker.

Track has a variety of races that DeRosa excels in. In the past she has done extremely well in the 5,000 meters and 10,000 meters. If DeRosa excels high in a variety of events it will help the Minutewomen stand out this season and reach their goals.

"DeRosa has a chance to qualify for the NCAA in numerous events," said Gottdenker.

This season their biggest A-10 competition comes from Charlotte, Rhode Island and La Salle. All three teams have a lot of depth strength and are well rounded, according to Gottdenker.

Charlotte is expected to have a repeat win in the Atlantic 10 Championships this season, according to a poll done by the leagues head coaches. URI placed third last season and La Salle placed fourth.



Charlotte's strongest event is sprints, URI excels in the jumping events and La Salle is best at distance races. Because of each team's depth they are difficult to attack in any one event, the Minutewomen will have to be good in many events to do well against these three teams.

The women have gone through the injury and illness of last season and it has created a better team than in the past. The team is moving in the right direction, mentally and physically, according to Gottdenker.

"People are excited," said Gottdenker. "It should make an interesting year."

The Minutewomen hit the track for the first time on Jan. 11 for the Rhode Island New Year Classic.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu

DEC 13 2007

CAPTION CONTEST PHOTO!

Submit captions at www.dailycollegian.com/caption by 7 pm tonight. Winning caption will appear in the last paper of the semester (aka tomorrow's paper).

Let the rhythm take you over sudokuuuuuuuuuu.

6					5		7
1				6	3	2
		8		5		1
	8			7	3
7								2
			4	1			6
		9		8		2
	6	1	3					8
8		7						5

Quote of the Day

"When you are about to die, a wombat is better than no company at all."

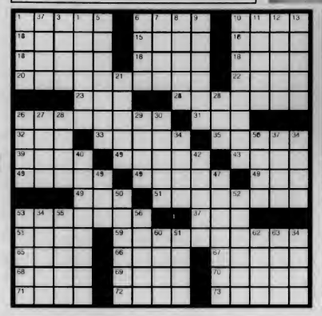
–Roger Zelazny

Kilgore By Knox Yeoman

Welcome to Falling Rock National Park By Kid Shay

Labrat By Richard Martelly

ACROSS
1 Sheds skin
6 Iowa State site
10 Easy victory
14 Chris of tennis
15 Hobbled
16 Fencing sword
17 Embankment
18 Lena or Keri
19 Rozelle or Rose
20 Pregnancy thirds
22 Pitfall
23 Select
24 Stories in installments
26 Hollywood hopefuls
31 Actor Mineo
32 Scull propeller
33 Madonna title role
35 Abominable snowmen
39 Objections
41 Beige shades
43 Modeling
44 Dance parts
46 Nation on the Nile
48 Former stock-ticker stn
49 ___ Vegas
51 Sports breaks
53 Short races
57 Rough protuberance
58 Horse's pace
59 Repetitions
65 Italian capital
66 "Damn Yankees" vixen
67 Juliet's beau
68 Terrible czar?
69 Male calls
70 High and mighty
71 Waiter in the garden
72 Feed the hogs
73 Infamous hoteleier Helmsley



DOWN
1 Thaw
2 Above
3 Dolly of "Hello, Dolly!"
4 Nervous vibration
5 Tapering tower
6 Tons and tons
7 Drake or bull
8 Arab leaders
9 Feels
10 Snakes and lizards
11 Puccini work
12 Silver or gold
13 Chick calls
21 Martin or Allen
25 Beam
26 Cries
27 Stretched tight
28 Comic Johnson
29 Muscle twinges
30 Swagger
34 German automaker
36 Vegetarian's staple
37 Well ... that special!
38 Boys of the house
40 Separated lineman
42 Dance in duple time
45 ___ Clemente
47 Sifting on the fence
50 Wading birds
52 Baltimore pro
53 Kind of steak
54 Utah city
55 Kind of candle
56 Seat at a bar
60 Turkish doll
61 Hoarse sound
62 "Types" sequel
63 Sign gas
64 Couch

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

WOMBATS IS DIRRRRRTAAAAY!

Submit your comics!

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Submit your classifieds!

(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Quit living life by the drop and gulp down a big swig of balls to wall existence.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You are a leftover meatloaf sandwich with a side of creamed corn. Looks gross, tastes great!

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Don't be upset that your reproductive organ looks like something from "Honey, I shrunk the Kids." People loved that movie.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You are an acquired taste, like brie cheese or olives, but once people get to know you they absolutely love you.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Just like a wombat you are burrowing yourself into trouble by putting all your work off.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Your day would be vastly improved by a cup of hot cocoa and a ride on a scantily clad elf.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Success is currently stalking you on facebook. It will find you within the next week.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
As a rule, never eat anything that smells like body odor.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Sit down and chat with your old friend ... Darkness. Talk about the seeds that were left in your brain while you were sleeping.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
An eye for an eye makes the whole world look and sound like pirates.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Try not be hurt when people say "you look tired" even though it basically means you look like a pile of tetanus-infested poop.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Your cell phone is tapped by your ex-bf, he knows about all your late night booty call text messages.

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
Now Hiring
Counter/Cashiers and Drivers
HOURS
Sun - Wed: 3pm 2am
Thurs - Sat: 3pm 3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Come in on Dec. 17th and recieve a Wachusett Mtn Ski Pass! Volunteer donations are needed. We are open from 10am-4pm. Sign up by calling 1-800-GIVE-LIFE or www.givelife.org. Walk-ins are welcome. positive ID required.

Apt. for Rent

Brandywine Apt. JAN-MAY. 1 Bdrm New Carpets/Paint- conact mialli@student.umass.edu for information.

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing. 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jan. 1 First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com or stop by or call 549-0600

New 2 bedroom condo 30 minutes from campus. Gas fireplace drive under garage country setting must see! $159,000. Call 413-887-7691.

Employment

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

The Boston University Bookstore in Kenmore Square has a job for you during Winterbreak if you have Starbucks Coffee experience! Email bdinolo@bu.edu

Bartending $300/Day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520. Ext. 162

Room for Rent

Hillel's Jewish Living Community 388 N. Pleasant. Winter session or Spring term Single/Double. Any 5 college student (except freshmen). Laundry, internet, pool table, big rooms. Walk to UM. Parking, cable avail. Quiet. 549-1710 x 205 or www.UMASSHILLEL.ORG/JLLC.

Services

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906,1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic: 577-5101.

TAPESTRY HEALTH Safe, Confidential, Affordable. Providing birthcontrol, EC, pregnancy testing, GYN & breast exams, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STI screening & treatment. Located at 27 Pray Street, Amherst. Call 413-548-9992 Walk ins welcome www.tapestryhealth.org

Travel

*#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445.

Spring Break 2008 Sell Trips. Earn cash & Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations. 800-648-4849/www.ststravel.com

Wanted

EGG DONORS WANTED. Help make a couple's dream of becoming parents come true by becoming an egg donor. Very generous compensation and expenses paid. Must be a non-smoking female between the ages of 21 and 32. For more info, please visit our website at www.robertnicholsesq.com or contact Julie at 781-551-0600.

Trip to Puerto Rico highlights break slate

Swimmers prepare for A-10 Championships

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

As is the case in most sports, collegiate swimmers never have a long break during the middle of a season. The Massachusetts swimming and diving teams will leave the confines of Joseph R. Rogers Jr. Pool for the international waters of Puerto Rico for its annual winter break training period.

The Maroon and White face a tough training regimen in order to keep up the momentum of a season that is already in full swing. The training regimen will last for eight days, consisting of two-a-day workouts in the water.

Training in an Olympic-sized course will prepare the athletes to swim faster in shorter distances when they return to meets that have them swimming at distances used at the collegiate level.

The goal of the training is to get the teams ready for the Atlantic 10 Championships in Buffalo, N.Y.

Upon returning to the United States, both UMass teams will have no time to rest. An action-packed January starts with the Rhode Island Invitational.

UMass will also travel to Chestnut Hill to face the Boston College Eagles and then to Colgate for its second duel-meet of the month.

Last January proved to be fruitful for the Minutemen, as they achieved first place in all of their competitions.

The men's team is without Evan Swisher, Jake Hogue and Greg Chartier, who all played pivotal roles in last year's R.I. Invitational as swimmers.

However the gap left by those three seniors is quickly being filled. Freshman Andrew Willbrant's time of 51.86 seconds in the 100-yard backstroke – Swisher's event last year – leads the conference. Freshman Mike Berthaume's time of one minute, 53 seconds in the 200-yard butterfly-formerly Hogue's event-leads the A-10 as well.

Due to the training cycle, the swimmers aren't expected to have their best performances at any of the meets in January, but the meet against Colgate takes precedent in the mind of UMass coach Russ Yarworth.

Colgate coach Stephen Jungbluth was a four-year swimmer for Yarworth, attaining co-captain as a senior in 1994.

Colgate diving coach Ed Hefferon is also a former Minuteman. Hefferon was a force for UMass diving, qualifying three times for competition at the NCAA official meet. As a four-year diver for the Maroon and White, Hefferon placed in the top five at the conference championships every season. Hefferon holds the all-time Minuteman records in both the one-meter and three-meter dives.

"Anytime we're facing one of my [alumnus], I want the boys to show up ready to swim," Yarworth said.

The Minutewomen have a different view of the Colgate meet. According to UMass women's coach Bob Newcomb, Colgate is the least worrisome opponent on the Minutewomen's schedule.

"How we swim at Rhode Island and how we swim at BC really reflects the [results of] our training trip and how we're setting ourselves up for tapering into the Atlantic 10 meet," Newcomb said.

The R.I. Invitational means meeting old foes for the Maroon and White. Conference rivals Rhode Island and La Salle are on the wrong side of the wins and losses column in the all-time series against the Minutewomen.

Last year's meeting between the three teams, along with George Washington, puts URI's loss total against UMass at 23 and that of La Salle at eight.

If last season's meeting between UMass and BC was any indication of how the two squads will match up against each other this year, it will be the Maroon and White's most exciting meet of the season.

The Maroon and White are without Liz Lovejoy, one of the Minutewomen's standout performers last season against the Eagles. Lovejoy's first-place effort in the 500-yard freestyle at a time of 5:10.59 earned her a spot in the UMass record books with the eighth fastest time in school history.

The record books hold the names of members of this year's squad as well. Junior Taryn Plouf's time of 10:44.03 in the 1,000-yard freestyle ranks ninth all-time at UMass. Senior captain Samantha Demty holds the seventh fastest time in Minutewoman history in the 200-yard individual medley (2:10.24). Demty currently leads the conference in that event.

BC currently holds the lead in the all-time series between the two teams, with 21 wins to UMass' three.

The two times that UMass faced George Washington can hardly constitute as a rivalry. The Colonials have one win and one loss in the all-time series.

Diving is also one of the Minutewomen's strong points this season. Junior Karen Upperco's 546 points in the 3-meter dive competition leads the conference. Just behind Upperco in that category is freshman Anne Fogerty with 535 points.

Senior captain R.J. Rappe anchors the Minutemen in diving this season. Rappe leads the conference in the 1-meter dive (618 points) and the 3-meter dive (602). Men's diving for the Maroon and White as a unit, dominate the conference sign sheet. The Minutemen take the first three spots in both the one and three-meter dives.

Both teams will have a week and a half to be with their families for the holidays before they leave for Puerto Rico.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

Brad Sloan and the Minutemen head to Colgate for a meet over winter break. The Minutemen will also spend some time training in Puerto Rico.

Massachusetts women's swimming coach Bob Newcomb and the Minutewomen will take their training annual trip to Puerto Rico over winter break. UMass will also compete in the Rhode Island Invitational.

SPORTS NIGHT WITH THE DAILY COLLEGIAN At THE HARP

JOIN US FRIDAY NIGHT AT 7PM FOR A SPORTS SPECTACULAR FEATURING:

- UMass Men's Soccer Final Four Showdown Against Ohio State on the Large Indoor Projector
- The Daily Collegian's "The Score" 2007-'08 Release
- Appearances and Autographs from Featured UMass Athletes

Live Music Every Thursday, Friday and Saturday!

The Harp accepts OCMP, VISA, MasterCard, AmEx, Discover & Debit cards.

DEC 13 2007

DEC 14 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 13, 2007

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Not this time

MICHAEL PHELPS/COLLEGIAN

The Massachusetts men's basketball team celebrates during the final minutes of last night's 83-80 win over Boston College. The victory was the first for UMass against the Eagles since 1999.

Minutemen defeat BC, take home Commonwealth Cup

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

CHESTNUT HILL — Tyrese Rice stole the ball, giving him nothing but open space to run for the breakaway lay-up.

But the Boston College point guard faltered on the easy shot, as the ball rolled off the rim. The sequence came just three minutes into the matchup with Massachusetts, but told the story for how things would fare for the Eagles during the 37 minutes that followed.

Led by Ricky Harris' shooting, Tony Gaffney's hustle and the calm leadership of both Gary Forbes and Chris Lowe, the Minutemen survived a brief, yet giant scare in the game's final seconds to defeat BC, 83-80, last night at the Conte Forum.

UMass (7-2) won for the first time against BC since 1999, snapping an eight-game losing streak. With the victory, the Minutemen capture the 13th annual Commonwealth Classic and bring the Commonwealth Cup back to Amherst.

"That was the first thing we mentioned when we began scouting this team – that [UMass] hasn't beaten BC in eight years," Forbes said. "[BC] coach [Al] Skinner was 7-0 coming into this game against us. We wanted to be that team to finally get that hump off our shoulders."

UMass	83
BC	80

With 15 seconds left to play and UMass leading by three points, Harris gave Rice and the Eagles one more chance – after doing exactly what Rice did three minutes into the game.

After a pair of free throws by Rice, UMass had the ball out of bounds with a chance to ice the game. The inbounds pass was sent across midcourt, hitting Harris in stride for what appeared would lead to an easy lay-up and the victory. But the shot spun around the rim just like Rice's had, and the Eagles suddenly had a chance to tie the game.

Tyrelle Blair grabbed the rebound for BC, and the ball found the hands of Rice as time ticked off. Rice stood behind the 3-point line near the right corner and gave a pump fake – freeing him from the two defenders that bit on the fake.

With four seconds remaining Rice took the shot with a good, clean look at the rim.

"I thought it was definitely good," UMass coach Travis Ford said after the game. "[Tyrese] ball faked both of our guys; I definitely thought it was good."

But Ford's prediction was wrong and the shot hit front-rim, giving his team the thrilling victory. The third-year UMass coach was extremely pleased with his team's performance, but didn't want them to get too caught up in the win.

"We're still a team trying to prove itself. It's a good win, no question," Ford said, downplaying the theory that the victory was a statement to the rest of the country. "We're still a team that's trying to go under the radar and a team that was picked [to finish] eighth in our league. We're

See BASKETBALL on page 11

MICHAEL PHELPS/COLLEGIAN

Gary Forbes scored 22 points on 7-of-18 shooting last night in UMass's win over Boston College. The Minutemen displayed superior ball movement against the Eagles.

Maroon and White get a way from 3-point shot in win

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

CHESTNUT HILL — One of the goals on the 2007-08 Massachusetts men's basketball team from the beginning of the season was to prove that it could win a game without relying on the 3-point shot. Yesterday's win over Boston College demonstrated its offensive versatility and proved that the Minutemen could beat a good opponent without resorting to the 3-pointer down the stretch.

UMass coach Travis Ford knew that his team would need to make 3-pointers in order to be competitive from the beginning of the year. But he also realized that his players would have to find other ways to score points if the shots were not falling.

"We're a team that obviously relies on the 3-point shot a lot, but doesn't really worry about it," Ford said. "We know that since we shoot enough that some are going to go in. I'm proud of how the team fought and didn't really worry about what happens if we don't make them."

The team's performance in the second half proves that Ford has little to be concerned about. The Minutemen went nearly 14 minutes without making a basket from beyond the arc during the second period. In fact, UMass attempted only one 3-pointer after that mark – a miss by senior forward Etienne Brower with 2:09 remaining in the contest.

But UMass didn't relinquish its lead during that stage, as the team found other ways to create offense. In fact, once sophomore guard Ricky Harris made the team's final 3-pointer with 13:19 remaining, the Minutemen developed its largest lead of the night. The Harris basket gave the team a six-point advantage. But within three minutes, UMass had a 15-point advantage.

Even though UMass attempted 25 3-pointers (the team averages about 26 per game), most of those shots came in the first half. The Maroon and White transformed a three-point, halftime deficit into a three-point victory by adjusting to a spread offense and creating other opportunities.

"It's just the difference in our team," senior captain Gary Forbes said. "We're scorers and we're not just a 3-point shooting team. Guys like myself, Chris [Lowe] and Ricky [Harris] can attack the basket and create offense, while also being able to create [chances] for our teammates."

UMass focused on opening up

See OFFENSE on page 11

Hogan focused on run to title

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

Bryan Hogan laid out some personal goals before the Massachusetts men's soccer team's 2007 season began. He didn't plan on a trip to the College Cup, instead he opted for some more realistic things.

He wanted to improve the team-high four goals he scored as freshman. His motivation was simple; more goals meant more wins and a berth in the 2007 Atlantic 10 Tournament. But as the Minutemen stumbled to a 2-4 start, his focused changed. He didn't need to score more goals, his team did.

The off-the-field factors that affected him were no longer important. He was a sophomore now and a leader on offense by default. When UMass's home-opener against Northeastern on Sept. 22 began, it was clear that the growing process was over. Hogan scored the game-winner against the Huskies, and the Minutemen didn't stop.

There was no clear cut turning point he can point to. The Minutemen just started winning, and convincingly at that.

"We got some new players who helped out a lot, and we just started playing really well together. I'm not sure when it happened, but as the season went on we started winning. And we built confidence, and it kept growing," he said.

Five more victories followed the defeat of NU, including a 1-0 win over conference favorite Saint Louis. Part of the lineup that became UMass's regular starting 11 was Mark DeSantis. He featured primarily in the midfield before that, but UMass coach Sam Koch shifted him in front of the ball alongside Hogan. DeSantis superior ball skills complemented Hogan's talents in the air. But having an equally-talented counterpart next to him put Hogan's other abilities on display.

In the win over Saint Louis, Hogan

See HOGAN on page 10

BRIAN TUCKER/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore forward Bryan Hogan leads the Minutemen offensively with eight goals this season.

Scoring first key for UMass

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

Scoring the first goal isn't always easy, but in soccer it can be the difference between winning and losing. More often than not, there's been a '1' illuminated under 'UMass' before its opponents as the Massachusetts men's soccer team made its run to the 2007 NCAA College Cup.

While the Minutemen try to shed their reputation as a defense-only team, they are continuing to find the net during the postseason. Certainly, UMass has an outstanding goalkeeper and defenders, but the ability of its forwards and midfielders to create chances and score goals has allowed the squad to advance to the national semifinal.

The Minutemen have a knack for scoring first; a feat realized in five of their last seven postseason games dating back to the first round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

"It's a confidence booster for sure," sophomore midfielder Mark DeSantis said. "To get the first goal and go up 1-0, the pressure is on [the opponent] right away. It's great getting the first goal with Zack [Simmons], Kenny [Cook] and [Chris] Brown behind you."

And the goalkeeper and center backs that DeSantis refers to are the main reason why the Minutemen have played well with the lead. Before last weekend's match against Illinois-Chicago, the last time UMass relinquished a lead was Oct. 27 against Rhode Island.

UMass scored early in the second half against UIC, then allowed the Flames to get a goal of their own about 10 minutes later. In a result that showcases the Minutemen's development over the season, junior midfielder Mike DeSantis scored the game-winner with 20 minutes remaining.

"When UIC scored that goal, it certainly was a step back for us, but it

See FIRST on page 10

LaFreniere leads veteran team

Experienced runners face challenge in A-10

By Melissa Tertsinen
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts track and field teams are looking to veterans to lead the teams in the upcoming season.

Last year the Minutemen finished fourth out of 10 teams at the Atlantic 10 Championships and 12 out of 13 at the New England Championships in the indoor season. In the outdoor season the men took eighth out of 11 at the A-10 Championships and 11 out of 37 at the New England Championships.

This year, Rhode Island is picked to win the A-10 as they did last year, La Salle is picked to finish second and Charlotte finishing third. The Minutemen are picked to finish fourth, where they did last year.

The Minutemen have seasoned veterans and many distance runners coming off a successful cross country season in which the team was very versatile. They should finish where expected or better.

The Minutewomen are looking for a much better season this year compared to the last few years with a more experienced team and senior Christina DeRosa leading the way.

"Every meet we're trying to get our athletes to perform their best," said coach Julie LaFreniere.

This season the Minutewomen are hoping to improve their overall performance especially for the championship meets that start with the A-10 Championships on Feb. 16. They are also hoping that more people will qualify for the championship meets.

This season the women are stronger than in the past. This is because they have a well-rounded team compared to last year where they were below expectations due to several injuries and illnesses.

"The veteran runners are a different level than

See TRACK on page 11

Skiers hit slopes during break

Hawkins leads Minutewomen

By Justin McGrail
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's and women's ski teams are looking to improve on last season's results in 2008. Last season the men's team finished second in the McConnell Division and came in seventh at the USCSA Nationals in Winter Park, Colo.

The Minutewomen missed the Nationals as a team because they came in sixth place in the division but were still represented in Winter Park.

Eliza Hawkins competed for back-to-back titles in the Giant Slalom event. She ended up placing third, which was impressive to UMass head coach Skip Fox because Hawkins stumbled during her second run but recovered to finish the race and still place in the top five.

The season will officially start for both teams on Jan. 11 at the Colby-Sawyer Carnival in Sorapee, N.H.

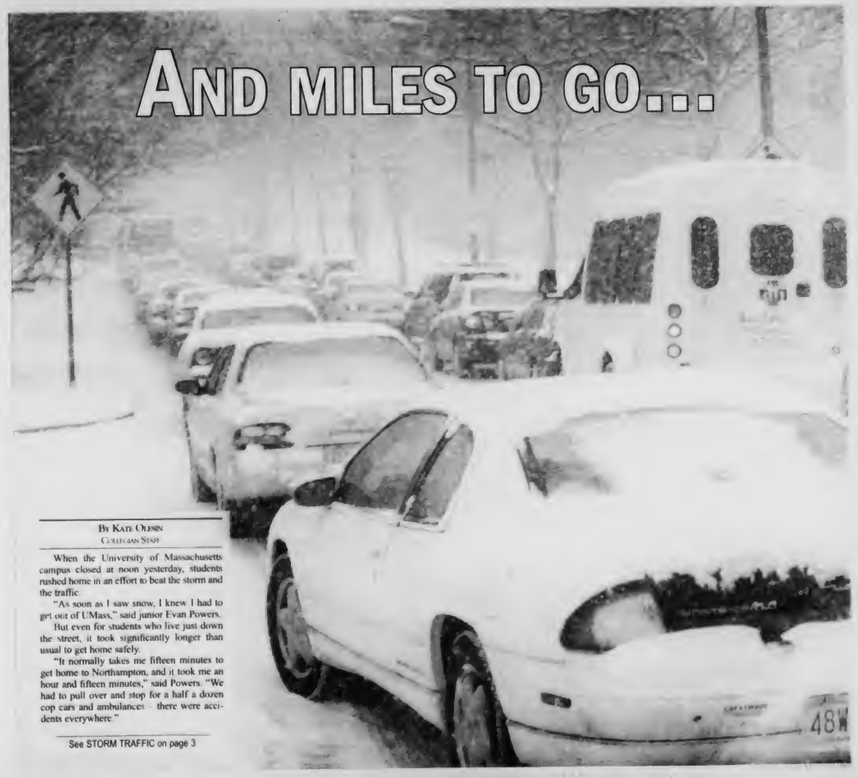
The Minutemen will have to recreate their success without one of their best skiers, Rush Hawkins. Hawkins completed his four years of eligibility, and the Minutemen will miss his presence on the team.

Hawkins led the Minutemen to a USCSA Eastern Regional Championship in 2005 and became the first American skier in over 10 years to sweep both the slalom and the giant slalom events at nationals. He led the Minutemen to the nationals in each of his four years at UMass.

"You can't really replace Rush Hawkins as a skier or a team leader. He was an exceptional skier, a smart skier and a fast skier when it counts," Fox said.

Fox remained optimistic though. He mentioned that he believes that some of the seniors on the team can step up and fill the void, namely Jason Small and Co-captains James Green and Andrew Hawes. Small recently finished fourth overall at a preseason race in a difficult field that included perennial powerhouse Middlebury. Fox also added that Hawes has been the model of consistency through the preseason and training.

As for the Minutewomen, they have a totally new look from last year. There are eight new skiers to go along with veteram Eliza Hawkins, Ashley Hawes and Emily Shilletto.



Hawes is looking to bounce back from an ACL injury she suffered last season and was named team captain

See SKIING on page 10

COLLEGIAN
WEEKEND EDITION

FRI H:40 | SAT H:25 | SUN H:32 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, DECEMBER 14, 2007

AND MILES TO GO...

By Kate Olsen
Collegian Staff

When the University of Massachusetts campus closed at noon yesterday, students rushed home in an effort to beat the storm and the traffic.

"As soon as I saw snow, I knew I had to get out of UMass," said junior Evan Powers.

But even for students who live just down the street, it took significantly longer than usual to get home safely.

"It normally takes me fifteen minutes to get home to Northampton, and it took me an hour and fifteen minutes," said Powers. "We had to pull over and stop for a half a dozen cop cars and ambulances – there were accidents everywhere."

See STORM TRAFFIC on page 3

DEC 14 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 70

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3499 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exner
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COPY EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Scabin
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael Kinz
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenowske
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
ASST. PHOTO EDITOR Brian Tedder

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AMHERST LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCIENCE IN 1902, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN INDEPENDENTLY SPLIT JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL BUSINESS OFFICES AT 545-3500, EXT. 1. MEAN

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Huston & Will McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Amber Vaillancourt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

Giving war a chance

By Sarah Belanger
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Republican Club hosted guest speaker Jonah Goldberg in a lecture entitled "All I'm Saying is Give War a Chance" on Wednesday.

Republican Club president Brad DeFlumeri began the night with a disclaimer stating that the lecture was not intended to advocate or promote war but that Goldberg was invited to speak about recent successes in Iraq.

Goldberg, editor of National Review Online, tried his luck at persuading an audience in the Student Union Ballroom to start thinking positively about the war in Iraq.

Goldberg broke the ice which tends to form around Republican issues in a liberal setting.

"If I knew there was going to be a podium, I wouldn't have worn pants," he said to lighten the partisan atmosphere.

Goldberg tried to debunk leftist notions about the war by referencing a recent New York Times article. According to Goldberg, the story was about special forces in Afghanistan trying to win back areas that had been taken over by the Taliban.

"The villagers bring out their kids," he said. "Some are blind, their skin infected, yellow eyes, cataracts and there are no vaccines. The medics do what they can. They can't help all of these people and the main reason is because there is only one doctor in the region who is only allowed to work on the Taliban. People are living in total poverty. The soldiers bring mittens, coats and blankets to these people but the Taliban comes the next day to burn it all."

This article, according to Goldberg, is a perfect example of why we need to be in Iraq.

"Before the success in the surge in Iraq, terrorists were butchering people," he said. "They would carve up individuals who got in their way, raping and destroying and denying women the most basic human freedoms. You might say, so what? We made these people, but that doesn't mean we shouldn't do something about the monsters we created."

Although this was an event hosted by the Republican Club, Goldberg's lecture didn't contain purely conservative ideals.

He focused on the issue of human rights in Iraq and the arguments from both sides of the political spectrum.

In an article printed in the Los Angeles Times, Goldberg wrote: "Saying we need a political solution is as helpful as saying 'give peace a chance.' Peace requires more than such pie-eyed verbiage. In the real world, peace has no chance until the people who want to give death squads another shot have been dispatched from the scene."

"We're in Iraq, we broke it we bought it, we have a moral obligation to fix it," he said Wednesday night. "To honor our commitments, help our allies, push for freedom when we can and wherever we can. The moral thing to push for is freedom and democracy."

Goldberg also expressed his confusion as to why democrats and liberal groups who advocate for human rights have a problem with that concept.

"How can one be for going into Darfur and at the same time demand that we get out of Iraq? It's baffling morally and politically," Goldberg asked the audience.

During a question and answer session, junior Joaquin Walker asked Goldberg about his thoughts on the state of politics today.

"I know a lot of people decided not to come tonight because of the flyers," he said. "People see the word Democrat or Republican on something and it turns them off."

This type of advertising, Walker said, is self-defeating.

"Democracy is about disagreements and the idea that politicians didn't argue like this in the past isn't true," Goldberg said in response. "People should concentrate more on the arguments and if they are persuasive."

Goldberg, a self-proclaimed War on Terror skeptic, believes that the war was a mistake and one that we wouldn't have made if we knew then what we do today. Goldberg advocated, however, that we must give war a chance.

"Before war, people are giving peace a chance and when that doesn't work they give war a chance," he said. "If you believe that terror is caused by poverty, by lack of democracy, civil rights or rule of law, if you believe in any of those than you should support the projects in Afghanistan and Iraq."

Sarah Belanger can be reached at sbelange@student.umass.edu

Provost wins ASHA honor

By Caitlin Quinn
Collegian Staff

Adding to the University of Massachusetts's reputation as a research University, Provost and Senior Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Charlena M Seymour received the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association's (ASHA) highest honor.

The Honors of the Association award is the highest form of acknowledgment the Association can grant to its members and is given in recognition of contributions to the field of speech, language and hearing through research or administration.

"I have had wonderful colleagues and students from the University of Massachusetts that have mentored me and been supportive of my activities to make the campus as best as it can be in teaching and research," said Seymour.

According to ASHA, Seymour was given the award because she "has made an indelible impact on communication sciences and disorders through her impressive work as an exemplary leader and administrator, scholar-researcher-mentor and stanch advocate for diversity issues."

Specifically, ASHA recognized the contributions Seymour has made towards resolving issues of cultural intolerance and defending diversity through her research.

"We did studies on the speech and language development of African-American children," she said. "We've also been dedicated to increasing the number of minority students on campus."

Dr. Seymour is also being accredited for the creation of the Mutual Mentoring Program, a $400,000 project sponsored by the Mellon Foundation.

This program enables early career faculty to build networks of reciprocal mentoring partnerships within the academic community that will help members build on their skills in the areas of research, teaching, tenure, and work-life balance.

Seymour began her career at UMass by being heavily involved in the department of communication disorders. She served as dean of the UMass-Amherst Graduate School and interim provost and senior vice chancellor for academic affairs before being permanently appointed to the position.

The American Speech-Language-Hearing Association is a professional organization for audiologists, speech-language pathologists, and speech, language, and hearing scientists.

Caitlin Quinn can be reached at cquinn@student.umass.edu

Facebook distracts during finals

By Kristen Healy
Collegian Correspondent

Heading into finals week, many students will crack open their books, spend hours in the library – and log onto Facebook.com in a desperate attempt to distract themselves from whatever subject they are cramming into their heads.

Currently with 58 million users and ranked the sixth most trafficked site on the Internet, the number of active Facebook users is doubling every six months.

"I find myself logging onto Facebook when I am trying to avoid studying, but there is so much to look at now that I end up wasting too much time browsing friends' pages or looking at pictures," admitted University of Massachusetts sophomore Erik Hellmer.

As the top photo sharing application on the web, with 14 million photos uploaded daily, it is no wonder that students can get caught up for long periods of time.

"Looking through friends' pictures becomes addicting," said sophomore Emily Gittes. "Since most of my friends are away at different schools, I am curious to see what everyone is doing and how people have changed."

With the recent applications being added to the website, such as the "bumper sticker," "build your own snowman" or "video" applications, where users can actually upload videos from their cameras or phones and post them on their pages, there are an increasing number of ways to become distracted.

Facebook gifts, thumbnail virtual icons which are sold for one dollar and can be sent to other friends on Facebook, have also become popular.

They are designed by Susan Kare, who designed the original icon set for the Macintosh computer in 1983. Although many students say they would not spend money on these virtual gifts, free gifts are sponsored by different companies, such as Harley Davidson, and can be given out by any user while supplies last.

There are also new gifts designed daily, which often correspond with the appropriate season or holiday at any given time of the year.

"I have sent a gift when it was free as a joke to a friend, but I would never buy them because they seem like a waste of money," said sophomore Nicole Bookler-Kelly. "A lot of the new applications seem pointless and they encourage users to spend even more time on the Web site than usual."

The recently added game application is becoming increasingly popular among users. Many users admit that it is addicting.

Games like "Jetman," "Warbook" and "Scrabulous" are just a few examples of games developed by various companies that can be added to a user's profile.

"People find Scrabulous a great way to stay in touch with each other," said the developers of the application Rajat and Jayant Agarwalla. "It has always been our emphasis to provide a very easy-to-use interface and customer support."

Whether users are playing games, taking quizzes, keeping up to date with national sports statistics, or using any of the other hundreds of applications available at the fingertips of any facebook user, it's clear that the popularity of Facebook is not fading any time soon.

Kristen Healy can be reached at khhealy@student.umass.edu

Wild weather creates chaos

STORM TRAFFIC from page 1

According to drivers and passengers, cars were sliding everywhere, and UMass roads were clogged with students trying to get home and take shelter from the harsh weather when afternoon classes were cancelled.

Even taking public transportation was slow going for students.

"[The buses] have been pretty crowded, especially when the University was released and trying to get everyone home," said general manager of UMass Transit Al Byam. "We've still got folks trying to get home. We're getting there."

Combined with the slipping and sliding because of quickly accumulating snow, gridlock occurred on the area of Route 116 South known as "the notch," which is one of the main outlets for traffic moving off the campus.

"Basically, the gridlock caused everything to come to a standstill, and an accident on the notch closed the road for half an hour to about 45 minutes," said Byam.

Buses between UMass and Mount Holyoke were delayed and roads remained slippery.

"We investigated about five accidents this morning," said UMPD Sergeant Mieczkowski. UMPD reported that the accidents were not severe and no one was injured or transported.

UMass Transit didn't report any accidents as of 3 p.m. yesterday, but said that driving was tough.

"There was some skidding and some buses got stuck, but we managed to get them going again," said Byam. "Sometimes you pull over and it's hard to get them moving again."

Bus drivers are trained to drive as safely as possible under harsh weather conditions – by taking it slow.

"We essentially get everyone on board as long as it remains safe," Byam said. "We basically throw the schedule out the window and we drive safely as we can. One of the safest places to be is on a nice, big, warm bus and not in a car."

According to Byam, about 80 to 85 people can fit on one 44-foot bus before it becomes too crowded.

"It gets cozy," he said.

Because afternoon classes were cancelled, some students braved the weather and hopped in their cars to get term papers passed in on time.

"It was a blast," said junior R.J. Boutelle. "It was a pain trying to get around. The roads were really bad, but luckily most people are from around here so they know how to drive in the winter."

Although student traffic clogged the outlets from campus to outside towns, UMass Transit wasn't concerned about the effectiveness of evacuating campus in an emergency.

"We're part of the emergency operations center and part of the emergency plan," Byam said. "We basically do whatever it takes to keep people safe and get 'em home. Communication is the biggest thing. We try to keep our drivers informed [about emergencies]."

However, with few routes to get off campus or to major highways, gridlock is unavoidable, which could cause a problem if campus had to be suddenly evacuated.

"I mean, honestly, there is only one way to get out of Amherst and that's to go over the Coolidge bridge," said Powers. "You have no choice you have to go along for the ride. I think it would be a lot more chaotic if it was an emergency and it's different with the weather. No school would know how to properly evacuate everyone."

By about 1:30 p.m. traffic on the UMass campus had settled down.

"Snow was coming down pretty heavy, but it wasn't too bad out," said freshman Chris Capone. "There were a lot of people sledding but not a lot of people trying to get out."

Katy Olesin can be reached at kolesin@student.umass.edu

Cars were backed up in bumper-to-bumper traffic along Massachusetts Avenue yesterday as students left campus once their morning classes concluded.

DEC 14 2007

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 14, 2007 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Everyone's favorite creepy pastime

Leigh Greaney

People watching is as much a part of our culture as fast food and baseball. It's America's pastime. We love it. Whether you're waiting for a bus, filing into a concert venue or even walking to class, you can't seem to get enough.

Anyone to cross your path is subject to your prying eyes. Why, though? Why this obsession with not only glancing at other people but blankly staring them down? Do we see a piece of ourselves in them? Do they remind us of someone we know? Are we attracted to them? Are we disgusted, confused, or mystified by them? It could be anything.

It never seems like a big deal until you fall victim to the eyes of onlookers. Immediately, one of two things can happen. You can assume something is wrong with you. You might check to see if that broccoli from lunch is lodged between your teeth. Then, there's the chance that it could go in a positive direction. You might assume they're attracted to you as you shoot them back a go-ahead-keep-staring smile.

Staring at musicians, performers, and any other public figures shouldn't be confused with people watching. Similar to zoo animals, you're paying to watch them. They're giving you consent to stare as much as you wish.

For those who do not give their consent, their response to being stared at tells a great deal about their esteem. Also, it can bring forth what you believe are your personal flaws. When you see a person looking at you and you assume it's negative, you instantly think of some personal imperfection they must be snickering at in their head.

This negativity brings a whole new question into play. Who decides what imperfection is? Why are we so compelled to find flaws in ourselves and why are we so bothered when people recognize them? Does it really matter to a complete stranger that you happen to have a zit or some extra weight?

When it comes down to it, people-watching, rude or not, is inevitable.

Then, of course, are the people who don't mind being stared at and those who eat up any and all attention they can get. This doesn't necessarily mean they're asking for it (and we all know that those people do exist). Are these people just more confident in their physical appearance or do they simply not care what others think?

Although the spectrum of feelings resulting from being stared at remains vast, the morality of the "watcher" role proves to be more narrow. Is it OK to glare at someone while they're going about their life without their consent? Does it matter how long you're looking? Does the location matter?

Many people consider staring to be rude or inappropriate, yet it persists to be an evident part of our culture. Is it only offensive if you're caught doing it? It is hard to tell. So, does America have a staring problem or is there no problem at all?

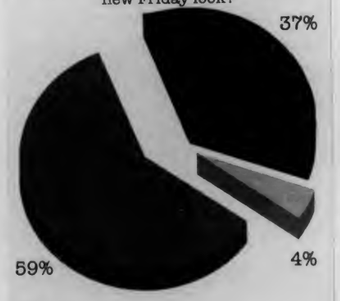
When it comes down to it, people watching, rude or not, is inevitable.

Whether you're feeling victimized as a piece of meat from the opposite sex or feeling insecure about personal flaws, people are going to stare if they want. The answer seems obvious. If you want someone to stop you can shoot them a dirty look, ask them to stop, or walk away.

It seems simple. However, there is a bigger issue here. We need to get to the root of what makes us so uncomfortable and why it is even considered rude in the first place. Seeing is learning. We are curious people. We are captivated by not only beauty in nature, but beauty (or beliefs of lacking beauty) in people.

If we were able to embrace public interactions without putting an emphasis on what people are looking at, we would be able to learn more about each other. If people watching wasn't considered rude, people wouldn't feel so compelled to divert their eyes. It breeds an environment of self doubt and causes us to put up walls.

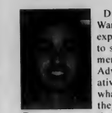
We are so overly concerned with physical appearance. If people didn't feel like they need to hide away from the eyes of others, maybe we would have an easier time excepting ourselves and our physical flaws. Better yet, we could redefine what it is to have physical flaws.



If we allow ourselves and others around us to use their eyes freely, we could let ourselves accept beauty where it has never been before. If the stigma is removed from "being started at" and is diverted to "catching someone's attention" then we're opening up a new way of thinking.

The action of people watching is not the evil. The disgrace along with staring and being stared at is the evil. We need to assign shame with action, not appearance.

Leigh Greaney is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu



DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL RESULTS

What do you think of The Collegian's new Friday look?

I'll be the first to say 'FTA'

Bruce Lerner

During the Vietnam War, the military had an expression that was used to sell enlistment to young men: "Fun, Travel, and Adventure." Naturally, creative GIs, upon learning what kind of fun, where they were traveling, and the true nature of adventure they were in for, changed the expression FTA into a more creative one, namely, "Fk The Army."

After attending the recent panel discussion based on Elyse Tripp's latest book, "Surviving Iraq," it is quite sad to realize the lack of faith in the new meaning of the acronym FTA.

First, a qualifying statement. Any sentiments expressed about the military are not meant to denigrate the rank and file soldiers and veterans who have served or are currently serving in it. These people are quite often the victims of recruiters that lie and of life circumstances that lead to an overwhelming appeal for the rewards that the military claims, and sometimes gives.

They also have suffered under terrible conditions and should have the chance to tell their stories. Indeed, their voices are the most powerful tool in the fight against incessant war. These people are not in the crosshairs of this columnist's views. What is at stake here is the respectability of the military itself, as an institution. This includes what is known as the "brass," or the bosses in the military.

It seems that many people have far too much faith in the military, not excluding the panelists on Monday night. This is judging from a New York Times/CBS poll that showed a great majority trusting the military that the Americans invaded and tried to possess Canada during the 1812 war and the fact that the attack on Pearl Harbor was an attack on a U.S. possession with major military bases and posed no threat to the mainland.

Also of note is that the U.S. rose to become the greatest power in the world after WWII. One does not wonder if this was just an accident, an unforeseen advantage to "winning the war against fascism." The conflicts with Britain in the early days of the U.S. can be thought of as the U.S. trying to gain the right to kill more Indians and take more of their land. This is not to mention the unprovoked attack on Mexico in 1846, also done by the military.

These being the facts, why should the military be honored in any way? It has never protected anybody in this country and has clearly done much harm to people in distant lands, enlistees in the U.S., and the original inhabitants of the U.S. It smells like it always does in this neck of the world, like propaganda.

Egregious lies have been told about the military and about the definition of honor. Honor is not running over children or shooting mothers, as Iraq Veteran Against the War Liam Madden said.

The military might build discipline, camaraderie and devotion, but all in the name of killing innocents, not defending them. How can you defend someone, in the long-term, whose language you don't even speak? The aforementioned attributes can be earned outside of a hierarchical and diabolical system like the military.

As Howard Zinn has said: "War corrupts everybody." This is coming from someone who served as a bombardier during "The Good War," not from what certain war defenders without any empathy or morals would baselessly call sissy liberal intellectuals.

It's about time to get the story straight: The military is the friend of imperialism, not of democracy, although through constant propaganda the two are often confused.

to end the occupation of Iraq, as opposed to Congress and the President.

A common sentiment: "The war sucks, and so does Bush, but I still believe in the military, it builds character, join up." Unfortunately, this view of an institution like the military can do nothing but self-destruct, inflicting damage on the population by subjecting them to a greater lack of freedom.

Of great importance is the fact that the military has never been used to "defend" the country from any grave threat. Several instances where it might seem otherwise come up, as in the war of 1812, and WWII.

Unfortunately, neither of these conflicts had solely the protection of the American people in mind, as evidenced by the facts

It's about time to get the story straight: The military is the friend of imperialism, not of democracy, although through constant propaganda the two are often confused. It should be dismantled in the long run for everybody's good, along with all institutions that create unequal divisions among people, benefiting a few and harming the majority.

For now, it is time to define honor in the military as quitting it when one's morals are put on the line, not of doing what you're told at any and all cost. Be all that you can be: say FTA. That's "Army Strong."

Bruce Lerner is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at blerner@student.umass.edu

A to Z Car Repair
Whether your car is your possession or just a means of getting from point A to point B, we're here to help
We're a local, family-owned business specializing in auto and small engine repair
Brakes • Tune-ups • Alternators • Suspension • Starter Motors • Exhaust work Tire mounting and balancing • Performance auto parts! Oil changes...and more!

Happy holidays, USA

Matt Hoffman

The holiday season is upon us. So to the majority of you who celebrate Christmas, I say, "Merry Christmas."

Some non-Christians and Christians who are overly-eager to be inclusive insist that organizations do not use a "Merry Christmas" greeting. I say, bring on the Christmas cheer!

Sure, "Merry Christmas" has at times caused me to feel uncomfortable. As a Jew, I've wanted cashiers to recognize my identity. Yet, over time, I've realized that Merry Christmas well-wishers mean no harm.

The fact is that although store employees may not know my Jewish identity, they also are not forcing their Christian culture upon me. Jews in America have life very good in America. In fact, life for all minorities in America is pretty cozy.

When I see my non-Christian friends in America, I think about how lucky they and I are to live here. Most Americans are eager to learn about the Jewish holiday of Chanukkah. Americans allow Muslims to celebrate their holidays in mosques in our nation's capital. Advertisers go to great lengths to include Asians and black people in commercials.

Americans may not be perfect in accepting minorities, but life is a heck of a lot better here than it is for minorities in one specific region of the world.

When I see my non-Christian friends in America, I think about how lucky they and I are to live here.

While America is a land of tolerance, Arab-Muslim nations segregate Jews, Arab-Muslim racism also targets Christians, Baha'is, Hindus, Buddhists, among other non-Muslims.

I would like to ask you, dear reader, to try finding a Christmas celebration in Mecca. I dare you. Why am I so sure that there are no Christmas celebrations in the Arabian peninsula? Because Saudi "Apartheid" Arabia bans Jews and Christians from becoming citizens of what author Dore Gold referred to as "Hatred's Kingdom."

If you happen to be a Jew or Christian lucky enough to be allowed to visit the Muslim heartland, you will not be allowed to drive on the same road as a Muslim in certain Saudi cities. How's that for coexistence?

Now let's talk about African rights. Blacks in America certainly haven't had an easy life. The fact that blacks returning from World War II were by and large exempted from purchasing homes in the suburbs is a huge factor as to why many blacks live in decaying urban centers. This injustice needs to be fixed, since we live in America, it can be.

Try talking about African rights in Mauritania. They don't exist. Until very recently, Mauritania made no official movement to end the chattel enslavement of millions of blacks. That's right – blacks are enslaved in Mauritania the same way that blacks were enslaved in America in the 1700s. Arab slave-masters "own" black people not only in Mauritania, but in Sudan, and the United Arab Emirates. The American Anti-Slavery group has more information about the enslavement of black people in 2007.

Let's revert back to America for a quick moment. Chanukkah is so accepted among the American mainstream that it has almost become an official run-up to Christmas.

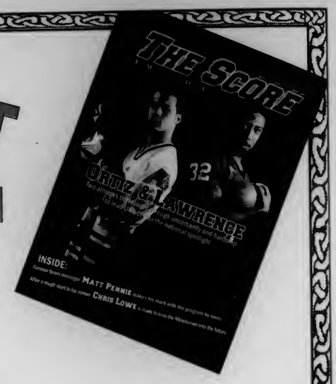
Now, I give you another challenge. Try to find a functioning synagogue anywhere in the 5.25 million miles that make up the Arab-Muslim Middle East. In the 3,600 miles between Morocco and the United Arab Emirates, a functioning synagogue will be very hard to find. Over the past 50 years, the 1 million Jews who lived in these Arab lands – since before the rise of Islam – have been forced to leave their homes. Let's talk about racism.

Finally, let's discuss the holiday that most of you will be celebrating in a just a few weeks. Ahh, Christmas. The beautiful songs, the wonderful food, the joyous atmosphere. Now let's think, where did Christmas originate? In Bethlehem, right?

If any of you watch TV on Christmas Day, you might see a Christmas celebration occurring in there. However, what you won't see in this PR stunt is the blatant discrimination against Christians. In 1990, Bethlehem enjoyed a population that was 60 percent Christian. Today, the Christian population has dwindled to a mere 11 percent. What happened in the last 17 years?

Israel gave the Palestinian Authority control of Bethlehem. Arab Muslim Palestinians intimidated Christian shop-owners into ceasing to sell Christian wares or hang Christmas decorations. The Muslim persecution of Christians in Bethlehem has reached such an extreme that in less than two decades, the Christian population of the city has dropped by 80 percent. So much for Christmas cheer in the Muslim world.

Luckily, I do not live under Palestinian Authority rule. I live in America. So I will continue to celebrate Chanukkah. I will continue to smile when I am greeted with "Merry Christmas." Most importantly, I will continue to have my phone ring to the tune of Mariah Carey's "All I Want For Christmas is You."



I am thankful that America has allowed me – and all minorities – the opportunity to live life with religious and ethnic diversity. Thank you, America. You deserve to be proud.

Matt Hoffman is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mhoffma@student.umass.edu

THE COLLEGIAN HOPES WHATEVER HOLIDAY YOU CELEBRATE IS HAPPY - UNLESS IT'S DEAD PUPPIES DAY; THAT'S NOT COOL.

DEC 14 2007

SPORTS NIGHT
WITH THE DAILY COLLEGIAN At THE HARP

JOIN US TONIGHT AT 7PM FOR A SPORTS SPECTACULAR FEATURING:

- UMass Men's Soccer Final Four Showdown Against Ohio State on the Large Indoor Projector
- The Daily Collegian's "The Score" 2007-'08 Release
- Appearances and Autographs from Featured UMass Athletes

Home of the GREAT TUESDAY TRIVIA

The Harp accepts OCMP, VISA, MasterCard, AmEx, Discover & Debit cards.

CASH FOR BOOKS

Buyback Locations and Times

Textbook Annex
Monday - Friday, December 10th - 14th 9AM - 4PM
Saturday, December 15th 11AM - 4PM
Monday - Thursday, December 17th - 20th 9AM – 5PM
Friday, December 21st 9AM – 4PM

Campus Center- Concourse
Monday - Friday, December 10th - 14th 9AM - 4PM
Saturday, December 15th 11AM - 4PM
Monday - Thursday, December 17th - 20th 9AM – 5PM
Friday, December 21st 9AM - 2PM

Southwest- Hampden Lobby
Monday - Thursday, December 17th - 20th 10AM – 5PM
Friday, December 21st 10AM - 1PM

home of HALF BACK GUARANTEE

UMass Amherst University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619

efollett.com ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.

We want books with this sticker!

DEC 14 2007

Seven silver screen gems that top 2007

By Shayna Murphy
Collegian Staff

Overall, cinema in 2007 was kind of bland. The summer blockbuster season rolled around without a veritable spark, and Oscar season seems devoid of any sweeping contenders. Filmgoers looking for the next best thing were pushed out of their seasonal comfort zones and into uncharted territory. The treasures of 2007 were not always to be found in the brand-name celluloid banking big at the local Cineplex, but rather, they were elsewhere. Mainstream, but still relevant, the following is a list of the top seven films which brought life, wit and ingenuity to the theater in 2007.

"Grindhouse: Planet Terror"

Don't hate. Robert Rodriguez's pitch perfect homage to the glorious exploitation flicks of the '60s and '70s is all the zombie blood and guts a fan girl could ever need, and then some. A concept film in a time when concept has been all but white-washed over in popular culture, "Planet Terror" is gourmet camp done right. With it's battered film, missing reels, spewing corn syrup pustules and peg legged sic machine gun legged heroine, the B-movie aesthetic never looked so good. Equally, "Planet Terror" gets props for carrying out its kitsch all the way to the finale. The popcorn never goes stale here, unlike with it's companion piece, "Death Proof." "Planet Terror" maintains a sense of purpose and constancy, never falling out of step with the genre that inspired it. Russ Meyer would be proud.

"No Country for Old Men"

When Llewellyn Moss (Josh Brolin) finds a suitcase filled with cash, the smart thing would be to just keep on trucking by. Instead, Moss high tails it out of dodge with the suitcase, but vengeance isn't far behind him. The money belongs in the sticky hands of Anton Chigurh (Javier Bardem). A spirit of wrath incarnate, Chigurh dispatches his victims with a weapon fashioned from a slaughterhouse. Hot on the trail of each is an aging sheriff (Tommy Lee Jones) nostalgic for simpler times. A post card of a land time has forgotten, the film bears the homespun stamp of the Coen brothers. Heavy on allegorical references but never losing ground as a story of cowboys and drug dealers, it's as close to flawless as anything can get

"Michael Clayton"

It's been awhile since a legal thriller could be termed exhilarating, but that's exactly what happens here. Michael Clayton (George Clooney) is a fixer at a corporate law firm, a jack of all trades whose specialty is getting his hands dirty with the unsavory errands of his well-to-do co-workers. Clayton is called to task when the firm's star litigator goes berserk and sabotages the defense of a seminal class-action lawsuit. What follows is a foray into corporate cabals and corruption. Reminiscent of the muckraker dramas of yesteryear, "Clayton" is executed with the kind of deft precision and intelligence characteristic of pros.

"Waitress"

This sweet little confection came out of the oven and into the hearts of audience goers during a mid-summer lull. Billed as 2007's answer to the success of "Little Miss Sunshine" and "The Devil Wears Prada," it was hard not to fall under the lure of its freshly baked charm. Kerri Russell plays Jenna, a small town waitress with a talent for making unique tasting pies. While dreams of winning the "United States of Pie" contest give her hope of escaping her loutish husband, an unexpected detour into motherhood grounds her in reality. Can a romance with her OB-GYN supply the right ingredients to happily ever after, or is true happiness a dish best served from within?

"Bug"

Adapted for the big screen from the stage, "Bug" is a horror tale of psychological origin. Heralded as a return to form for William Friedkin, the film boasts its share of grisly sights. Ashley Judd shines in the role of a lost soul waitress, living in a flea-bag motel, in fear of her recently paroled ex-husband (Harry Connick Jr.). Splitting her time between the bar and the booze, she seeks an escape from a past rife with regret. Yet when a shiftless drifter crosses her path, she finds reason to hope again, failing to notice the warning signs of his deeper psychosis. Deeply unsettling, emotionally claustrophobic — but resonant — "Bug" captures what truly crawls under the skin.

"Ratatouille"

In a summer full of unmet expectations, the latest Pixar entry provided reprieve. Good-natured and accessible across age groups, "Ratatouille" was a delight to behold. All poor Remy (voiced by Patton Oswald) wants to do is be a chef. With his refined palate and sensitive nose, he's practically a shoo-in for the job. If only he wasn't, well, a rat. Using a bumbling garbage boy to channel his own vision, Remy's meals quickly become the rave on the Parisian dining scene. But when a tough critic and a scheming rival threaten to pull it apart, Remy soon learns that the best recipe of all comes just from being himself.

"Gone Baby Gone"

Ben Affleck's smash directorial debut serves up as a valentine to the city of Boston. Following the disappearance of a young girl from her South Boston home, local private investigator Patrick Kenzie (Casey Affleck) is hired to work the case. However, Kenzie soon finds that the secrets of South Boston don't unravel easy, and the cost of disclosing the truth may come at a price higher than he can bear. A morality tale in the vein of "Mystic River," the film packs an emotional punch that stays thick long after the credits roll.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at shaynur-phy@student.umass.edu

Save so much on gear that you'll actually be able to go someplace cool to use it.

College Students
Get 15% OFF full-price items.
Must show valid college ID. Restrictions apply, visit store for details.

Hadley
Mountain Farms Mall
351 E. Russell St.

eastern mountain sports

DEC 14 2007

Looking for a Job?

The Daily Collegian

is seeking a hard-working, motivated undergrad to fill our

Advertising Representative Positions.

To Apply:
Contact Alex Bender or Marsea Whooten @ 545-3500 for

- Excellent business experience!
- Gain valuable sales experience
- Get credits for work
- Build your resume

*SOM students strongly encouraged to apply.

Top seven films from 2007

By Kevin Koczwara
Collegian Staff

The idea of coming up with seven of my favorite movies is very difficult when I have yet to see all of them. There are also movies that will be coming out, like "Juno" and "There Will Be Blood," that look like classics that would easily make this list. From the movies I have seen, most of them can be lumped into the category of "they were just okay and don't matter in the long run." Here is a top seven list of the more memorable movies of '07.

"No Country For Old Men"

A movie as close to perfect as there has been and will ever be made. It is dark. It is funny. It has its scares. It is beautifully scripted. It is also the only movie that whenever someone I know comes back from seeing it, a 20 minute discussion on the greatness of the movie breaks out. The Coen brothers are a force to be reckoned with, and when teamed up with material like Cormac McCarthy's novel, it is a scary force.

"No Country for Old Men"

"Once"

Maybe the only musical I have ever enjoyed outside of "The Sound of Music." It's not a true musical, but rather a movie where the main characters are musicians. The lyrics are far from corny. There is no singing and dancing on subways, but singing in studios and playing beat-up guitars on street corners while begging for money. It is a great movie for all people, and has one of the most absurd R-ratings of all time.

"Before the Devil Knows You're Dead"

Sydney Lumet directs some of the best actors to walk the planet — need more of a description? The movie stars Phillip Seymour Hoffman, Marissa Tomei, Ethan Hawke (who has made some career mistakes, but he can act), Albert Finney and Rosemary Harris. The movie is what Quentin Tarantino wishes he could do with time jumps, and he is the master of it, so that's saying a lot. The movie deals with a robbery by two brothers of their own parents' jewelry store. It's a great plot and simple idea that digs deep.

"Eastern Promises"

David Cronnenberg returns strong after "A History of Violence," and definitely directs his heart out. This is the best performance of Viggo Mortensen's career, and should start to pay Cronnenberg for casting him in his two most recent movies. "Eastern Promises" has one of the best fight scenes on a movie screen.

"3:10 To Yuma"

The movie stars Christian Bale and Russell Crowe, but they aren't even the best people being filmed. Ben Foster steals the screen and shines as one bad man, in a good and bad way. The movie is also a remake done right and a great western, which is and will always be one of the strongest formats for any movie.

"The Darjeeling Limited"

Wes Anderson puts out another gem. The humor is dry and smart, as always, but this one is a great adventure across an unknown land. "The Darjeeling Limited" feels like a step back to "Bottle Rocket" with Owen Wilson's character, and he is a class act. The movie works perfectly with three facially similar actors who play brothers. Visually, it works well on screen with the three different-sized actors who fill the screen perfectly in their acting styles and heights.

"Into the Wild"

A movie based on a book is almost always a surefire failure. This one is not. Sean Penn directs beautifully and captures the mood of the book written by Jon Krakauer. The movie is well-acted and shows the audience the broad perspective of a boy who turns into a man and searches the vast American landscape for his identity and true freedom.

Kevin Koczwara can be reached at kkoczwar@student.umass.edu

Honorable mention

"Knocked Up"

"Knocked Up" ushered in a new brand of humor and heart and made movies like "Good Luck Chuck" seem woefully out of date, showing that humor that is rooted in emotion is what's new in comedy. The movie is about slacker Ben Stone (Seth Rogen) and TV personality Alison Scott (Katherine Heigl) accidentally making a baby, falling in love and growing up. The movie is straight out hilarious, quotable and will prompt many watches for years to come.

"Superbad"

"Superbad" was the movie of the summer for the teen in all of us. It took the age old genre of the teen sex comedy to a whole new level. The simple and timeless story about guys trying get with girls by any means before they leave for college, is already famous. McLovin' T-shirts were out less than a week after its release. "Superbad" also boasts a killer funk soundtrack and slew of scenes that are among the best, most memorable and quotable in recent movie history.

- Peter Rizzo, Collegian Staff

In "Superbad," three high school friends have one crazy night before graduation.

The Beer Dudes

A different beer for every meal

By Derrick Perkins and Tim McCall
Collegian Staff

Beer and food are as ageless a combination as oxygen and breathing. Wine might have the market cornered on finding that perfect combination of tastes and flavors with dinner in popular culture, but beer compliments every meal of the day. While connoisseurs around the country and the world have written countless pages on the perfect beer to match every conceivable dish, none have ever taken a hard look at which brews match up best with the typical eating habits of the average college student. Always wondered what would taste best with that pizza from Antonio's? How about the best way to wash down a helping of Wings? Read on and discover the delicious world of food and beer.

Breakfast

Sure, most people would consider coffee, milk or orange juice as breakfast beverages, but a good beer can compliment the most important meal of the day just as well. Thinking about serving eggs and bacon this morning? If you're feeling a bit adventurous, the Beer Dudes recommend a lighter-bodied, sweet tasting hefeweizen to wash down that greasy sausage patty or plate of scrambled eggs. The traditional German morning beer — smooth, light and citrus. A tall hefeweizen is a great way to start off your morning. Our choices: Long Trail Hefeweizen or Harpoon's Unfiltered Offering (4.1 ABV).

Cheeseburgers

While snow is falling throughout the Commonwealth as New England heads full swing into the holiday season, don't let those memories of summer fade away too quickly. It's never too cold to grill up a good cheeseburger and nothing goes better with cooking over an open fire than a good beer. If you haven't had the foresight to tuck away a couple of Samuel Adams Summer Ales during the warmer months this year, the Beer Dudes suggest coupling that juicy burger with a seriously flavorful beer. Our choices: Samuel Adams Boston Lager, Bass Pale Ale or the Corona Extra (with lime).

Chicken Wings

Let's face it, soda does not mix well with chicken wings. Too much carbonation and little flavor can ruin your meal. Being over 21 brings the best solution to this problem: beer. For honey BBQ wings, go with an India Pale Ale. IPAs typically have a hoppy light taste, perfect for the mellow sauce choice. Or if you are in the mood for something spicy, go for a stout beer. The spicier the better for a good stout like Guinness. Guinness will coat your mouth as you bite down on your fiery wing. The hops and barley combination inside the Guinness will absorb the spicy and make each bite taste like a brand new wing. Our choices: the Guinness Stout or Long Trail India Pale Ale.

Pizza

The weekends always mean ordering out at least one meal, and in a college town like Amherst, the only food delivered as much as a DC-10 from Wings has to be the pizza. Due to its versatility, and the vast number of options when it comes to toppings, the pizza is as much a challenge as a joyous occasion to try out new styles of beer. A spicier pie, maybe buffalo chicken or sausage, needs a lighter, paler beer. Heavier, thicker or drier pizza requires a smoother brew to wash it all down. Our choices: Killian's Irish Red Lager, Harpoon's Hibernian Irish Style Red Ale, Magic Hat Circus Boy or a Long Trail Ale. Really, you can't go wrong.

Ramen Noodles

College students sometimes have far too many expenses to stay afloat. Maybe their eyeglasses broke or their YCMP meal plan ran out and they still need to find holiday gifts for everyone on their list. Being broke is no fun. For these circumstances, buy a package of Ramen noodles and a six pack of Keystone Light. Keystone is not as smooth as it's cracked up to be. It may not even taste all that good compared to the wonderful world of micro brews, but if you're going to start cheap, you might as well end cheap. Our choice: Keystone Light.

The Beer Dudes can be reached at arts@dailycollegian.com.

The Beer Dudes suggest washing down a delicious slice of pizza with a nice, cold beer.

Fashion from the streets

By Emma Lifvergren
Collegian Columnist

It's almost winter break! With finals drawing nearer and papers to be finished, it must be hard to care about what you look like, but I found someone who managed to put time and effort into her fashion choices. This will be my last column before break, but hopefully I'll have my street fashion blog up and running before we get back to school. Have a good vacation!

Mandy Toong gets her fashion inspiration from magazines or TV and adapts it to her tastes.

Name: Mandy Toong
Age: 20
Year: Junior
Major: Undeclared/General Science

Emma Lifvergren: Describe your personal style.
Mandy Toong: I'd kind of say that my style is … alternative, punk. It's influenced a lot by the music scene.

EL: Does anything factor into how you dress each day?
MT: Generally, I take comfort into account. I like to have things that match, and things that look different but still fit my style. If I see things in the magazines or on TV, I try to fit it into my style.

EL: Anything you own that means a lot to you?
MT: Well I'm not wearing it now, but I usually wear a necklace with an Asian symbol. It's a rabbit, so that's special to me. I also like to have my pairs of tight pants, skinny pants, skinny jeans.

EL: What are you wearing now?
MT: I mixed and matched different things. I got my skirt from the GAP; my sweater is from Banana Republic. I got my coat at Steve and Barry's, and the tie is actually my dad's. I got my bag at Hot Topic. The shoes I got at JC Penny.

EL: What do you think in general of the UMass fashion scene?
MT: In my opinion, I think a lot of people underdress. I'm used to people wearing a lot of preppy clothes, like a more school uniform look. A lot of people wear their athletic clothes, like sweatpants or pajama bottoms.

Emma Lifvergren can be reached at elifverg@student.umass.edu.

The Daily Collegian WANTS YOU

WE JUST LAUNCHED A NEW CLASSIFIED WEBSITE
IT MASSDIST.COM AND WE ARE LOOKING FOR ONE STUDENT TO SERVE AS THE SALES/MARKETING DIRECTOR TO DRIVE REVENUE AND TRAFFIC TO THE WEBSITE

WHO ARE WE LOOKING FOR?
YOU - THE COLLEGIATE TALENT LOOKING FOR THE BEST SALES AND MARKETING EXPERIENCE AROUND

WHAT'S IT IN FOR ME?
FOR EVERY PAID LISTING THAT IS PLACED YOU WILL EARN A COMMISSION FROM THE WEBSITE DEVELOPMENT COMPANY, CAMPUSAVE. THE COMPANY WILL PAY YOU 20 PERCENT OF THE COMMISSION YOU EARN FROM THE DAILY COLLEGIAN ON EACH PAID LISTING.

DURATION:
INITIALLY FOR 2 MONTHS AND THEN THE DAILY COLLEGIAN AND CAMPUSAVE WILL DETERMINE IF THEY WOULD LIKE TO EXTEND THE CONTRACT

PLEASE CONTACT GREG EDSON AT
greg@campusave.com
INCLUDE NAME, TELEPHONE, MAJOR AND YEAR AND A BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF YOUR QUALIFICATIONS.

DEC 14 2007

Road issues worry Dacko

By Dominic Poli
Collegian Staff

While most University of Massachusetts students celebrate the holidays, welcome in the New Year and recuperate from the fall semester, certain UMass athletic teams will continue their season schedules through winter break. One of these squads is the Massachusetts women's basketball team.

After the Minutewomen (4-6) face Wagner in Staten Island, N.Y., at 2 p.m. Saturday, they play eight games – five at home – from Dec. 22 till the end of break. Of their opponents, which have a combined record of 33-44, all but Providence and Richmond have losing records.

UMass is 3-1 against Wagner (2-5), winning the teams' last meeting, 73-58, on Nov. 30, 2006. With four Minutewomen finishing with double digits in points, then-junior Pam Rosanio led the offense by racking up 18 points and nine rebounds. The Seahawks, who were 3-26 that season, have lost six players from last year, including Nagle.

On Dec. 22, UMass takes on Buffalo (5-3) and begins a collegiate athlete's version of winter vacation.

UMass coach Marnie Dacko's biggest offensive weapons against the intermission's opponents will be seniors Kate Mills and Pam Rosanio, the two Minutewomen averaging more than 10 points a game.

Mills averages 16.1 points per contest and has 26 assists. The 6-foot-1 forward is often the most dominating player on the court and uses her strength and size to fight off opponents under the glass, garnering a team-leading 60 rebounds. Rosanio is averaging 15.1 points per game. Known for her tenacious defense, the guard also has a nice touch with ball. She is second on the team with 45 rebounds and is tied with junior Sakera Young for the team-high in assists with 31.

The team will try to make progress on defense in order to shut down its opposition's offense and give its own scorers more chances to accumulate points. Dacko often describes senior Alisha Tatham as UMass's defensive specialist. Tatham is especially gifted at covering opposing players and not letting anybody get by her. Dacko says her squad's defense hasn't performed exceptionally well lately, letting too many players get into scoring lanes. But, she said it is something they are working on.

Winter break comes at a time when the UMass bench has been making its presence known. The Minutewomen's non-starters have consistently contributed points this season and approached competing for the starting job with class. Only three players – Mills, Rosanio and senior Alisha Tatham – have started every game.

Just three of the Maroon and White's games over break are away from home, limiting their opportunities to gain their first road win. UMass is 0-5 when on the road, and the players feel the trend is getting old. They will try to reverse it first against Providence on Dec. 31.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

Crucial games ahead for UM

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team couldn't have ended the first half of its 2007-08 season any better. A 4-1 win over New Hampshire – the only Hockey East team ranked higher than UMass at the time – opened a number of possibilities for the Minutemen as they enter the middle part of the regular season.

The month of January is always an interesting one for winter sports. With no students around, home games have a different feel, and the Mass Attack will be relying on more support from the hometown fans than the students, especially with some of the key matchups that will take place before the start of the spring semester.

The Minutemen's next action sends them to Tampa Bay, Fla., for the Lightning College Hockey Classic at the St. Pete Times Forum.

The Minutemen will play No. 6 Notre Dame in the first round of the four-team tournament. The Fighting Irish should pose an interesting matchup for the Mass Attack, who rarely gets the opportunity to play an out-of-conference game against a ranked opponent.

UMass is 2-2 all-time against the Irish, the last game coming in 1999, a 3-5 loss.

The Lightning Classic should have major implications in the polls for all teams involved, as each one is currently ranked in the USCHO.com/CSTV Top 20. The other matchup pits No. 3 Colorado College against No. 16 Rensselaer, which is not ranked in the USA Today Top 15, but is receiving votes and would be 16th in terms of points.

The winners and losers of the two early games will play each other, with the team that goes 2-0 being crowned the champion of the classic. UMass is 1-3 in its history against Colorado College and 6-4-1 against Rensselaer.

The Minutemen return to Hockey East action after that with six conference games in the month of January – three at home and three on the road.

Jan. 11 and 12 pits UMass against UNH once again in a home-and-home series that will conclude the two teams' regular season meetings. Following the somewhat surprising manner in which the Maroon and White disposed of the Wildcats in the last meeting, should make this weekend an interesting one.

The following weekend, Jan. 18 and 19, the Minutemen have back-to-back road tilts against Providence and UMass Lowell, a pair of teams UMass desperately needs wins against.

Earlier this year, the Minutemen played the Friars in a home-and-home series that did not go well for them. A 3-1 loss on the road was followed by a 3-3 tie at home that the team felt it should have beaten. A win on the road would even the season series for the Minutemen.

The River Hawks also have unfinished business with its sister school. The teams have stalemated thus far this season with a pair of ties, one at each building. Last season, UMass tied its first two games with Boston University before falling in the rubber match, 3-2.

After that comes a two-game home stand against Vermont, which beat the Minutemen, 4-2, in Burlington back on Nov. 20, just before Thanksgiving.

UMass is currently a point behind first-place Northeastern in the standings and will have plenty of opportunities to cement its position at the front of the conference before school is back in session.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

BRIAN TEDESCO/COLLEGIAN

The Mass Attack (7-3-5, 4-2-4 Hockey East) are undefeated at the Mullins Center this season. No. 10 UMass will play eight games (three at home) during the winter break.

be gifted.
Free Gift Wrapping
Gift Certificates

Citizens of Humanity
Seven for all Mankind
Paige
Mavi
Free People
Steve Madden
Frye
Ugg

ZANNA
women's clothing, shoes and accessories
downtown Amherst

UMass forward Tony Gaffney provided a huge lift defensively during Wednesday night's victory over Boston College in Chestnut Hill. Gaffney altered numerous BC shots in the low post.

No time for any rest

UMass has 10 games during winter break

By Eli Rosenwaike
Collegian Staff

With big road victories over Syracuse and Boston College behind them, the Massachusetts men's basketball team will face the likes of Toledo, Central Connecticut State and Boston University over the next three Saturdays.

But the schedule over winter break will get tougher for the Minutemen (7-2), including games over Houston, Dayton and undefeated Vanderbilt. In all, UMass will play 10 games in between now and when classes resume on Jan. 28 – including seven games at the Mullins Center.

Most importantly for the Minutemen, Atlantic 10 Conference play will begin on Jan. 9, a tilt with Saint Joseph's in Amherst. Before that, UMass will finish its non-conference schedule with the aforementioned matchups against Toledo, CCSU, BU, Houston and Vanderbilt.

The Minutemen stunned Boston College, 83-80, Wednesday night at the Conte Forum in Chestnut Hill and gave them their second marquee win away from the Mullins Center. Ricky Harris scored 25 points to lead UMass with Gary Forbes chipping in 17 points after halftime (22 total) and Chris Lowe adding 17 points to go along with six assists.

Much like the win over Syracuse, the Minutemen battled adversity at the end of the game to escape with the victory. UMass held the lead for much of the game against the Eagles, but a missed lay-up by Harris with 12 seconds left gave BC a chance to tie the game.

BC point guard and leading-scorer Tyrese Rice had a good look for the game-tying 3-pointer with four seconds remaining, but the shot missed short, and Forbes grabbed the rebound and proceeded to throw the ball up in the air in celebration.

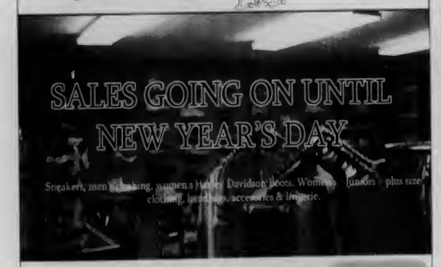
UMass coach Travis Ford cautioned his team at the post-game press conference not to get too ahead of itself.

"We're still a team trying to prove itself. It's a good win, no question," Ford said after the victory over BC, shrugging off the notion that it was a statement win. "We're still a team that's trying to go under the radar and a team that was picked [to finish] eighth in our league. We're trying to go about our business underground if we can and not make too much noise."

The first four remaining non-conference games will all be played at the Mullins Center. The final non-conference tilt against Vanderbilt is in Nashville, Tenn. The Commodores are currently 10-0, and have a legitimate chance to be 14-0 when the Minutemen fly down for the Jan. 5 matchup. Vanderbilt has home games against Tennessee State, Tennessee-Martin, Iona and Rice on the slate before facing UMass.

Ford added Vanderbilt to the schedule after Kentucky backed out of this year's game at the TD Banknorth Garden.

The Minutemen will play five A-10 games during the break: Saint Joseph's (twice), Dayton (7-1), Charlotte (6-2) and a big matchup with No. 17 Xavier (8-1) in Amherst.



The strength and depth of the A-10 so far this season is better far superior then in year's past. UMass was picked to finish eighth in the conference in the preseason poll, but are beginning to surprise teams.

Duquesne (6-3) and Rhode Island (10-1) are much better than some critics anticipated entering the season. With the big victories over BC and Syracuse, UMass is getting the big-game experience and success that could prove useful during conference play.

Check the Daily Collegian's Web site for frequent coverage of the men's basketball team during winter break.

Eli Rosenwaike can be reached at erosenwa@student.umass.edu.

Rampage
233 N Pleasant St
Suite 27 &28
Amherst, Ma
413-548-8881

Discount with college ID • Buy 10 pairs of sneakers, get one FREE • women's clothing too: accesories handbags, lingerie.
"If we don't have it, we'll get it for you."
ask about Nutrition 101

UMass Men's Basketball Winter Break Schedule

Date	Opponent	Location
Dec. 15	Toledo (2-7)	Mullins Center
Dec. 22	Central Connecticut (3-7)	Mullins Center
Dec. 29	Boston University (3-6)	Mullins Center
Jan. 2	Houston (9-1)	Mullins Center
Jan. 5	Vanderbilt (10-0)	Nashville, Tenn.
Jan. 9	Saint Joseph's (4-5)	Mullins Center
Jan. 15	Dayton (7-1)	Dayton, Ohio
Jan. 19	Charlotte (6-2)	Mullins Center
Jan. 23	Saint Joseph's (4-5)	Philadelphia, Penn.
Jan. 27	Xavier (8-1)	Mullins Center

DEC 14 2007

Comixxx

JOURNALISM AT ITS FINEST

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Come in on Dec. 17th and recieve a Wachusett Mtn Ski Pass! Volunteer donations are needed. We are open from 10am-4pm. Sign up by calling 1-800-GIVE-LIFE or www.givelife.org. Walk-ins are welcome. positive ID required

APT. FOR RENT

Brandywine Apt. JAN-MAY. 1 Bdrm New Carpets/Paint- conact mlalh@student.umass.edu for information.

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing. 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jan. 1 First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com or stop by or call 549-0600

New 2 bedroom condo 30 minutes from campus Gas fireplace drive under garage country setting must see! $159,000. Call 413-887-7691

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail 545-6837

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact the phonetics lab phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

The Boston University Bookstore in Kenmore Square has a job for you during Winterbreak if you have Starbucks Coffee experience! Email bdinolo@bu.edu

Bartending $300/Day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext. 162

ROOM FOR RENT

Hillel's Jewish Living Community 388 N Pleasant. Winter session or Spring term Single/Double. Any 5 college student (except freshmen) Laundry, internet, pool table, big rooms. Walk to UM. Parking, cable avail. Quiet. 549-1710 x 205 or www.UMASSHILLEL.ORG/JLLC

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906,1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic: 577-5101

SERVICES

TAPESTRY HEALTH Safe, Confidential, Affordable. Providing birthcontrol, EC, pregnancy testing, GYN & breast exams, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STI screening & treatment. Located at 27 Pray Street, Amherst. Call 413-548-9992 Walk ins welcome www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

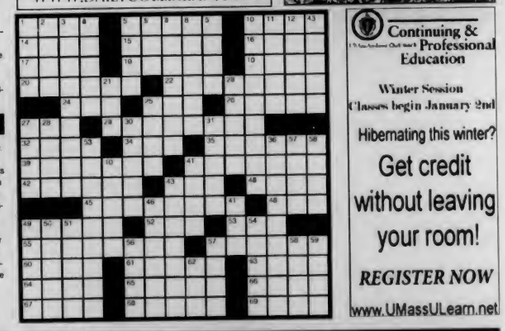
#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

Spring Break 2008 Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations. 800-648-4849/www.ststravel.com

WANTED

EGG DONORS WANTED. Help make a couple's dream of becoming parents come true by becoming an egg donor. Very generous compensation and expenses paid. Must be a non-smoking female between the ages of 21 and 32. For more info, please visit our website at www.robertnicholsesq.com or contact Julie at 781-551-0600.

ACROSS
1 Search thoroughly
5 Surgical dressing
10 Strait-laced
14 Callas number
15 Bedevil
16 Ashcroft's predecessor
17 "Death in Venice" author
18 Catty
19 Musical's land
20 Old Testament prophet
22 Bargain event
24 Major ISP
25 Feathery scarf
26 Put to use
27 Drenched
29 Physical workout
32 Transport by truck
34 Collide intentionally
35 Breakfast food
39 Skilled gymnast
41 Trattoria choice
42 Speculation
43 Sought office
44 Bruce or Laura
45 Hitchcock specialty
48 "Norma ___"
49 Colorado ski resort
52 Hail to Caesar
53 Comic routine
55 Dinner hour
57 Self-effacing
60 Wait
61 Romp
63 Carve in stone
64 Old Testament book
65 Hemlock homes
66 Fact fabricator
67 Coral formation
68 Head lock
69 Neutral color



DOWN
1 Turned up
2 Voiced
3 Smaller version
4 Bluegrass instrument
5 Knife wound
6 Raggedy doll
7 Even
8 Twelve signs
9 Observer
10 Flourished
11 Draw up a new plan
12 Total
13 Folding green
21 Pub order
23 Artist's stand
25 Cop's route
27 Huh?
28 Apiece
30 Dentist's photographs
31 Computer images
33 Kind of notebook
36 Full of life
37 Gillette razor
38 Place for memories?
40 Full force
41 Window section
43 Opposite
46 Mollycoddle
47 Hotdog's problem?
49 Waves-of-grain color
50 Get hold of 51 Military chaplain
54 Fred Astaire's sister
56 "___ She Lovely"
57 Jumble
58 Flesh mark
59 By way of, briefly
62 UFO crew

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Wombats: they're banging!

Continuing & Professional Education

Winter Session
Classes begin January 2nd

Hibernating this winter?

Get credit without leaving your room!

REGISTER NOW

www.UMassULearn.net

Welcome to Falling Rock National Park By Kid Shav

Paul By Billy O'Keefe

Wrap it up over break...OH GROSS, get your head out of the gutter. I WAS TALKING ABOUT THE PRESENTS!

Goodnight Sudoku, Goodnight old lady eating mush.

		3		7	2
5	6		8
4		7	5				1
	8				1
7	3						8	6
			2				3
	9				3	4		1
					8		6	5
			1	4		8

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
The library will soon be the site of a Willy Wonka-esqe competetion on campus. The cell phone pod is the great glass elevator.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Devise a dog sled type transportation unit by harnessing 18 vivacious freshmen to a DC tray.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
A devastating blizzard is nature's way of physically forcing you to stay inside and study.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You are sexier than a brick of the finest Wisconsin cheese.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Develop a business plan to take over Dave's Pets and Soda. Perhaps Emilio's blended pets and beverages?

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Devote your winter break to determining at what point on your leg does hair stop being leg hair and become pubic hair.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Will Smith is average at best. You are Legend.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Learn to juggle flaming chainsaws and use your talent to raise money for a noble cause, such as seal pup awareness.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
During finals, wear a nice pair of corduroys. Corduroys are the most sophisticated and intelligent member of the pants community.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Holla Holla get out into the world sell yo' body and make a dolla!

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Get a bunch of your friends and throw snowballs at cars. They shouldn't be driving anyway so they deserve it.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Throughout the next week your outer appearance should reflect your internal state of complete befuddlement and strain.

To the patrons of the Comics Page,

No matter how many upsetting, wretched and offensive horoscopes you received this semester, I think you are all cooler than a pair of purple sweatpants. I hope you have a glorious winter break rampant with debauchery and promiscuity.

VIVE LA WOMBAT, VIVE LOS COMICS!

Quote of the Millenium

"Enough is enough! I have had it with these mother@%#&%^$ snakes on this mother@%#&%^$ plane!"
— Samuel L. Jackson

Caption Contest

Winning Caption Submitted by: Matt Janko

Contest begins again next semester. Stay sharp you floppy scoundrels.

You call that music? Come here, pull my finger.

The Quigmans By Buddy Hickerson

"I know, Doc, but despite the world's current love affair with llamas, I still just feel like a poor man's giraffe."

DEC 14 2007

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 14, 2007 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass off to driving start

Mass Attack busy during break | page 12

MINUTEMEN'S POSTSEASON IN JEAPORDY | PAGE 22

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 39 LO: 25 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | SPRING BACK TO SCHOOL 2008

Gargano resigns before new term

Unexpected decision creates mixed student, staff reactions

By S.P. Sullivan
Collegian Staff

Mike "Dunk" Gargano has left the building.

The resignation of the vice chancellor for student affairs and campus life last Thursday was met with mixed reactions from students and faculty.

Appointed by former chancellor John L. Lombardi in June 2003, Gargano was a controversial figure on campus, often criticized for being a heavy-handed administrator who was allegedly uncooperative with diversity groups on campus, specifically the ALANA caucus.

Student Government Association (SGA) president Aaron Buford was pleased with the former vice chancellor's decision to step down, but expressed that the decision could have alleviated some of the tension between students and administrators if it had come before last semester's student strike.

"It would've been great if his resignation had come earlier," said Buford. "Nonetheless, the vacancy in his position has given the University the opportunity to bring a new vice chancellor who is capable of bringing change to this institution."

Although Gargano drew criticism from organizations on campus such as the ALANA caucus and SGA, other organizations and students found him cooperative and dedicated.

"I think he's a good guy," said Tucker Merrick, a member of the Student Affairs and University Life (SAUL) committee, which is chartered by the Faculty Senate and included Gargano.

"A lot of people critique him for not being for students, and allowing cops in the dorms, but it's a reaction to things that are happening on campus, and I think a large part of the student attitude has been turned around with his help, whether students want to believe it or not," he said.

Gargano will follow former chancellor Lombardi to Louisiana State University, where he will serve as vice president for student and academic support. Associate Chancellor Esther Terry will take on the role of interim vice chancellor in his stead.

Before coming to the University of Massachusetts, Gargano held several positions, including assistant vice president and executive director of the student activities center, during a 13-year tenure at George Washington University in Washington, D.C. In 2003, he replaced Dean of Students Jo-Anne Vasin, who had been filling the position of vice chancellor for student affairs on an interim basis.

Throughout his tenure at UMass, Gargano served as a de facto lightening rod for criticism of the University administration, which culminated in 2004 when the SGA gave him a vote of "no confidence."

Gargano first found himself under fire in the fall of 2004 in the wake of the "KKK-9" scandal, when photographs surfaced depicting SGA members drinking in their office in front of a caricature of a Ku Klux Klansman. When a diver-

See DUNK RESIGNS on page 5

JEN WOINOROWICZ/COLLEGIAN

After nearly four and a half years, Mike Gargano resigned as vice chancellor for the University of Massachusetts.

Former vice chancellor heads for Louisiana State University

By Devon Courtney
Collegian Staff

Vice Chancellor Michael A. Gargano officially resigned from his position on Friday, Jan. 25.

Gargano, who was the Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs since July 2003, accepted a position as Vice President for Student and Academic Support at Louisiana State University.

He follows former chancellor John Lombardi, who is now the president of LSU.

In a statement from the University of Massachusetts press office, Gargano says is "now looking forward to the next stage" in his career and that he has "enjoyed and benefited from" his time at UMass.

Gargano will be earning $225,000 per year, a $31,946 increase from his current salary at UMass, according to LSU.

Associate Chancellor Esther Terry, an alumnus of UMass, will be filling in the vacant Vice Chancellor position on an interim basis. Terry earned her Ph.D. from UMass in 1974, and headed the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies for 19 years.

UMass students had mixed feelings about Gargano's departure.

"I'm glad he resigned," said junior political science major Allison Marshall. "He wasn't receptive to student opinions, and during the strike, he wouldn't come out of his office."

"This is a great time in the life of the University," said UMass graduate student Mishy Leiblum. "It leaves an important opening for the University to recommit to its mission of a more accessible higher education."

Some students feel differently, however.

"We loved Gargano," said senior biology major Matt Sloan. "He was really good to us. He did a lot of work for the Greek system on campus, and the members of Pi Kappa Phi regret that he's no longer here."

Gargano is scheduled to begin at LSU on February 1. He will focus on creating strategies to increase enrollment and improve graduation and retention rates, the Associated Press reported.

Devon Courtney can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu

Student remembered by peers

By David Humphreys
Collegian Staff

As the new semester starts, friends and family of Jennifer Morganson mourn her loss and prepare to adjust to campus life without her.

Jennifer, a University of Massachusetts senior majoring in Women's Studies, passed away suddenly on Jan. 16 after suffering a brain aneurysm in her Pufflon apartment.

She was just 22 years old.

Remembered as beautiful, friendly and giving, Ryan Benedict, a good friend of hers, said Jennifer was "such a great person… she definitely was a bright spot. Every time we got together… she would light up the room when she came in… you met her in five minutes and

See STUDENT DEATH on page 5

COURTESY PHOTO/UMASS

Twenty-two year old Jennifer Morganson, a dedicated and enthusiastic student, will be remembered by the UMass community.

Committee continues search

By Ben Williams
Collegian Staff

While students have been away on break, the 25-member chancellor search committee and a consulting firm have been hammering out the details of who will lead the University of Massachusetts forward.

"We have held an unprecedented number of consituency outreach meetings and are now taking the next step in this process," Chairman Jennifer C. Braceras said.

"Our outreach meetings vividly illustrate that the UMass Amherst community is looking for a leader who can help bring the campus to the very top level of public universities in the nation. Our task is to identify candidates who have that ability, and I am confident that this search committee will meet that challenge."

Before the break, the committee held a series of outreach sessions asking for input on just who will permanently fill the shoes of John V. Lombardi from a wide selection of groups in the campus community.

Search committee members met with students, faculty, staff, labor, administrators, alumni, business leaders and community representatives, as well as representatives of the athletics program, members of the UMass Amherst Foundation board, State House legislators and community leaders in Springfield.

The next step in the process, to which Braceras refers, is the actual building of the candidate pool.

UMass Spokesman Robert Connolly says the building of that pool happens in three ways: people apply for the job, are nominated by another party or the search committee, or are recruited.

Connolly said recruitment is where the search firm, Isaacson, Miller, really comes into the picture. The search firm uses its large list of contacts and knowledge of the industry to seek out people that fit the description that the search committee has formed.

The consulting company has been in the business of searching for executives for civic institutions for more than 20 years, and has a great deal of experience finding higher education officials, including the previous UMass chancellor search. Isaacson, Miller is currently also helping search for candidates at institutions ranging from Amnesty International to Yale

See SEARCH COMMITTEE on page 4

General student strike: a look back

Rising fees put high financial burden on UMass students

By Kate Olesin
Collegian Staff

A contemporary college education costs more than just petty change these days – and for many universities, the price continues to rise.

"Every year it gets harder and harder for my family to pay for me to go to school," said University of Massachusetts junior Shane Kirby. "The loans for me are getting bigger and bigger. I came here to not get $60,000 in debt. It's a state school – they're not supposed to be super expensive."

Last semester, UMass students decided to make a statement against rising fees and other points in a general student strike.

"Student fees have continued been an issue since before I came to UMass Amherst," said Ruth Thompson, student trustee of the Student Government Association (SGA). "I am a senior now, graduating in May, and I remember student leaders fighting to freeze fees my first semester freshmen year. Almost four years later we are asking for fees to be rolled back because we have had enough."

At the University of Massachusetts, the blame has fallen upon administrators, who students believe are not doing enough to get support – and funds – from the state.

"I don't see [the University] doing anything," said Kirby. "My tuition hasn't gone down, so obviously they're not doing a good a job."

"We as student leaders understand that, yes, student fees continue to go up because of the Massachusetts divestment in public higher education," said

See RISING FEES on page 7

Stigma of white campus sparks diversity concerns for SGA

By Holly Seabury
Collegian Staff

Though many may not notice, the University of Massachusetts is a predominantly "white" campus.

According to the College Board, about 73 percent of the 19,823 students on campus are white. However, according to Student Trustee Ruth Thompson, the true number is more like 82.6 percent.

"With this number, UMass is not diverse," she said. "Some people don't value the importance of diversity, but if UMass was truly diverse there would be more people from different cultures and backgrounds to learn from and share with."

According to the College Board, 9 percent of UMass students are Asian, 5 percent are African-American, 4 percent are Hispanic, and less than 1 percent are Native American.

Thompson defines diversity as people coming from different places in the world with different views and ideas and learning from each other.

"It's not just about the classroom and the knowledge that people bring to the classroom," she said, "but it is also

See DIVERSITY on page 7

PJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Some student groups are frustrated with the lack of adequate space for student activities, especially in the Student Union (pictured) and the Campus Center.

SGA takes on control over student space

Devon Courtney
Collegian Staff

For UMass students who have gripes about freshman housing or finding space in the Campus Center, their concerns will soon be addressed.

The Student Government Association (SGA) and the Graduate Student Senate (GSS) are set to vote on administrative proposals dealing with student space as early as March 5.

Ever since the campus-wide student strike on Nov. 15, negotiations have been in the works about other student issues such as fee control, police in dormitories, and accountability for diversity at the University of Massachusetts campus.

"We've received written counterproposal from the administration about freshman-only housing," said Jeff Napolitano, President of the GSS and strike leader. A stop to all-freshman dorms is one of the demands of the ten-member negotiating panel that was assembled after the strike.

Counterproposals are the University's response to the original proposal's demands, which indicate that a compromise is underway.

Since the administration did not officially consult members of the student body or student government about the proposal, they responded by drafting a proposal aimed only at administrators.

Restricting certain dormitories to freshman students is only half of the grievance about student control of space. Students also fear that decisions are being made about the Campus Center and Student Union without consultation.

"We haven't gotten [a proposal] addressing our right

See STUDENT SPACE on page 7

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

► Celebrity intern club.*

pwc.tv/ch1

Newbies now playing on www.pwc.tv/ch1

*connectedthinking

© 2008 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. "connectedthinking is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

Big money in Western Mass.

Support for casino strong

BY KRISTEN HEALY
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Operators of the Mohegan Sun casino in Connecticut are holding out hopes that another branch will be constructed in Palmer, bringing gambling into Massachusetts for the first time.

In August 2007, the Mohegan Tribal Gaming Authority signed a deal with a development company that owns a 150-acre piece of land in Palmer off the Massachusetts Turnpike. The developing company hopes to build a retail complex whether or not Massachusetts approves commercial gaming.

According to Frank Fitzgerald, the lawyer for Northeast Realty Associates LLC, which owns the land, the company is partnered with a former gambling company executive. The landowners are pursuing the possibility of constructing a hotel and other residences on the land in their attempt to strive for more economic development in the state.

Upon the anticipated legalization of gaming in Massachusetts, Mohegan Sun has already agreed to aid in planning the project. The tribe would have to apply for a license to operate a casino on the land, but is confident that if the deal does follow through, the Palmer location would not compete with the Mohegan Sun in Uncasville, Conn., which is less than 100 miles away from Palmer.

"As everybody else, we're keeping our eye on what is happening. There are a million possible scenarios. Clearly, we're very familiar with the Northeast and this market and what people here like," said Mitchell Etess, the chief executive officer of the Mohegan Tribal Gaming Authority. "We're always looking at various ways to diversify our operations."

The casino would be subject to state and local taxes because it would not be located on sovereign tribal land, and therefore be treated the same as other commercial businesses. The developers do not want to force the project upon the town and have been meeting with local town officials in order to get an understanding of what type of development will be possible in the town.

John Czaja, a Palmer resident, feels strongly that a casino would be a great addition to the town and would help local businesses by bringing more traffic through the town.

"The closing of major businesses in Palmer such as Tambrands and Diamond National resulted in a huge deficit in revenue in Palmer," said Czaja. "The casino would also be a great help for the tax revenue problem Palmer is facing. The tax base would help pay for local education and other town needs that need to be tended to. It would be like a booster shot to the economy of Palmer."

The legislation in the works with Governor Patrick would legalize gambling activity and outline three specific areas of Massachusetts where casinos could be built. According to Governor Patrick, the three casinos would produce $2 billion in economic activity and over 20,000 jobs.

University of Massachusetts professor Dr. Chris Roberts has taught a casino management course within the Hospitality and Tourism Department. He is in full support of developing casinos in Massachusetts.

According to Roberts, about 32 percent of the business at Foxwoods and Mohegan Sun comes from Massachusetts residents, and keeping that money in the state would generate a lot of business and tax benefits for citizens. In addition, the state could construct a tax scheme that would be reasonable to both the casinos and the state.

"For instance, in Connecticut the casinos have to pay the state 25 percent of slots revenue and typically the amounts from each casino run in the $50-60 million per month range, which means that the state receives over $100 million a month from the casinos," Robert said.

According to Roberts, this revenue is part of the reason the University of Connecticut has been able to refurbish the campus facilities. Connecticut legislature has given the University a $1 billion infrastructure grant spread out over 10 years for improvements, which was made possible in large part due to casino revenue.

"And again, if 32 percent of that money is being created by Massachusetts residents who gamble there, I'd like to see that money stay in our state," says Roberts.

The financial and tax benefits from casinos in Massachusetts would be significant, but Roberts notes that any town or region planning on building such a large casino would have to take into account social and community costs. There will be an increase in use of city services such as roads and street lighting, and more police would need to be hired for traffic and increases in crime.

Roberts feels confident, though, that "once the police, community businesses, courts, etc. all learn how to handle the influx of new visitors, the crime rate will likely settle down and the initial costs of adjustment will be absorbed by the revenues generated by the new business."

UMass sophomore and Palmer resident Jenifer Czaja also agrees that a casino would be beneficial in many ways. She notes that the Palmer school system has been suffering for some time and many extracurricular activities and sports have already been cut from the school from lack of funding.

"I think the casino could be the starting point for new ways in Palmer," she said. "It would attract people from all over surrounding towns as well as other people across the states. It would also be conveniently located right off the Mass Pike exit in Palmer."

There were concerns that this potential new Mohegan Sun location would not be able to compete with Foxwoods in Connecticut or the Mohegan Sun in Connecticut, but the developers are not worried after seeing how quickly the first Mohegan Sun gained popularity and doubled in size to accommodate more people after only being open for a few years.

"I see nothing but good coming from the possibility of a casino coming to Palmer," said Czaja. "We really need it as a town."

Kristen Healy can be reached at kkhealy@student.umass.edu

If the operators of Mohegan Sun casino in Connecticut have their way, there will be a gambling and entertainment destination in Palmer, Mass., in the near future.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 1

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szagin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Bae
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Manea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenewaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ADAM'S LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE NEWS IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1954 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED THREE TIMES WEEKLY DURING THE COLLEGIAN'S 1994 FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 413-545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

COPY EDITOR
Katie Huston

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

Welcome Back
to your Award Winning Dining Services.

We've been expecting you!

HERE'S WHAT'S COMING UP...
• Visiting College Chef Series
• Chinese New Year Celebration
• Valentine's Chocolate Fondue Special
• Black History Month
• An Evening in Barcelona
• Fresh Blueberry Week
• Restaurant Week
• Taste of UMass
• Student Iron Chef Competition
• Recipes from Home
• American Produce Week

PLUS: All New Spring Menu

www.umass.edu/diningservices

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
RESIDENT
YCMP
FoodManagement's BEST CONCEPTS

THE BIGGEST BACK TO SCHOOL
POSTER SALE

Most Images Only $7, $8 and $9

Science update

Grants, competitions propel UMass research

By Kate Olesin
Collegian Staff

Unsafe communities shown to have impact on residents' physical activity

Elaine Puleo, an associate professor of biostatistics at the University of Massachusetts, co-authored a study concerning neighborhood behavior and physical activity.

Conducted in the Boston area, it found that residents, especially women, who live in low-income housing in neighborhoods considered unsafe at night are less physically active than those who live in safer neighborhoods. It also discovered that feeling unsafe may also diminish confidence in the ability of residents to become physically active.

Puleo's findings were recently published in the Public Library of Science Medicine journal. The study's lead author was Gary G. Bennett and the principal investigator was Karen M. Emmons, both faculty members at the Harvard School of Public Health.

According to the study, physical inactivity remains common among racial and ethnic minorities with low incomes, despite widespread recognition of the benefits of regular exercise.

Perceived neighborhood safety has been suggested as a possible cause of this sedentary behavior since the same groups were also the most likely to rate their neighborhoods as unsafe.

While no association was found between feelings of safety and total physical activity for men at any time or women during the day, women who felt unsafe at night were significantly less active than those who felt safe.

The results of this study will be included in the full analysis of the "Open Doors to Health" program, which is scheduled to be completed in spring of 2008.

Grant helps team probe role of biting biomechanics in human evolution

Chewing your food may seem like a normal, everyday activity that your mother yelled at you for doing with your mouth open, but one UMass professor wants to know more.

The National Science Foundation has awarded $270,000 to mechanical engineering professor Ian Grosse to investigate how the facial skeletons of human ancestors and some primates are adapted to withstand the forces imposed by chewing.

The research team will explore how the diets of our ancestors are related to the biomechanics of eating, shedding light on factors that may have critically influenced early human evolution.

This information will help researchers understand the functional and evolutionary relationships between diet and skull form, says Grosse. It will also generate data relevant to conservation efforts by documenting the relationship between ecology and adaptation in certain primates.

The grant is part of a larger, $2.5 million collaborative research project involving a team of anthropologists, biologists, and anatomists from eight other universities and colleges.

Technology and Business meld together in UMass competition

Prize money totaling $12,500 was awarded to the winning teams of a University of Massachusetts contest on Dec. 6. At least $60,000 in prizes will be awarded on May 8 when the second phase of the Technology Innovation Challenge is judged.

The phase one first prize of $5,000 went to Rentabilities, founded by Alex and Andrew Cook.

"The rental industry is one of the few retail channels that has not gone online," sums up their proposal. "An alarming number of rental companies are still keeping track of their orders on paper."

The People's Choice Award of $2,500, voted on by the audience at the judging, was won by Therapeutic Systems, a concept thought up by mechanical engineering doctoral student Brian Mullen. Mullen's plan aims to develop "novel therapeutic devices that improve mental healthcare and the quality of life for people with mental illness." The concept includes a kind of "portable hug" for people suffering from anxiety disorders and a "sleeping blanket" for people with mental illness.

AHA gives UMass professor grant to develop cell probe

Alejandro P. Heuck, assistant professor of Biochemistry and Molecular Biology, has received a four-year, $308,000 grant from the American Heart Association to develop molecular probes capable of measuring cholesterol levels in the membranes of individual cells.

Based on proteins produced by bacteria, the probes will be useful to evaluate the effect of new drugs designed to reduce cholesterol levels and could potentially be used as a diagnostic tool in humans with atherosclerosis (hardening of the arteries) and Alzheimer's disease.

"Mammals have developed sophisticated and complex mechanisms to maintain cellular cholesterol levels in a narrow range. These control mechanisms are overwhelmed in the late stages of diseases like atherosclerosis, often with severe consequences," said Heuck. "Development of these molecular probes will allow us and others to precisely assess cholesterol levels in cell membranes and to study its regulation when cells are subjected to different stimuli or drug treatments."

Katie Olesin can be reached at kolesin@dailycollegian.com.

Budget allocates more funds for student needs, New Dirt

By Andy Smith
Collegian Staff

In December, the Office of the Chancellor released an overview of the University of Massachusetts' campus budget for fiscal year 2008.

The report highlights economic issues that are affecting the Amherst campus, such as the amount of financial aid students will receive.

An additional $2.6 million is budgeted for financial aid, for a total of about $31 million, to offset the needs of students who may find it difficult to deal with the rising cost of fees, according to the report.

Academic merit aid will increase $625,000 over the next four years to help maintain the academic profile of the Amherst campus while also trying to offset the growing number of out-of-state students at the campus.

However, the amount of state financial aid is expected to stay the same, at about $3.9 million, as it has since the 2003 and 2004 fiscal years.

Athletic scholarship funding will increase by $487,000 in the new fiscal year to mainly assist women's athletics, which are notoriously gifts from outside donors in fiscal year 2008, up only $800,000 million from fiscal year 2007.

Outside funding has historically been a big problem for the Amherst campus, which ranks among the lowest schools in the country when it comes to receiving donations from people outside the campus.

State base support to the Amherst campus has increased by $12.6 million in fiscal year 2008 to $215.8 million, according to the report. Over the past three years, the amount of state funding received by the campus has increased $23.2 million.

This is a dramatic increase from the $48.6 million drop in state funding the campus received in fiscal years 2003 and 2004.

"This renewed state support has allowed the campus to limit its annual fee increases to inflation and to begin replenishing its faculty resources," the report said.

Some of those faculty resources have been a direct result of the Amherst 250 plan, which former chancellor John Lombardi initiated in early 2006.

The goal of the Amherst 250 plan is to add 250 new faculty members over a five-year period. The program is now in its third year.

According to the budget report, the initiative has funded 150 new positions in three years, with 48 coming in the first year and about 30 added in the second year, and is on pace to add 250 faculty members by the end of five years.

However, the plan does cite a concern about office and research space for the new faculty members.

Research spending for the fiscal year 2008 is expected to rise to about $6.5 million, which is almost a $2 million increase from the fiscal year 2005. However, the amount of grants and contracts received by faculty members is expected to rise by about $5 million in 2008, pushing forth the ideal of creating more research opportunities for faculty and post-graduates on campus.

"Instructional approaches and research needs have changed dramatically over the last 20 years and the space which was suitable for previous incumbents is no longer adequate for today's faculty," said the report.

The third year of the Amherst 250 plan is expected to cost $6.4 million. The second year also cost $6.4 million.

Another staple of Lombardi's time as the chancellor of the Amherst campus was his desire to renovate and construct new buildings around campus, which is called "New Dirt."

In a projection of expenditures for the fiscal years 2008 through 2012, $218 million will be spend on construction projects around campus, while $161 million will be used for deferred maintenance and renovations on the campus. Roughly $13 million is expected to be spent in building renovation over this same four-year period.

On Dec. 28, all UMass students and parents were sent an e-mail providing them with a hyperlink to view the projections for the 2008 fiscal year.

Andy Smith can be reached at ajsmith@student.umass.edu.

Chancellor profile created

SEARCH COMMITTEE from page 1

University.

One of the things the search committee has been working on in recent months is the "campus profile document," which Connolly says is the document shown to potential candidates who want to know the background and status of the University.

The profile includes an assessment of the assets of the University, as well as a long list of ideal traits and probable challenges for any incoming chancellor.

"The University is touting its financial standings by including "a healthy financial platform" and "an ambitious capital plan" as both the first and second assets of UMass.

The list also includes "exceptional students," "an active and committed faculty," "high caliber staff" and a "Division I athletic program."

Featured on both the list of assets and challenges, the search committee has given potential candidates the task of maintaining the University's standing as a high level research institution.

The profile states that the new chancellor must "rebuild the intellectual and physical infrastructure," noting that "15 years ago the University had over 1,200 tenure-track faculty, those who conducted research as well as taught."

This number has since dropped below the 1,000 mark. Members of the committee have challenged candidates with the explicit task of "expanding strategic research."

"A truly excellent public university should have a leader of the highest caliber at its flagship campus. We are committed to a national search that identifies chancellor candidates who will bring outstanding vision and leadership to the campus," said former UMass Board of Trustees chairman Stephen P. Tocco.

"Massachusetts is a national leader in innovation and in higher education and it draws talented students and researchers from across the nation and the globe," he said. "We will draw high-caliber candidates from all corners for the chancellor position at UMass Amherst."

A full copy of the profile is available at the search committee Web site at www.massachusetts.edu/amherstsearch/index.html.

The committee is currently finding candidates who meet "all of the above," or close to it, on their list. Connolly said it is against search committee policy to name those being considered and state law protects the privacy interests of the possible candidates, but the goal is to have the pool narrowed to around three by spring. At that time the candidates will be made public.

Ideally, the committee will have a new chancellor by summer to be on the job for the next academic year.

"This is an exciting time for the University of Massachusetts – research expenditures, the endowment and enrollment are on the rise and state leaders continue to support University initiatives," said UMass president Jack M. Wilson. "UMass Amherst is the flagship campus of a world-class, top-tier university and the next chancellor will be poised to lead the Amherst campus during a pivotal time for the campus, the University and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts."

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@student.umass.edu.

ATTENTION STUDENTS:
Come see what you've been missing out on!
ATKINS FARMS
Country Market
While grabbing your weekly groceries, stop by our...
• Sushi Bar
• Deli Bar
• Extensive Salad Bar
• Bakery
• Full Service Florist
COME CHECK OUT OUR SPECIALTY FALL PRODUCTS...
Homemade Caramel Apples
Apple Cider
Homemade Fudge
Cider Donuts
ALSO AVAILABLE:
Take - Out Food
Student Care Packages
Corner of Route 116 & Bay Road
South Amherst, MA 01002
(413) 253-9528 * WWW.ATKINSFARMS.COM
JUST A SHORT DRIVE FROM UMASS

How to Save a Lot of Money on Textbooks...
bigWords.com
As every student knows, the cost of textbooks is outrageous. We're spending hundreds or thousands of dollars on books that are only worth pennies at the end of the term.
BIGWORDS.com, a leading textbook price comparison site, saves students tons of hard-earned cash - about $132 on average orders (2 or more items, including shipping).
Instead of selling textbooks, BIGWORDS.com searches all the best online textbook stores at once, and calculates the cheapest total for your entire textbook order, including coupons, promotions, and shipping. They developed a technology called Multi-Item Price Optimization™ which calculates the lowest total cost.
BIGWORDS.com is 15%-60% cheaper than any store that sells books on average, because no one store can be cheapest every time... BIGWORDS.com can because it searches all stores at once to find the cheapest prices.
BIGWORDS.com is a student's dream site for textbook savings.

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
Serving others since 1969 -- and STILL making a difference!
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Spring Semester 2008 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Room 101 • Feb. 4 (Mon) • Feb. 5 (Tues) • Feb. 6 (Wed)
*Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Feb. 7th @ Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

Manning named chairman

By Ben Williams
Collegian Staff

After a long battle by Governor Deval Patrick, his choice for chairman of the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees, Robert Manning, has been unanimously voted to that position.

Manning, the previous vice chair, was voted the new chairman of the board, which oversees the entire University system, at a December meeting, according to the Boston Globe.

Manning is a UMass Lowell Alumni and the CEO of MFS Investment Management, a major investment firm in Boston that handles more than $204 billion in assets, according to the South Coast Today.

Manning told the media that he was "deeply honored" to lead the board and would work to make UMass one of the world's pre-eminent public universities.

According to the Globe, Manning said the system's priorities include investing in physical improvements on all campuses, working to get the legislature to approve a bond bill for construction, greatly boosting the size of the university system's endowment, and connecting to more alumni.

The endowment of roughly $350 million is too small and should be closer to $1 billion or more, he said.

One of the 19 unanimous votes came from former chairman Stephen Tocco, who stepped down in the face of Patrick's assertion that he had enough votes to forcibly remove the chairman. Patrick had tried previously to remove Tocco, but until December did not have a majority of votes.

Tocco and Manning are both Romney appointees, but part of the reason for the change may be that Tocco has been seen as a political operative, according to the Globe.

"I'm pretty much out of the whole political loop in this state. I've been running my company. I'm not a Deval Patrick guy. I'm not a Mitt Romney guy. I'm a UMass guy," Manning said.

Tocco said he doesn't understand why the governor wanted to oust him but said, "The anxiety and distraction over who was going to be chair was too big a distraction at a time when I wanted people to focus on the big issues."

He said that he intends to serve out the remaining 3 1/2 years of his term on the board.

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@student.umass.edu.

Gargano leaves behind legacy

DUNK RESIGNS from page 1

sity panel, dubbed "How to Live and Learn in a Diverse Community," was formed in its wake, Gargano fell under criticism from students and faculty for inconclusive decisions about the punishment of SGA members involved in the scandal.

Gargano maintained, however, that he strongly encouraged those implicated to resign, but did not have the administrative authority to force them to do so.

He was also criticized that fall after e-mails surfaced implicating Gargano in an exchange between the former vice chancellor and former SGA speaker Patrick Higgins. In these e-mails, Gargano suggested the development of a strategy for dealing with Gladys Franco, a graduate student who had taken over control of the Office of ALANA Affairs. She was appointed by director Nelson Acosta, who had fallen ill after being diagnosed with cancer.

Detractors accused Gargano and Higgins of attempting to dismantle the ALANA Caucus and of operating behind the backs of Franco and other SGA members.

After the airing of a 2005 ABC News Primetime report that named UMass as the nation's most violent large university, Gargano and other members of the administration announced sweeping changes to the public safety policy, resulting in an increased police presence on campus. One of the SGA's major demands during last semester's student strike was a reversal of many of these policies, which strike organizers criticized as an infringement on the privacy rights of students.

After Lombardi left UMass last summer, in the wake of an administrative restructuring sanctioned by University system president Jack Wilson, Gargano became the figurehead for student frustrations with University policy. During various rallies for the campus-wide student strike, a papier-mâché effigy of the former vice chancellor – donning devil horns and clutching a fistful of money in one hand and a stick that said "Control" in the other – was paraded around by student protestors.

Gargano and other administrators were criticized for a refusal to meet openly with organizers of the strike and members of the SGA.

SAUL committee member Merrick said, however, that the SGA has the opportunity to appoint members to the committee, which meets monthly and has addressed campus issues such as the strike, but that due to annual turnover, representatives are not often sent.

"It's not about confrontation, it's about cooperation, and I think that's what a lot of students who are heading up the student government and the Graduate Student Senate tend to forget," said Merrick.

Papier-mâché effigies aside, Gargano was not unilaterally opposed as an administrator on campus. Phil Benevides, president of the Pi Kappa Phi fraternity, described Gargano as a "strong supporter of Greek life."

"He was committed to improving the University through the Greek system, which is something most administrators don't do," said Benevides. "[Pi Kappa Phi] really appreciated his support, and we're sad to see him go; he was definitely doing everything he could to improve the Greek system and to improve the University."

Other faculty and student community members, however, found Gargano to be an uncooperative and uncommitted administrator.

Professor of anthropology Art Keene, who worked with Gargano in developing the EPOCH program, sees the former vice chancellor's departure as "a real opportunity for the campus to bring in a vice chancellor of student affairs who will be interested in enhancing the educational experience of students, and who will be interested in working with both the student body and the faculty," which he said "hasn't been the case for several years."

Amanda Baldi, president of UMass Spring Recess: Gulf Coast 2008, said Gargano never fulfilled financial commitments he made to the registered student organization, which combines academic projects with community development in the Gulf Coast.

"Before he left, he told us he'd arrange for funding for Peter Pan buses for the trip, but he never followed through with Peter Pan," said Baldi. "He kind of left us hanging."

Baldi went on to say that his resignation took her by surprise, and that her organization will be pursuing the matter with interim vice chancellor Terry early this semester.

Gargano, who was recently passed over for the vacant presidency of Westfield State College, will begin the newly created vice president position at LSU on Feb. 1.

In an e-mailed statement to The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, the SGA said, "Our greatest sympathies go to the students at Louisiana State University," referring to his resistance to demands of the student strike, including student privacy and diversity issues.

Katie Huston contributed reporting to this article. S.P.Sullivan can be reached at spsulliv@dailycollegian.com.

Friends recall caring, generous character in UMass senior

STUDENT DEATH from page 1

Jennifer Morganson, a UMass senior, passed away suddenly over winter break.

thought you were best friends."

Gregory Kleciak, another close friend, described Jennifer as "kind of like Mother Teresa meets Heidi Klum; she's beautiful and loved to help people."

Aside from being a ray of light to her friends, Benedict remembers Jennifer as always ready for a challenge, never letting things come easily to her.

As a challenge to herself and a way to help those in need, Jennifer went with Medical Ministry International to the Dominican Republic to help provide support to impoverished women and children.

"Her main goal was to give back to people… someday she was going to change the world," Kara Polesky said.

Polesky, who was one of Jennifer's roommates, described her as hardworking, a girl who brought life and enthusiasm to everything she did.

While Jennifer loved to be with her friends, she didn't earn the nickname "Loose Goose" for nothing: she loved working too.

"She was an energetic, fun, enthusiastic person to work with… she was probably one of the best people that worked here," said Brittany LeBlanc, a weekend supervisor at The Loose Goose Café in Amherst.

Jennifer transferred from Ithaca College to UMass after her freshman year and, to her friends, became a part of the school.

"She loved UMass… It's like she was always here," Polesky said. "She studied so hard… thinking of going back to school without her is devastating."

What started out as a headache after leaving the gym turned into a brain aneurysm. Jennifer was airlifted out of Amherst to UMass Medical, where she passed away, Polesky said.

It was only after Jennifer passed that she was able to give her final gift away – her organs.

To date, five people have received her organs, and several more will be transplanted, Polesky said. "She's continuing to give after leaving us."

And while because of organ donations she will continue to live through the lives of others, her friends still miss her dearly.

"I'll miss so many things," Polesky said. "[Mostly] seeing the happiness she brought to everyone's life."

"She's probably the friendliest person I've ever met. [she] will be missed," Kleciak said.

"Everyone has their own story and there's not one story to describe Jen… She lived life to the fullest [and] touched so many people's lives. She was such an amazing person," LeBlanc said.

To help Jennifer's memory live on, Benedict said he and the rest of her friends plan on getting together each year to volunteer their time at a charity.

"We could donate all the money in the world, but Jen would want us to help people," he said.

Dave Humphreys can be reached at dhumphre@student.umass.edu

Multimedia Online

NOW LEASING FOR SUMMER/FALL '08
We make coming home the best part of your day!
SUGARLOAF ESTATES
265 River Road, Sunderland
665-3856
www.sugarloafestates.com
Aspen Chase
Alpine Commons
APARTMENT HOMES
100 Bartlett Acres Road, Hadley, Amherst
256-0741
www.greystargroup.com
www.aspenchase.com
• Deluxe 2 bedroom apartment homes
• FREE Cable & High Speed Internet
• FREE Heat & Hot Water
• Basketball, Volleyball & Refreshing Pool *
• Washer/Dryers in selected styles
• Pet Friendly Community
• On-Site Storage Facilities*
• Free On-Site parking
• Minutes from UMASS on FREE Bus line
• Fitness Center*
• Spacious 1, 2, 3 & 4 bedroom apartment homes
• ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED
• Patio or Balcony in selected styles
• On-Site Laundry Facilities
• Pet Friendly Community
• Off Street Parking
• On the PVTA Bus line
• Minutes from UMASS & the Center of Amherst
• Washer/Dryers in selected styles
*Available to all the residents of our beautiful communities

AFRICAN BEADED ART
POWER AND ADORNMENT
On View February 1~June 15, 2008
Friday, February 1 5:30 pm
Lecture by John Pemberton III, Guest Curator, Professor Emeritus, Amherst College and Curatorial Consultant for African Art, SCMA
Stoddard Hall*
Route 9/Elm Street
across from Museum of Art
Free and open to all
Limited seating
*NOTE Change of venue
ART BENTON FOUNDATION LUCERNE
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP

Welcome Back
to your Award Winning Dining Services.
We treat you right!
JANUARY sunday 27 FREE bottled water
JANUARY monday 28 Coffee Cake special
JANUARY tuesday 29 Strawberry Pistachio muffin
VISITING COLLEGE CHEF SERIES:
JANUARY wednesday 30
• Notre Dame at Berkshire DC
• Get your Bluewall coupon
JANUARY thursday 31 Frost Your Own Cookie
FEBRUARY friday 1 Pot de Crème au Chocolat
FEBRUARY saturday 2 Fruit Strip
www.umass.edu/diningservices
DINING SERVICES UMass Amherst
RESIDENT YCMP
Food Management's BEST CONCEPTS

War resonates with students

UMass community doubtful of presidential hopefuls' stances

BY KATRINA CESSNA
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In the context of highly publicized presidential campaigns and with elections less than a year away, many University of Massachusetts students are increasingly critical of the Bush administration's War on Terror.

In October 2001, when U.S. and NATO allies began air strikes targeting al-Qaeda and the Taliban in Afghanistan, many students lived in a time of teenage indifference, when concern for military operations abroad was eclipsed by the more vivid memories of the tumbling towers on Sept. 11.

This is true for Michelle Dunleavy, 21, of Queens, N.Y. A junior at UMass, Dunleavy explained that when the war started, she wasn't up to speed on subsequent political developments.

"It was a very scary time, but I guess I never really took it upon myself to be informed of what was going on," she said.

Other students held strong opinions from the start, such as Rebecca Anderson, 21, a senior majoring in dance. Though Anderson, like Dunleavy, recalled "not understanding the situation completely," she also explained that she had misgivings from the start.

"I was all for it. But at the time, as a senior in high school, I never thought it was something I would do." - Matthew Lemieux

"I felt there was a lot of missing information that the American public wasn't aware of, and it happened way too quickly," she said.

Some students supported the war from the start, like junior Matthew Lemieux, 24, who served in Afghanistan from January 2005 to February 2006 with the U.S. Army as a trainer and advisor to soldiers in the Afghani Reconnaissance Company.

"I was all for it," he said, "but at the time, as a senior in high school, I never thought it was something I would do."

The invasion of Iraq in 2003 took place in an environment of declining support from American citizens, and this trend was also prevalent in student opinions. As high school gave way to college, students like Dunleavy, who had expressed indifference in the war's initial phases, were more likely to be critical of invasion in the Middle East.

"I began to think, 'Why is this still going on?'" Dunleavy recalled. By the time the March 2003 invasion took place, she said, "I definitely wasn't neutral anymore."

Both Anderson and Dunleavy said their distrust in the government grew with increased coverage in the news, and more frequent discussions about the war with family and friends.

"I felt more and more that Bush was doing this for personal reasons, and not for the good of the country," said Anderson.

However, Lemieux, who supported the war in the beginning, also supported the invasion of Iraq. "I felt like it was something that needed to be done," he said.

As the candidates traveling the campaign trail get closer and closer to Election Day, economy concerns are widely perceived to have trumped talk of timelines.

As candidates try to appeal to the broadest possible segments of the American populations, their specific opinions on the war are difficult to come by, but accusations of ineptitude against the current administration have been many and varied.

Many students, however, expressed doubt about the validity or viability of politicians' promises to immediately withdraw troops.

Anderson expressed optimism about candidates' intentions. "I don't think talk of pull-out is campaign blabber. I know they're saying it because that's what the majority of the people want," she said.

She was less optimistic, however, that troop reductions would be as swift as some candidates have promised.

"I do think it will take time; 'immediate' is not the right word," she said. "I don't think we will lose anything by pulling out, but I do think we will continue to lose if we stay in."

Similarly, Dunleavy believes setting a timeline is both a "necessary and appropriate step" for the incoming candidate to take, but was reluctant to take anything said on the campaign trail too seriously.

"I don't know that the troops will be brought home right away," she said. "Promises from candidates, well, they're not really promises."

Lemieux, on the other hand, strongly opposes timelines.

COURTESY AP.NET

Protests have arisen against the Bush administration since the Iraq War began, and candidates' commitment to bringing troops home may be the decisive factor for some student voters.

COURTESY AP.COM

The War on Terror is in the forefront of many students' minds as the presidential elections approah.

"Setting a date for pull-out like that is not going to do anything but hurt a lot of American soldiers," he said.

Lemieux said that, despite campaign rhetoric, "the War on Terror will continue, regardless of who gets elected, and regardless of what they say to get votes. Candidates aren't stupid. They know they can't just yank everyone out."

"I don't know that the troops will be brought home right away. Promises from candidates, well, they're not really promises." - Michelle Dunleavy

Despite differences in opinion, almost all students interviewed said they would vote, and expressed a shared belief that most students on campus needed to become more informed.

"Students have lost interest because they feel they can't make a difference, or they have tried in the past and nothing is working," said Anderson. "I think they are focusing on the future because at this point that's the only way we can make a difference, by voting for the right leader this time and making and educated decision."

Dunleavy praised the campus, in comparison to Greenfield Community College, from which she is a transfer student, as "just alive with people who are very active in speaking out."

However, she said people "are not necessarily as informed as they should be." She said that students draw their opinions from a variety of media sources, including newspapers, radio and television news.

Lemieux agreed, suggesting students watch C-SPAN.

"To be informed, watch the people who make the issues," he said. "Watching Crossfire or the O'Reilly Factor for an hour doesn't make you an expert."

Katrina Cessna can be reached at kcessna@student.umass.edu.

Financial aid director named

BY HOLLY SEABURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The financial aid director of the University of Massachusetts is retiring after 37 years and a new director has been appointed.

Suzanne E. Peters will succeed Kenneth Burnham, the current financial aid director on the Amherst campus. Peters, the director of student financial assistance at the University of Hartford for the past six years, was appointed by Michael Gargano Jr., vice chancellor for student affairs and campus life.

"The campus has been rewarded for the stewardship Ken Burnham has provided during his long tenure as director of financial aid," said Gargano. "We are fortunate that someone of the caliber and expertise of Suzanne Peters is joining UMass Amherst."

Before serving at Hartford, Peters earned a bachelor's degree in business administration from the University of Connecticut and a master's degree in accounting and taxation from Hartford. She then worked at Hartford for three years as assistant director of admission and student financial assistance, and as financial aid officer and assistant director for scholarships and automated systems at UConn until 2001, when she was she was offered the position of director of student financial assistance at Hartford.

According to Peters, financial aid offices have the same basic functions and follow the same federal guidelines for federal financial aid.

"The missions are also the same – to assist students and parents to make sure they are aware of all the financial aid options available to help meet the student's educational experience," she said, "and then to award and process the aid in a timely fashion so the student can focus their attention on their academics and not on the finance part."

Peters was contacted by a search firm to see if she was interested in the soon-to-be open position at UMass. She then applied for the job, went through a series of interviews, campus visits and received a call from Gargano offering her the position.

"I was thrilled when I received the call," Peters said. "I plan on being at the University for a very long time."

The new financial aid director will be replacing Burnham, who served as both financial aid director and director of career services since 1998. However, Burnham has been working on the Amherst campus since 1970, when he started out as an assistant area director for the Southwest Residential Area, and then took on other director roles, including interim dean of enrollment services for six years, before becoming the financial aid director.

"Ken's leadership and vision for this very important area has led to the implementation of changes in financial aid packaging that have enabled many students to attend and graduate from UMass Amherst," said Gargano. "Ken epitomized our philosophy of Students First."

Peters plans to do similar work, hoping to continue to play a role in fulfilling the mission of the division of student affairs and campus life through the "Students First" philosophy.

"This will be done by ensuring timely information to students regarding what types of financial aid are available and how the financial aid process is completed," she said. "In addition, the campus objective is to keep cost down and reduce as much as possible student debt upon graduation to the best of our abilities."

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury@dailycollegian.com.

Better
It's what we do...

Helping you feel better...

- routine, same-day and urgent medical care
- mental health care
- eye care and optical services
- physical therapy
- acupuncture
- mind/body medicine
- specialty care
- allergy clinic
- full-service pharmacy
- faculty/staff assistance program
- onsite laboratory and radiology services
- and more

Helping you live better...

- health education
- substance abuse prevention programs
- tobacco cessation
- nutrition and eating disorders services
- athletic health services
- travel medicine clinic
- support and therapy groups
- volunteer, outreach and academic opportunities
- online health information, resources
- big discounts on eyewear, pharmacy products and more

Taking better care of you...

- college health specialists
- convenient campus location
- open 24/7 during the semester

University Health Services
577-5000 • www.umass.edu/uhs
UMASS AMHERST

UMASS CAMPUS RECREATION

Paid Officials Needed for Basketball

Basketball – Jan. 29 @ 6 p.m. (Boyden 249) – Returnees only
Jan. 30 @ 7 p.m. (Boyden 249)
Jan. 31 @ 7 p.m. (Totman 153)
Feb. 3 @ 12 p.m. (Totman Gym)
[Please call the office for clinic attendance requirements]

Still Time To Enter: Basketball
More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693
On The Web: http://www.umass.edu/campusrec

Mandatory fees keep rising

RISING FEES from page 1

Thompson. "But the University should aggressivcly lobby with the students, staff and faculty to lobby the state house in order to pressure the Massachusetts government to re-invest in public higher education."

Despite rising costs and a lack of sufficient state support, UMass administrators aim to keep mandatory student fees low, said Robert Connolly, spokesman for the president's office.

For the past few years, administrators have made it their business to keep student charges equivalent or below the inflation rate, he said.

"To date, President [Jack] Wilson has been able to adhere to that goal," Connolly said. "The annual increase in tuition and fees has been at or below the rate of inflation in each of the past four academic years – below inflation in three of those years and equal to inflation one year."

That achievement, he said, puts UMass ahead of its competitors. "We believe that that is a record that no other university, public or private, has been able to surpass, and that very few, if any, have equaled," Connolly said. "We believe that President Wilson, the Chancellors and the Board of Trustees have demonstrated a very deep commitment to affordability."

But the promise to keep fees below or at the inflation rate doesn't sit well with students.

"Maintaining fee hikes at the rate of inflation only perpetuates the current fee structure – it does nothing to alleviate costs that are already prohibitive for many students," said Thompson.

She also pointed out that mandatory student fees have increased more than the inflation rate in the past decade.

"Over the last ten years, the Board of Trustees has increased undergraduate tuition and fees by 39 percent across the UMass system," said Thompson. "Over the past two decades undergraduate fees alone outpaced inflation by 300 percent."

According to the UMass Web site, in 1989-1990, the percentage of students' bills devoted to fees was 49.3 percent, or $1,468, for in-state students per year. This number rose to $7,881 in 2006-2007 for in-state students per year, making up 82.1 percent of students' bills.

These fees don't include tuition, which for in-state undergraduates has remained a static $1,714 per year since 2000.

"What's called tuition on your bill is interesting," said Connolly.

According to Connolly, every cent from what's called tuition on a bursar bill goes directly to the state. Tuition for in-state students was less in 1989-1990 at $1,512 per year, but rose to $2,004 in 1997-1998, finally decreasing in 1999-2000 to its current level.

Although administrative goals have checked rising fees within the past few years, UMass leaders blame deep budget cuts at the state level.

"The fact that the state has not been giving any significant capital to the University has been the biggest cause of needing fee increases," said Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance Joyce Hatch.

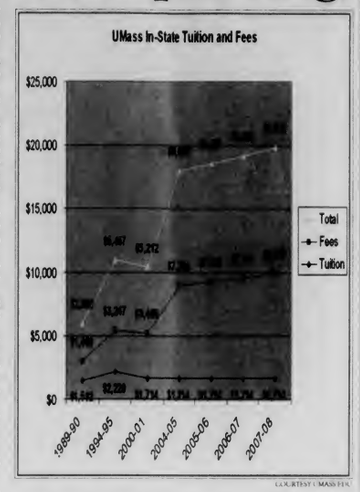
For instance, funding for the new heating plant behind the Mullins Center came solely from university revenues.

"Ideally, a lot of this capital is pretty basic and should be funded from the state," Hatch said. [Patrick's plan] should go a long way to avoid big increases in the future."

UMass administrators agree that Gov. Deval Patrick's capital investment plan, where the governor has proposed to appropriate funds to UMass, will help curb fee increases.

"If we are able to get the capital money that [Gov. Patrick] has proposed and if [the state] could fund the annual amount, that would really be a big help," said Hatch.

According to the Web site for the executive office for Administration and Finance, UMass Amherst will receive $1.4 million over the next five years for critical elevator repairs, $1.9 million for wall panel joint repairs in the Lederle Graduate Research Center, $7.424 million for improvements in the W.E.B. Du Bois Library and $300,000 for a National Science Foundation matching grant for weather sensor equipment.



But administrators and students emphasized that continued state support is needed to make lasting changes.

"We're a state funded university and we're not getting help from the state," said junior Ankit Chandra. "The changes need to occur at the state level."

"President Wilson has asked the governor to be as generous as possible with his new proposal," said Connolly. "Winning support for the one billion dollar capital bill is at least, in an indirect fashion, a way of controlling costs for students and their families... It's great to have capital projects, but every dollar that goes to a construction project is a dollar that can't go to scholarships, et cetera."

The strike started an open dialogue between a select student group and UMass leaders, who feel that making students more involved and knowledgeable about the process is a good thing.

"We've had some good meetings and we've explained the history [of student charges]," said Hatch. "It's a good precedent to go forward with, not just this year, and to have student government leaders understand what's going on in the budget. Continuing to communicate is important."

COURTESY UMASS.EDU

Fees make up a large portion of UMass students' bill, while in-state tuition has not fluctuated since 2000.

Of the many fees that appear on students' bursar bills, the curriculum fee is the largest.

For the 2007-2008 academic year, in-state students paid $3,063.50 per semester, an increase from $2,839.50 per semester in 2006-2007 and $2,699.00 in 2005-2006.

Out-of-state students are hit even harder: with $5,281 in total fees for the 2007-2008 academic year.

"This fee helps to offset permanent reductions in state funding and contributes to the educational mission of the campus, allowing it to remain a comprehensive university offering a wide variety of programs at the graduate and undergraduate level," states the Office of the Bursar Web site.

What is also included in the curriculum fee is support for University projects, according to Hatch.

The service fee, which charged students $669.50 per semester this year, covers reduced price tickets, athletics and all bond issue debt service obligations of the UMass Building Authority.

There's also an entrance fee that is charged once upon admission to the University, a student activities fee, a senior fee, a telecommunications fee, a student health fee and the Chickering Group insurance plan, which can be waived.

Graduate students have an off-campus fee, continuation fee, commencement fee, service fee, career services fee and a graduate student senate fee.

The UMass Board of Trustees recently accepted the proposal from President Wilson for tuition, student charges and room and board for fiscal year 2008 for the Amherst, Dartmouth, Lowell and Boston campuses. The charges will be set once the Board meets again in March.

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin@dailycollegian.com.

Outreach programs only limited to one about race."

DIVERSITY from page 1

However, some students feel differently about the definition of diversity. Vice president of the UMass Republican club Greg Collins said that it's about more than just different races; diversity is "a manifestation of people pursuing faiths, academic interests and hobbies – aspects of diversity that are not confined to genetic makeup."

Unlike Thompson, Collins believes UMass is very diverse. "There is already a large amount of diversity at UMass if you take into account the many majors, religious faiths, cultural clubs and student organizations in general [that are] present on campus," he said.

The strike held on campus on Nov. 15 and 16 by the Graduate Student Senate and the Student Government Association called for funding and accountability for diversity. Strike leaders also called for the administration to recruit more minority students from low-income communities such as Springfield and Worcester.

The administration is set to issue a final report by Feb. 22 that will negotiate with the strike leaders' demands.

In opposition to the student strike, the Republican club hosted an anti-strike rally on campus in which Collins addressed diversity. In his speech, he asserts that UMass is already diverse in regards to aspects other than skin color or money.

"If the concern of the SGA and the GSS is to enhance access to this University to low-income students, then their proposals to do so would only increase students' fees by having UMass increase funding to poor areas," he said. "The protesters cannot have it both ways – they cannot ask for the administration to pour more money into outreach programs and graduate students' fees without taking more money from us undergrads."

Thompson disagrees. She said that there is a lack of fully-funded recruitment and retention programs for underrepresented students.

"African Latino/a Asian Native American (ALANA) support programs used to have their own recruitment efforts, but since 2001, the budgets for UMass ALANA support programs have been cut by over 50 percent from $325,000 in 2001 to $126,000 in 2004 and more since then," she said.

Thompson also notes that the only outreach initiative programs that UMass currently has is Student Bridges, which is funded by the SGA. The mission of Student Bridges is to "build reciprocal relationships between UMass students and local communities in order to enrich the Amherst campus and to increase access to higher education for underrepresented students."

"If we want UMass to be diverse we need to pressure the University to do so," said Thompson. "We need for the University to value retention programs for ALANA students by putting funding and resourcing in these programs."

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury@dailycollegian.com

Students rally for the University's committment to diversity during the general student strike last semester.

UMass students concerned about on-campus space to control space in places like the Student Union," Napolitano said.

STUDENT SPACE from page 1

Meredith Schmidt, the director of the Campus Center building, says they have no need to be concerned.

"We've always included students in everything we've done here," she said.

Schmidt oversees the Campus Center complex, which contains student businesses like the Earthfoods Cafe, as well as frequent events, conferences and socials.

"We do want them to have a say in what goes on in the Campus Center and the Student Union," said Schmidt. "It's really up to the administration."

The recent integration of the Marriott Center for Hospitality Management on the top floor of the Campus Center was one of the reasons for the student space control grievance.

Completed in 2007, the facility was part of a campus endeavor to help UMass become a stronger educational competitor.

"The Marriott Program took over the top floor of the Campus Center, and now students can only access that area on weekends," Napolitano said about the Campus Center project.

Another point of contention between students and the administration is the specific set of allowances and responsibilities each side has over public student space.

"Students may not know the rules and responsibilities that exist between the students and the facility," Schmidt said.

Although there are concerns about the way student space is managed, some are not sure about the reasoning.

"There's nothing wrong with freshmen housing," said freshman Marty Velazquez. "I think it's awesome how when you meet new people, everyone's on the same page."

"They should definitely consult the student body, because we're the ones living here," Velazquez added when asked about the rights of students. "We're paying the money."

A final report from the administration outlining their concessions is scheduled to be released on Feb. 22. It will contain the prospective changes in the student space policy.

Devon Courtney can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu.

STSTRAVEL.COM
Spring Break Sale!
SPRING BREAK 2008
Cancun, Acapulco & Jamaica up to $500 off per room!
Bahamas, South Padre and Florida also available.
Limited Time Offer!
STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

Visit our new blog at dailycollegian.blogspot.com

Lincoln Real Estate
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
PROVIDING THE BEST OFF CAMPUS LIVING EXPERIENCE
24 HOUR MAINTENANCE
SAFE APARTMENTS
FRIENDLY STAFF
TWO GREAT LOCATIONS:
AMHERST CENTER AND HOBART LANE
WE START SHOWING APARTMENTS
FEB. 6TH FROM 11:30AM – 4:30PM M-F

ARE YOU READY FOR A REAL BAR?
THE HARP
413-548-6900
163 Sunderland Rd
N. Amherst
Voted best bar East of the River
Three years running!
Trivia Tuesdays • Live Irish music Fridays
Hot bartenders, Cold beer, What more do you want?
The Harp
Meadow Street
Pine Street
Hobart Lane
Pufton
IGRT
Check it out!
Free "Wicked Pissa"
Super Bowl Buffet
+
8 foot LCD TV
Just North of campus
Short walk from Pufton, Townhouse, Hobart, or bus.
3 Minute drive from the center of campus
"Come Party Like You're Irish!"
www.theharp.net

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

SPRING BACK TO SCHOOL 2008

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Goodbye, Gargano

On Jan. 24, the University of Massachusetts announced the resignation of Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life Michael Gargano; he is to be replaced by Associate Chancellor Esther Terry on an interim basis. The response from students and University faculty has ranged the gamut from apathy to elation.

Regardless of one's personal opinion of the former vice chancellor, all can agree that throughout his tenure, whether he deserved it or not, Gargano served as the poster child for everything people didn't like at our university.

During the various rallies for the campus-wide student strike, there were no papier-mâché Jack Wilsons or Stephen Toccos. There was, however, a demonic effigy of Mike Gargano – horns and all. When things go wrong, people need a name and a face, not an office and an acronym, to blame, and Gargano – perhaps deservedly, perhaps not – often found himself playing the role of whipping boy.

In the wake of Chancellor John Lombardi's departure, Gargano also became the premier villain in the SGA and ALANA Caucus' effort to increase diversity funding. Gargano's record on diversity issues at UMass over the years can't exactly be described as sterling.

After the now-notorious "KKK-9" scandal in 2004, when members of the SGA were photographed drinking in their office in front of a caricature of a Klansman, Gargano drew criticism for his administrative ambivalence in handling the situation.

His detractors also accused him of attempting to dismantle the ALANA caucus that same year, prompted by the scandalous discovery of e-mails exchanged between the former vice chancellor and members of the SGA.

Likewise, he caused a collective cringe on campus with his now notorious statement, "We need more Abercrombie and Fitch and less Old Navy," jokingly referring to the desire of University administrators to turn UMass into a prestigious research facility that would attract a more affluent student body.

It was this very sort of behavior that prompted the Student Government Association to give him a vote of "no confidence" in 2004.

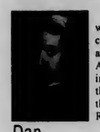
Michael Gargano perhaps didn't do the best job making friends on campus in recent history, either.

One of the major demands of the student strike stemmed from resistance to his policies involving police presence on campus. Prompted by the 2005 ABC News Primetime report that named UMass as the nation's most violent large university, Gargano's policy changes – touted as improvements in public safety conditions – allowed police larger access to what was traditionally considered (and is legally construed as) private student space.

This issue, coupled with his poor record on diversity issues, made Gargano the figurehead for everything student protestors were angry about during last semester's strike; hence, the demonic papier-mâché Gargano.

No single administrator can be blamed with everything wrong within such a large university. But in an atmosphere where students have shown publicly that they are not happy with the actions of their administration, the vice chancellor for student affairs ought to be someone of whom most students approve. Michael Gargano never fit that description.

Little is known about what specifically caused his sudden departure, and it certainly isn't mired with the same sort of bad blood as the departure of Chancellor John Lombardi, whom Gargano is following to Louisiana State University. We're hoping interim vice chancellor Terry will be a little more receptive to student input, and will take diversity and student privacy issues seriously.



For her sake, at least.

Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian editorial board.

To help fund renovations to the Student Union over winter break, the University rented certain residence halls to the United States government for "administrative purposes."

Money matters in '08

Dan Nicastro

For the first time in a long while, Democrats and Republicans can agree on something: We're all terrified about the economy. According to exit polling during the New Hampshire primary, the economy was the top issue that drove voters – Democrat and Republican – to the polls.

Whether real or imagined, the rising cost of oil, the dramatic decline of the dollar and the constant repetition of the phrase "subprime mortgage crisis" have led to a populace which believes we are heading towards a deep economic downslide. We are definitely headed into an economic recession, but most pundits agree it will not be nearly as bad as even the recent recession of the early 1990s. So why does it feel like we're about to crash and burn?

For the sake of disclosure, I need to admit that I don't know a lot about how the economy works. I listen to Marketplace on NPR every once in awhile, I have a vague understanding of economic theory and I am really good at rattling off economic buzzwords. For all intents and purposes, however, I don't have much of a clue about what's going on.

The polling numbers from New Hampshire prove that I'm not the only one worried about the economy.

To provide an example, I was pretty sure we had been in an economic decline for the last six years. Instead, I heard from Wall Street Journal Senior Economic Writer Stephen Moore that "we're in the sixth year of an economic expansion." In fact, "we've had very steady job growth ... [and] very low unemployment."

I may have thought wrong about the last six years, but I can't be totally off base with my economic fears. The polling numbers from New Hampshire prove that I'm not the only one worried about the economy, despite six years of growth, begging the question: why are we so terrified?

Financial columnist Daniel Gross sums it up quite nicely. America may have had six years of economic growth, but those six years also passed by "without a noticeable increase in median incomes or without an increase in the percentage of people who have health insurance."

For all this economic growth and steady increase in jobs, Americans are living at roughly the same levels they did six years ago. Meanwhile, the very small minority of Americans who were very "financially secure" profited greatly in the last six years.

Everyone grumbles about the economy, but how many people actually realize how bad things are? Think about the federal minimum wage. When I was in sixth grade, I remember a poster in the cafeteria of my middle school that listed the federal minimum wage as $5.15. In the summer of my senior year of college, 10 years later, the federal minimum wage was still $5.15. Even after the July 2007 increase, the federal minimum wage is still only a meager $5.85.

As I said, I may not know much about the economy, but this doesn't add up. Despite the rampant economic growth of the '90s, significant rises in cost of living and the effects of inflation, minimum wage is still only $5.85. Working 40 hours a week at the current minimum wage gives you $234 a week – before taxes. Even when the federal minimum wage increases to $7.25 in July of 2009, a 40-hour work week would still only yield $290 gross. That's roughly $15,000 a year. Imagine trying to feed a family on $15,000 a year. Better yet, imagine trying to take care of only yourself for $15,000 a year. If that seems like it would be plenty of money, just wait until you move off campus.

Concerns about the economy may have made the top of the list of voter concerns in New Hampshire, but that's only after years of abuse to the lower and middle classes of wage earners. Things have gotten so bad that a large number of senior citizens are actually applying for reverse mortgages, loans which release home equity (the difference between the value of a home and the unpaid balance of a mortgage) in the form of small cash payments or one large lump sum. Something is very wrong when people feel as if they are in such dire straits that they feel compelled to start converting their home equity, which they spent a lifetime to increase, to liquid assets.

As the election draws closer, voters may be able to compel the candidates to share their feelings about the economy and these economic problems. Even if they do, will anyone listen? John Edwards has been pitching his idea about the "two Americas," running against corporate greed and "sticking up" for the middle class for over four years, yet he finished second in Iowa and third in New Hampshire.

I realize that I'm not the first to address this problem and many have been able to communicate it far more eloquently than I, but that doesn't really matter. We need to start seriously discussing the economic implications of the last 10 years and what needs to happen in the near future to create a more stable middle class which actually has the money needed to live a normal life. Otherwise, we'll be in serious trouble sooner than you might think.

Dan Nicastro is hiding all his money under a mattress in Amherst. He can be reached at dnicastr@student.umass.edu.

Free beach towel's not worth it

Hannah Nelson

Ask the average college student what they think about student loans and there are a wide range of replies to be had. On the whole, it is not likely that the response will be incredibly favorable or flattering for whichever loan service is in question.

You will never here a college student say, "Yes, I would rather take out a loan than apply for a scholarship." It goes against all rationality. So it is a curious thing to hear that students are "selling out" their friends and peers to those same lenders.

Sad as that fact is, the lenders have found an underhanded way to prey on students. Worse yet is that colleges are selling out their students.

As if colleges weren't getting enough money from students.

The Florida-based Student Financial Services (SFS) has been paying students about $50 for the names of their classmates and paid colleges for the use of names and logos.

Services are being forced to stop the practice without monetary penalty, but must adopt a new code of marketing conduct. New York Attorney General Andrew M. Cuomo, who has been investigating this and similar cases, calls the lenders "wolves in sheep's clothing."

In addition, flat sums of $15,000 were paid to some schools to follow up payments by SFS for each student who took out a loan with the company.

As if colleges weren't getting enough money from students, employees from the 63 colleges involved were also brought on golf outings and lunches by SFS in attempt to woo the schools.

So far only 17 of those colleges have ceased business dealings with the company, despite the new code of conduct adopted by SFS as part of the court agreement. Cuomo is attempting to persuade other lenders to also adopt the code.

The code prevents lenders from holding prize competitions for students. It also encourages loan companies to give financial advice about how much to borrow, and even to first suggest students use federal lenders. It also prevents the lenders from using colleges as "brand recognition" as a marketing tactic with the use of logos, colors, and so on.

The athletic programs are particularly guilty of taking advantage of their schools' spirit. The use of team names and mascots has been at the forefront of the marketing scheme. The hits just keep coming.

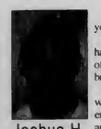
It's not just athletic departments that are acting shady; financial aid offices are also taking part. In April of last year, Student Loan Xpress, owned by CIT group, made headlines for specifically targeting financial aid offices.

Starting back in 2002, Xpress went after aid offices specifically in order to maneuver themselves into a position to be put on recommended lenders lists provided to students. This included activities that are nothing short of bribes.

Financial aid officials and directors were given stock shares in CIT and others were placed as consultants or put on company advisory boards. In one case, CIT even paid for one John Hopkins official to attend graduate school. And at one Pennsylvania college, the dean of financial aid, who was also the director of an outside firm, had $80,000 "donated" to his firm by Xpress.

Congress and the Department of Education have taken an interest in Xpress's business dealings as well as the student loan industry as a whole. Three of the company's top executives were put on a leave of absence in light of the controversy, probably so they could vacation in the sun.

Cuomo's work has led to a subpoena for names of all employees working in the past six years for one lender. A similar subpoena was issued to CIT because of Xpress. He is specifically looking for a trace of stock holders who hold federal, state, or local office after several such incidences.



An argument could be made that the schools in question are only trying to help personalize the loan experience for students. Or that perhaps all parties involved just want the students to have a sense of security with a school-sponsored lender. But that just doesn't sit right with me – not when you look at the generous perks for those involved.

All the corruption is enough to make your head spin in a vicious circle. It seems that the odds are always stacked against students, especially when your own college is in cahoots with the loan sharks whom you had to resort to because said college didn't provide enough financial help.

Why pay a lender to solicit students for loans instead of helping those students yourself, especially when staff are reaping the rewards? The situation is win-win for colleges, and the battle for an affordable education continues.

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu.

Smoking out minimum wagers

Joshua H. Wilder

Walk into any local mini mart and you are bound to see them.

They are large cardboard signs hanging above the counter and in front of the tobacco products. A red box holds bright white letters saying, "We Card."

Most stores also require employees to wear "We Card" buttons and put stickers on the door. Aside from being flashy and hard to miss, these signs actually play a major role when it comes to the sale of tobacco products across America.

Such signs are the brainchild of the Coalition for Responsible Tobacco Retailing, a group that sets out to prevent the sale of tobacco products to any minor.

The Coalition has collected information about retailer experiences by working with thousands nationwide since 1995. It has also worked with many local agencies to provide retail education and training.

The "We Card" program requires any stores selling tobacco products to follow strict guidelines, asking for valid identification from anyone who appears to be under 30 years old. Preventing underage tobacco sales is their number one priority.

For the CRTR, requiring employees to learn about tobacco restrictions and state laws isn't enough. To ensure that stores are following through with their requirements, the group will perform their own compliance checks, or undercover cigarette stings, if you will.

Here is the long and short of it. The group looks near and far to find a minor who appears to be well over 18 years of age. With their best 007 face on, the minor is then instructed to walk into the Kwikee-Mart and buy a pack of smokes. When conducting these compliance checks, they are looking for someone with certain characteristics, such as a full beard or a receding hairline.

The CRTR sends these "undercover agents" into stores hoping that nobody will card them and instead sells the cigarettes without blinking an eye. Once that sale takes place, heads really begin to roll.

The purchaser walks over to a police officer waiting in the parking lot, who then proceeds to walk into the shop, fines and fires the employee and fines the store loftily as well. Finally, somebody is fighting back against Big Tobacco companies and is giving them a taste of their own medicine. Right?

Well, not exactly.

The funny thing about the CRTR and the "We Card" program is that they are both sponsored and funded by the tobacco companies, mainly Phillip Morris.

Now it may seem strange that the same companies who are spearheading the effort to curb youth smoking are the ones producing the cigarettes. But it is actually a brilliant move for them.

By creating this "We Card – We Care" program, Phillip Morris and others are perceived as a concerned third party worried about the dangerous effects that cigarettes have on people. Not only that, but they get to climb up onto a moral high horse and criticize other people for the dangers caused by their own product.

But if grades were given out to public relations campaigns, Phillip Morris would get an A-plus and a big smiley face stamp. Since these companies face no repercussions when they kill citizens daily with tobacco, they have found a way to punish someone else for cigarette's wrath – the low wage worker.

Yes that is right. These multi-million dollar corporations get to use their money and resources to find people who appear to be older than they really are, and use these people to trick, yes, to deceive someone working at Cumberland Farms making minimum wage. Once the sale is done, the worker gets fined $100 and is out of a job. And we are supposed to be proud of it?

What is really accomplished by firing some poor sap making the lowest wages at a dead end job? Will it stop young kids from trying cigarettes? Will it stop older people from smoking? Will it bite into Phillip Morris' profit margins?

What is really accomplished by firing some poor sap making the lowest wages at a dead end job?

The answer to all of the above-mentioned questions is no. Instead it deflects the blame away from the real perpetrators, Big Tobacco, and puts it onto someone who really has no control over how many people smoke.

Talk about an unfair playing field. How can a low wage worker really compete with big-time corporations? It is truly a sad day in America when we can tell ourselves that a system like this accomplishes anything.

Allowing the tobacco companies to control and run the apparatus used to keep their own company in check is like giving your house keys to a crack head and telling him not to steal anything. It is like shouting into the wind.

Now, I by no means advocate for youth smoking, or any person smoking, for that matter. But it is about time that we recognize this program for what it truly is – a fraud that punishes the lowest denominator and gives Big Tobacco a big, green, money-covered pat on the back.

Let's be honest about who this company really punishes: not tobacco companies.

Josh Wilder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jhwilder@student.umass.edu.

Hey, you're a college student; you probably know everything!

Write for Ed/OP - apply today.
editorial@dailycollegian.com

Voting at face value

Ted Rogers

I think I'm pretty close to perfecting the art of procrastination. Whenever I have a major project due, I play a game I invented involving Facebook groups. I pick a friend at random, and then find the most radical-sounding group they belong to. Trust me, it's a little more fun than it sounds. All I need is a good name before I market it.

Surprisingly, some of the more perfervid group names belong to those that have a beef with gender identities. Apparently, Facebook only provides "male" or "female" as gender designations. From what I've seen, this topic can actually get pretty heated. Now, I'm supremely undereducated about this subject, so I really can't say much more.

I'll tell you one thing though; I really like the idea of more choices on Facebook profiles. I'd like to add some more options to the Facebook "Political Views" section too, because I've always thought it was sorely lacking. These could also be really handy with the upcoming primary.

The Single Value Voter: You could check this one if your basis of political thought comes from one issue. It could be the war in Iraq. Maybe it's the environment. Maybe it's stem cell research. In any case, I think that this choice would really clear up the confusion that runs rampant in Facebook politics.

I'd like to add some more options to the Facebook "Political Views" section.

Instead of saying you're conservative, you could make it clear that you vote Republican because of one issue. In other words, if you're willing to drive the economy into recession and destroy the environment in order to keep a couple of dudes from getting hitched, this choice is for you.

The Warped Values Voter: I came up with this choice for two different types of people I have in mind. This group is made for the people who vote Republican because of their staunch opposition to aborting quasi-living bags of cells, yet support the execution of prisoners and the middle-eastern meat grinder we call the war in Iraq.

However, this is also a splendid choice for democrats who base their train of political thought on inconsistencies. This choice is for the people who balk at the execution of murderers, protest the extermination of those who would try to do Americans harm, yet think nothing of killing something that has all the potential of becoming a human being.

Sure, this group does kind of combine two separate sides. On the other hand, I'd argue that they're both on the same coin.

The third option I'd like to see is one for what I think is the most powerful political bloc in America: the Politically Disembrained. This option is perfect for the people who choose candidates on their similarities to Ronald Reagan.

Whether their preference stems from folksy communication skills, supplying weapons to known terrorists, bombing third world nations or kicking clinically insane people out on the streets remains a grey area, though. This choice also goes well for the all-too-stereotypical pseudo-hippies of our generation. I always see at least one group of them campaigning for my favorite Democratic candidate, and I always think about voting straight ticket Republican strictly out of spite.

Finally, I would suggest this option to anyone who would like to return America to a simpler, better time that never actually happened. People always love to talk about the purity and prosperity of the 1950s. They always forget to mention the classism and disgusting civil rights violations, though.

I suppose, however, that all these options could be lumped together. My real beef with all the aforementioned is that they're all ill-informed, or, worse yet, misinformed. More and more, actual politics and sensible thinking count for less when it comes to elections. If things don't start changing soon, presidents will be chosen based on their strong feelings on one social problem and an ability to imitate an overrated dead guy who wasn't always aware of the office he held.

My own opinion is that voting by itself does not necessarily mean that you have completed your civic duty. If you go out and vote, but you vote due to a gut feeling on a candidate rather than any real notion of what they're about, you aren't doing your civic service. You're doing exactly the opposite.

So, before you vote in the primary, think hard, and make sure that you aren't one of the people I listed. Educate yourself about all the issues, not just a few. Listen to what your candidate has to say. Above all, know that your choice is going to affect what happens to everyone for at least the next four years.

Gut feelings, a single issue, or simple likeability aren't going to cut it.

Ted Rogers is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at tvrogers@student.umass.edu

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL

What do you think of the recent resignation of Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life Michael Gargano?

☐ He will be missed. ☐ It's probably for the better. ☐ Vice Chancellor for what now?

Cast your vote online at dailycollegian.com and discuss the issue further on our new Collegian forums!

History repeats itself

A generation of Americans was gutted and the country was divided along sharp lines because of one man's thirst for blood. That monster was former U.S. president Lyndon B. Johnson, who, in his desire to increase American involvement in Vietnam, fabricated two unprovoked attacks on the U.S. Navy in the Gulf of Tonkin, off the Vietnamese coast.

Matthew M. Robare

According to his spin doctors, on Aug. 2, 1964, North Vietnamese torpedo patrol boats fired on the USS Maddox without provocation. Two days later, the Johnson administration claimed that the Maddox was attacked again. Johnson used the incident to convince Congress to pass the Southeast Asia Resolution, increasing American military involvement in Vietnam. It was effectively the genesis of the Vietnam War. 405,399 American lives later, the Nixon administration conceded that War was a failure and U.S. troops left.

In 2005 and 2008 the National Security Agency released declassified documents showing that on Aug. 2 1964 the Maddox fired first and, crucially, the attack on Aug. 4 did not happen. Johnson and his administration had lied to the nation and 400,000 Americans paid the price in blood.

In the future, some ambitious filmmaker will produce "The Tragedy of George W. Bush," which will explore the depths of human bloodlust.

Now, 44 years later, the United States has a new president whose bloodlust equals Johnson's. The regime of President George W. Bush has already lied to the people about Iraq, inventing an imaginary threat posed by a nation that had been used as target practice by American forces since 1991 – a bombing campaign in 1998 called Operation Desert Fox (someone in the Department of Defense must be an Erwin Rommel fan), one in 1996 called Desert Strike and a secret campaign in 2002.

For Iraq, Bush's "Gulf of Tonkin" incident was intelligence about Saddam Hussein's attempts to manufacture nuclear, biological, and chemical weapons. Spotty and uncorroborated intelligence that supported Bush's aim to conquer Iraq was used instead of evidence that contradicted his fantasies. The result was overwhelming evidence that Iraq was poised to launch World War Three.

With the big media outlets like CNN and FOX News functioning as his Ministry of Propaganda, Bush convinced us Americans that Saddam posed a threat, and that he and Osama were old buddies. It was, of course, complete bull.

As the war progressed and the justifications unraveled while the Iraqis resented an armed occupation force and the decisions about their country's future being made by people thousands of miles away, it became evident to the president that the people needed a new enemy – time had shown us that terrorists were not hiding under every bed or behind every street corner and America was looking like a bully as the picture of pre-invasion Iraq became uncluttered by the propaganda – so he settled on that old demon of the seventies: Iran.

In early January, U.S. warships were cruising in international waters in the Straight of Hormuz when Iranian ships (speedboats that could not threaten the American ships unless they were stuffed with explosives, like the boat that attacked the USS Cole in 2000) approached. The boats made some maneuvers, the Iranian commander hailed the American cruiser, and then both went on their way.

The Bush propaganda machine, looking to "Tonkin-Gulf" America into another war, seized on the "incident," claiming that the Iranian ships threatened the American ship, despite the fact that the closest boat to the vessel was unarmed. Moreover the Navy released a video of the maneuvers with a static-y threat that could not have come from the Iranians because of the lack of ambient noise, indicating that the audio did not come from motorboats open to the air and was spliced on to the video. The video does not show the Iranian patrol making any threatening moves, nor does the American ship appear concerned by the patrol in any way, contradicting the propaganda that they were prepared to attack.

In the future, some ambitious filmmaker will produce "The Tragedy of George W. Bush," which will explore the depths of human bloodlust. In particular it will examine, in the light of history and scholarship, Bush's hamartia – the fatal mistake that makes his story tragic – the film will reveal it to be one shared by many people around the world: a lack of moral courage. Bush's tragic flaw is not that he is a villain, but that his villainy comes from the fact that he inhabits an office whose power has grown so great that it is beyond any man to wield it wisely. He has morals, but he lacks the courage to act on the basis of them.

In short, Bush is a coward.

Matthew M. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

Equal opportunity reading

Katherine Marr

Considering that my first word was "book," you might say that I was destined to be a fan of libraries. Indeed, over the years, I have come dangerously close to exceeding the number of items that can be borrowed on my library card at once (which, FYI, lingers around 50).

I mastered the strategic swap of seven-day books from my own library card to my mother's card to my sister's card to my other sister's card, with as many rotations as necessary to finish reading the entire bestseller list.

Librarians have blatantly expressed their relief when I claim my interlibrary loan books because they were occupying the whole reserve shelf. Is it any surprise, then, that I cannot imagine being denied complete access to the public library?

Although maintaining library collections is crucial, is it right that a common preconception overrides judgment on an individual basis?

For some people, though, it is a reality, which was the subject of a class action suit filed with U.S. District Court by Massachusetts' American Civil Liberties Union and its Legal Assistance Corporation.

The plaintiffs were three homeless Worcester residents, who were suing the city's public library. Why? They were unable to acquire complete and full library privileges.

Across the state, libraries maintain individual policies for applying for a library card and borrowing materials, which can fluctuate based on circulation statistics, the current Board of Trustees' vote or, evidently, class action suits.

Worcester's library was chastised for offering only temporary library cards and a two-item maximum to people without permanent addresses. On the other hand, New York City's public library accepts stationery with a homeless shelter's letterhead as proof of address, while the Boston Public Library, which requires proof of address by postmarked mail, bills or a lease, is not as lenient to the homeless.

Libraries' definitions of "homeless" may be broader than you might think. People can be considered "homeless" not only if they are without an address, but also if it is that of a homeless shelter or transitional home.

Seasonal workers, for example, fall into this category: Six Flags employees who flock to Agawam for the summer months cannot enjoy full borrowing privileges at the Springfield Public Library. (Well, that snuffs out my dream of manning the Ferris wheel at Six Flags – infinitely not worth a summer sans a large stack of library books.)

Even college students can be included in the mix, as I discovered recently. After months of never fully understanding the W.E.B. Dubois Library, with its Library of Congress system (I have always been a Dewey decimal girl myself) and about 20 floors too many for aimlessly browsing the shelves for an attractive spine, I went to the Jones Library in Amherst center to apply for a library card.

Much to my surprise, the woman behind the circulation desk was reluctant to give me a card because my driver's license listed my home address, rather than my local dormitory address.

Thankfully, another woman mentioned that she had been accepting UCards as identification, so I received a library card to be used year-round. Yet for some other college students, such as those at Worcester State, their public library privileges expire strictly at the end of the semester.

What sparks this entire issue? The homeless are stereotyped as neglectful at returning the materials that they borrow from the library. Over the years, libraries have cited homeless residents as owing thousands of dollars in fines for overdue and lost materials. Although maintaining library collections is crucial, is it right that a common preconception overrides judgment on an individual basis?

Absolutely anyone can end up with sizable fines, especially young teenagers who, armed with their permanent addresses, can often get a library card without parental consent.

I can easily recall a time or two or 10 in my life when, yes, I most definitely returned that book. I most definitely remembered going to the library that particular day and specifically dropping that book in the returns slot, and therefore refused to pay because I most definitely returned that book.

That was the story that I genuinely stuck to – until the book magically materialized inside the kayak in the basement, or wherever, a week later. Sure, there are millions of us out there who may have the imperative permanent address, but never got the memo about setting aside a special place to store our library books.

Besides, what is inevitably going to happen when people are denied what they firmly believe is a constitutional right? I have some what of an idea, based merely on volunteering at a school library.

When restrictions were imposed on the number of books that children could check out, or an outstanding fine prohibited them from borrowing books at all, they resorted to smuggling books out of the library under their clothes. There goes preserving the collection.

The public library is meant to be available to all people, with everybody having equal opportunity to reap its resources. In fact, Herbert Schiller, a famous American media critic, once said that the public library is the only true democratic institution because it is supported by the community for use by everyone. Is it, though?

Katherine Marr is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kmarr@student.umass.edu

CAUTION: CONVERGENCE JOURNALISM IN PROGRESS

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, in order to survive the slow death of print media, is unveiling its new and improved online edition. Keep checking DailyCollegian.com this semester for new blogs, podcasts, photo slide shows and a brand-spanking-new online forum!

Check out dailycollegian.com today!

In Bhutto's wake, questions arise

C.A. Chase

Everyone has seen that picture of the Afghan girl with the blazing, haunting green eyes, from the cover of National Geographic in 1985. She was a Pashtun girl living in a Pakistani refugee camp, and is currently in Afghanistan, living under the veil, her face prematurely aged by hunger and war.

Though that picture of the girl, Sharbat Gula, perhaps National Geographic's most famous, is to us a picture of Afghanistan, we must turn to pictures of its neighbor Pakistan. An achingly blue sky pressed against dun-colored land and dun-colored poverty. In looking at these pictures of Pakistan's landscape and wilderness, one must not forget the human factor: the Afghan girl's poverty and fierceness would not be out of place here.

Another face that haunts the region of Southeast Asia is that of Benazir Bhutto, the murdered former prime minister of Pakistan. Bhutto was the daughter of Pakistani Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, also assassinated.

Bhutto was killed in a suicide attack as she was campaigning for the role of PM again, front-lining the Pakistan Peoples Party. She was first elected prime minister at 35, in 1988, as the first female leader of an Islamic country. She left power amidst charges of corruption, and came back after negotiating with General Musharraf for an open election. She was running against Nawaz Sharif, and Musharraf was planning to run against her as well, this time in a civilian, rather than military, role.

The Jan. 8 election has been postponed to Feb. 18, and grief and outrage over Bhutto's death shook the streets of Karachi and Islamabad. Musharraf, who staged a coup against her democratically elected successor, claims to have had no involvement in her death. There is some controversy over how she died, over whether she was shot or killed by a bomb.

Bhutto was a founding member of the Council of Women World Leaders. Though she pledged to outlaw Hudood and Zia ordinances, which gave harsh corporal punishment to adultery, sodomy and theft, she was blocked by fundamentalists. A Washington Times editorial had this to say of the Hudood ordinance: "a set of laws passed in 1979 in response to pressure from hardline Islamic political groups that odiously punished rape victims while making it difficult to convict the perpetrators."

So what would Pakistan be like, viewed through the prism of Brideshead Revisited, gin and tonic, "public schools," the Cambridge Five ... the queen mum, Victoriana, the Union Jack and J.K Rowling?

Bhutto's son, Bilawil, has been named her successor by the PPP, which is currently headed by Bhutto's vice president, Makhdoom Amin Fahim. In a press conference, Bilwail, who took his mother's last name, said "My mother always said that democracy is the best revenge." Bhutto's widower, Asif Ali Zaradi, was chosen in her will to be her successor, but with his politically shaky past – he is perennially charged with questions of corruption, along with his wife, and has been jailed several times. Bilawil seems a safer and blander choice – a more malleable choice, perhaps.

In any case, the situation could be framed as selling the Bhutto name, a name that has similar connotations as the Nehru-Gandhi clan, or the Kennedy dynasty. Because (and this is worth mentioning several times more) Bilawil is 19. A criticism of Bhutto's son is that he is not in touch with the country. The oldest of three children, Bilawil was raised primarily in Dubai, where his mother went into self-imposed exile in 1998. Though he was groomed by his mother to go into Pakistani politics, he has spent little time living in Pakistan, which is severely impoverished, especially in relation to Dubai and Great Britain. Bilawil is currently an undergrad at Christ Church, Oxford, where he is studying history.

So when you look from pictures of Afghanistan to pictures of Pakistan to pictures of England, there is a jolt that comes from moving from the subjects of "the Great Game" to the main player of the "the Game itself." This is England, Oxford. Classily gray streets, the mouth of the Thames – where Conrad's "Heart of Darkness" begins. Though going to Oxford does not smack of imperialism, it would give one a different perspective on one's country (albeit a country one really hasn't lived in).

So what would Pakistan be like, viewed through the prism of "Brideshead Revisited," gin and tonic, "public schools," the Cambridge Five, expanding out to fish and chips, Posh and Beckham, the queen mum, Victoriana, the Union Jack and J.K Rowling? Though the UK has a large Southcast Asian immigrant population, they are in the context of a stable, storied, centuries-old parliamentary system. Be that as it may, you rarely hear U.S students studying abroad criticized for analogous reasons.

Beyond that, Bilawil is 19 years old, the equivalent of a freshman or sophomore in college. Could you imagine what would happen if our country was run by someone who watches hours upon hours of mind-numbing sitcoms and romantic comedies, or playing Halo and eating Wings?

How could someone living a somewhat analogous lifestyle (albeit being part of a political dynasty) hope to compete – let alone survive, literally and figuratively – while up against middle-aged politicos, some of whom may be closely linked to religious fundamentalists? Would you really want someone drinking Keystone and listening to Guster running your country? "Insanity reigns supreme" would have to replace "E pluribus unum."

Uneasy lies the head that wears the Bhutto crown.

C.A Chase is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at cachase@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

SPRING BACK TO SCHOOL 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Walt Disney World

Part one of a magical investigation

COURTESY LINDA M. PHERSON

Walt Disney and Mickey Mouse greet patrons in front of Cinderella's Castle in Walt Disney World's Magic Kingdom. Today, guests can experience updates to classic rides and attractions, such as Captain Jack Sparrow gracing the Pirates of the Caribbean ride and Stitch surprising audiences on Alien Invasion.

Mickey's Philharmagic takes the audience on a magic carpet ride through Disney's most famous movie scenes.

BY STEPHANIE MCPHERSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Editor's Note: This article is part one of an ongoing series about Walt Disney World.

No matter how many times you've been to Disney World, the 47-square-mile expanse chock full of thrill rides and character greetings can seem daunting. There's so much to do, from the classics like Small World and Space Mountain to the new E-ticket rides of Mission: Space, Test Track and more. But apart from those attractions, there's a whole other world of street shows, stage shows, stunts shows and fireworks that should not be missed, but aren't as well publicized.

Planning a trip to Disney isn't just about hitting the rides that are going to make you wish you hadn't eaten for a week beforehand. It's about exploring everything the company has worked so hard to make magical, and that's a lot. Like Beth Ramos, a cast member at Disney for the past four years, said, "You never have to give up what it is that made you laugh," and if a trip to Disney is done right, it can take you back to the days when you were dying to hold Snow White's hand and terrified to take your autograph book back from Jafar.

Here is part one of a park-by-park breakdown of must-sees and hidden gems, restaurants and shows that should not be missed, along with tips and tricks to get the most out of the Disney vacation.

Multimedia Online

FAST PASSES AND TIMES GUIDES

The most important thing you will ever learn at a Disney Park (besides the fact that a dream is a wish your heart makes) is how to use a Fast Pass. Included in all park admissions, Fast Passes hold your place in line while you go and do other things. To receive a Fast Pass, you stick your park ticket in the booths outside the ride of your choice. Your ticket will spit back out, along with a piece of paper telling you when to come back to the line. Return between the hours suggested, and you get in the special Fast Pass line, reducing the wait time to a minimum.

It's important to plan which rides you want to Fast Pass when, because only one Pass can be taken out at a time. Here is where those Times Guides come in handy. Each park provides a pamphlet telling where and when different shows will take place, from different street performances in EPCOT to bigger shows, like the Indiana Jones Stunt Show in Hollywood Studios.

So, check out the Chinese acrobats while the rest of those suckers wait in line to go on Soarin'. Then, just shoot up to the front of the line.

MAGIC KINGDOM

Established in 1971, Magic Kingdom was the first park built at Walt Disney World resorts in Florida. Its centerpiece is Cinderella's castle, which has an interior lined with mosaic walls telling the story of Cinderella.

There are seven different themed sections of Magic Kingdom that house rides belonging in that era

See DISNEY on page 14

Sugarloaf ski adventure

BY KATE OLESIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Sugarloaf might sound like a name for a mountain that would ease the mind of any novice skier, but the second-tallest peak in Maine, at 4,237 feet, is definitely a challenge.

The mountain is riddled with 133 trails; the longest is 3.5 miles from the summit to the base. Some lead directly down to the hotel or condo complexes beyond the lodge.

Sugarloaf is a morning resort. If you're looking to sleep in and hit the slopes later, this is not the place to be. Activity starts early, with people putting on their gear around 7:30 a.m. to make the first lift up the mountain at 8:30 a.m. The lifts close for the day at 3:50 p.m., so to get a good amount of downhill action you have to start early.

So, bright and early, I began my novice skiing adventure. And the first thing I did after I rented my short, fat, beginner skis was to take a lesson.

Admitting to the staff members that I've lived down the street from a mountain for the last 21 years and only journeyed down its slopes a few times was difficult for me. But I knew I could live with it. I just had to be able to survive my downhill skiing vacation without receiving a concussion or crashing into a tree.

Knowing the basics of stopping and turning were the skills that I needed to brush up on to live through the day. The 90-minute Perfect Turn class that my sister and I participated in made us feel quite welcome and our instructor sent us off possessing a bit more confidence than when we first started.

And I didn't even fall once.

Weather and powder conditions are the main concerns that any skier has to worry about.

That Saturday morning was a beautiful, sunny day to be out skiing, but the snow was grainy and there were icy patches that formed from the pouring rain that happened the day before.

Considering the conditions, the mountain staff did a great job grooming the trails all weekend. At night if you looked up at the looming mountain, there were lights resembling UFOs on the trails. But most people on the slope were taking it slow, including myself. It just figures – the day we left the mountain a blizzard came through.

But downhill skiing or boarding isn't all that Sugarloaf has to offer. Two words: turbo tubing.

Although it was closed when we tried to go, you can't get much better than tubing down four, 1,000-foot chutes on the side of a mountain.

There's also the "anti-gravity complex" right next to the entrance to the mountain, which offers an indoor skate park, trampolines, an open gym and climbing wall.

About a quarter-mile down the road is the Outdoor Center, which has an Olympic-sized outdoor skating rink and miles of cross-country skiing and snowshoeing trails.

My mother, sister and I braved classic style cross-country skiing, instead of the newer skate style, which has a sturdier boot that allows you to push off, much like ice skating, across the snow. Cross-country skiing is a great workout, especially when you get lost in the woods for a bit.

Taking a skiing vacation is all well and good, but after the lifts close and you see their chairs standing still against the mountain, what happens next?

Food and nightlife, of course.

We visited the Shipyard Brewhaus, complete with bar, fireplace and picnic tables, and their own Shipyard brand microbrews.

The Rack, a local barbeque popular for music right off the resort property, has a variety of its own special barbeque sauces. The aptly named "Sweet Cheeks" has a sweet taste, but still gives the perfect barbeque kick that ribs deserve to be smothered in.

The Steves were the band that graced the stage that night, and amid cheers of "R is for redneck" I ordered a Geary's Pale Ale. Brewed in Portland with a smooth and light fruity taste, it was definitely a great match to go with the sweet, saucy ribs. It is also sold in the Amherst area.

For those who want to relax and grab a drink after (or before) a day on the slopes, the

See SUGARLOAF on page 14

COURTESY NANCY QUINN

Cross-country skiing is one of the many winter activities featured at Mt. Sugarloaf in Maine.

Enroll at BreUniversity today

BY RYAN MCASKILL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Jim Breuer is a veteran of the stand-up world. On Feb. 1, he brings his BreUniversity Tour: An education on LIFE! to the University of Massachusetts Mullins Center at 8 p.m.

"We are going to be learning lessons about life on this tour, man," said Breuer.

Best known for his four years on "Saturday Night Live," where his Goat Boy character and Joe Pesci impressions became staples in the mid '90s, or as Brian from the popular Dave Chappelle stoner comedy "Half Baked," Breuer is most at home being a stand-up comedian.

He is considered one of Comedy Central's 100 greatest stand-ups of all time. For over 20 years, Breuer has toured the country, bringing his raw version of comedy to the masses.

Heralded for his outstanding storytelling style, Breuer can grip any audience. He has the ability to take listeners to the scene of had-to-be-there stories. With topics like alcohol, rock music and partying, his jokes will hit home with any college student.

Breuer has revolutionized stand-up by creating something called "heavy-metal comedy" by combining his passion for rock 'n' roll with his act. Backed by a full band, he does spot on impressions of AC/DC's Brian Johnson doing the "Hokey Pokey," Metallica singing "If You're Happy and You Know It," and metal legend Rob Halford of Judas Priest.

JIM BREUER

MULLINS CENTER

FEB. 1

$11 STUDENTS
$21 PUBLIC

COURTESY PHOTO

Jim Breuer, the innovator of "heavy metal comedy," brings his 25-city BreUniversity Tour: An education on LIFE! to the Mullins Center. Breuer will also be documenting the entire trip for a road journal.

His impressions are so good, Breuer has actually sung with Halford and performed the "hokey pokey" on stage with AC/DC.

Alcohol is a favor topic for Breuer. His most famous alcohol-related bit revolves around drinking being like having a party in your stomach: "The stomach is the bouncer, he's the door guy, you don't want to piss him off … at the end of the night your stomach has had enough, 'all right, that's it everyone get out … no, no, not that way, back the way you came.'"

The BreUniversity Tour is a 25-city jaunt that consists mainly of colleges and universities, with a few comedy clubs thrown in. Several major colleges across the country, including the University of Michigan and the College of Charleston, join UMass, the sixth tour stop, as hosting schools.

The tour kicked off Jan. 22 in South Carolina.

In addition to performing, Breuer is also documenting the entire tour for a road journal. Not only will the show be filmed, but prior to the show, he will be wandering the UMass campus and meeting students.

Those who want to be a part of the documentary can also submit photos of themselves through Breuer's Web site, which he encourages.

"I want to know who I'm meeting on this tour," Breuer said. "Send me pictures of you and your school. Don't send anything crazy like 'This is when I shaved my head and glued my hair to my butt and this is like the hair on my butt is from my head … it's good times man, it's really good times.'"

All video will be posted on his Web site.

Breuer has also embraced the new tech-friendly world. Aside from his website known as the BreUniverse, he hosts "Breuer Unleashed," a show on Sirius Satellite Radio's "Raw Dog Comedy" channel, and his own YouTube channel: BreTube.

"Breuer Unleased" is in the middle of its second season. Featuring interviews with some of today's hottest stand-ups, including Dave Attell and Jerry Seinfeld, as well as comedy bits like watching his "Saturday Night Live" audition tape from 1995 with a group of other comedians, "Unleased" has been promoted to weekdays from 4-6 p.m.

Even being a married, 41-year-old father of three, Breuer has not lost a single step as a stand-up comedian and is still as sharp as ever.

Breuer takes the stage Feb. 1 at 8 p.m. in the Mullins Center. Tickets are $11 for Five College students and $21 for the general public and can be purchased at the Mullins Center Box Office or through TicketMaster.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil@student.umass.edu

Apple introduces new MacBook Air

BY RYAN MCASKILL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Standing on stage at the latest Macworld Expo Jan. 15, Apple CEO Steve Jobs gave his annual keynote address. At the beginning of his final topic, he picked up a standard sized interoffice mailing envelope, opened it and pulled out a laptop computer. No, it wasn't an optical illusion: it's the new MacBook Air notebook.

"What is the MacBook Air? In a sentence, it's the world's thinnest notebook," Jobs said.

Joining the MacBook and the MacBook Pro, MacBook Air is the first venture into thin notebooks for Apple.

Apple connoisseurs in the blogosphere were buzzing about what Jobs was going to introduce during his traditional keynote address. Much discussion revolved around new features for the iPhone, but recently, ramblings of a new MacBook called the Air began to surface. All anyone knew was that it was a notebook and it was thin.

Jobs opened the segment of his address about the MacBook Air by comparing it to other thin notebooks on the market, specifically the Sony TZ Series. Other thin notebooks, he said, weigh 3 pounds, range in thickness from 0.8 to 1.2 inches, have an 11- or 12-inch display, a miniature keyboard and a 1.2 GHz processor.

Jobs stated that other thin notebooks compromise features in order to keep the size and weight down.

"We went out and looked at all the thin notebooks out there … We tried to distinguish the best of the breed. Then we said, 'What do we like about these, and what do we think is a compromise?'" Jobs said.

Ranging from 0.16-0.76 inches thick, the MacBook Air weighs only three pounds and sports a 12.8-inch-wide and 8.85-inch-deep aluminum frame. A 13.3-inch LED-backlit widescreen display with a 1280X800 pixel resolution allows for a crisp, clean picture. It is equipped with a full keyboard with LED back lighting that comes on automatically in low light areas like an airplane or darkened conference room.

Other standard applications include a built-in iSight camera with microphone for video conferences, a 1.6 Ghz Core 2 Duo processor, 2 GB of memory, an 80 GB hard drive, Wi-Fi and Bluetooth.

The Air will run a pretty penny, costing $1,799 for the standard version and up to $3,000 with upgrades.

Aside from size, the other big innovation to the MacBook Air is its wireless capabilities.

"We built in the latest and greatest in wireless technology. The MacBook Air was built to be a wireless machine," said Jobs.

The wireless capabilities allowed Apple to make a major subtraction to the MacBook Air. There is no optical or CD-DVD drive, and Jobs said most users won't need it. If you do, Apple created a MacBook Air SuperDrive that plugs into the USB port.

MacBook Air is "optimized for the wireless world in a way that only Apple can do," Jobs said. Using the latest in Bluetooth technology, MacBook Air can wirelessly download movies through iTunes, back up files with Time Capsule or access the optical drive of another Mac or PC to download applications.

Taking some of the latest innovations from the new Apple iPhone, the track pad of the MacBook Air uses multi-touch gestures such as pinch for enlarging text and zooming and three-finger swipe for moving through web pages and photo albums.

"We have taken some of the things we learned in the iPhone and now we're incorporating them into our notebooks," Jobs said.

Jobs ended his nearly 90-minute address by talking about how MacBook Air fits into Apple's new environment initiative. These features include completely recyclable aluminum casing, a mercury-free display with arsenic-free glass and packaging that is 50 percent less volume the previous models.

With all that MacBook Air offers, it doesn't have everything. Air lacks a user-replaceable battery, which is more of a nuisance then anything, and a Firewire port, meaning no uploading digital video from a camera or Firewire external hard drive. The recessed USB slot will also hinder the use of certain devices.

MacBook Air is not meant to be a primary home computer but rather a niche device for those looking for a smaller travel notebook that can handle most of your computer needs.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil@student.umass.edu

College can be stressful. Paying for it doesn't have to be.

1.866.245.6179 | sovereignbank.com/forstudents

Sovereign Bank

You have enough on your plate. You shouldn't have to worry about getting the money you need for educational expenses. With a Sovereign Direct Student Loan, you get a smart way to pay for school when federal loans just aren't enough. For more information, call 1-866-245-6179 or visit sovereignbank.com/forstudents.

Member FDIC © 2007 Sovereign Bank | Sovereign Bank and its logo are registered trademarks of Sovereign Bank or its affiliates or subsidiaries in the United States and other countries. Sovereign Direct Student Loans are funded by Sovereign Bank and are not guaranteed by the federal government and not classified as federal loans.

American epic means there will be Oscars

Acting, directing come together in adaption of Sinclair's novel

By Kevin Koczwara
Collegian Staff

Daniel Day-Lewis ("Gangs of New York," "The Last of The Mohicans") should be given his Oscar now. He should be handed the award for "Best Actor to Walk the Earth" for his performance in "There Will Be Blood."

Any actor who can keep an audience entertained throughout a movie where the majority of the film is him talking, sitting and pondering is a great actor. Day-Lewis does it in this film, with P.T. Anderson's direction and script, better than anyone has done before, and will be the benchmark for actors in the coming years.

P.T. Anderson's American epic "There Will be Blood" is loosely based on the Upton Sinclair novel "Oil." It is a masterpiece in filmmaking and shows the beauty and power of the movie experience. The film itself comes after a long hiatus by Anderson, whose last movie was "Punch-Drunk Love." For the past few years he has been the personal helper to the late Robert Altman, and was chosen to be the director of "Prairie Home Companion" if Altman passed away during the filming.

Anderson has enormous amounts of talent in writing and directing, and in "There Will Be Blood" he displays all of them. He shows off the mastery of a narrative, the beauty an image can hold, smart dialogue and the artful use of the camera. His resume also includes "Boogie Nights" and "Magnolia." Each of his films are respected and each differ in story and topic matter but have a certain flair and style that Anderson brings to the table.

"There Will Be Blood" is his most ambitious project yet. He wrote a script about a man and his rise and fall. A difficult endeavor was at the forefront of the project: who would play this man, and who had the talent to do it for the entire film? He found that actor in Day-Lewis. Their teamwork is something to be marveled at.

Day-Lewis plays Daniel Plainview, who discovers oil at the turn of the 20th century. He is alone in the desert digging for silver when he discovers the liquid gold. Plainview creates a small oil company and builds it from the ground up, literally, to become the modern American success story.

Plainview then acquires a son, H.W. Plainview. It is not hinted at or specified until the end, however, where the boy comes from; whenever asked about his son, Plainview redirects the question. The boy grows up beside Daniel Plainview and becomes his business partner.

H.W. Plainview is played by first-time actor Dillion Freasier. He and Day-Lewis make a formidable team of acting partners and scheming business minds. They promote their company as a family business. H.W. stands behind or next to Daniel in the meeting rooms, where he tries to woo the locals into selling or leasing him their land so he can rig up his oil derricks and pump the locals for all of their natural resources.

After a 20 minute beginning with no conversation, just the noises of pickaxes, levers and pulleys, a crying baby and a pen signing paper, the movie begins to move quickly, and soon reveals Plainview's plans to acquire land. He starts his small company and looks for his big break to make "the real money." At this point he is told by Paul Sunday (played by Paul Dano) about a place in California where the oil is seeping through the land. Sunday, a suspicious character at first, is the son of a poor farmer to whom the oil-rich land belongs – a fact only Sunday knows.

To Plainview, this information is worth every penny paid to Paul Sunday. Plainview ventures out to the California land that is holding enormous amounts of gold for the taking. He goes quail hunting with his son on the Sunday family ranch and takes in their hospitality while searching the land for oil. When he discovers the black goo leaking from the earth, he quickly makes a proposition to buy the land so he can "hunt quail" on it, never revealing the dark secret of his true intentions. This is when Eli Sunday comes into play.

Eli is Paul's twin brother and the local minister who the people follow and admire greatly. He knows about the oil and does not want to give up his land without $10,000, if oil is in fact found. Eli, the symbol of religion, becomes the contradictory force to Plainview's views and ideas. He profits just as greatly from the oil being pumped on his land. His church grows in size and number and his "healing" powers and influence becomes just as great as Plainview's, but Eli is regarded as the better person.

The movie ends on a high note where religion and the American dream clash, and all the truths about mankind's greed come to the forefront. There is little to no blood in the movie until the end, and even then it is artfully crafted into the demise of the American dream. Day-Lewis internally combusts on the screen and it is cringingly beautiful to watch.

Kevin Koczwara can be reached at kkoczwara@student.umass.edu

COURTESY MIRAMAX

Daniel Day-Lewis delivers an Oscar-nominated performance in P.T. Anderson's American epic "There Will be Blood." Day-Lewis has already received a Golden Globe for the role of Daniel Plainview.

COURTESY MIRAMAX

First-time actor Dillion Freasier is a formidable match for Daniel Day-Lewis in the role of Daniel Plainview's son H.W.

Liesel™
Meet your new study partner.
This is Liesel™.
She can help you create audio notes of your study material in an easy to use format– then transfer them to your MP3 player.
Take them with you. Share them with others. Whenever you want. It's that simple.
7 DAY FREE TRIAL JUST REGISTER studywithliesel.com
Study and note-taking software from LISTEN STUDY LEARN
© Copyright 2008 ListenStudyLearn, LLC

UMASS CAMPUS RECREATION
Basketball (M/W/C)..... A.S.A.P.
Wallyball (M/W/C)..... 2/4
Sports Trivia (M/W)..... 2/6
More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693
On The Web: http://www.umass.edu/campusrec
LATE ENTRANTS SHOULD CHECK FOR EXTENSIONS IN BOYDEN 215.

Butterfly
Chinese & Japanese Restaurant
WWW.BUTTERFLYHADLEY.COM
Vegetarian Menu Available
Enjoy drinks at the full bar!
Free Delivery Hadley (Min. $15.00) Out of Town (Min. $20.00)
(413) 585-8989
Mon. – Thurs.: 11:30am – 10:00pm | Fri. & Sat.: 11:30am – 11:00pm
Sunday: 12:00noon – 10:00pm
48 Russell St (Rt. 9) Hadley, MA 01035

Kerouac's scroll goes 'On The Road'

Public Library in N.Y.C. houses Beat exhibit

By S.P. Sullivan
Collegian Staff

The life of Jack Kerouac is almost as interesting as frenzied and fabled – as his legend. Almost. His admirers, apologists – the hippies and beatniks that hijacked his prose for their own movements and even the Beat writer himself all had a hand in eclipsing man with myth. He really did draft "On The Road" as one long paragraph over the course of three weeks, aided by coffee and (reputably) Benzedrine, on a Teletype paper scroll (actually eight 15-foot scrolls taped together).

What you don't often hear is that the scroll was the third or forth – maybe even fifth, if you count his myriad notebooks – draft of the prodigious novel.

Indeed, there would even be another draft to come after it, as no self-respecting publisher would care to publish the novel presented on a 120-foot scroll: One long paragraph with sporadic punctuation, vernacular slang and drug and sexual references that would make any editor or high school English teacher have a conniption fit.

I went and saw the scroll this January. It was, and still is, on display at the New York Public Library's Humanities and Social Sciences Library on 42nd Street in New York City, 50 feet of it rolled out dividing the exhibit like a textual red carpet ensconced in glass. The exhibit, "Beatific Soul: Jack Kerouac On The Road," collects countless gems from the Kerouac Archive, provided by estate executor John G. Sampas, brother of Kerouac's last wife, Stella.

The exhibit is peppered with Kerouac's notebooks, drawings, the scorecards from his childhood fantasy baseball games and borseraces. There's even a list, a chronological catalogue, of the many women Kerouac had sexual encounters with, spanning adolescence to adulthood. Most of us – myself, at least – have little trouble keeping track in our heads, not Jack, he had quite a few names to remember (and in fact a few he couldn't recall at the drafting of his catalog).

It also has on display the many photographs of the Beats taken by Allen Ginsberg, with accompanying captions by the author of the First-Amendment-invoking poem "Howl." Among them are photos of Kerouac, Ginsberg, William S. Burroughs, Gregory Corso, Lawrence Ferlinghetti and real-life Dean Moriarty, Neal Cassady. Likewise, there are samples of the frequent and frantic letters the Beats wrote back and forth to each other across this "groaning continent" and a few excerpts from the works of Kerouac's contemporaries. Of particular interest is an early copy of Corso's "Bomb," a sort of pseudo-love letter to the atom bomb written in the concrete form of a mushroom cloud.

The NYPL offers tours of the exhibit, providing little old ladies and bookish types who have been briefed on the frenzied existence of Kerouac and his cohorts. I took said tour, but padded off after one too many times the matronly tour guide referred to Neal Cassady as "Dean Cassady" – confusing the real-life Cassady with his original "On The Road" avatar – and said of the scroll: "They've just released a book that stays true to this version, making only the edits that Kerouac marked on the scroll. It's very hard to read; I've only glanced at it."

One could hardly blame her, though. As a tour guide for the New York Public Library, she can probably relate more with the writings of Proust or Agatha Christie than the exploits of T-shirted transients Kerouac and Cassady.

The "Original Scroll" version of "On The Road" is not exactly bathroom reading, either. The version published by Viking Press in 1957 – initially met warily by the literary world – was by and by accepted as a "modern prose" masterpiece; its stream of consciousness prosody seemed breathless, exuberant.

But if you thought the version of "On The Road" that you found on your dad's bookshelf was breathless, try reading the recently released "scroll" version. The reader is given no bathroom breaks on their transcontinental journey, paragraphs, chapters, the whole nine yards are indiscernible. In their place is a 300-page nonstop account of hitchhikes, jazz joints, all-night road trips and the never-ending quest for "IT," the intangible "something" that fueled Kerouac's and Cassady's exploits.

Released this past October by Viking, it was edited by Howard Cunnell with critical analyses by Cunnell, Penny Vlagopoulos, George Mouratidis and Joshua Kupetz that take up the first 100 of the book's 400-something pages. These analyses attempt to provide a sort of method to the impending madness, emphasizing the importance in the novel of what Mouratidis referred to as "the journey rather than its end," as Kerouac and Cassady née Paradise and Moriarty never quite found "IT."

Born Jean-Louis Lebris de Kerouac in Lowell, to Québécois parents, Kerouac, a post-mortem UMass alum (he was given an honorary degree by the University of Massachusetts Lowell in 2007), wrote much of what was to become "On The Road" on the road. The goings-on of the autobiographical novel, by and large, actually occurred during Kerouac's years-long trek across the continent.

Initially, his publishers insisted he change all the names in the novel, though, as rampant drug and sexual references, coupled with some extrapolation on Kerouac's part, certainly would've resulted in a few libel lawsuits and other legal woes. The "scroll" version, however, provides a sort of coming-out party for all the Beat participants of "On The Road's" plot. "Carlo Marx" is once again Allen Ginsberg; "Bull Lee" becomes William S. Burroughs; "Sal Paradise," as should come as no surprise, is Kerouac himself and his partner-in-crime, "Dean Moriarty" is revealed to be the man most everybody knew he was all along: the immortal Neal Cassady.

Of course no writer, even one as brilliant as Kerouac, ought to be left completely unchained, without any editorial oversight. Although the scroll manuscript is impressively short on typographical error (Kerouac, despite his espousing a "first thought: best thought" approach to writing, was painstakingly thorough in his edits), there exist certain errors in the text – questions that end in periods, ambiguous abbreviations and a few blatant misspellings – that could have been corrected without affecting the power of the prose.

But the "scroll" version of "On The Road" is better; like a Bruce Springsteen concert bootleg it provides an energy the "studio" version just can't capture. Likewise, the NYPL's exhibit gives more context than any documentary or literary criticism ever could. It shows Kerouac in several stages of his life: an imaginative youth; a burgeoning literary genius with an insatiable appetite for books; an artist uncomfortable with his own popularity; and, finally and most unfortunately, an aging alcoholic writer incapable of coming to terms with the fact that he was too old for "kicks."

The America portrayed in "On The Road" no longer exists. Very few people are willing to pick up hitchhikers, and young adults are pressured to decide their direction in life their junior year of high school. But the thirst for adventure, that zest for life, is something most anybody can relate to. Nobody articulated this as poetically and, paradoxically, as clearly, as Jack Kerouac.

S.P. Sullivan can be reached at spsulliv@dailycollegian.com

The fabled "scroll" manuscript of Jack Kerouac's "On The Road" serves as the centerpiece for the New York Public Library's exhibit, "Beatific Soul: Jack Kerouac On The Road," which runs through early March.

UPC Presents
THE BREUNIVERSITY TOUR
Jim Breuer
Live at the Mullins Center
THIS Friday, February 1,
8pm
UMass Student Tickets $11
ON SALE NOW at the Mullins Box office!!!
UPC
UNIVERSITY PROGRAMMING COUNCIL
UMASS AMHERST

BRUEGGER'S BAKED FRESH
Affordable deals and free Wi-Fi all semester long { STUDY AS OFTEN AS YOU WOULD LIKE. }
Bruegger's serves Fair Trade Certified coffee every day–ask for it!
Amherst
170 N Pleasant Street
413-253-5713
WITH THIS COUPON GET A Small coffee & bagel with cream cheese for only $2.49 BRUEGGER'S WITH THIS COUPON GET A $1.00 off any lunch sandwich BRUEGGER'S Pennies for N.Y. charity

By Olga Deshchenko
Collegian Staff

This past holiday season, New Yorkers walked by a million dollars spread out on the ground at the Rockefeller Plaza.

A transparent container holding more than $1 million in pennies, collected by children in over 850 public schools, displayed the success of the seventeenth annual Penny Harvest.

"It's truly an amazing sight," said Nicholas Petrenko, who came out to see the installation after hearing about it on the news. "I'm glad our public schools teach our children the importance of charity and goodwill."

In 2007, more than half a million children in all New York City neighborhoods participated in the Penny Harvest. In a span of five weeks, students collected over 100 million pennies from their neighbors, relatives and local businesses.

Several trucks and dozens of volunteers filled up the installation at Rockefeller Center overnight. The architect of the American Museum of Natural History, James Polshek, designed the Penny Harvest Field free of charge.

But collecting the pennies was the easy part. This spring, elementary and middle school students will form philanthropy roundtables to discuss global and community problems. With the help of Penny Harvest coaches, trained teachers, librarians and parent coordinators, students will decide how the money will be split and distributed among various causes.

Last year, homeless shelters, animal rescue organizations and senior centers were some of the 850 community organizations to receive grants from the Penny Harvesters.

Students also engage in hands-on neighborhood service projects. Last year, youngsters chose to teach English to immigrants, collect supplies for troops in Iraq and help out teenage mothers in their communities. They were involved in over 300 service-learning projects.

"We should all take part in this wonderful mission," said Petrenko. "If our kids can make a difference, shouldn't we be able to do more? This is a powerful lesson to us, the parents."

The Penny Harvest was established 15 years ago by the educational non-profit organization Common Cents. It designs service-learning programs for young students. The Penny Harvest is "the largest child philanthropy program in the United States," according to the Common Cents Web site, commoncents.org.

Common Cents was co-founded by former playwright Teddy Gross and his daughter, Nora Gross. As a four year old, Nora Gross asked her father how she could help a homeless man she saw on the street. Teddy Gross helped her collect pennies from their neighbors to raise money for the homeless. He realized that other children should be involved as well. Common Cents and its Penny Harvest initiative took off in 1991.

Nora Gross is now a senior at Princeton University. She is studying art history, photography and African-American studies. She plans to be a New York City high school teacher once she graduates.

Teddy Gross is the executive director of Common Cents.

"What this is really about is trying to give young students a measure of autonomy and group determination, the ability to make their own decisions," he told The New York Times. "It's important to understand, at a young age, what it is like to be a part of a democratic process."

Since 1991, the Penny Harvest has raised $5.9 million in charity funds.

Adam Kessler, a marketing communications major at Emerson College, stood over the sea of gold as it glistened in the December night. As treasurer at his elementary school, Kessler remembers leading his class in the pennies collection.

"It was so awesome, because at first you almost feel like it's completely pointless. It's just spare change that people are throwing in jars. What can a few pennies really do?" he said. "But by the end of our harvest, we had over $2,000, which we donated to make a difference. It felt great."

If examined closely, among the pennies there were quarters, dimes and nickels thrown in by onlookers. Some tourists contributed in hopes of returning to Rockefeller Center next Christmas, while others, in the midst of the holiday season, donated change to support the children in their efforts.

"I'm in college now, but I'm so glad the Penny Harvest is doing well today," said Kessler. "It gives me hope for humanity."

On the evening of Jan. 2, four trucks weighing 35,000 pounds each vacuumed up the change that accumulated in the Penny Harvest Field. After it is counted, it will be divided between participating schools.

This spring, the children will decide which organizations are in most need of a dip in their sea of gold.

Olga Deshchenko can be reached at odeshche@student.umass.edu.

Options endless at Sugarloaf

COURTESY SUGARLOAF RESORT

Sugarloaf, nestled in the Carrabassett Valley, stands 4,237 feet high, making it a challenging skiing or boarding adventure for those who travel to brave its trails.

SUGARLOAF from page 10

Widowmaker Lounge is known for its hopping nightlife.

Mid-January doesn't particularly seem like the best time to go both skiing and swimming. After a long day at the mountain, though, that's all you may want to do for the rest of the evening. Many of the condo complexes have their own health clubs, and ours came complete with a pool, three hot tubs and a sauna.

The Fitness Center is the main complex for getting a good workout or even a soothing massage. The women's and men's changing room both have their own hot tubs, saunas and steam rooms. That's not to mention the pool surrounded by two additional indoor hot tubs. If you walk outside you can enjoy outdoor hot tubs, where you can bask in the hot water until you have to dash back inside in the cold – wet bathing suit and all.

Realistically, for a college student, this is not a mountain you'll be able to take a day trip to. But the skiing season at Sugarloaf extends all the way into April, so it's a prime spring break vacation spot.

The mountain itself is about a six-hour drive from Amherst into the Maine wilderness. Ski and Stay packages are the deal you should look for if you plan to take on Sugarloaf.

Buying your lift ticket online also saves you 10 percent. Having your own skis or board is a plus to help you save some money, although rentals aren't horribly expensive and the equipment is in great condition.

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin@dailycollegian.com.

Common Resort Prices

Lift Ticket	$69 - $72 (1 day)
Rental (Skiing/Boarding)	$36 (1 day)
Perfect Turn class	$30 (90 minutes)
Lodging	Varies
Turbo Tubing	$15 per session, per tube
Snowshoeing	$20
Cross-Country Skiing	$17 (admission) & $18 (all day rental)
Fitness Center	$12 (free with lodging)

Disney updates old rides and attractions

DISNEY from page 10

Tomorrowland, Fantasyland, Adventureland, Frontierland, Liberty Square, Main Street USA and Mickey's Toontown Fair.

Tomorrowland, designed to be a futuristic space port, is home to many great rides, including the classic Space Mountain, a roller coaster that takes you through the dark depths of deep space. A newer ride, with a fast-moving line, is Buzz Lightyear's Astro Blasters, based on the "Toy Story" movies. The ride puts you in a video game, where you shoot at the evil emperor Zurg to rack up points. You steer and shoot by yourself, competing against the other person in your car.

Fantasyland is full of rides based on Disney's famous movies and TV shows, including "Snow White," "Peter Pan" and "Winnie the Pooh." One incredible 3D show, Mickey's Philharmagic, is easily overlooked, but well worth any wait time there may be. Donald Duck, intent on conducting Mickey's orchestra, steals Mickey's sorcerer's hat and takes the audience on a wild ride of sights, sounds and smells through some of the greatest Disney movie songs. Highlights include being a guest with Belle and soaring through an "endless diamond sky" with Aladdin.

Frontierland houses the classic Splash Mountain, which is currently running dry for renovations, but is opening again in February. Big Thunder Mountain may look like a kiddie roller coaster, but it offers up a surprisingly good time. The wait for Thunder Mountain can get pretty long, sometimes up to an hour, so this is definitely a ride to Fast Pass.

In Adventureland is the newly revamped Pirates of the Caribbean, which was inspiration for the blockbuster trilogy. Disney recently updated the swashbuckling ride with characters from the movies. Guests now follow Captain Jack Sparrow in his search for treasure. Unlike some other Disney rides that have been adapted to incorporate popular films, the Pirates ride didn't lose its original integrity, and is still entertaining for all ages. Stick around Adventureland for a while, and you might see the "Pirates" street show, starring an uncanny look-alike to Captain Jack Sparrow himself.

For those Disney goers who love tradition, the Small World ride is a must-see. Good luck getting the song out of your head, though. The Haunted Mansion, in Liberty Square, complete with updates from its feature film, is still relatively entertaining, but not worth a 50-minute wait-time. Go to it when you can walk right on.

Magic Kingdom at night is beautiful. If you stay until the park closes, you'll be treated to Spectromagic, a lighted parade with all the classic Disney characters. Soon after that, at 8 p.m., is Wishes Nighttime Spectacular, a colorful fireworks display set to music in which Tinkerbell soars from the highest peak of Cinderella's castle.

Exploring Magic Kingdom is certainly the best way to get into the Disney spirit. With princesses and Winnie the Pooh and Mickey and Pluto traipsing around, it's the best place to start.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcpherson@student.umass.edu

COURTESY MSN.COM

Johnny Depp's Captain Jack Sparrow now searches for treasure in the updated classic Pirates of the Caribbean ride.

FIRST MEETING
FOR NEW MEMBERS
Monday, January 28, 2008, 7:00 p.m.
ALPHA TAU GAMMA
the social, service & academic fraternity of the Stockbridge School of Agriculture founded in 1919

This is an invitation for new Pledges

Come to the UMass Campus Center
(see listing of room number by the elevators)

Where? Campus Center
When? Monday, January 28
What time? 7:00 p.m.
Who is invited? All Stockbridge men
Why? To begin a four week Pledge program from January 28 through February 23
Goal? TO BECOME A MEMBER OF THE OLDEST, STRONGEST, MOST ACTIVE & MOST ENJOYABLE PART OF AN AMHERST CAMPUS EDUCATION WITH THE BEST FRATERNITY NETWORK

Domino's Pizza
AMHERST / HADLEY
413-256-8911
Rt 9 Across From Stop & Shop
Store Hours:
Open 11am-4am Thurs.-Sat.
11am -3am Sun.-Wed
Mt. Holyoke Location: 593-9500
www.Dominos.com
13 DRIVERS ON FOR SUPER BOWL!!!
My Wings or Kickers Special
10 Buffalo Wings or Domino's Pizza Buffalo Chicken Kickers & an Order of Cheesy Bread
$9.99
Three or More Medium 1-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 each
Three or More Large 1-Topping Pizzas
$7.77 each
Doubles
Two 1-Topping Pizzas Plus an Order of Cheesy Bread
$15.99 $18.99
Medium Large
Any 3 Breads
Choose 3 From:
Garlic Breadsticks, Cheesy Bread OR Cinna Stix®
$9.99
Plus Tax
9018
Delivery Charge May Apply
WE ACCEPT OCMP
Find Out More About autismspeaks.org

Does Your Group Need Money?
The UMass Amherst Alumni Association helps RSOs and other student organizations fund projects that will improve and enhance student life.
Awards are limited to $2,000 per applicant group per academic year.
Visit UMassAlumni.com for an application and grant guidelines today or call the Alumni Association at 545-2317.
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
Deadline for the next grant review is Tuesday, February 5!

THE COLLEGIAN NOW FEATURES EXCLUSIVE MULTIMEDIA CONTENT AT OUR WEBSITE, WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
REGISTRATION FOR SPRING 2008
The Writing Program Placement Test will be offered on:
Monday, January 28 @ 7:00 pm
in Herter 217
You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit 112 (College Writing)
This test may be taken only once.
Students do not need to register for the test.

UMass wins key games

M. BASKETBALL from page 22

remains in decent shape for a NCAA berth for the first time since 1998 if they play well down the stretch. They have three remaining games against teams that are ranked or were at one point this season – one against Xavier and two against Rhode Island.

But before looking ahead, let's take a look back over break and see how the Minutemen faired.

St. Joe's 81, UMass 77

A spectacular scoring flourish in the second half (61 points) for the Minutemen wasn't enough to overcome an awful first half (16 points), and the Hawks once again defeated UMass, 81-77, in Philadelphia on Jan. 23.

Forbes and Harris each had just four points in the opening stanza, but both exploded after halftime to finish with 23 and 30, respectively. The 30 points for Harris was a career-high, and the effort was enough to surpass Forbes for the team-lead in scoring.

Although the poor first half seemed to be the difference (16 points on 7-of-35 shooting), it was the disparity in free throws made that may have done the Minutemen in. The Hawks hit 30 more free throws than UMass did (39-9) and went to the line 54 times to UMass's 18.

UMass 86, Charlotte 79

Harris (24 points) led four Minutemen in double figures, while Etienne Brower had a double-double in a reserve role to lead UMass past the 49ers, 86-79, at the Mullins Center on Jan. 19. Tony Gaffney started, played 30 minutes and didn't score, but provided clutch defense with five blocks and eight rebounds in a game that featured nine ties and 13 lead changes.

UMass hit 11 3-pointers (Harris had four), out-scored Charlotte by 10 at the foul line and blocked 12 shots. Forbes and Milligan each added 14 points and the Minutemen handed the 49ers their first loss within the conference.

UMass 82, Dayton 71

The road victories against both BC and Syracuse were big in their own ways, but the triumph over then-No. 14 Dayton on Jan. 16 is the most important win of the season for UMass. For starters, BC hasn't been ranked once all season and Syracuse was only ranked briefly at the very beginning of the season.

The Flyers had won 13 consecutive games before the Minutemen pulled the 82-71 upset in Ohio. Harris shot at a torrid pace from the outside (5-for-11) and led the team with 22 points. Point guard Chris Lowe had one of his best games to date, scoring 19 points and handing out six assists without committing a turnover. Forbes had 16, Dante Milligan had 13 and Brower had 11 points and nine rebounds off the bench.

Dayton struggled all night from the outside (4-for-25) and star Brian Roberts was completely shut down in the first half (two points), allowing the Minutemen to hold a five-point lead at intermission.

St. Joe's 98, UMass 92

Defense was hard to come by for both teams in Amherst on Jan. 9 in this 98-92 victory for the Hawks in the A-10 opener.

The Hawks shot an incredible 66.7 percent in the first half (22-of-33) to take an eight-point lead at the half. UMass fought hard throughout but Ahmad Nivins (31 points, 12 rebounds and six blocks) was simply too tough inside for the Minutemen. The starting five for Saint Joseph's scored all but eight of the 98 points and UMass was out-rebounded by 15.

Harris (25 points) and Forbes (22) paced UMass, but the disparity in rebounds and field goal percentage (58.5 to 42.7) were too much for the Minutemen.

Vanderbilt 97, UMass 88

A lights-out shooting performance by 14-0 Vanderbilt in the second half (most notaably Shan Foster) helped the Commodores pull away from UMass for the 97-88 victory in Nashville, Tenn., on Jan.5.

Foster hit nearly everything, connecting on 8-of-12 3-pointers for 32 points. Freshman center A.J. Ogilvy notched 25 points and 11 rebounds, while Jermaine Beal had 19 points. Three players scored more than 20 points for UMass (Lowe, Harris and Forbes) but a 2-for-15 performance by Brower hurt down the stretch. Vanderbilt shot 55.3 percent in the second half, including 8-of-12 from the outside.

UMass held a 37-36 lead at halftime, but Vanderbilt exploded for 61 points in the second half.

UMass 95, Houston 89

Against a solid Houston team (11-1) at home, the Minutemen appeared in serious trouble down 48-37 after the first 20 minutes. But with tough defense, good rebounding and tremendous ball control, UMass had a big second half to defeat Houston, 95-89, on Jan. 2.

The Minutemen struggled from 3-point range (6-of-24), but out-scored Houston by nine points at the line and scored 58 points to Houston's 41 in the second half.

UMass 60, BU 51

Although the final score appeared close (60-51), the Minutemen were in command from the start, never relinquishing the lead once all game. Forbes led all players with 25 points and 13 rebounds and tied a game-high with four assists.

Harris struggled from the field, but still scored 16 points and Lowe added 14. Freshman Papa Lo provided some excitement at the Mullins Center in 11 minutes off the bench with five blocks.

UMass 79, CCSU 55

Central Connecticut State hung tough with UMass in the first half (trailing 34-33), but the Minutemen soared past the Blue Devils in the second half, out-scoring their opponent 45-22 after halftime.

Ford utilized his bench, playing 16 players in the victory. The reserves contributed 34 points, led by Max Groebe (11 points) and Milligan (10). Three other starters (Harris, Forbes and Brower) scored in double figures.

It was the defense that starred for the Minutemen, as the Blue Devils were limited to 4-of-19 shooting from the perimeter and UMass blocked 18 shots – the highest total since it had 20 against West Virginia in 1995.

UMass 68, Toledo 61

The Rockets fought UMass hard, but poor shooting from star Tyrone Kent (5-of-21; 1-of-10 from 3) ultimately ended their chances of upsetting the Minutemen at the Mullins Center on Dec. 15.

UMass also struggled from the field against the Rockets, but out-scored them at the foul line, 24-5. Forbes, who struggles at the line at times, hit all but one of his 12 attempts. He also led the team with 25 points, while Harris added 17 and Lowe chipped in 11 points and seven assists.

In 37 minutes of play, the reserves for Toledo failed to register a single point and registered five fouls.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu

MICHAEL PHELPS/COLLEGIAN

Chris Lowe had one of his best performances of the season in the win over No. 14 Dayton, scoring 19 points and handing out seven assists.

Foster, Vandy stay perfect in win over UM

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

(Editors note: This article was originally posted on the Daily Collegian Web site on Jan. 6 and has been edited for the purposes of today's issue.)

NASHVILLE, Tenn. – When the Massachusetts men's basketball team entered Memorial Gymnasium on Jan. 5, the Minutemen had the chance to make a huge statement in the world of college basketball. In retrospect, it's difficult to determine if a win over then-No. 15 Vanderbilt would have been their biggest win of the season with league play yet to begin.

But the Commodores will most likely be the highest ranked team that UMass will face this year. At this point in the season, the Minutemen were coming off a six-game winning streak, including an impressive home victory over Houston and were knocking on the door of the national Top 25 polls. UMass let two sizeable leads in each half slip away against Vanderbilt, falling 97-88.

Vandy	97
UMass	88

The Maroon and White proved it could play with one of the Southeastern Conference's best teams, but was undone by inconsistent offensive play and the 32 points of Vanderbilt senior guard Shan Foster.

The up-tempo style of UMass lends itself to the team scoring the majority of its points during runs – alternating between periods of limited scoring and consecutive baskets.

This game was no exception.

Since both teams like to push the ball up the court on offense, the winner of the game was going to be the team that weathered its scoring droughts with the better defense.

The Maroon and White built impressive leads within the first 10 minutes of each half, but allowed Vanderbilt back into the game in both periods.

In the second, the Commodores built a lead that proved to be insurmountable for UMass. A scoring drought in the middle of the period allowed a nine-point Minuteman lead at the three minute mark to evolve into a 12-point deficit with four minutes remaining.

The 13 3-pointers surrendered by the UMass defense in the game was not an overly egregious total. But it appears more devastating when you consider that the Commodores seemed to connect from beyond the arc whenever the Minutemen attempted to mount a comeback in the second half.

The normal morale blow that comes from watching an opponent make a 3-point shot was augmented by roars from the boisterous 13,370 fans in attendance.

Foster, the SEC's leading scorer (21.1 points per game), dealt the majority of the blows from beyond the arc while shooting a phenomenal 8-for-12.

"When you go on a scoring drought, you can't give up [3-pointers]," Ford said. "And we did that. It was just the combination of giving of [3-pointers] while we weren't scoring [that kept us from coming back]."

Even though the Minutemen have struggled this season stopping individual scorers, allowing Foster to score [illegible] 32 points, it was [illegible] effort.

"I think he had a [illegible] face on every point he scored. He earned them," Ford said.

Ford believes [illegible] both [illegible] took its toll on the Minutemen and created a situation where it was difficult for his team [illegible] down the stretch.

"I think we were [illegible] mentally," Ford said. "And we had a lot of guys play a lot [illegible].

The ability to close [illegible] that was on display in the [illegible] 2 win over Houston [illegible] against Vanderbilt.

"I think we were [illegible] all the things we [illegible] been [illegible] like the [illegible] and their shot [illegible] after that [illegible] what we [illegible] senior [illegible] Forbes said.

The Minutemen [illegible] won the rebounding [illegible] Vanderbilt without [illegible] the battle in the [illegible] UMass had trouble balancing [illegible] to stop center A.J. Ogilvy [illegible] paint and the [illegible] triple 3-point shots [illegible] the perimeter.

UMass received [illegible] sive production from [illegible] Bonner and Dante Milligan [illegible] the pair spent the [illegible] foul trouble. Ford was [illegible] give Forbes, Harris, Brower and [illegible] Tony Gaffney timeout [illegible] but their lack of [illegible] futile in stopping [illegible] man Ogilvy. The [illegible] 25 points with [illegible] managed to log 32 [illegible] fast-paced contest.

"I really providing [illegible] spark at forward. [illegible] gled from the field [illegible] shooting.

That left the scoring [illegible] the shoulders of [illegible] Ricky Harris (25 [illegible] evidently knew [illegible] would need to [illegible] formance as he left [illegible] court for the entire [illegible] and point guard Chris [illegible] added 22 points.

UMass started [illegible] about as well as [illegible] hoped coming [illegible] environment. With a [illegible] at the 12-minute [illegible] half, the Minutemen [illegible] in steady control of [illegible] even with the [illegible] Ford knew that his [illegible] not be able to [illegible] Vanderbilt in their [illegible]

"I told our guys [illegible] prised if they make [illegible] Ford said. "They [illegible] back without question."

The Minutemen [illegible] enough at the end [illegible] to head into halftime [illegible] one-point disadvantage.

Regardless of the [illegible] Minutemen know that they can [illegible] plus with a top 15 [illegible] road. But the team [illegible] that improvement is [illegible] pen if it wishes to [illegible] March.

"We're going to [illegible] positively, we can [illegible] 15 team in the nation," [illegible] "We going to go [illegible] ing board and get [illegible] Joe's."

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu

A-10 a different conference in 2008

ROSENSWAIKE from page 22

has the Musketeers missed making the Dance (2005 and 2000).

Xavier recently fell three spots to No. 23 after falling to Temple – one of the more underrated teams in the conference. After losing two games in a row in late December (one on the road to Arizona St. and another at home to No. 12 Tennessee), the Musketeers dismantled six straight teams before losing to the Owls, including four consecutive by over 20 points.

One could argue that Xavier is the most balanced-scoring team in the country. Amazingly, six players average double-digits in scoring, without even one of them surpassing 12.5 points per game. They are a terrific shooting team and take care of the basketball. This year will mark the seventh time in eight years they make it to March Madness.

While URI has made some noise and Xavier is good as always, it's Dayton (14-4, 2-1 A-10) and UMass (13-5, 2-2 A-10) that have been turning heads around the NCAA this season.

Before Dayton lost to UMass on Jan. 16, the Flyers were ranked No. 14 in the country; they're currently ranked No. 16. They made strides last season (19-12) but struggled in a rather weak A-10 (8-8) and haven't received a bid into the NCAA's since 2004. They haven't won a game in March Madness in 17 years.

MICHAEL PHELPS/COLLEGIAN

Senior forward Gary Forbes ranks second on the Minutemen in points per game this season. He also leads the team in rebounding.

Although the Flyers regularly use a 10-man rotation, senior guard Brian Roberts is what makes them go. Other than the injured Chris Wright (10.4 points per game), Roberts is the only other player averaging double figures in scoring (19.3). He also leads the team in assists and is a terrific shooter – especially from the perimeter, where he is shooting 45 percent.

Dayton has built a nice resume so far. In three meetings with teams that were ranked at the time, the Flyers are 3-0. They beat No. 11 Louisville on the road, dismantled No. 6 Pittsburgh, 80-55, and followed that up two games later with a win over No. 20 URI. Dayton had won 13 straight games before getting upended by UMass, 82-71.

And that brings us to those Minutemen. I don't think many people thought they had a chance to be this good. Last season they shared the regular season A-10 title with Xavier, won 23 games, featured one of the premier shot-blockers in the nation in Stephane Lasme and still didn't qualify for the NCAA Tournament. And UMass only won one game in the NIT.

I certainly couldn't foresee that after losing Lasme and Rashaun Freeman to graduation, that this team would actually be better than they were last year.

But it appears that they are. And I think a great deal of the credit here needs to be given to Ford.

With the personnel that they have now, Ford had to greatly alter how they play offensively and with so little time to institute all the changes, they are still winning games.

Aside from Dayton, UMass undoubtedly has the best postseason resume in the A-10. I know URI was ranked in the Top 25, but I just don't see how what it has done this season compares to what the Minutemen have accomplished.

Although Syracuse is clearly not as strong as they typically are, the victory on Nov. 28 for UMass in the Carrier Dome was extremely impressive. The Minutemen withstood intense pressure at the end of that ballgame, but they set a record for an opponent at the Dome with 107 points – not bad in their first-ever visit to the legendary venue.

The loss to IUPUI in their next game was overblown. Yes, it was a let-down, but the Jaguars are much better than most people realize. Not only are they 15-5, but they have four players that average over 12 points per game and they are one of the premier shooting teams in the country.

After a 15-point win against a decent Marist team, UMass won another strong game on the road, this time against Boston College. The Minutemen bested the Eagles, 83-80, at the Conte Forum, fighting off a late charge.

They then beat Houston, which was 11-1 at the time and gave No. 15 and then-undefeated Vanderbilt (14-0) a good test. UMass lost the game, 97-88, but showed it could hang right in there with them.

After a setback against Saint Joseph's in the A-10 opener, UMass won its third big road test against No. 14 and conference foe Dayton. The Minutemen then defeated the last remaining team without a blemish in conference play – Charlotte – three days later.

The 49ers (13-6) are no push-over. And the Hawks (12-5) and Duquesne (13-5) are also substantial threats to make a run in the conference.

Although two teams that are usually solid – Temple (9-9) and George Washington (5-10) – are having down-seasons, they are teams that won't roll-over easily. Both are capable of beating any team in the conference.

The Atlantic 10 could definitely receive four bids to the tournament this season. That has happened just once (2004) since 1998.

Since 1995, the A-10 has received 40 bids into the tournament. Only nine of those teams won more than one game – over half (21) of those teams lost in the first round.

Neither UMass nor URI has made it into March Madness since 1998. It appears that may change for both teams come March.

The level of respect that I have for the Atlantic 10 already has.

Eli Rosenswaike is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 1/25/2008 thru Thurs. 1/31/2008
Purchase Tickets @ cinemark.com

How She Move (PG-13) 1:25 4:55 7:50 10:10*	Charlie Wilson's War 9:30
Meet The Spartans (PG-13) 1:50 4:00 7:10 9:25*	Cloverfield (PG-13) 1:00 3:10 5:20 7:40*
Rambo (R) 1:40 4:45 7:45 10:25*	I Am Legend (PG-13) 4:50 10:20
Untraceable (R) 1:20 4:20 7:00 9:50*	Mad Money (PG-13) 1:55 4:40 7:30 10:05*
27 Dresses (PG-13) 1:10 4:10 7:05 9:45*	National Treasure The Book Of Secrets (PG) 1:05 4:15 7:15 10:15
Alvin And The Chipmunks (PG) 1:35 4:35 8:55	Sweeney Todd The Demon Barber Of Fleet Street (R) 1:15 7:25
Atonement (R) 1:30 4:25 7:20 10:10	The Bucket List (PG-13) 1:45 4:30 7:35 10:00

* NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
TICKETS AND INFO AVAILABLE AT CINEMARK.COM

UM up and down over break

W. BASKETBALL from page 22

New Years Eve, they were down 14 points with two minutes remaining in the first half before going on a second half run to take a late lead.

The game was tied at 56 with 16 seconds remaining when Friar Shantee Darrian hit a 3-pointer to break the tie and win the game.

Dacko admired her team's resiliency in that game and said the game could have gone the other way had some calls been different. However, if the Minutewomen had not turned the ball over twice as many times as the Friars, they likely would have had the game in hand.

UMass got back on track and beat Longwood (11-10) at the Mullins Center, 68-58 on Jan. 3. Rosanio and Mills each shot 9-of-11 from the floor and had eight rebounds en route to victory. The team shot a season-high 56.9 percent from the floor.

"I want her [Mills] to always be on the attack," Dacko said, "whether she's going against someone that's bigger and stronger than her, or whether she's going against someone that's leaner and taller than her."

The coach also doesn't want Mills to rely solely on a mid-range jumper. Mills possesses the best touch on the team from around 18 feet, but she also has post moves that often leave defenders confused. When she gets in the low post, she often uses her quickness to shake defenders and then put the ball in the basket.

UMass's first conference game was on Jan. 12 at home against Rhode Island (9-10, 2-2 A-10), and the team couldn't have got off to a much better start. The Minutewomen led 42-19 at half, and cruised to a 91-53 victory. The 91 points was the most scored by the program in nearly 27 years.

Stephanie Lawrence had her best offensive game of her freshman campaign and finished with 10 points.

Free throw shooting was another strong point in this game for the Minutewomen. They connected on 32-of-36 attempts from the line (89 percent).

But as UMass found out, success can quickly go away. The Maroon and White scored a season-low 44 points against Charlotte (13-7, 4-0 A-10) to even its record at 1-1 in conference play. Dacko described the game as a boxing match, with both teams turning the ball over frequently and shooting a low percentage.

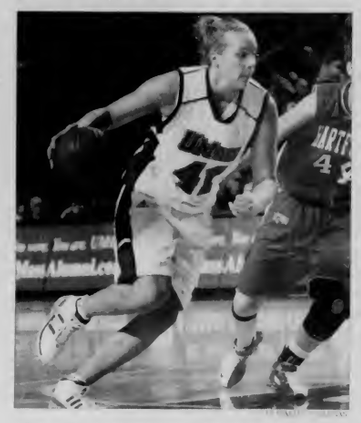
Gerardot paced the team with 14 points, but struggled from the field, going 4-of-13. Mills and Rosanio were limited to a combined 10-of-28 from the floor, and the team simply couldn't put enough points on the board to win.

While UMass didn't play its best defense of the year Jan. 20 against the Spiders, Richmond (9-10, 2-2 A-10) continually hit shots in its 86-63 win, especially from deep. Danielle Bell came into the game averaging 4.6 points but she wasn't to be denied in the Mullins Center – she finished 6-of-7 from beyond the arc and finished with a game-high 24 points.

Rosanio and Mills played well, but with the exception of Gerardot's 10 points, no other player scored more than four, certainly not a formula for winning.

Combined with their 14-of-21 shooting from beyond the arc and the 16-7 rebounding advantage they held, the Spiders never trailed in the game, and never had to worry about a Minutewoman comeback in the second half.

Before finishing up its regular season schedule with 11 remaining conference games, UMass played its final non-conference game at home against Yale on Jan. 22.



The Bulldogs (3-11) became the second team this year to allow the Minutewomen to score 91 points at home, and endured a 91-57 defeat. Mills, Rosanio, and Gerardot combined for 58 points on 63 percent shooting.

"I think we had a little fire built up inside of us from the losses in the conference," Gerardot said, "and we lost to them last year which is a revenge factor for us."

The Minutewomen also finished their non-conference schedule against Yale last season, losing 70-60 in New Haven, Conn. on Jan. 6.

UMass plays again this Saturday at Xavier. Its next home game comes Jan. 30 against Fordham.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

Kate Mills and the Minutewomen (9-9, 1-2 Atlantic 10) have won all but one of their games at the Mullins Center this season.

Dacko, staff face challenges in recruiting

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

Winning is the most important aspect of sports, and finding players to accomplish that goal is a demanding process.

The Massachusetts women's basketball team currently has 13 players filling the roster. The coaching staff has found these players from all across the map – even north of the border. Head coach Marnie Dacko, in her sixth season at the helm of the Minutewomen, wants to win at the Division I level as badly as any coach, but she pushes her new players to be students first.

"Our expectation is that basketball is number two to academics," Dacko said. "You must be committed to both of those two, and then enjoy all that college life has to offer."

According to UMass athletic director John McCutcheon, the women's program can offer 15 scholarships – enough to fill an entire squad with a free education, an advantage for the coaching staff during the recruiting process. However, they are forced to travel outside of the New England area to find the best talent.

Assistant coach Jodi Culbertson has been with Dacko for seven years (one year at Cornell and six at UMass). She helps Dacko recruit players by writing them letters, talking to their coaches, watching them play games and coordinate trips for players to visit the campus. For Culbertson, it is the hardest during the season when she is forced to miss a Minutewomen game to fly on a recruiting trip.

"The worst part is probably waiting in airports, but it's worse when I'm missing the games. I really don't like missing the games," she said.

The team primarily recruits outside of the state because many of the best players in the state are not quality D-1 players. In Dacko's six years at UMass, freshman Cerie Mosgrove was the first player recruited from Massachusetts. Most players in-state are not big, fast or quick enough to play at the D-1 level.

"We are a small state with a lot of schools, and the majority of players that come out of the state are going D-2 not D-1," Dacko said.

Currently, UMass has recruited five players for its 2008-09 season and is already looking at the 2009-10 freshmen class. Assistant coach Mary Ciuk is in her 22nd season with coach Dacko. Ciuk is the coordinator of the recruiting and she knows all the ins and outs of the process. While at Northwestern Ciuk had five top 10 recruiting classes in the nation. She says they are already looking at the next class and the list starts with 75 players from all across the country and in Canada.

"We start watching them as sophomores, but we aren't allowed to talk to them until March of their junior year," Ciuk said. "At that point we try to send a media guide and a letter from the coach – we just try to get the UMass name out there."

One of the toughest parts of Ciuk's job is to find the best of those 75 and to keep those top players interested in UMass.

"The hardest thing for us is to get the kids up here to see the school," Ciuk said.

Recruiting players out of state presents a challenge, but once they come to UMass and see the campus it is an advantage for the coaching staff. The Mullins Center is one of the best basketball facilities in the western part of Massachusetts, and the addition of the new apartments on campus gives players a nice place to live. All players are different, though: some enjoy living in a big college town, but some would rather go to a place like Boston College and live in the city.

"More and more kids would like to stay closer to home, and this is not a strong state for women basketball players," Dacko said. "When there is a great player, then every school, including BC and UConn, is all over them. The other difficulty that we've had is when you recruit women they are interested in nice dorms and we are just starting to get new dorms, the North campus, which will help significantly."

BC has two players from Massachusetts, and one was the Gatorade Player of the Year.

Even during the season Dacko is involved with the recruiting. She might not travel as much as the assistant coaches, but she talks with the top players on a weekly basis by hand writing them notes. Of course the coaches follow the rules because the NCAA monitors how much a coach can talk with the players.

"I recruit the month of July [and] make phone calls that are permitted within the NCAA rules," Dacko said. "I travel the entire month of July and in the off-season when it is permissible."

Dacko has high expectations when recruiting a player. She doesn't necessarily take the most talented player; she rather wants the whole package.

"We let them know that it's going to be hard work and not an easy task to maintain the level of commitment. Budgeting of time will be the key."

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

UMass lacking balanced scoring attack

Rosanio, Mills continue to carry offense

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

Having two players who can score 30 points on any given night certainly helps a basketball team. The other players can take a backseat and make sure their stars get enough touches on the ball to give the team the best possible chance to secure a victory.

However, two players can't carry a team to victory every night, and the Massachusetts women's basketball team needs the supporting cast to help shoulder the scoring load with Pam Rosanio and Kate Mills.

Stefanie Gerardot has done a nice job off the bench for UMass this year – averaging 8.9 points – and giving the team an outside shooter that it desperately needed. But the rest of the team has struggled to find the basket. Alicia Tatham is averaging 6.2 points, and then there is a two-way tie for fifth in scoring at 4.3 points per game.

Since the Minutewomen are prone to giving up offensive rebounds that lead to baskets, they're going to need players to put up more offensive numbers if they hope to have a successful season.

Against Charlotte on Jan. 20, Rosanio and Mills combined for 41 points on 17-of-26 shooting from the floor. Mills led the team in rebounds, while Rosanio led the team in assists and finished second in rebounds. Gerardot contributed 10 off the bench but no other player scored more than four in the team's 86-63 home defeat.

"It seems like we're kind of like a practice team right now," Mills said. "We play hard during practice and sometimes it doesn't translate to the games for us, so people just need to come in the game and play the same way like they were during practice and have confidence in their ability, because we definitely need to spread out the scoring to have a better chance at winning."

Mills has put up consistent numbers this year and averages over 34 minutes per game this season. Dacko likes to give Rosanio and Mills a rest, but sometimes feels that they must be on the court at all times if the team wants a chance to win.

One player the Minutewomen miss from last year is Tamara Tatham. In addition to giving the team much-needed scoring at 12.8 points per game, she also gave the team toughness at the rebounding position, averaging nine per game.

The current team is averaging nearly three more points per game than last year's team, but is allowing nearly seven more per game. Without the same defensive presence as last year, the team will need to find more scoring options.

Kim Benton can provide a deep threat from the point guard spot, as was witnessed from last year when she led the team with 50 3-pointers at a 35 percent clip. However, this year she's struggling, shooting under 28 percent from the floor and beyond the arc.

Though she's struggling from the field, Dacko says there's more to Benton than a 3-point shot and expects her to be contributing.

Dacko also wants everyone on the team to begin emulating Rosanio. She comes to practice and plays hard every day, and the coach thinks that the rest of the team needs to start learning by these habits.

"We just need everybody to get on board," Rosanio said after the Richmond loss. "I mean, it's January, know the plays. I think we just got to come in focused, I think everyone's not playing the way they should."

Judging from the stat sheet, the team wins and loses are based on Rosanio's performance. Prior to the Richmond game, the team was 8-8. In the eight wins, Rosanio is leading the team with 18.9 points and 4.5 assists per game and was second in rebounding at 7.3 per game. She is also shooting an efficient 57.4 percent in these victories.

In the team's eight losses before the Richmond game, Rosanio's stats looked a lot different. She was averaging 11.6 points, 2.3 rebounds and 3.4 rebounds, while shooting 41.3 percent from the floor.

This being said, it's unfair to expect Rosanio to shoot nearly 60 percent and lead the team in nearly every statistical category. While Rosanio and Mills should consistently get the majority of the shots, other players need to look for their shots when they're open and are the best scoring option at the time.

If this does not begin to happen, it's going to be nearly impossible for the team to go deep into the A-10 Tournament, never mind have a chance to win it.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu

PJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Along with Pam Rosanio, senior forward Kate Mills are the only two players on the Minutewomen averaging double-figures in scoring. Coach Marnie Dacko is looking for others to pick up the scoring load.

PJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Junior Stefanie Gerardot ranks third on the Minutewomen in scoring this season with 9.4 points per game, despite playing mostly as a reserve.

Marcou sees the ice

BRIAN TEDESCO/COLLEGIAN

Freshman forward James Marcou leads the Minutemen with 22 points, scoring seven goals and a team-high 15 assists. Coaches and teammates compare him last year's leading scorer, Chris Capraro.

UM's smallest skater has sensational start

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

One of the Massachusetts hockey team's best young forwards can be tough to find on the ice.

It's not because of freshman James Marcou's 5-foot-7, 155-pound frame or his soft-spoken nature. Mostly, it's the fact that he rarely hangs onto the puck for very long.

As soon as he has it, the King Park, N.Y., native is looking to make a play, and Marcou has been nothing less than sensational for the Minutemen over the first four months of this season.

"I wanted to get off to a good start, but I didn't think I would be at the top" of the Minutemen's scoring list, Marcou said.

He leads UMass with 19 points on four goals and a team-high 15 assists, and is tied for 10th in Hockey East. UMass coach Don Cahoon said he's not surprised by the 19-year-old's quick start.

"James Marcou is a very special player," Cahoon said. "And he's been a special player since he was – I can't say a little guy because he's always been a little guy – but he's been a special player since he really started to come into his own when he was about 12 or 13 years old."

One of Marcou's biggest impacts is that he makes the players around him better, added Cahoon.

At the beginning of the season, Cahoon mixed up his lines, matching veterans with newcomers. After a few weeks, though, Cahoon decided it was time to see what his freshmen could do together.

Marcou since has teamed with fellow freshmen Mike Lecomte and Chase Langeraap, and the line has been a staple in Cahoon's lineups.

"The hope is that they can develop a real chemistry," Cahoon said. "I wanted to be able to have someone playing with him that could play with him for a [long] period of time."

The move has paid dividends.

Lecomte is tied for second on the team with six goals. Three of them came on a pass from Marcou. One of Langeraap's two goals this season resulted from a Marcou assist as well.

"I'm like a playmaker, if I was going to describe my game," Marcou says. "Just find the open man and move the puck. It's definitely something I strive for as a player. I just want to go out there and produce."

The key to Marcou's success has been his vision on the ice. His creative playing style comes from his ability to see everything going on in front of him. In the locker room, Marcou is liked by his teammates. On game nights, he makes them want to play harder.

Senior captain Mike Kostka said Marcou's best assets are "his vision and his patience. Having patience and poise with the puck helps big time. A lot of guys have vision, but having the poise to wait that extra second to make the play happen, you can see that having that patience really helps him."

Cahoon is convinced Marcou is a player who will be a big part of UMass athletics for the foreseeable future.

"He's one of those guys that you go to practice every day and you see something different, and you walk away just saying 'wow' to yourself," Cahoon said. "He's really very, very gifted. I've been doing this a lot of years, and there aren't many guys I enjoy watching play more than James."

That "wow" factor came into play in the Minuteman's biggest game this season. In a 5-4 victory over No. 3 Colorado College that won the Lightning College Hockey Classic championship Dec. 30 in Tampa, Fla., Marcou recorded a career-best three assists, including one on Matt Burto's game-winning goal.

With two minutes left in overtime, Marcou set up for a screen, then made a perfect touch pass to Lecomte. After a save on Lecomte's shot, Burto stuffed home the rebound.

"That little chemistry between Lecomte and Marcou, making the tip pass, buying some time," Cahoon said. "I'm sure playing together as much as they have created a little bit of that."

Lecomte said of his line mate, "What makes him a good player is his ability to mix his vision of the ice, his quickness and his ability to handle the puck. He sees the ice better than anyone else on the team."

After recording one goal and six assists against three top-10 teams in December, Marcou was named Hockey East rookie of the month. He also was an honorable mention for the Hockey Commissioners Association national rookie of the month.

Marcou committed to UMass following the 2005-06 season, but he and Cahoon decided to wait an extra year so Marcou could develop more size and strength.

Marcou compiled 42 goals and 61 assists in two seasons for the Waterloo Black Hawks of the USHL.

"It helped a lot staying out that extra year," Marcou said. "I got a lot stronger. It's definitely one of the best moves I've made."

Cahoon said it's that level of maturity and self-awareness that has allowed Marcou to take advantage of his talents.

"He lives in the present," Cahoon said. "He knows that this is a fleeting experience – it comes and it goes. I think James has a real handle on that, more than 98 percent of the kids that play at this level.

"The truth of the matter is, when he weighs 180 pounds, and he will, he'll be playing at a much higher level."

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

UMass fades in Hockey East

HOCKEY from page 22

ods, but after Justin Braun scored with just over two minutes left in the second, freshman and team scoring leader James Marcou scored the third UMass power play goal of the night with five and a half minutes remaining in the game.

The Minutemen went 3-for-5 on the power play in the game. Goaltender Paul Dainton made 29 saves in the win.

UMass 5, Colorado College 4

Marcou was once again the hero for UMass, registering three assists in the overtime win against the Tigers, including one on Matt Burto's game-winner in overtime.

Colorado College took a two-goal lead in the first, but UMass scored three in the third, tying the game 3-3 after two.

The teams traded goals in the third, but it was the Minutemen who found the back of the net one final time.

Marcou set a screen for linemate and fellow freshman Mike Lecomte by skating toward the net and then tipping the puck back to Lecomte.

Lecomte's shot was stopped, but Burto, fresh off the bench, stuffed home the rebound. Dainton made 29 saves again as the Minutemen outshot the Tigers 44-33.

UMass jumped to No. 5 in the national polls, the highest ranking in school history.

UNH 3, UMass 2

The Minutemen jumped out to a two-goal lead early in the first, but the Wildcats got one in each period, avenging their December loss to with a rare win in the Mullins Center.

Patrick Dineen saw his first action of the season and scored three minutes into the game.

Lecomte scored later in the period, but sophomore goalie Dan Meyers, in just his third start of the year, gave up three even strength goals as the Minutemen failed to score again.

UNH 5, UMass 3

The next night, the Wildcats scored 4-of-5 goals in the second with Dainton back in net, sweeping the Minutemen in the home-and-home series.

Mike Kostka and P.J. Fenton each had a goal and an assist as the Minutemen outshot UNH 40-30 and were 2-for-7 on the power play, but were done in by the Wildcats' three-goal run in the second.

After the losses, UMass slipped to 10th in the polls.

Providence 3, UMass 2

A week later, the Minutemen continued their slide with a 3-2 loss at Providence. The Friars won both games at Schneider Arena this season, and the teams tied the lone tilt at the Mullins Center.

After a scoreless first period, the Friars scored three goals in the first 10 minutes of the second.

The Minutemen failed to dent the PC lead and went to the third with a three-goal lead.

Brett Watson scored his first goal of the season, and Chris Davis added another with Paul Dainton pulled for an extra attacker. But UMass couldn't tie the game, and it ended with the Minutemen losing their third consecutive game.

UM Lowell 3, UMass 1

After Jordan Virtue gave UMass 1-0 lead with his second goal of the season, the River Hawks scored three consecutive goals to win the final game of the three between the sister schools this season.

The Minutemen had six power plays in the game, but could not beat Nevin Hamilton.

UML captain Ben Holmstrom assisted on the first two goals for the River Hawks.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

UMASS AMHERST
A MESSAGE FROM THE BURSARS OFFICE

PAYMENT INFORMATION -
BURSAR'S OFFICE ACCEPTS CHECK, CASH OR MONEY ORDER. PLEASE DO NOT MAIL CASH.

THE AMHERST CAMPUS HAS INTRODUCED QUIKPAY®, AN ELECTRONIC SYSTEM FOR ALL STUDENTS TO VIEW THEIR BILLS, PRINT THEIR BILLS AND MAKE PAYMENTS ON-LINE. THROUGH THE NEW QUIKPAY® SYSTEM, AN EMAIL WILL BE SENT TO EACH STUDENT'S OFFICIAL UMASS AMHERST EMAIL ADDRESS AND ANY AUTHORIZED PAYERS EMAIL ADDRESS EVERY TIME A NEW STUDENT BILLING STATEMENT IS GENERATED. AS A CONVENIENCE DURING THE TRANSITION TO QUIKPAY®, THE STUDENT WILL RECEIVE BOTH A PAPER AND AN ELECTRONIC BILL.

THE QUIKPAY® SYSTEM IS CONVENIENT, EASY TO USE, AND SECURE.

FEATURES AND BENEFITS INCLUDE:

- EASY ACCESS TO QUIKPAY® THROUGH SPIRE.
- THE FLEXIBILITY TO VIEW AND PRINT YOUR BILL ELECTRONICALLY 24 HOURS A DAY, 7 DAYS A WEEK FROM ANY LOCATION VIA THE INTERNET
- THE ABILITY TO ELECTRONICALLY PAY YOUR BILL 24 HOURS A DAY, 7 DAYS A WEEK FROM ANY LOCATION VIA THE INTERNET WITH A BANK AC COUNT IN THE UNITED STATES
- MAKE CONVENIENT ELECTRONIC PAYMENTS FROM A CHECKING OR SAVINGS ACCOUNT (BANKS IN THE UNITED STATES ONLY) – WITH OUT USING PAPER CHECKS OR MONEY ORDERS
- PAYMENTS MADE ONLINE ARE IMMEDIATELY APPLIED TO YOUR ACCOUNT – NO NEED TO MAIL IN PAYMENT
- THE OPTION TO AUTHORIZE THIRD PARTIES TO VIEW AND PAY THE BILL, SUCH AS A PARENT, GUARDIAN OR SPONSOR
- VIEW YOUR CURRENT BILL PLUS INVOICE HISTORY ONLINE

PLEASE REFER TO THE BURSAR WEBSITE FOR MORE DETAILS ON QUIKPAY.

EXCESS EXPRESS - DON'T WAIT IN LINE TO PICK UP YOU REFUND CHECK! SIGN UP FOR EXCESS EXPRESS AND HAVE YOUR REFUND AUTOMATICALLY DEPOSITED INTO ANY U.S. BANK ACCOUNT OF YOUR CHOICE. TO ENROLL LOG ONLINE TO SPIRE AND ENTER YOUR BANK INFORMATION. CHECK OUR WEBSITE AT WWW.UMASS.EDU/BURSAR FOR MORE DETAILS!

DON'T FORGET YOU HAVE ACCESS TO YOUR BILL AT ALL TIMES THROUGH SPIRE (HTTP://SPIRE.UMASS.EDU). IT IS YOUR RESPONSIBILITY TO MONITOR YOUR BILL TO ENSURE THAT ALL PAYMENTS, WAIVERS, AND FINANCIAL AID ARE CREDITED ACCORDINGLY. ALSO PLEASE NOTE ALL SERVICE INDICATORS THAT MIGHT BAR YOUR REGISTRATION IN CLASS.. OUR TELLER OFFICE HOURS ARE MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY 9:00AM - 4:00PM. OUR CUSTOMER SERVICE HOURS ARE 9:00AM - 5:00PM MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY AT 413-545-2368. OUR WEBSITE IS WWW.UMASS.EDU/BURSAR WHERE YOU CAN FIND THE FEE SCHEDULES, FEE EXPLANATIONS AND MORE! YOU CAN ALSO CONTACT US BY E-MAIL AT BURSAR@ADMIN.UMASS.EDU.

San Juan Flash anchors UM

Moliere trains at home in Puerto Rico in offseason

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Many members of the Massachusetts swimming and diving teams don't have the opportunity to train at home during the season. Juan Moliere, however, does it every year.

The San Juan native comes home when the team holds its annual winter training in Puerto Rico. Aside from the good-natured ribbing that Moliere gets from his teammates every time he's home, Moliere enjoys other onlookers when he trains in the same waters as his old swimming club.

"The Rican Rocket" or "The San Juan Flash," as he's known in his hometown, is a current fixture in UMass swimming. Easily distinguishable during practice because of his unique pink goggles, Moliere also makes waves with his speed during the 50-yard and 100-yard freestyle races.

While attending el Collegio San Ignacio High School, Moliere was named the most outstanding swimmer as a junior and was also the three-time Most Valuable Player in swimming. Moliere's times in the 50-yard freestyle (23.76) and 100-yard freestyle (53.35), are still school records at his high school.

As a freshman at UMass, Moliere won the 50-yard freestyle in five meets and the 100-yard freestyle in two meets during the season. A sprinter by nature, Moliere anchored the 200-yard and 400-yard medley relay teams to a victory at the Atlantic 10 Conference Championships and was named to the All-Atlantic 10 First and Second teams and was given the team's Coach's Award as the most outstanding swimmer.

Although he enjoyed great success as a freshman, Moliere admits that he still had things to work on in terms of his form and breathing. He even went so far as to say that, as a member of the Maroon and White, he "learned how to swim." In other words, he worked with men's coach Russ Yarworth on many things and adopted a training regimen that had been tweaked by Yarworth.

Watching his teammates throughout the season was also beneficial to the second-year engineering major – a demanding lifestyle in itself, let alone coupled with that of a swimmer. Moliere is particularly wary of his breathing while in the water.

"Last year [at the conference championships in the 50-yard freestyle] I took third [place] and I could've gotten second," Moliere said. It was because I took a breath on the wall. This year I'm focusing on only taking one breath."

Training under Yarworth and a willingness to change his form to better himself as a swimmer have propelled Moliere into the upper echelon of swimmers in the A-10. Thus far in the season, Moliere has already earned the A-10 Performer of the Week award on two separate occasions.

He still holds one of the best times in the conference in both the 50- and 100-yard events this season, and he's already etched himself into the UMass record books, sitting at eighth all-time in the 100-yard freestyle (45.80) and ninth all-time in the 50-yard freestyle (21.04)as only a sophomore.

He eagerly awaits the chance to improve on his third-place finish in the 50-yard freestyle at last year's conference championships. He will get his chance on Feb. 23, hut plenty of opponents await "The Rican Rocket" until then.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

Sophomore swimmer Juan Moliere, a.k.a. "The San Juan Flash," trains for the season in his native country of Puerto Rico each off-season.

THE AMERICAN UNIVERSITY OF PARIS
Summer 2008 in Paris
A large selection of undergraduate, credit-bearing courses
• One 7-Week Summer Term
• Two French Immersion Sessions
• International Studies
• The Arts

www.aup.edu Email: summer@aup.edu

Triathlons help Volpe prepare

Senior swam, ran and biked to get ready for final season

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For collegiate athletes, classes, practice, homework and daily meals are incorporated accordingly into daily routines. Allison Volpe, a senior captain on the Massachusetts women's swimming and diving team, is one of the many athletes who choose to take on additional challenges to strengthen their abilities.

During this past summer, Volpe again didn't have much time for rest, as she participated in two triathlons: a sprint triathlon and an Olympic triathlon. Volpe used these events to train for the 2007-08 swimming season.

The sprint triathlon consisted of a swimming a quarter-of-a-mile, biking for 16 miles and finishing with a three-mile run to the finish line. After completing that triathlon, Volpe participated in the more challenging Olympic triathlon.

The Olympic triathlon consisted of a one-mile swim, 23-mile bike ride and a six-mile run to the finish line.

Volpe trained for each part of the triathlons for at least an hour and a half for two days a week.

"It was good cross-training," Volpe said. "It was also a good way to get into a race situation because once you're in college, it's hard to [participate in] meets so I found it as a good way to race again."

As for upcoming triathlons, Volpe doesn't plan on actively pursuing any. The two events this past summer were just two personal goals that Volpe set for herself. However, Volpe doesn't totally refute the idea of participating in another triathlon. She saw that her athleticism and endurance are stronger because of the intense workouts.

Volpe is a good multi-tasker. Before becoming a Minutewoman, she was a three-sport athlete at Owen J. Roberts High School (Pa.), competing in swimming, field hockey and track and field as a pole-vaulter.

The flexibility that Volpe shows everyday between school, swimming and a social life without favoring any one thing over the other is something that hasn't gone unnoticed.

UMass coach Bob Newcomb knew how committed Volpe was since the first time she took to the water for the Maroon and White.

Newcomb believes that Volpe is motivated in everything that she does whether it be working in the classroom or swimming with the team.

The leadership qualities that Volpe shows in the classroom or while swimming is part of the reason that Newcomb chose Volpe to be a captain for this season.

"I am totally impressed, day in and day out," Newcomb said of Volpe's effort in the pool. "She struggled in the beginning of her career here and has really persevered. I think that she's done a phenomenal job to be a leader of our sprints corps, a leader of this team and I am very glad that she is a part of this program."

Volpe has clearly been a force for this team, as she is a part of the school-record-holding 200-yard medley relay and 200-yard freestyle relay teams. She also ranks sixth all-time in the 50-yard freestyle and ninth all-time in the 100-yard freestyle.

Volpe is also an animal science major and can usually be seen working in the animal science labs on campus. As a student, her goal is veterinary school. She hopes to get into a graduate school and then a program where she can get her Ph.D. and her veterinary degree at the same time.

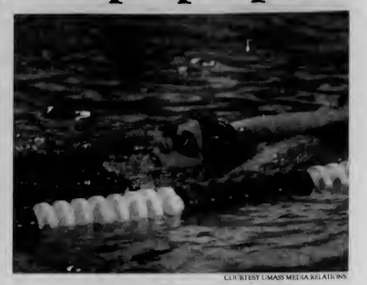
Over the summer, Volpe did research with the Orthopedic Research Department at Thomas Jefferson University, in Philadelphia, Pa. There, Volpe did research to covalently link vancomycin to stainless-steel implants for animals, through a grant from the University of Pennsylvania School of Veterinary Medicine. The research was centered on the attachment of antibiotics to stainless steel implants to see if it prevents infection in long bone fractures.

Barbaro, the 2006 Kentucky Derby winner, is one of the most famous examples of the havoc that certain implants can wreak on an animal's body. In fact, it was the circumstances of Barbaro's death that enabled the school to get the grant money for the project. Barbaro developed an abscess on its left foot, not the foot that it had injured in the 2006 Preakness Stakes. The abscess was a result of an infection due to Barbaro's body rejecting of the implant.

The research showed that, had antibiotics been attached to the implants in Barbaro's broken ankle, the horse's body may not have reacted so harshly to the foreign object.

With the work done at TJU, Volpe hopes to bolster her resume enough to give prospective colleges another reason to accept her into a veterinary school program.

Volpe attributes most of her success to her professor, Dr. Janice Telfer.



"She's very good," Telfer said of Volpe's work ethic. "She's very disciplined because she has other [constraints] on her time."

Although Volpe follows a hectic schedule, it has never been apparent to Telfer that Volpe has shown signs of physical exhaustion. By her own admission, Volpe doesn't have much downtime during the week

However her time-management skills are impeccable and they enable her to function effectively on a daily basis. Managing one's skills as an athlete are necessary to being successful. At the same time, a student-athlete must also deal with the pressures of becoming an adult.

Success at both tasks makes individual victories that much sweeter.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior captain Allison Volpe kept busy this summer training in various triathlons to prepare for the 2007-08 season.

Swimmers, divers extend dominant run

SWIMMING from page 22

100-yard butterfly.

~~Hornagg's first place finish in the~~ 100-yard butterfly at the URI Invite led another event sweep for UMass, with sophomore Mike Berthaume and senior captain Zack Priest taking the top spots.

Berthaume is arguably the team's most improved swimmer. Over the summer, Berthaume worked to change his body type and become better equipped for collegiate swimming and as a result, holds the top time in the 200-yard butterfly event this season.

Senior co-captain R.J. Rappe swept the one-meter and three-meter dives, scoring 316.55 points on the one-meter and 285.90 on the three-meter.

The men also won the 200- and 400-yard medley relays.

The URI Invitational marked the first of three meets on the road for UMass this month. The Minutemen are also away at Boston College and Colgate.

The Minutewomen were just as impressive in a win against their conference rivals.

Women's coach Bob Newcomb was pleased with the positive results of the training, which showed in the win at URI.

"I think that it was probably one of the best trips that we've ever had," Newcomb said. "As far as the training, the consistency, everything just seemed to click really well."

"It may not have been the fastest times they had this year," Newcomb said of his team's performance at the Invitational. "But I think overall it was a collection of some of the best swims we've had."

Kathryne Chalikis won the 100-yard butterfly, took second in the 50-yard freestyle and was also part of the winning lane in the 200-yard freestyle relay.

Junior Christa Narus earned A-10 Athlete of the Week after placing first in the 200-yard butterfly, third in the 200-yard freestyle and second in the 500-yard freestyle.

Narus also swam the anchor leg in the second-place 400-yard freestyle relay team, third leg in the second-place 200-yard medley relay team and the third leg in the third-place 400-yard medley relay team.

Narus holds the second-fastest time in the conference in the 200-yard butterfly and the third-fastest time in the 100-yard butterfly.

Senior captain Samantha Demty took third-place in the 200-yard individual medley, an event that the Minutewomen dominate within the A-10.

Demty holds the fastest time in the conference this season, accompanied by three of her teammates in the top five, including fellow co-captain senior Colleen McCann.

Demty also placed third in 400-yard individual medley.

Sophomore Elizabeth Walsh finished just ahead of Narus in the 200-yard freestyle and also finished second in the 100-yard backstroke as well.

The Maroon and White also saw a valiant effort from a rising freshman, as Jessica Starosielec placed second in the 200-yard breaststroke. In her first season as a Minutewoman, Starosielec already holds the top times on the team in the 100 and 200-yard breaststroke.

The women's team also had another strong showing on the boards, as well. Junior Karen Upperco won the one-meter dive, with 249.45 points, while her freshman counterpart Anne Fogerty won the three-meter dive, with 285.35 points.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

Skiers off to strong start early in season

BY DAVID BRINCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After placing third at the two-day Colby-Sawyer College Carnival on Jan. 14th, the Massachusetts ski team built on its success from their season opener and had another strong performance last weekend at the UConn Carnival.

For the Minutemen, senior Jason Small and sophomore Andrew Hawes earned sixth and seventh place respectively in the giant slalom event, while all of UMass's top five skiers placed in the top 15 in the slalom event. Small took third with a total time of 1 minute, 25.97 seconds, while Hawes finished in fifth place (1:26.86). Overall, the team finished in second place in the slalom event, with good performances from sophomores Matthew Small, Adam Pogorzelski, Ian Hohmeister and Travis Hopkins.

"These guys need to step up," ski coach Skip Fox said, heading into the Plymouth State University Carnival this weekend.

At the Colby-Sawyer College Carnival, Small and Hawes had stellar performances, leading the Minutemen to a fourth place finish Saturday (182.62) and a third place finish on Sunday (490.09).

"Jason and Andrew have been great for us," Fox said. "Jason has been in the top five, and Andrew has been on his tail these past few races."

For the Minutewomen, freshman Jamie Taloumis continued her dominance from the Colby-Sawyer College Carnival, where she finished second and third, leading the team to a fourth place finish in the giant slalom. The Chicopee native and walk-on took third with a combined time of 2:23.03, while fellow freshman Abby Nolan finished with a time of 2:31.79, and was one of four top finishers on the team.

"[Taloumis has] been very impressive, coming from Burke Mountain Academy in Vermont; she adds competitiveness that I think will push the rest of the pack," Fox said.

"She is an amazing newcomer who is consistently in the top 10," sophomore Lauren Levey said.

In the slalom event, three Minutewomen placed in the top 10, including Taloumis, who finished fifth (1:39.23). Sophomore Emily Shiiletto came in seventh (1:39.53). Sophomores Katie Weissman and Levey along with junior Emily Zimmerman also did well at the Colby-Sawyer Carnival.

Ashley Hawes made her season debut after being out all of last year with a torn ACL. The sophomore placed 28th with a time of 2:29.37, and continues to get better.

The men's team is ranked third in the Eastern Collegiate Ski Conference (ECSC), right behind Boston College and Plymouth State, the host of this weekend's carnival.

"On the men's side, our toughest competition is Plymouth State, and we need to step up as a team," Fox said. "Colby Sawyer is leading the conference for the women, but I think that we can beat them."

The team will travel to the Plymouth State University Carnival this weekend at Waterville Valley, N.H.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Hawkins excelling in senior campaign

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts skiing team seems poised to have successful 2008 season thanks to the performance of some of last year's standout skiers. Senior Eliza Hawkins is coming off an excellent junior campaign, including scoring a third place finish in the giant slalom at the USCSA Nationals.

Her dominance of the event looks to continue. In the season opening carnival at Colby-Sawyer College, Hawkins captured first place in the giant slalom event at the Colby-Sawyer Carnival, and at the UConn Carnival she managed to come in fifth place in the giant slalom and 17th in the regular slalom, despite an injured calf muscle. UMass coach Skip Fox certainly hopes that her performance will set the tone for the season.

"I know she can do better than that, but considering she was injured and didn't practice at all last week, that's a very good performance," said Fox.

Hawkins is being counted on to help lead the Minutewomen to a successful season. She is the only senior on the roster and has consistently been the team's best performer. She was offered the position of captain of the team and declined, but Fox feels she is a leader regardless of title.

YOUTH MOVEMENT

The Minutemen skiers are one of the youngest squads among any sports on campus. The team has three seniors – one on the women's team, Eliza Hawkins, and two on the men's team, Jason Small and James Green.

Fox understands many of his players still need more seasoning, but he feels that they have an abundance of talent despite the youth of the team.

"We have a strong crew featuring a bunch of juniors and sophomores, and I expect to do very well," Fox said.

Fox admits that the lack of seniors certainly has disadvantages, but he was quick to point out there are a few upsides, especially the fact that he will only lose three players next year.

INJURY WOES

Often in sports the teams with the most success are also the teams with the best health. The Minutewomen hope to prove this statement wrong this season, as they have been hit hard with a series of unfortunate injuries, very early in the season.

Alison Hubbard and Stacy Meader are out with fractured tibias, Amy Gifford tore her ACL and sprained her PCL in a fall while competing in the giant slalom. All three are out for the year. This is in addition to Hawkins' bruised calf muscle that she fought through at UConn.

The Minutemen aren't untouched by injuries; Travis Hopkins is out with a sprained MCL.

SIBLING SKIERS

Teams that spend a lot of time together can become so close to each other they begin to resemble a family. The UMass ski teams, though, are ahead of the curve when it comes to having that kind of chemistry. Two sibling sets are competing for the team: Jason and Matthew Smalls are brothers, and Andrew and Ashley Hawes are twins.

This is actually a decline in the number of skiers who had a family member on the team. Eliza Hawkins' older brother Rush was a standout skier for the team the past four years.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

Track teams busy over break

Minutemen ranked sixth in preseason polls, women 10th

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With a month without classes, the Massachusetts men's and women's indoor track teams have been able to concentrate on the start of the season.

The men have competed in one meet and the women in two over this January break. Both teams faced off against 1,600 athletes in the New York City Gotham Cup on Jan. 18, while the women also traveled to the University of Rhode Island New Year Classic on Jan. 11.

On Jan. 16, preseason polls were released for the spring 2008 indoor track season. In this poll Atlantic 10 coaches pick who they think will win the division and how the season will pan out.

The Minutemen are ranked sixth in the preseason polls. They finished last season in eighth place. Picked to finish at the top for the men are Rhode Island, who won the Atlantic 10 last year, and Charlotte.

The Minutewomen were ranked 10th in the polls, where they finished the season last year. One of the Minutewomen's biggest competitions is Charlotte, who is picked to finish at the top for the season. Charlotte's strongest event is sprinting, and for the women to break this team they must be strong in a variety of events, according to assistant coach Mark Gottdenker.

The Indoor Track and Field A-10 Tournament will be held on Feb. 16 in Rhode Island. UMass is set to host the A-10 Outdoor Track and Field Tournament on May 3 and 4.

At the Gotham Cup the men had a strong showing against a large range of competition; the upperclassmen led the way for the Minutemen throughout the meet with a strong showing from the younger athletes.

The men started with the 400-meter dash, where senior Nathan Barksdale placed 43rd and senior Sean Murphy took 49th. In the 500-meter dash senior James Bently placed 34th and freshman Brian Tino took 37th, and in the 800-meter run the underclassmen had a strong showing. Freshman Daniel Schwartz placed 19th.

As the event distances got longer, the Minutemen started to improve in their scores. In the 1,000 meter run freshman Scott VanderMolen placed 16th and sophomore Ryan Diorio took 25th.

Junior Josh Boone placed second in the one mile run, sophomore Jonathan Pierce took 14th and senior Ryan Durkin finished 27th.

In the 3,000 meter, unseeded run junior Peter Fortunato took sixth. In the seeded run sophomore Andrew McCann took ninth.

The 5,000 meter run was successful for the Minutemen with a pair of top-five finishes; junior Jesse Regnier took third and sophomore Nicolai Naranjo finished fourth.

In the relays the men placed in the top 15. The 4x400 meter relay team of Barksdale, freshman Matthew Gulino, sophomore Andrew O'Donnell and sophomore Samuel Laorenza placed 12th overall. The 4x800 relay team took 13th place. Junior Boone, sophomore Ryan Diorio, senior Kevin Murphy and freshman Daniel Schwartz helped lead the way.

In field events sophomore Brian Miller placed eighth in the high jump and seventh in the long jump, freshman Sean Busch took 11th in the pole vault and in the shot put, and freshman Kevin Spieler placed 18th.

The women were lead by senior Christina DeRosa in the first two meets of the indoor track season. The first meet, the URI New Year Classic, added to DeRosa's impressive athletic career. DeRosa took first in the 3,000-meter run with a time of nine minutes, 58.18 seconds, finishing over a minute before second place Megan Jaswell from CCSU.

DeRosa's time qualified her for the Iwas England Indoor Championship and the ECAC Championship.

At the Gotham Cup on Jan. 18 DeRosa had another first-place performance in the 5,000 meters. She wasn't the only one who qualified for the New England Indoor Championship at the New Year Classic; redshirt senior Danielle Bolt finished first in the 55-meter dash, with a time of 7.28 seconds. Bolt also did well in the 200-meter dash, where she finished in 26.70 seconds for fourth place. At the Gotham Cup in the 60-meter dash, Bolt placed eighth with a time of 7.83 seconds.

A goal for the Minutewomen this season is to perform their best and have more athletes qualify for championship meets, according to coach Julie LaFreniere. After the first meet this goal seems obtainable with DeRosa and Bolt leading the way.

Cross country stars sophomore Shiyi Zan and freshman Lauren Stocker took first and second place in the one-mile run. Zan finished in five minutes, 24.72 seconds while Stocker finished close behind in five minutes, 27.46 seconds. Behind Stocker was freshman Elizabeth Fisk, who placed third with a time of five minutes, 28.41 seconds.

At the Gotham Cup Zan and Stocker once again placed well, with Zan at fourth and Stocker taking ninth in the 3,000 meters.

At the New Year Classic, freshman Gina Perno placed first in the 800-meter run with a time of two minutes, 20.45 seconds. At the Gotham Cup Perno placed sixth in the 800 meters.

The 4x400 relay team of sophomore Brittany Bakanowski, junior Kristen Bakanowski, sophomore Holly Heinricher and Bolt finished third with a time of four minutes, 19.22 seconds. Coming in fifth place was the relay team of freshman Stephanie Aququo, sophomore Michelle Finley, freshman Arrika Freeman and freshman Elaina Zizza.

At the New Year Classic the 4x800 meter relay team of senior Jennifer Curtin, Zan, Perno and freshman Samantha Sacchetti took first place with a time of nine minutes, 57.39 seconds. Taking fourth place was the relay team of Stocker, freshman Erin Megan, freshman Elizabeth Fisk and senior Britt Canfield.

At the Gotham Cup the 4x800 meter relay team of Stocker, Zan, freshman Elizabeth Fisk and freshman Samantha Sacchetti placed sixth overall.

In the pole vault competition the women took first and second place. Kristen Bakanowski finished first with a height of 11 feet, 5.75 inches and freshman Janelle Denehy was second with a height of 10 feet.

Kristen Bakanowski had another first-place finish in the pole vault at the Gotham Cup.

The triple jump also brought a first-place finish for the Minutewomen. Aququo had a distance of 35 feet, 6.5 inches. At the Gotham cup, Aququo placed 17th.

With strong veterans and young talent, the Massachusetts track teams are looking for a successful season.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Christina DeRosa continues to perform strongly for the Minutewomen, helping them to an eighth-place finish in the ECAC Championship race.

DeRosa starts season strong

Senior star captures early title in Rhode Island Invitational

BY ADAM MILLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last year's member of the Atlantic-10 All-Conference First Team started the season right where she left off with the Massachusetts women's indoor track team.

UMass senior Christina DeRosa's win in the 3000-meter run marked the first time in recent history that a Minutewoman came out on top at the Rhode Island Invitational.

This year's nine-minute, 58.18-second mark was over 30 seconds faster than last year's third-place finish at the same event, a personal best. UMass coach Julie Lafreniere admitted she never expected DeRosa to break a record in this race because she was not facing other top athletes.

"Most athletes usually have some competition and set [career highs] when they are racing other top athletes," Lafreniere said.

Aside from setting a personal record, DeRosa defeated the second place runner, Central Connecticut State University's Megan Jaswell by over a minute.

"The surprise is that she was able to open up the indoor season all by herself with nohody good to race against," Lafreniere said.

According to Lafreniere, this is only the beginning of a season with plenty of hope for the veteran distance runner.

"I think it's pretty obvious that she is going to have her best season," Lafreniere said. "Her best times are yet to come."

DeRosa came off an impressive finish to the fall season after setting an A-10 record by winning the 10,000-meter run (36:07.62) at the A-10 Championships. Her time placed her second all-time at UMass in the 10,000.

She also took third in the 5,000-meter run with 17:16.46, the fourth-fastest in school history.

Although DeRosa felt comfortable running in 5ks, she and Lafreniere decided to cut down on the amount of times DeRosa runs the race.

The wins came with a small price of fatigue in the latter part of the season. DeRosa and many other 5k runners experienced their calves tightening up because of the amount of turns required for the race. This year, the amount of 5k races will decrease while she will run more 3k races during the indoor season than in past years.

"I enjoy the 3k a lot," DeRosa said. "I always ran it in high school."

The decrease in 5k races that DeRosa will run now allows her to participate in other events she has not had a chance to compete in during her college career.

DeRosa plans on participating in the distance medley relay during the season. Her first shot at the event was Jan. 25 at the Reebok Games.

While DeRosa will have several chances to participate in relays, she will also have her goals set on being one of the better runners in the A-10

DeRosa's main competition this season will be La Salle distance runner Rachel Papin, who won A-10 titles in five events including the 3k race. Yet Lafreniere believes that DeRosa will be at the top of the conference and has the ability to beat Papin.

Overall, DeRosa's first indoor track win this season will provide plenty of momentum for her the rest of the way as she leads the Minutewomen in her senior season. DeRosa realizes there is plenty of work ahead, but is well prepared for the dedication needed to produce the results she and Lafreniere will look for.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill@student.umass.edu

THE WRONG FOOT
is no place to begin
start off right
with the most used books & more
home of THE HALF BACK GUARANTEE
We'll pay half of the purchase price at buyback for books with this sticker. guaranteed.
UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619
efollett.com ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.
Are you on THE list?
Register your textbooks for 5% more at buyback.
www.efollett.com/VIP 790 amherst cinema

FRI JAN. 25-THU JAN. 31
The Kite Runner 1:30 4:00 6:30 9:15
JUNO Daily 2:45 5:00 7:15 9:30
PLUS Sat & Sun 12:30 Matinee
COUNTDOWN TO ZERO 1:45 4:15 7:00 9:45
(413) 253-3547

PLEASANT STREET THEATER
There Will Be Blood Daily 2:45 6:00 9:15
PLUS 10:00 am Wed. 1/30 & 2/6
THE DIVING BELL AND THE BUTTERFLY Daily 2:00 4:30 7:00 9:30
PLUS 10:15 am Wed 1/30 & 2/6
(413) 584-6848

Picking up where you left off...

			2			7		3
		8			7		9
7			9	1
			1	2	6			9
2								6
6			8	7	9
				3	5			2
	1		4			8
3		4			1

ACROSS
1 Have a bite
4 Powerful ruler abbr.
7 Postal delivery
14 Magnon
15 Reed or Rawls
16 Some woodwind musicians
17 Critic Reed
18 $
19 Sawbuck
20 Canada's neighbor
23 Abrades to smoothness
24 Knack
25 "Nova" network
28 TV intermission
33 Candidate Landon
36 Lion's name
37 Threat ender
38 Short jackets
41 Forced inductee
42 Ashe Stadium event
43 Bro's sib
44 Mach topper
45 Big Bird's whereabouts
49 Hosp. sections
50 Pool tool?
51 Typical patterns
55 Nutritional regimen
59 Adversary
62 The way in China
63 Mr. Ziegfeld
64 Pekoe piece
65 Miss a step
66 Bog
67 Clan patterns
68 Forensic sampling
69 Understand

DOWN
1 Beige shades
2 Action site
3 Poisonous compound
4 Most senior
5 State of mind
6 Throbs
7 Couch denizen
8 Shelter a fugitive
9 Ice cream holder
10 "Beth" group
11 Small snake
12 Classic Pontiac
13 Superlative suffix
21 6-pointers
22 Singing group
25 Bombards
26 Military posts
27 Shooting at clay targets
29 In isolation
30 Ancient Scandinevian
31 Lingerie buy
32 Ump's relative
33 Assail with insults
34 Defeated rival
35 Dental-care product
39 Clean air grp.
40 Sleep letters
41 Took charge of 43 Daze
46 Eats voraciously
47 "Bewitched" grandmother
48 Director Browning
52 Musical improvisations
53 Brawl
54 Boulder
55 Take off
56 Going by yacht
57 Slender
58 Work for
59 Ex-Giant Mel
60 Shooter pellet
61 Golf score

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

$ CASH FOR YOUR CLOTHES $
how does it work?
If you bring us your awesome clothes... we sell them... you make money!
(40% to be exact)
it's so easy!
No appointment necessary.
Buy & Sell at the area's BIGGEST & BEST consignment store!...
exclusive Drop & Shop Rewards
Urban Exchange
233 Main Street Northampton MA
413-585-8729

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"When I see them all running like that, with their things bouncing around in their shorts, I always picture them naked, even if I don't want to. All I see is pork swords."

— Ellen Page as "Juno MacGuff"

Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@dailycollegian.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

THAT'S EDUCATION By Derrick Perkins

LAST DITCH EFFORT By John Kroes

LABRAT By Richard Martelly

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Circumvent the "pets must fit in a ten-gallon tank" rule by purchasing a tiny poodle and keeping it in a fishtank.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
There's no business like show-business... but the mail order bride industry can be quite lucrative.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Welcome your friends back to school by hosting a ham and cheese smoothie party with freshly blended deli delights.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Your mind is playing tricks on you; today's comics are 100% new and until today had never been seen by human eyes.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
In reference to the above horoscope, today's comics were actually drawn by highly advanced marmosets.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Make a first day appearance at all your classes so your professor does not sell your spot to an overeager freshman.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Charm your way into a freshman class and impress the youth of UMass with your wisdom and brawny physique.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
As ironic as it may be, there is no doubting that Celebrity Rehab with Dr. Drew is more addictive than crack.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Your sperm count is a bit low, try switching to boxer shorts. Note: this most likely will not improve sperm count in females.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
If you expect your professor to be your valentine you better start wooing him/her/it ASAP.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
It is time for you to awaken from your long winter nap and commence with copious amounts of fornication.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Commemorate the start of this semester by shaving your head and tattooing "Spring '08" onto your frontal lobe.

Arigato II あかりと Hibachi Steek & Seefood
15% off with Student ID
(except Friday & Saturdays)
Sushi · Full Bar · Cocktails
Reservations Suggested 413.253.0707

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

PLACE YOUR CLASSIFIED AD HERE!

A Collegian classified is a great way to advertise to the Five College community.
Reach over 20,000 readers daily!

- CALL (413) 545-3500 TO SPEAK TO AN EXPERIENCED ADVERTISING REPRESENTATIVE
- VISIT US AT WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TO SUBMIT YOUR CLASSIFIED ONLINE
- OR VISIT US IN THE CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT!

MONDAY - FRIDAY 8:30 - 3:30

UMass releases '08 football schedule

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

If the Massachusetts football team hopes to continue its recent run of success, it will have to do so against some of the top teams in the Football Championship Subdivision – and against one in the FBS.

A very strong and difficult schedule awaits the 2008 version of the Minutemen led by Coach Don Brown and Liam Coen in his final season at quarterback. A matchup on Sept. 10 with Texas Tech in Lubbock, Texas, is the marquee game on the slate. The Red Raiders captured the Gator Bowl in a 31-28 victory over No. 20 Virginia on New Years Day. They finished the season ranked No. 22 in the FBS poll.

"The schedule will once again be extremely competitive," Brown said. "The game at Texas Tech will be very interesting as they feature one of the top offenses in FBS football."

The Minutemen were knocked out of the playoffs in the second round last season, losing to Southern Illinois. That came one year after advancing all the way to the national championship in 2006, before falling to Appalachian State.

UMass will have to face more of the elite teams in the Colonial Athletic Association this time around. The Minutemen will take on perennially strong playoff contenders in James Madison, Richmond and Delaware (three teams they didn't play in '06), and once again rival New Hampshire. The other CAA opponents are Northeastern, Rhode Island, Maine and Hofstra.

"This season we flip to play the other side of the South Division so we will be taking on some of the strongest teams in the nation in Delaware, James Madison and Richmond," Brown said. "Of course, we will continue to play our longtime regional rivals such New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Maine."

UMass will play four non-conference games. The first is against Albany, to be played on Aug. 30 at McGuirk Stadium in the season opener. The following week they make the short road trip to Worcester to play Holy Cross. Conference play begins in a Week 3 road tilt against James Madison, a team that lost to eventual champion Appalachian State by just one point in last year's playoffs. The Minutemen make the long trip to Virginia for the second consecutive season – last year was for a game against William & Mary.

After playing the Dukes, UMass will head to Lubbock for the Red Raiders. Following that game, the Minutemen will get a week of rest for a home game against Delaware – which lost to the Mountaineers in the title game last season.

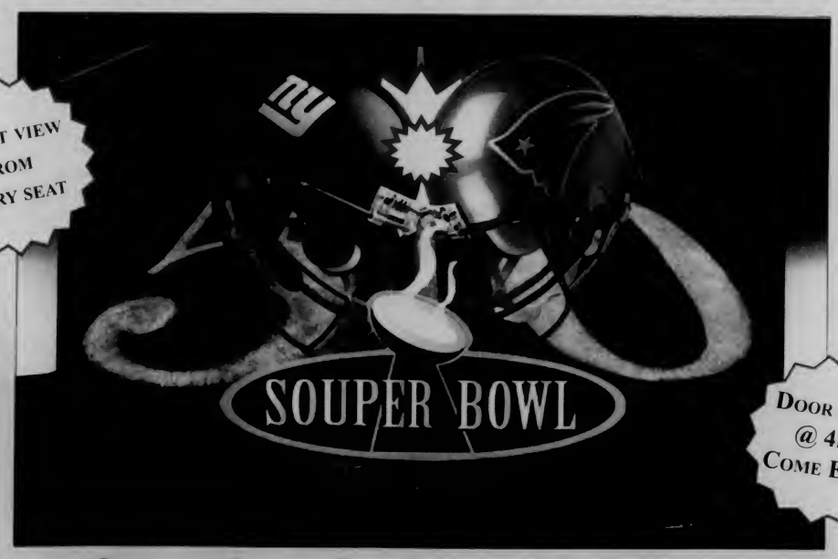
The next three games on the slate will also be played in Mass., with home games against Richmond and Bryant following a road game against Northeastern in Brookline. The Oct. 18 kickoff against the Spiders is homecoming and the game against Bryant a week later is Band Day.

The final four games of the season are all CAA games, alternating home and away. The first is a road matchup with Rhode Island, a trip the Minutemen also made last year. UMass plays Maine after that and end the season at bitter rival UNH and at home against Hofstra.

Notes

After the season opener at McGuirk Stadium on Aug. 30, the Minutemen won't return home until Week 6 against Delaware on Oct. 4 ... After the three road games in a row after before the matchup with Delaware, UMass will not have two consecutive road games the rest of the season ... UMass plays against four teams that made the playoffs last year and that finished in the Top 15 in the I-CS poll ... The games against Texas Tech marks the ninth time in 10 years that UMass plays an FBS school ... The Minutemen conclude the regular season against Hofstra for the fifth year in a row.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu



UMass Football: 2008 Schedule

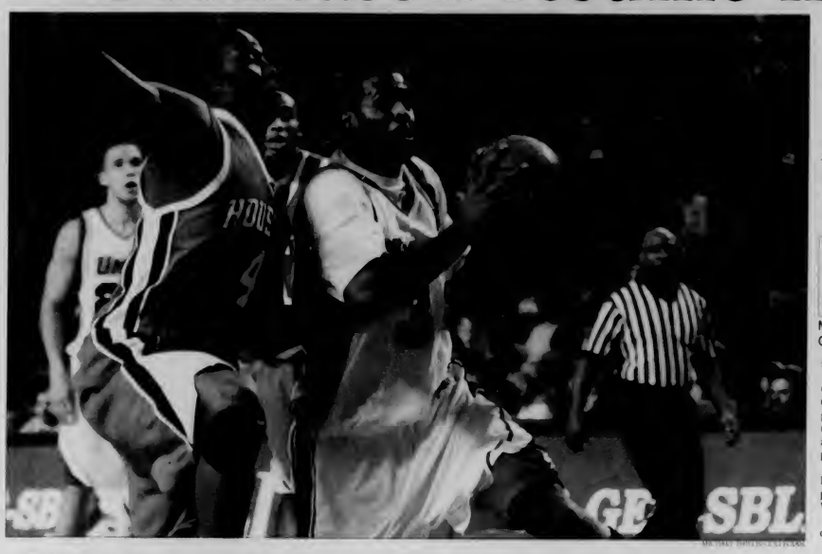
Date	Opponent	Date	Opponent
Aug. 30	vs. Albany	Oct. 18	vs. Richmond
Sept. 6	@ Holy Cross	Oct. 25	vs. Bryant
Sept. 13	@ James Madison	Nov. 1	@ Rhode Island
Sept. 20	@ Texas Tech	Nov. 8	vs. Maine
Sept. 27	OPEN DATE	Nov. 15	@ New Hampshire
Oct. 4	vs. Delaware	Nov. 22	vs. Hofstra
Oct. 11	@ Northeastern

EChecking
The ultimate in convenience plus lots of cool stuff, like...

- FREE ATM Transactions, Nationwide*
- FREE Debit Card
- FREE ESB Online Anytime Banking and Bill Pay
- FREE E-Statements
- FREE First Order of 50 Checks
- No Minimum Balance Required

ESB Online Anytime Banking
bankesb.com
Easthampton Savings Bank • 413-527-4111
Belchertown | Easthampton | Hadley | Northampton | South Hadley | Southampton | Westfield
Member FDIC Member DIF
*$10 minimum deposit to open | Checking Account: No minimum balance required to maintain account. Other bank's ATM surcharge fees that are charged to the account during current statement cycle will be refunded on the last business day of the current statement cycle. Accounts closed or changed to another product during current statement cycle will not receive a refund of the other bank's ATM surcharge fees.

1ST ANNUAL SOUPER BOWL PARTY
SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 3RD
BE PART OF SOUPER BOWL HISTORY



Also GREAT BAR FOOD CHOICES
"OUR FAMOUS" BUFFALO CHICKEN CHOWDER
CLAM CHOWDER - NEW ENGLAND STYLE of Course
SPICY BEEF CHILI
PREMIUM DRAFT AND BOTTLED BEER
104 North Pleasent Street • Amherst, MA • (413) 253-1855
CASH AND OCMP ACCEPTED

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

SPRING BACK TO SCHOOL 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Postseason résumé in flux

Gary Forbes and the Minutemen played nine games over break prior to this weekend, earning crucial victories over Houston, No. 14 Dayton (on the road) and Charlotte. They were also swept by Saint Joseph's and narrowly missed beating then-undefeated Vanderbilt.

Forbes and Co. fight for tournament bid

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editors note: Today's issue went to print before yesterday's UMass-Xavier matchup. Check out Tuesday's paper for complete coverage.)

Every time the Massachusetts men's basketball team is on the cusp of reaching the Top 25 this season, something gets in its way.

That something always seems to be the Saint Joseph's Hawks.

Multimedia Online

At two different junctures, the Minutemen have been a win or two away from cracking the Top 25 for the first time since 1998 – and twice has coach Travis Ford's squad fallen to the Hawks at the inopportune time.

Despite the two losses to its conference foe, UMass (13-5, 2-2 Atlantic 10) performed well in its nine games over winter break, and in the process gained some national recognition and attention.

It's not often a team can beat the likes of both Boston College and Syracuse on the road (and set a visiting team Carrier Dome record with 107 points), while having two players average over 20 points per game and go relatively unnoticed. But after UMass gave undefeated Vanderbilt a run for its money and beat No. 14 Dayton on the road, people began to take notice.

Ford appeared on ESPN's First Take on Jan. 10, and ESPN analyst Andy Katz wrote about Gary Forbes in his popular blog and named Ricky Harris ESPN Player of the Week for his efforts at Dayton and home against Charlotte.

So this team isn't as completely under the radar as they once hoped for.

Even with the setbacks against the Hawks, UMass

See M. BASKETBALL on page 15

Mass Attack losing ground

UM wins first tourney title, then fades in Hockey East

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: The Minutemen's games against Vermont on Jan. 25 and 26 are not covered in this article due to advanced press time. Check tomorrow's Collegian for more coverage of UMass hockey)

The last time most UMass students saw the Massachusetts hockey team it had just completed an impressive 4-1 win over Hockey East rival New Hampshire – then the No. 7 team in the nation.

The Mass Attack was ranked 10th at the time and seemed to be on its way up in the college hockey world. And so the Minutemen were, winning three straight games against top-10 teams.

But since then, UMass has slid back to the middle of the pack and has been reeling for the past two weeks.

The now 14th-ranked Minutemen went 2-4 during the break, and as difficult as it may be for Maroon and White to overcome the defeats, the pair of victories it did earn may mean more at the end of the regular season.

Paul Dainton went 2-3 as a starter over break prior to this weekend, with a 3.60 goals against average. The Minutemen won the Lightning College Hockey Classic, but then lost four straight to Hockey East foes.

The Mass Attack made school history by winning its first ever mid-season tournament at the Lightning College Hockey Classic, first knocking off sixth-ranked Notre Dame, then stunning No. 3 Colorado College in the championship.

Since then, the Minutemen couldn't muster a win, falling to the same UNH team twice, then to Providence and UMass Lowell on the road.

UMASS 4, NOTRE DAME 3

Center Cory Quirk recorded a goal and two assists as the Minutemen came from behind to upset the Fighting Irish.

The two teams traded goals through the first and second peri-

See HOCKEY on page 17

A-10, UMass stronger in '08

The Atlantic 10 Conference is comprised of 14 teams in men's basketball.

I'm no math wiz, but that makes very little sense to me.

But that's not the only thing going on within the A-10 this season that leaves me befuddled.

Eli Rosenswaike

After three years of being a relatively inconsequential conference – where no team posed any real threat come tournament time – the A-10 is seemingly reborn this season.

How this happened is anybody's guess.

Massachusetts coach Travis Ford apparently saw this coming, as he intimated to me before the season started that people should watch out for some up-and-coming teams in the conference. His main reasoning was that the A-10 was returning more starters than any other conference in the country. I can't corroborate whether that is factual or not, but he proved to be right about one thing.

The A-10 certainly has teams on the rise this season. Three schools immediately come to mind. One of those is Rhode Island (17-3, 3-2 A-10), a squad that was ranked in the Top 25 for four consecutive weeks before recently falling out. Although they have just two victories that really stand out (Syracuse and Providence), the Rams have made vast improvements over the past few years – they are just three years removed from a 6-22 season.

One team not necessarily on the rise is Xavier, despite a conference-leading 16 wins. That's because this team has been a force in the A-10 for nearly a decade. Only twice since the turn of the century

See ROSENSWAIKE on page 15

UMass coach Travis Ford has tough competition in-conference.

Swimmers sweep at URI Invitational

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Resting after returning from a trip to Puerto Rico would be an ideal situation. The Massachusetts swimming and diving teams, however, did not have such a luxury.

Less than 24 hours after returning to the continental United States after its annual training trip to Puerto Rico, the Maroon and White competed in the Rhode Island Invitational in Kingston, R.I. Both teams swept the competition.

The men's team was led by the consistent swimming of sophomore Juan Moliere, while the women's team was paced by sophomore Kathryne Chalikis.

Men's coach Russ Yarworth knew that his team was fatigued and believed that his swimmers put forth a great effort at the URI Invite.

"When I saw the team warming up on Friday afternoon, I thought, 'OK, they're tired from traveling and training,'" Yarworth said. "But they still swam tough and were able to do the job."

UMass showed its dominance in the Atlantic 10 Conference, defeating host Rhode Island, George Washington and La Salle.

For the Minutemen, Moliere won both the 50-yard and 100-yard freestyle events. In the 50-yard free, Moliere took first place, followed by sophomore Trevor Ziegler and junior Nate Bromage. Moliere holds the second-fastest time in the conference in the 50-yard freestyle and the third-fastest time in the 100-yard event.

Moliere's efforts in the URI Invite earned him A-10 Athlete of the Week honors.

Bromage is also moving through the season at a torrid pace, holding the top times on the team in the 50-yard and 100-yard butterfly events this season, while also being a dependable lead-swimmer in the 200-, 400- and 800-yard freestyle relays. Bromage's time of 49.71 has yet to be overtaken as the top time in the conference in the

See SWIMMING on page 18

Minutewomen struggle in conference

Dacko's squad ties home points mark, goes 5-3 during break

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Entering its Dec. 15 contest with Wagner, the Massachusetts women's basketball team was 4-6, including a perfect 4-0 record at the Mullins Center, but a dreadful 0-6 away from home. Since that time the team has gone 5-3, but has struggled to establish itself as one of the most formidable teams in the Atlantic 10.

Conference play is in its early stages, but the Minutewomen (9-9, 1-2 A-10) have yet to find consistency against these foes.

"Everyday in the conference it's a dogfight, it's a war," Dacko said. "Rhode Island plays us and we score 91 against them, and then George Washington, who's the 13th team in the country, goes to Rhode Island and they only score 48 points. They beat Rhode Island 48-45, so it's anybody's game for the taking."

Prior to conference games against URI, Charlotte and Richmond, the Minutewomen finished up the majority of their non-conference schedule.

The winter break began on a positive note, with UMass tallying its first road win when they traveled to Staten Island, N.Y., earning a 59-50 win over Wagner (2-15, 0-6 Northeast Conference).

Balanced scoring from Pam Rosanio, Kate Mills and Stephanie Gerardot, as well as stingy defense enabled the win. The trio combined for 45 points, and Mills and Rosanio each had 9 rebounds.

One week later, the Minutewomen returned home and beat a 10-8 Buffalo squad, 68-60.

Mills and Rosanio once again led the way for UMass, each recording a double-double. Mills finished with 25 points and 11 rebounds, while Rosanio had 16 points and 12 rebounds.

Rebounding has been one major concern of Dacko's, so individual rebounding performances such as these are necessary. The team's most glaring problem has been on the offensive glass, and even though they won the game, Buffalo pounded UMass on the glass, 17-8.

Often this year, the Minutewomen have found themselves in trouble when they encountered double-digit deficits on the road. Against Providence (11-7, 1-4 Big East) on Alisha Tatham and the Minutewomen finished their non-conference portion of the schedule strong, but struggled in A-10 play.

See W. BASKETBALL on page 16

JANUARY

MINUTEMEN FALL TO XAVIER | PAGE 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 44 LO: 34 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | TUESDAY, JANUARY 29, 2008

Despite differing opinions between students and administrators regarding first-year student housing, the program will expand next year to include nearly every incoming first-year student. Cance and John Adams residence halls in Southwest will be incorporated into the program.

Expansion set for first-year residence halls

BY FRANK VITALE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

One of the most hotly debated housing policies at the University of Massachusetts is the Residential First-Year Experience program. It was among the list of grievances presented to the administration by participants in the student strike last fall.

Whatever the average student thinks about the First-Year program, it's certain that they'll get used to seeing all-freshmen halls around campus. According to Gray, the First Year program will continue to expand until Fall 2008, when 99 percent of students will be assigned to first-year halls. The program will expand to include Northeast's Crabtree, Mary Lyon and Knowlton dorms and Southwest's Cance and John Adams dorms.

According to the student strike Web site, "with little student input and consideration, the Office of Student Affairs and Campus Life has ordered the implementation of a policy 'All Freshman' dorms, particularly in the Southwest Residential Area."

Though the program is designed to encourage good habits and foster lasting friendships, critics claim the policy divides the student body and leads to unhealthy or detrimental habits and decisions, as touched upon on the student strike Web site.

It reads, "This [the implementation of the First Year program] is an abrupt shift in long-standing policy which negatively changes peer dynamics and creates an artificial divide amongst the student body."

Kelly Gray, first year experience specialist for the Orchard Hill and Central areas, disagrees.

"Although first-year student housing is a significant change at UMass Amherst, it is not uncommon among colleges and universi-

See HOUSING on page 2

UMass library adds new security feature

Access to the W.E.B. Du Bois Library after midnight now requires a valid UCard.

Officials at the library stated that this new safety measure was discussed nearly two years ago due to several security problems on the University of Massachusetts campus.

"Because the library has such unusual hours, the Physical Plant had issues with programming the card," said Terry Warner, assistant director for administrative services.

And now, two years later, anyone on campus with a valid UCard may enter the library from 12-7 a.m., Monday through Friday - the days that the library is open for 24 hours.

UCard holders will not be able to access the library during closed hours or when the campus is closed. Anyone experiencing difficulty with their UCard should go to the UCard Office at 104 Franklin Dining Hall, or call 545-0197, between the hours of 8:30 a.m. and 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

—Holly Seabury, Collegian Staff

The Learning Commons of the Du Bois Library will maintain its current hours, but the facility is instituting a new policy that requires students to use their UCards in order to gain access to the building.

Officer graduates from FBI Academy

BY ANDY SMITH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Lieutenant Thomas O'Donnell of the University of Massachusetts Police Department recently graduated from the FBI National Academy in Quantico, Va.

The Academy, where attendance is allowed by invitation only following a nomination process, has been conducted since 1935. It was created in response to a 1930 study that recommended the standardization and professionalizing of the law enforcement departments across the United States through centralized training.

The academic and physical training is done on the United States Marine Corps base, which is situated on 385 wooded acres of land that provide, according to the Academy's Web site, "the security, privacy and safe environment necessary to carry out the diverse training and operations functions for which the FBI is responsible."

Participants, who are often leaders and managers of state and local police and federal law enforcement agencies, are chosen from each of the 50 states, United States territories, and 150 foreign countries. The Academy's first graduating class had only 23 students, but it has since grown - the past graduating class, its 230th, had 287 participants. This included men and women from 48 states, the District of Columbia, 23 countries, four military organizations and four federal civilian organizations.

According to the FBI National Academy Web site, the intention of the program is to conduct a "professional course of study for U.S. and international law

See O'DONNELL on page 2

Teach-in event to educate students about global warming

BY JENNIFER HESHION
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Returning from winter break, University of Massachusetts students can participate in Focus the Nation, a national global warming teach-in directed toward educating students and area residents about global warming solutions.

The local teach-in will take place on Wednesday, Jan. 30 and Thursday, Jan. 31 at Smith College and Mount Holyoke College, respectively.

The teach-in will include panel discussions, music performances, lectures and break-out sessions all focused on local efforts to reduce global warming threats. Focus the Nation events are also being planned for Hampshire College in February when students return from winter break.

"I'm thrilled to be able to participate in an event this important locally," said Michael Klare, a Five College professor of peace and world security and a speaker at Smith College's teach-in.

Klare believes that Focus the Nation is an important opportunity to increase the public's understanding of climate change.

"In my remarks, I'm going to discuss how global warming will affect humans," said Klare.

According to Klare, communities are on the verge of suffering extreme social distress as a result of water shortages on the Mexican-American border and in North Africa. Klare's presentation will discuss how shortages such as these are a result of global warming.

At the national level, Focus the Nation organizers estimate that this year will be the largest teach-in in American history, with more than 1,000 colleges and universities slated to participate.

The event will start off Wednesday at 8 p.m. with a screening of the interactive Web cast "2% Solutions" on Earth Day Network TV. The title "2% Solutions" comes from the idea that developed countries must cut pollution 2 percent each year over the next 40 years in order to properly address global warming issues.

Featuring Stanford climate scientist Stephen Schneider, sustainability expert Hunter Lovins, green jobs pioneer Van Jones and actor Edward Norton, the broadcast will discuss solutions and have the audience voting on questions related to climate change.

The teach-in has gathered local supporters who see Focus the Nation as a chance to raise awareness and invest in clean energy solutions.

"Focus the Nation has the potential to be a watershed event that catapults our personal and community commitments to climate change solutions to new levels," said Sandra Postel, director of Mount Holyoke College's Center for the Environment.

"At Mount Holyoke, we are following Focus the Nation with a semester-long Focus the Campus initiative to ensure that our commitments are followed by action," said Postel.

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.

Focus the Nation plans to educate millions around the country about the effects of global warming. The event hopes to encourage environmentally responsible behavior like these solar-powered lights on the UMass campus.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 2

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staugin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Melom
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenowsky
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Gaines

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FINANCED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. ESTABLISHED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ABACUS LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SPECIAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

First-year student housing to expand

HOUSING from page 1

ties throughout the United States," Gray wrote in an e-mail. "Research tells us that first-year students have specific needs in order to persist and achieve academic success at the university level."

"The Residential First-Year Experience in conjunction with various campus partners are trying to develop an experience that will best serve students during their first year and help students develop a skill set that they can utilize into their sophomore, junior, and senior years," she continued.

Sophomore Emily Kelly-Joseph, 20, lived in the all-freshman Butterfield dormitory last year. She agrees with Gray.

"I liked that everyone was going through the same experiences," Kelly-Joseph said. "Everyone was new and open to making friends. I feel like there were a lot more activities geared towards getting to know each other. Also, I think the [Residential Academic] and [Talent Advancement] programs work well because you get to be in classes with people that you live with and a lot of times those classes are held in your building."

Other students, such as Matthew Connors, 19, a sophomore and a former resident of the all-freshmen Van Meter, disagree.

"I don't think it's a good idea," said Connors. "It helps to have somebody who's more experienced, someone who knows what's going on. If you have all freshmen, you've got no one to talk to and no one to ask questions, because everyone's just as clueless as you are."

Frank Vitale can be reached at fvitale@student.umass.edu

COURTESY UMASS REC

One of the first buildings on campus to be converted for first-year student housing, Butterfield residence hall in Central houses a writing-themed program for first-year students.

UMass police officer graduates from FBI National Academy

O'DONNELL from page 1

enforcement leaders that serves to improve the administration of justice in police departments and agencies at home and abroad and to raise law enforcement standards, knowledge and cooperation worldwide."

The Web site also says, "[The Academy's] mission is 'to support, promote and enhance the personal and professional development of law enforcement leaders by preparing them for complex, dynamic and contemporary challenges through innovative techniques, facilitating excellence in education and research and forging partnerships throughout the world.'"

For 10 weeks, the participants take undergraduate and/or graduate courses on the Quantico, Va., campus in the following areas — law, behavioral science, forensic science, leadership development, communication, and health/fitness.

The 10 weeks also offers advanced investigative, management and fitness training for selected officers having proven records as professionals within their agencies.

Training for the program is provided by FBI Academy instructional staff, special agents and other staff members holding advanced degrees, many of whom are recognized internationally in their fields of expertise.

Following graduation, each participant has the opportunity to join the FBI National Academy Associates, which is a group of over 15,000 law enforcement professionals who actively work to continue and evolve what they learned at the Academy to improve the overall quality of law enforcement across their various countries.

O'Donnell joined the UMass Amherst Police Department in 1988 and was promoted to sergeant in 1997. He was appointed a lieutenant in 2000.

Andy Smith can be reached at ajsmith@student.umass.edu.

Med. schools adapt

BY RICHARD C. LEWIS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PROVIDENCE, Rhode Island (Reuters) — Just a few years ago, a graduate from Brown University medical school had just an inkling about how to care for the elderly.

Now, Brown and other U.S. medical schools are plugging geriatric courses into their curricula and adding specially trained faculty members as they respond to an imminent boom in the number of older Americans and the need to better understand how to properly care for the elderly.

The U.S. Census Bureau projects the number of elderly Americans will nearly double to 71 million by 2030, leaving one physician trained in geriatric care for every 7,665 seniors.

The first members of the Baby Boomer generation, so named for the explosion in births in the years after World War Two, turn 65 in three years. In addition, people are living longer than ever.

Geriatrics has never been a field of choice for young doctors. Elderly care doctors are paid less than most other physicians and surgeons and the aged can be hard to treat.

Correction

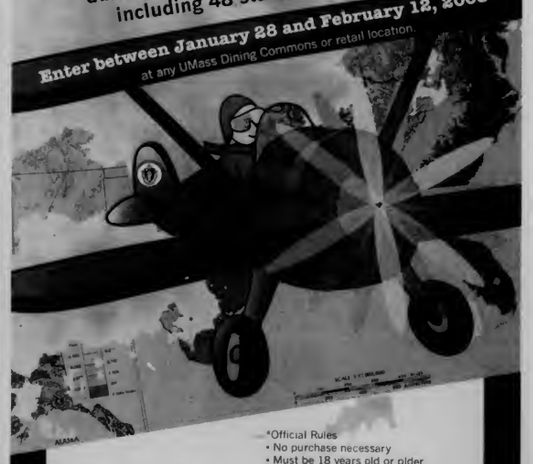
In an article entitled "Rising fees put high financial burden on UMass students," published on Monday, Jan. 28, the graph tracking in-state tuition and fees is incorrectly credited to umass.edu and the numbers listed on the y-axis are inaccurate and inconsistent with the information presented in the rest of the graph. For more information regarding in-state tuition and fees, please go to http://www.umass.edu/msp/HTMLobj-280/tuitionwaiverproposal.pdf.

Welcome Back
to your Award Winning Dining Services.

We've been expecting you!

HERE'S WHAT'S COMING UP...
• Visiting College Chef Series
• Chinese New Year Celebration
• Valentine's Chocolate Fondue Special
• Black History Month
• An Evening in Barcelona
• Fresh Blueberry Week
• Restaurant Week
• Taste of UMass
• Student Iron Chef Competition
• Recipes from Home
• American Produce Week

PLUS: All New Spring Menu



www.umass.edu/diningservices

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst · RESIDENT · YCMP · Dining Around · FoodManagement's BEST CONCEPTS

Dine & Win!
Enter to win a trip for two with $500 spending money.

UMass Dining, Coca-Cola®, and American Airlines® want to fly you and a guest to any destination during Spring Break in North America including 48 states and Canada!

Enter between January 28 and February 12, 2008
at any UMass Dining Commons or retail location.

*Official Rules
• No purchase necessary
• Must be 18 years old or older
• Open to UMass Dining customers

*For details: umass.edu/diningservices OR see entry boxes

Drawing will be held Wednesday, February 13 at 6 pm at Worcester Dining Commons

YCMP · RESIDENTIAL · Dining Around · FoodManagement's BEST CONCEPTS

Kennedy endorses Obama

BY DAVID ESPO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Summoning memories of his slain brother, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy led two generations of the First Family of Democratic politics Monday in endorsing Barack Obama for the White House, declaring, "I feel change is in the air."

Obama is a man of rare "grit and grace," Kennedy said in remarks salted with scarcely veiled criticism of the Illinois senator's chief rival for the presidential nomination, Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton, as well as her husband, the former president.

Obama beamed as first Rhode Island Rep. Patrick Kennedy, then Caroline Kennedy, and finally the country's best known liberal took turns bestowing their praise. "Today isn't just about politics for me. It's personal," Obama told a boisterous crowd packed into the American University basketball arena a few miles across town from the White House.

It was also about politics, though, and a rapidly approaching set of primaries and caucuses across more than 20 states on Feb. 5, with more than 1,600 national convention delegates at stake.

Kennedy's endorsement was ardently sought by all three of the remaining Democratic presidential contenders, and he delivered it at a pivotal time in the race. A liberal lion in his fifth decade in the Senate, the Massachusetts senator is in a position to help Obama court voting groups who so far have tilted Clinton's way. These include Hispanics, rank-and-file union workers and lower-income, older voters.

Kennedy is expected to campaign actively for Obama beginning later this week, beginning in Arizona, New Mexico and California. Caroline Kennedy, the daughter of John Kennedy, who was assassinated in 1963, will also make campaign appearances, officials said.

David Axelrod, a senior Obama adviser, said strategists also hope Kennedy can help blunt Clinton's charges that Obama's health plan would not provide coverage for all. "I don't think anybody believes that Ted Kennedy would endorse a candidate who wasn't thoroughly committed to the goal of universal health care," he said.

Clinton betrayed no disappointment at her rival's gain.

"We're all proud of the people we have endorsing us," she said in a conference call with Arizona reporters. Addressing Kennedy's criticism of politicians who pit groups against one another, she said she was "strongly in favor of getting to where our politics can be about the real issues, trying to find common

Barack Obama (l), one of the candidates vying for the presidential nomination of the Democratic Party, is expected to receive vigorous campaign support from Ted Kenndedy, the senior senator from Mass.

Nano tech. breakthrough

BY JULIE STEENHUYSEN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO (Reuters) — Transistor radios tinier than a grain of sand, made using nanotechnology, can not only tune in to the traffic report, but may end up outperforming current silicon-based electronics, U.S. researchers said on Monday.

The researchers made the microscopic radios out of carbon nanotubes — tiny strands of carbon atoms — and say in theory they could lead to faster devices.

They overcame a series of obstacles that have defeated efforts to make nano-radios, including getting amplification, by making their devices on quartz wafers.

"Our goal is not to make tiny radios per se, but really to develop nanotubes as a higher-performing semiconductor," said John Rogers, a professor of materials science and engineering at the University of Illinois.

He said the devices are meant to showcase a new way of making carbon nanotubes in perfectly aligned rows, much like strands of silky hair that have been combed flat.

These strands are a hundred thousand times smaller than the width of a human hair, forming a thin layer of semiconductor material that can be used in electronics devices and circuits.

"The radio is really a step along the path to building new platforms for electronics technology," said Rogers, whose study appears in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences.

"We're interested in nanotubes not because they are small but because smallness imparts some electronic properties that are very appealing," he said.

"You could make a faster device."

He said a key to the work is to gain control over what shapes the tubes take and how they are configured. The researchers make the tubes by combining carbon and heat and a catalyst on a special wafer material that makes the tubes line up in an orderly way.

"There are millions of them all in these perfectly aligned arrays," Rogers said.

After they have made the arrays of tubes, he said the rest of the process is very similar to making electronics using conventional silicon chips.

The researchers teamed up with radio frequency electronics engineers at Northrop Grumman Corp Electronics Systems in Linthicum, Maryland, to build and test the radios.

They consist of two radio frequency amplifiers, a radio frequency mixer and an audio amplifier all made from the carbon nanotube materials. Regular-sized headphones plug directly into an output transistor made from the nanotube material. And they used a regular-sized antenna.

Iconic toy celebrates 50th anniversary

BY SLIM ALLAGUI
ASSOCIATED PRESS

COPENHAGEN — Lego's colorful bricks that have inspired kids' imaginations worldwide celebrated their 50th anniversary Monday after resisting fierce competition from high-tech computer games that nearly brought the company down a few years ago.

On Jan. 28, 1958, Godtfred Kirk Christiansen submitted a patent for the interlocking and studded plastic brick that can now be found in almost every child's toy box.

The simple building block has become one of the most well-known and popular toys in the world.

The key to its success?

"The Lego brick doesn't age with time and continues to fascinate because it allows children, and others, to develop their creativity, imagination and curiosity and let it wander free," said Charlotte Simonsen, a spokeswoman at Lego's headquarters in the western Danish town of Billund.

The family company Lego, whose name comes from the first two letters of the Danish words "Leg godt" or "play well" in English, was founded before the invention of the famous block, by Ole Kristiansen in 1932.

The company's iconic toy allows an infinite number of assembly combinations. With just two bricks there are 24 different combinations, and with six there are 915 million possibilities, according to Lego.

A half-century after its creation, more than 400 million children and adults play each year with the bricks, spending five billion hours a year putting them together and pulling them apart.

The bricks made today can still interlock with those made in the first batch in 1958, note avid Lego fans.

And make no mistake about it, Lego bricks are not just child's play — they also capture the imagination of adults.

South Korean adventurer Heo Young-Ho, who climbed Mount Everest in 1987, left a Lego toy behind in the snow after his ascent.

"I've kept a box in the attic with Lego from my childhood. They never go out of style and they box is full of memories of long hours spent building things with my friends," said 21-year-old Alexander.

Lego creations, like this model of Chicago, have entertained children since the toy's invention 50 years ago yesterday.

THE BIGGEST BACK TO SCHOOL
POSTER SALE

Most Images Only $7, $8 and $9

Welcome Back
to your Award Winning Dining Services.

We treat you right!

JANUARY sunday 27 — FREE bottled water
JANUARY monday 28 — Coffee Cake special
JANUARY tuesday 29 — Strawberry Pistachio muffin
VISITING COLLEGE CHEF SERIES:
JANUARY wednesday 30
• Notre Dame at Berkshire DC
• Get your Bluewall coupon
JANUARY thursday 31 — Frost Your Own Cookie
FEBRUARY Friday 1 — Pot de Crème au Chocolat
FEBRUARY saturday 2 — Fruit Strip

www.umass.edu/diningservices

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst · RESIDENT · YCMP · Dining Around · FoodManagement's BEST CONCEPTS

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, JANUARY 29, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Caustic caucuses

Michael Dennis

Newsflash: the electoral process is broken. And it's not a direct result of the media, necessarily – although CNN, Fox and the like certainly play a part. And I'm not talking about an ideological brokenness – it literally does not function properly, and could use some drastic revision.

The reason why the '08 campaign has been truly entertaining is not just because it's been a complete poop show. It's the fact that it has been quite a hoot to watch people run around frantically trying to anoint a front-runner from minute to minute, using all sorts of wacky reasons in doing so.

All of it makes very little sense. Between the first primary and the last, there will have been no significant change in policy, future goals, or past record of any of the candidates – or any true change in superficial concerns such as personality and religious beliefs, for that matter. And yet, front-runner status continues to fluctuate on a day-to-day basis.

The only conclusion one could draw from all of this is that the spread-out primary process leads only to superficial changes in voter perception, and therefore a whole lot of bull dung getting thrown around when, quite frankly, it doesn't really need to be.

Surprisingly, there is a quiet revolutionary solution to all of this. Maybe … having all state primaries for all parties on the same day? I know, it's shocking stuff.

But how would the 24-hour news networks cover every single primary at the same time, you ask?

How would the candidates know what states to camp out in, you ponder?

What would Iowans or New Hampshirites have to live for, you gasp?

And that, my friends, is the point exactly.

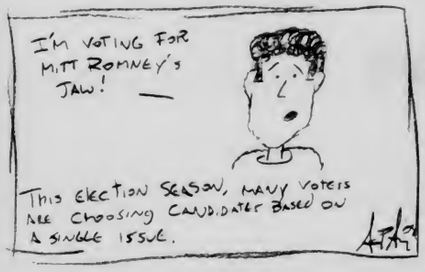
We would get out much cleaner for one thing, provided Wolf Blitzer's head doesn't explode and dirty the lens. We'd be subjected to only a few days of "intense analysis" and then it would it be over – like the quick stroke of a Band-Aid. It would be much more akin to the general election, which one can think of as the Super Bowl to the primaries' 50-game World Series.

The candidates also wouldn't be able to just cherry-pick states to campaign in, whilst ignoring the majority of the nation. Granted, they couldn't be in 50 states at one time. And for candidates with limited funds, it certainly would be unrealistic for them to campaign in every state. But if anything, it would put everyone on a level playing field, because without a state-by-state formula, regional advantages would be hard to come by.

The spread-out primary process leads only to superficial changes in voter perception.

Most importantly, candidates wouldn't be focusing on less important states for silly reasons, including practically uprooting their lives and moving to Iowa. As a resident of Massachusetts, lumped in with everyone else on Super Duper Nuclear Explosion Tuesday, I get to sit alone in the dark, with no presidential candidate to keep me company, while everyone and their mother (literally) in Iowa and New Hampshire get to have coffee with Duncan Hunter and get a full-body massage from Chris Dodd. Quite unfair.

Gee, speaking of which, ever wonder why Iowa and New Hampshire, two relative teardrops in the great sea as far as American states go, get to play such an important role in the primary process? Here's the answer – for no real reason whatsoever. It's because they happen to be first – that's it.



Truthfully, and somewhat sadly, citizens of these states seem to take a lot of pride in being first, and in having such a large impact on the process. But they deserve to be insulted for it, because it's insane. If I were a resident of one of these states, I'd admit that perhaps I was lower on the totem pole than, say, New York or California – if not in terms of cultural impact, than certainly in total population. But from what I've gathered, if you were to suggest a national primary to many of them, they'd likely challenge you to a knife fight. Strange days indeed.

The big problem with all of this is that primaries are not federally controlled; they're state by state, county by county and town by town. So therefore, bureaucracy being what it is, converting this process to a one-day, national thing would be one big, legendary clusterfudge. (And no, electronic voting machines are not the answer – they're just a free pass for widespread fraud.) And there's also that aforementioned pride that the early voting states have, which, in all seriousness, might be the largest obstacle to overcome in pushing for a national primary.

Curiously, for all the complaining people do about the lack of substantial campaigning, rarely do they broach the subject as a solution. Candidates would be less concerned about kissing babies in Midwestern states, and New Hampshirites would worry less about who Iowans were caucusing for, and we would all put down the polls, stop waiting for a bombshell soundbite (Dean scream or Clinton weep, anyone?), and think about – gasp – the issues. Best of all, it would all be over with on one single day, barring a recount. One straight shot.

And what a lovely day it would be.

Michael Dennis is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mdennis@student.umass.edu.

Bitter-sweet long break

Haley Navarro

I'm sure this has been worse or better (depending whom you are speaking with) for people who have gone through this more than I have. You know it, I know it, current freshmen are enjoying it – winter break.

Winter break is what I look forward to when I start a new year. However, it's kind of different from summer break – it's shorter, and goes by faster with the holidays.

Working over winter break is virtually unanimous on our campus. After Thanksgiving break is over, crunch time begins. Professors let you know about final projects – maybe inform you of a test you might have missed. Some of my teaching assistants even made my discussion baked goods to end the semester right. The students long to be done with final papers and exams to return home for the New Year.

Winter break marks a clean slate – new year, new semester, new grades … new you? It's a time for you to run into all of the awkward acquaintances you had in high school. It's a time for you to sleep well past noon with little to no remorse. It's that time where you can sleep without pants and not feel weird about your roommate's girlfriend/boyfriend seeing you sans pants. You know, the good stuff.

Personally, it's something I'm always up for. Winter break? Hell yeah. Six weeks of free laundry? Yes please. Give me six weeks of uninterrupted, paperless peace in my hometown. But really – six weeks? The allure of the time allotted is a lot more exciting than going through it. For those of us without winter internships, jobs, or "jobs" (read: scams you got suckered into via colorful cut-outs in your building), six weeks is a little longer than we expected. Six weeks of budgeting money for gas and movies? Not as cool. Six weeks of having to use a car to get to the pharmacy? No thanks.

The allure of the time allotted is a lot more exciting than going through it.

Last year, I budgeted my Christmas money to last me the entire break. How did I do it, you ask? I really don't remember. I might have hustled my friends for gas money. I might have dipped into my savings. I might have searched my room and car for coins. But all in all, I got through the winter without worrying if I was spending too much on gas or eating at restaurants too frequently. This year, I find myself to be in a much different situation. I don't have to clean my closet for funds, but I'm not exactly making money either.

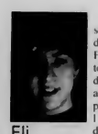
So this is the dilemma I am discovering – companies hate college students. Not only that, but unless your old job is kind enough to give you a few shifts, or you are chosen for a winter break internship, working is sort of out of the question. It makes sense for a company to stay away from kids who only have a couple weeks to work, but with UMass's extended break, I don't see why it's imprudent to hire, train and give a virtually penniless college student something to do over their six weeks of leave with the promise of return in the summer. But then again, I'm not a corporate executive, so I can't really tell you what the big deal is.

But I can tell you I'm really jealous of the awkward high school acquaintances at the convenience store who have nothing to say besides, "But yeah … I go back next Sunday," and after hearing the fragmented sentence I can only feel one thing – remorse. Don't get me wrong, I make the best of my break, but if I'm not working or doing anything productive with my time, I'd rather start getting ready for spring semester. The novelty of such a long break wears off a couple of days after New Year's Day. There are only so many times I can walk around my house without pants.

I often long for the days when I get ready for bed with strangers I don't know who live on my floor, or eating with a fourth of the student body living in Central. At home, I can't really eat cereal for every meal or wake up to find the remnants of Cup-of-Noodles in the sink. But when you flip it around, I do the same thing at school. When I'm at school, all I long for is to shower without sandals or sing embarrassing '90s pop songs at the top of my lungs at all hours of the day. But that's the best part about wanting something – it's the excitement of the event, not the actual event itself. And I'll be honest – I always want what I can't have.

Haley Navarro is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnavarro@student.umass.edu

WE WANT TO HEAR FROM YOU!



The letter to the editor has gone the way of the typewriter and Michael Dukakis' political career.

There's a new way to respond to what we print, and have readers respond to your responses, which you can then respond to.

Still with us? Then check out the new "Forums" section at dailycollegian.com

Editors note: You should still write letters so we can fill space on Thursdays. And because we love to hear from you.

It's about time we lose the booze restrictions

Eli Gottlieb

I want to own up to something almost all of us do in college. I go out on Friday nights. Saturdays, too. I leave the world of dormitories, assignments and tests behind. I stop playing video games, and I don't schedule Israeli-dancing practice then.

Instead, I walk to parties. They are fun, after all – you see friends, hang out for a while playing games, and eventually someone decides to put something they claim to be music on the stereo. Most of it is really noise with a beat, but by that time nobody cares.

After all, by then nearly everyone has had a "drink" or two. People have told me bizarre legends about these "drinks," stories or fragments of tales that supposedly took place only a few years ago, yet totally contradict the reality I observe today.

I once heard, for example, that only but four years ago a UMass student could walk right by a police officer in the street holding his or her "drink" without risking even a reprimand.

Now partygoers live in fear of the police, and when Amherst's Finest arrive, everyone under the age of 21 must discreetly leave the building. What change of nearly Biblical proportions occurred here?

But of course I jest.

We all know what happened. The administration wanted to "upgrade" UMass, and applied the same principle at work when a man asks to "upgrade" his relationship with his girlfriend – improving one's reputation by screwing someone else. In this case, the administration decided that UMass's "party school" image was dead weight to leave behind in the march of progress, mainly by making the UMPD into "Law & Order: Buzz-Kill Unit."

Still, that image does hurt UMass. Employers don't take our degrees as seriously because they erroneously believe we spent four years in a stupor, pausing occasionally for exams.

So where can we find the real root of this issue that will lead us to a resolution? Why can the administration use the police in their reign of terror in the first place? As it turns out, they can because the consumption of alcohol by any "minor" under the age of 21 is illegal, excepting religious observance or parental supervision. Here I sat, thinking that turning 18 marked me a mature adult capable of deciding matters of personal morality for myself, but apparently not.

Why not act just slightly sane and lower the drinking age back to 18? Abroad it already is, and on Friday nights it might as well be.

According to Mothers Against Drunk Driving – an organization whose founder deserted it for becoming "far more neoprohibitionist than I had ever wanted" – my brain will not fully mature until I'm 21, and I should therefore stay off the bottle to avoid damaging my poor childish brain or hurting someone else in a fit of ethanol-induced pique. In fact, MADD now claims that neuroscience points to 25 as an appropriate drinking age.

It doesn't matter to them that at 18 I can already vote, drive, be held liable for contracts, own a checking account, pay taxes, enlist in the military, or do anything else that a mature-brained adult can do.

I find it all just slightly amusing, because my family always had very unafraid attitudes towards alcohol. Thanks to them I can name my favorite beer, several general classes of wine I prefer, the kind of whiskey I always choose, and the two mixed drinks I like best. It helps that our family has Jewish and Italian roots, both with wine-drinking traditions stretching back to antiquity.

Actually, a wide range of cultures other than those two allow drinking at younger ages than the United States. We have the highest drinking age in the world, with only four other nations matching us. People all over the world – especially from Western Europe, South America, and the Mediterranean – actually laugh at the boorish binge drinking American youth partake in to cost-effectively circumvent our Congress's imbecilic efforts to please helicopter moms and Christian prohibitionists.

Behavioral statistics bear out their derision – raising the drinking age increases binge drinking, and lowering it increases moderation. Why pound shots or guzzle piss-cheap beers when you can relax at the bar with a drink or two that your taste buds can actually stand?

So why not act just slightly sane and lower the drinking age back to 18? Abroad it already is, and on Friday nights it might as well be. Those of us mature enough to keep our BAC in check deserve a chance to enjoy the same pleasures as our older (but not necessarily more mature, as an archetypal frat party proves) peers without a fake ID. If some students demand the legalization of marijuana, why can't we put a little effort into legalizing alcohol at the age when most of the world (not least ourselves) think we're ready for it – 18.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu

This gentleman is drinking an alcoholic beverage. All of you law-abiding underage college students have probably never seen one – let alone imbibed one – before.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, JANUARY 29, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Walt Disney World

Part two of a magical investigation

The Tower of Terror is one of Disney World's best known rides and the highlight of the newly renamed Hollywood Studios. Formerly known as MGM Studios, the park is a must visit for any movie buff as it features rides and attractions that encompass every aspect of movie making.

BY STEPHANIE MCPHERSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Editor's Note: This article is part two of an ongoing series about Walt Disney World.

Designed to be reminiscent of the former glitz, glamour and glory of '50s-era film, Disney's newly renamed Hollywood Studios (formerly MGM Studios) offers blockbuster-sized shows and thrills. Home to the world-famous Tower of Terror, this park caters to the movie nostalgia in all of us.

For any guest to Hollywood Studios, visiting the Great Movie Ride, located in the Chinese Theater replica behind the park's giant Mickey's Sorcerer Hat centerpiece, is a must. You are taken through the most famous scenes of the most famous movies of all time, from floating through chimney tops with Mary Poppins to being threatened by the Wicked Witch of the East, to singing in the rain with Gene Kelly. Riders beware, though – as with every Disney ride, things aren't always what they seem.

One of Hollywood Studios' most famous thrill rides, the 199-foot Twilight Zone Tower of Terror, is no ordinary thrill ride; in true Disney style, there is a back story.

As you wait in line, you are treated to the beautiful scenery of the fictional but nonetheless ritzy Hollywood Tower Hotel as it was in the 1930s. You are then ushered into a library where it is explained that in that very hotel, on a night very much like whichever night you happen to be riding, five people mysteriously disappeared into the Twilight Zone. You are then strapped into a maintenance elevator, in which you are thrown randomly into a scream-inducing 13-story free fall. You really can't beat it.

Multimedia Online

Right next to the Tower of Terror is the Rock 'n' Roller Coaster, starring Aerosmith and their music. It sends you spiraling through the neon-lit streets of Los Angeles, going from zero to 60 mph in about three seconds. Fast passes are almost always necessary to get onto this ride, and unless you feel like waiting one hour for a one minute thrill, you should grab the passes early in the day before they run out.

For all you Star Wars fans (and let's face it, who doesn't love watching Carrie Fisher in that cinnamon bun hairstyle?), Star Tours is a fun ride that takes you on an intergalactic journey with first-time droid pilot RX-24, or Rex. Of course, Rex gets nervous and navigates off-course, landing you right in the middle of a battle between the Empire and the Rebellion.

It's usually a relatively fast moving line, but a wait is almost worth it, allowing you to enjoy the Star Wars-themed decorations.

Hollywood Studios is definitely the place to see shows, one of the best being the Indiana Jones Epic Stunt Spectacular. Some of the action sequences from "Indiana Jones and the Raiders of the Lost Ark" are broken down and acted out in front of a live audience. Enthusiastic audience members are asked to participate, so bring your whip and fear of snakes and you'll be good to go.

Lights, Motors, Action is another stunt show that got its start in Disneyland Paris and is found in the back of the park. It's a hike, but worth it, as you get to see how crazy car chases through busy city streets are put together for movies.

The Muppets 3D show is entertaining, and can be a nice break from the hot Florida sun. Kermit and the crew show off their new 3D technology, complete with musical numbers and a runaway bunny.

Exploring the park is essential to getting the full experience of Hollywood Studios. The Animation Courtyard is home to shows like the "Voyage of the Little Mermaid," and in the Animation Studio you can take quizzes to determine which Disney character you are most like and put your own voice into scenes from your favorite Disney movie.

Down the Streets of America lies the Honey I Shrunk the Kids Movie Set Adventure, which is a giant playground with massive Cheerios and candy lying everywhere, giving the effect that you have been shrunk down to nothing more than the size of a flea.

Like every Disney park, Hollywood Studios has its own nighttime draw in the form of the laser show Fantasmic. Disney's most ruthless villains attempt to take over Mickey's peaceful and beautiful show, and all the heroes of years past must band together to stop them.

Altogether, there aren't many rides at Disney's Hollywood Studios, but it's a great place to relax in the cool relief of a shaded arena, watching other people running around dodging explosives and then getting your blood moving again with the thrills of the Tower of Terror and the Rock 'n' Roller Coaster.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcpherson@student.umass.edu

UMass duo create online chat service

BY SKYE MCINTYRE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Have you ever closed out an online conversation only to regret the decision later when you realized that you needed information the Instant Message held?

Get acquainted with Dexrex.com, "a secure online personal database for IM conversation."

Dexrex, aptly named and loosely translated from Latin to mean the "king index of all writing and text," according to 23-year-old University of Massachusetts student and Dexrex CEO and co-founder Richard Tortora, is like a photo album for your conversations, a completely free service that works with not only AOL Instant Messenger, but Skype, Yahoo MSN and Google chat services, among others.

According to the Web site "With Dexrex you can log Instant Messaging to a Dexrex account and search through them, share them and access them at any time from any computer with an internet connection. A simple way to manage and explore your messages. It saves your memories and preserves your world."

The idea sprung from a conversation between long-time friends Tortora and Derek Lyman, his fellow UMass student, CTO and co-founder, in the spring of 2005. At the time, the two were sophomores at the University, working on a Bachelor's degree of individual concentration in complex organizational and information systems and computer science, respectively.

The following summer the two students from Westford, Mass., built a prototype for the program, and were surprised that their idea, originally vocalized during a conversation as they walked past the Fine Arts Center, actually worked. Dexrex, in a sense, was born.

After further fine-tuning, Tortora and Lyman introduced a public beta for the site and began introducing the idea to others.

The program truly came to fruition in 2007 when Tortora and Lyman entered their idea into the UMass Entrepreneurship Initiative competition, an annual contest sponsored by the Isenberg School of Management in which UMass students and grads can enter their business plans and earn up to $5,000 in prize money to assist in turning their dreams into reality.

Though they didn't win the competition, the experience proved to be pivotal for the two and for Dexrex, as it was where they met their leading investor, Springfield-based Glenn Hanson.

After receiving their first round of funding, they were able to hire five full-time staffers and move into an office in 2007 in a small downtown space next to Charlie's Tavern in the center of Amherst. Last September, Dexrex operations moved to a new location, an unassuming second-floor area next to Gold's Gym on University Drive, which they share space with Stangl Associates, an engineering firm. They're "a good business model," said Tortora, then "add professionalism to the environment."

In addition to bringing friends such as 23-year-old Westford native, UMass grad, and now-head of media production at the small start-up, Daniel Tuccy on board, the company now has 10 full-timers.

"We kept track of people we met in classes," said Tortora. The oldest employee is 24, and the majority of the payroll are either UMass grads or students. It's a "work hard, play hard environment," he said, "not so much a job as it is a lifestyle."

"We take ourselves lightly," said Lucey. "We're just trying to have fun with it."

Their easy-going attitude and jovial manner lend an air to the company's overall feel, yet behind the office door, the pressure constantly striving to make Dexrex more accessible, user-friendly and above all, more secure.

"We're trying to set the name out there while getting people more," said Lucey.

Though Dexrex currently only works with IM – they're working on a version for Mac as well as making the technology applicable to a wider audience. Plans are also in the works that would allow users to upload old chat logs, thereby preserving cherished links, photos and important pieces of information. In addition to improving the program itself, the Web site's message board is a main focus for the staff.

Not only can users save and review old conversations, they can also access logs from any computer and share them with friends, as well as keep track of relationships through Dexrex's use of analytics, which uses mathematical formulae to analyze communications and provide statistics about various aspects such as content.

Dexrex gives users the option to show them how their relationship is with whom and how frequent and how long IM they're sending and receiving when they're talking and who they spend, and what words they use excessively most, and it does so in a supportive, aesthetically pleasing manner.

Don't send a message to your ex to see a comment you said 6 years ago and be shocked. Make sure your enemies Dexrex respect you, said Tortora. He said that the Internet "didn't come and replace [human] people in terms of" However, Dexrex provides a way to "enhance it."

Since the site's launch in December, privacy Dexrex has had full control over what is saved and what is not, allowing advertisements to be better suited to a user's personality targeted towards the appropriate audience. Dexrex "wants to be the user's terms," said Tortora.

The founders say the secure, the user not only in terms of convenience and privacy, but also by divers flying the coop, beyond simply Dexrex.com. Though the Web site features a blog, podcasts, the company's employees, Dexrex also has a Facebook application, several online advertisements, YouTube videos, Web comics and soon more.

Though the founders envision "make relationships more transparent and more powerful," and ultimately "build a tool people try to understand and index the social [relationships] that all businesses could have [to] beg[in] with."

"We don't want to be all-knowing mongers," said Lucey. "We just want to give people resources to talk about."

It takes less than [illegible] to sign up for Dexrex. Users have to enter a name and create a password. Or, just check out the site and click "take a tour." Tortora, Lyman and Lucey are on Facebook, or they can be reached at contact@dexrex.com.

Skye McIntyre is a contributing writer at smcintyr@student.umass.edu

UMass students Richard Tortora and Derek Lyman, the co-founders of dexrex.com, are ushering in a new way to instant message.

Wonderful mix of vengeance and music

Burton adaptation lacks dark comedic tone of original play

By Keri Letourneau
Collegian Correspondent

Having been around in one form or another for over 150 years, the story of "Sweeney Todd: The Demon Barber of Fleet Street" famously came to the stage in the 1979 Stephen Sondheim musical and is the basis for the Academy Award-nominated Tim Burton film.

The movie stars Johnny Depp as the falsely imprisoned Benjamin Barker, aka Sweeney Todd, whose happy life is ripped away from him by the hanging Judge Turpin (Alan Rickman), who has his eye on Barker's wife.

After returning home to London following years of exile, Todd is told that his wife poisoned herself and his little girl has since become the ward of the judge whose attentions to her are more than fatherly.

Todd takes shelter above a pie shop from former landlady Mrs. Lovett (Helena Bonham Carter), who has carried a torch for Todd for many years. She is one of the few who recognize Todd for who he truly is and gladly helps him set up shop with the promise of "the closest shave you will ever know."

When Todd loses his chance to kill the judge, he proceeds to go on a killing rampage, insisting everyone deserves to die. Mrs. Lovett, being the ever-practical accomplice, decides that the best way to get rid of the bodies and save a little money is to use the meat she's given – after all, when someone gives you a mutilated corpse, you make mutilated corpse meat pie.

Meanwhile, Todd's traveling companion, Anthony Hope (newcomer Jamie Campbell Bower) happens to "gander" up at the judge's beautiful ward Johanna and instantly falls in love. The judge has a strict hold on her, however, and so the boy plans to break Johanna out of her prison and run away with her.

The viewer should not be too concerned with this subplot, as it is mostly used for decoration to break up the monotony of blood and gore. Though these characters are used as the pillar of innocence in contrast with the rest of the movie, their one-dimensional portrayal, though beautiful in song, continually beg the question: why should I care?

Though the cast consists mainly of untrained voices, the movie still manages to lend itself greatly to the musical genre. Depp's gritty yet forceful voice actually serves him well in portraying the emotional depth of his character. He is able to sing and act at the same time, a rare feat for someone with no formal background in musical theater.

Bonham Carter has more difficult shoes to fill in playing a part done by beloved fan favorite, Angela Lansbury, but manages to pull off the breathy vocals of Mrs. Lovett quite nicely.

Toby (Edward Sanders), an orphan taken in by Mrs. Lovett, is the ultimate scene-stealer even from the formidable Depp, and manages to endear himself greatly to the audience by serenading Mrs. Lovett with the heartbreakingly sweet ballad "Not While I'm Around."

Burton lends his gothic sensibilities to this richly dark musical to great effect. The movie is almost entirely shrouded in dark hues of depressing black and grey even unto the pallor of the character's skins. The rare but sudden bursts of color usually trickle down Todd's expert razors. Drench seems to be a more proper word, as the blood runneth over the screen in buckets, not sparing the audience a single stroke of Todd's insatiable bloodlust.

The movie's greatest failure lies in the greatest contrast between the play and the movie. Though purists will argue that the abridged or omitted songs were a great loss, the biggest omission was the deliciously dark humor that prevailed in the play but is almost entirely absent in the movie except for a moment or two. It is an especially confusing loss considering Burton's penchant for dark humor is a part of what made his career ("Edward Scissorhands," "A Nightmare before Christmas," "Ed Wood").

Overall, the movie stays faithful to the tone and dramatic structure of the play while using the advances that the cinema can provide to appeal to a whole new kind of audience. Whether a fan of the play or someone entirely new to the story, everyone will come away with a clear understanding of Todd's tragic descent into madness and most probably a need for a good comedy.

Keri Letourneau can be reached at kletourn@student.umass.edu.

SWEENEY TODD: THE DEMON BARBAR OF FLEET STREET

STARRING: JOHNNY DEPP, ALAN RICKMAN AND HELENA BONHAM CARTER

B+

Top: Director Tim Burton and Johnny Depp have collaborated on six different projects to date. Bottom: Johnny Depp stars in the title role as a wrongly convicted man seeking revenge on a judge.

THE COLLEGIAN NOW FEATURES EXCLUSIVE MULTIMEDIA CONTENT AT OUR WEBSITE, WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE WRONG FOOT
is no place to begin
start off right
with the most used books & more
home of THE HALF BACK GUARANTEE
We'll pay half of the purchase price at buyback for books with this sticker, guaranteed.
UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619
efollett.com ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.
Are you on THE list?
Register your textbooks for 5% more at buyback.
www.efollett.com/VIP

XU backcourt shines

BASKETBALL from page 10

to score in double figures. Like Harris, forward Gary Forbes also entered the game averaging over 20 points per game, but failed to reach that mark – shooting 5-of-15 from the field and missing half his 10 free throw attempts.

Xavier's Stanley Burrell – generally considered the pre-eminent perimeter defender in the conference – played a big role in their collective struggles, but Miller was quick to point out it was a collective effort on the defensive end.

"I'd like to give Stanley full credit, because he's an excellent defender," he said. "He did a good job tonight but he didn't always guard him, and I thought our team did a very good job on Ricky Hrris. The way UMass plays, you really have to have a team approach to stop them."

Xavier point guard Drew Lavender led a balanced scoring attack with a team-high 19 points. Burrell, Derrick Brown and C.J. Anderson all scored in double-figures, while two players scored eight. Lavender grabbed a game-high nine rebounds and turned the ball over once, but more importantly controlled the tempo of the game, not letting UMass set the pace.

"Sometimes when you play against a pace like UMass's, you can fall prey to playing more like them, and less like you," Miller said. "And I thought we had a good balance of playing like who we are.

"Drew Lavender was the difference of the game."

Ford essentially agreed with that statement.

"They got a great point guard that does a great job of controlling their basketball team; as well as I've seen," he said. "He does a great job of controlling the tempo, his team and himself. They have a lot of weapons, we've got a couple, but they didn't play well tonight."

Etienne Brower led all scorers with 22 points off the bench for the Minutemen, but three starters (Harris, Tony Gaffney and Dante Milligan) combined for 10 points. Forbes had 16, point guard Chris Lowe had 12 and the bench – aside from Brower – contributed just five points.

Xavier entered halftime with a 34-23 lead. The lead ballooned to 18 after just four minutes.

UMass's next game is against Duquesne (13-5, 3-2 A-10) on Wednesday night in Pittsburgh, Pa.

NOTES

Xavier took over the lead at 8-7 four minutes into the game and never relinquished it. UMass's biggest lead of the game was two points ... Xavier collected 17 offensive rebounds, as UMass was outrebounded by 11 (41 to 30) ... Both teams recorded 16 turnovers and 11 assists ... Brower hit 10-of-11 from the foul line, but UMass struggled as a team, making 67.9 percent of its 28 attempts.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

Forbes, Harris struggle in loss above-average individual performance, like Etienne Brower's 22 points Sunday, will not be enough to win.

BALANCE from page 10

"Forbes, [Chris] Lowe, Harris, Brower – these guys are the backbone of our basketball team," Ford said. "You have to bring you're A-game every night, and it can't just be one of them. All of them have to play well. Anytime we've had success, it's been a group effort. We've gotten away from that a little bit."

It's no coincidence that Forbes and Harris averaged a combined 42 points in impressive wins over Syracuse, Boston College, Houston and Dayton. Lowe and Brower have enjoyed several strong offensive performances, but it's difficult to envision a situation where the pair can consistently score if Forbes and Harris continue their offensive woes.

Though most teams are probably not skilled enough to take both of the Minutemen's leading scorers out of the game, Ford acknowledges that opponents tend to be better at exploiting weaknesses as the season progresses.

"As the season goes along, teams are going to start to cutting down on your first and second options," Ford said. "That's when you have to move the ball around and create shots for your teammates out of your offense – not creating shots 1-on-1 all of the time."

For example, in previous games, Harris found himself wide open on the wing, ready to field a pass for a 3-pointer or a chance to penetrate into the frontcourt. But when those driving lanes did not appear and the Musketeer perimeter defense kept him in check, Harris struggled to generate offense.

Even though Harris was largely matched against Xavier guard Stanley Burrell, who is regarded as one of the A-10's best defenders, the sophomore's lack of adjustment significantly hindered UMass' ability to score.

Harris' inability to adapt stands in stark contrast to the modifications Xavier made to its offensive game plan – a virtue that further lauds the importance of balance.

Once it became clear that the 3-point shot would not be a significant part of the Musketeer's scoring arsenal, the team adjusted in the second half. Xavier – a team that averages a league-leading 40 percent on 3-point shots – made four 3-pointers from 21 attempts. The team focused on exposing the Minutemen's frontcourt weakness after halftime while scoring 28 of its 43 second-half points in the paint.

"For our team to be able to win this game – knowing that we can better be on offense – is something that is very meaningful to our future," Xavier coach Sean Miller said. "As we all know, there will be some nights where the offense comes and goes, but that tough defense has to be the constant. And we had that tonight."

Clearly, Xavier is the model for the league in terms of balance. Its impressive non-conference wins and first-place standing in the A-10 reflects that value. The Musketeers have many talented players who thrive on making teammates better and playing their individual roles in order to give the team its best chance to win.

"That motto, you win as a team and you lose as a team, that couldn't be more true about us," Xavier coach Sean Miller said. "We're an excellent rebounding team, but we do it by committee. We average about 77 points per game, but we have six players in double figures. It's a fun way to play because you really are dependent on your teammates."

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu

Gary Forbes tries to maneuver free of Xavier's C.J. Anderson during Sunday afternoon's loss at the Mullins Center. The Musketeers succeeded in stifling Forbes and the UMass offense.

Men place third, women fifth

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts indoor track and field teams traveled to Boston Friday to participate in the Reebok Boston Indoor Games at the Reggie Lewis Center.

The Minutemen placed third out of 11 teams, and the Minutewomen took fifth out of 13 teams. Boston College took first in the men's meet while Rhode Island did so in the women's competition.

The Minutemen had a successful meet with sophomore Tyler Cotto leading the way. Cotto qualified for the New England Championships with his second place finish in the 55-meter hurdles; Cotto had a time of 7.73 seconds.

The underclassmen had a strong showing for the men throughout the meet. Sophomore Jonathan Pierce took first place in the 5,000 meters. Freshman Darius Velez placed seventh in the 55-meter dash. Sophomore Ian Hackney placed fifth in the 200-meter dash. Sophomore Samuel Laorenza placed fourth in the 400-meter dash, close behind was sophomore Andrew O'Donnell in fifth place and freshman Matthew Gulino placed seventh. Freshman Daniel Schwartz placed sixth in the 500-meter dash.

In longer distances, freshman Kris Carle placed seventh in the 1-mile run, less than a second later senior Matt Klypka crossed the finish line for eighth place. Sophomore Ryan DiOrio finished the 800-meter run in fourth place and senior Ryan Durkin placed 10th. Junior Josh Boone placed second in the 1,000-meter run, and freshman Scott VanderMolen placed third. In the 5,000-meter run sophomore Andrew McCann placed seventh.

The 4x400-meter relay team placed fourth on the weekend. The team consisted of Barksdale, Hackney, O'Donnell and Laorenza in 3 minutes, 25.71 seconds. The distance medley of Boone, Hackney, Durkin and Klyka took fifth place with a time of 10:38.98.

The Minutemen also had a strong showing in field events. In the high jump, sophomore Brian Miller took third place with a height of six feet, 5.0 inches. Miller also did well in the long jump with a distance of 21 feet, 6.75 inches for a third-place finish. In the pole vault, freshman Sean Busch placed eighth with a height of 13 feet, 3.5 inches.

The Minutewomen also did well at the Reebok games. Senior Danielle Bolt had the best performance when she placed first in the 55-meter dash with a time of 7.16 seconds. This time was recorded as the third fastest in UMass history. Her time also qualified her for the New England Championships and the ECAC Championships. Bolt also qualified for the New England Championships with her fourth-place finish in the 200-meter dash.

Not only did Bolt qualify for the New England Championships, sophomore Holly Heinricher placed fifth in the 200-meter dash with a time of 26.08. Freshman Gina Perno placed seventh in the 1,000 meters with a time of 2:59.35. This qualifies her for the New England Championships.

Senior Christina DeRosa placed 10th in the one mile run with a time of 5:8.69. Freshman Shiyi Zan followed close behind for 11th place.

The 4x400-meter relay team placed ninth, the team consisted of sophomore Brittany Bakanowski, freshman Stephanie Aguguo, freshman Jaclyn Imhoff and Heinricher. In the distance medley, the team consisting of Zan, senior Kristen Bakanowski, Perno and DeRosa placed third.

Kristen Bakanowski also participated in the pole vault competition where she placed fifth with a height of 11 feet, 3.75 inches. Aguguo competed in the triple jump where she finished in fourth place.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu.

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
Serving others since 1969 -- and STILL making a difference!
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Spring Semester 2008 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Room 101 • Feb. 4 (Mon) • Feb. 5 (Tues) • Feb. 6 (Wed)
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Feb. 7th @ Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION UMASS AMHERST
Thousands of Dollars in Scholarships Available!
The UMass Amherst Alumni Association is proud to offer the following scholarships:
Leaders in the Making Scholarship
Four $2,000 scholarships given to promising sophomores and juniors with diverse records of achievement in academics and volunteerism.
Life Member Scholarship for Internships
One $2,000 scholarship given to a sophomore or junior to help defray the cost of a summer, unpaid, away-from-home internship.
Michael W. Morris Scholarship
One $2,000 scholarship given to a student from Lawrence or Lowell, MA. The scholarship is in honor of Lawrence native and longtime UMass Amherst champion, Michael W. Morris '63.
Senior Leadership Award
Twenty-five $500 savings bonds will be given to graduating seniors who have demonstrated outstanding leadership and service to the campus community. Students must be nominated by faculty or staff.
DEADLINE FOR MOST SCHOLARSHIPS IS FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 2008
For scholarship eligibility and applications, visit UMassAlumni.com/students or Memorial Hall
You were. You are. UMASS.

Better It's what we do...
Helping you feel better...
- routine, same-day and urgent medical care
- mental health care
- eye care and optical services
- physical therapy
- acupuncture
- mind/body medicine
- specialty care
- allergy clinic
- full-service pharmacy
- faculty/staff assistance program
- onsite laboratory and radiology services
- and more

Helping you live better...
- health education
- substance abuse prevention programs
- tobacco cessation
- nutrition and eating disorders services
- athletic health services
- travel medicine clinic
- support and therapy groups
- volunteer, outreach and academic opportunities
- online health information, resources
- big discounts on eyewear, pharmacy products and more

Taking better care of you...
- college health specialists
- convenient campus location
- open 24/7 during the semester

University Health Services
577-5000 • www.umass.edu/uhs
UMASS AMHERST

UVM's third line sparks win

HOCKEY from page 10

"We had a chance to clear the zone, but we didn't make the defenseman-to-defenseman pass," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "Then there was a turnover in the middle of the rink, and Cory thought we were going to possess the puck and Chris got caught going the wrong way on the turnover. Then they had a 3-on-2."

Brian Roloff quickly fed Stacey who beat Dainton for the game's final score. UVM's third line — featuring Stacey, Roloff and sophomore Viktor Stalberg scored both goals in the tie and accounted two in Friday's victory.

"They were the difference in the weekend. I thought [Friday] night, they were our best line, and I thought again tonight that they sparked us," Vermont coach Kevin Sneddon said. "They've only been together for a few games, but they've produced a majority of our offense. It's nice to have three lines that can contribute some offense."

Both teams forced chances in the final period and overtime, but the goaltenders preserved the tie with some nifty saves.

In the final minute of regulation, UVM's Peter Lenes skated into the UMass zone to Dainton's right. The net minder came out to cut down the angle, and Lenes fired a low, hard drive. The puck stuck in Dainton's pad, and the freshman spun around thinking the puck came loose. After realizing where it was, he dropped to the ice to freeze play with the UVM players bearing down him hoping to slap it into the net.

Rebounds were a problem for Dainton in the first game of the weekend, but they were not the only defensive problems for the Minutemen.

"[Vermont] managed to find some seams in our defense more times this weekend than I can remember us giving up this year," Cahoon said.

Viktor Stalberg opened the scoring with a wrist shot from the right face-off circle that beat a screened Dainton. The Minutemen failed to clear the initial rebound which led to an extended possession for the Catamounts in the UMass zone. Stacey possessed the puck at the high left slot before finding a seam in the UMass defense and sailing it to Stalberg.

Marcou scored his first goal 11 seconds after the UVM tally. After Quirk won the face off at center ice, Marcou skated in along the left wing and dangled toward the net. A quick backhanded shot kicked off the blocker of UVM goaltender Mike Spillane and into the net.

Justin Braun started the rush which led to Marcou's second goal. Braun, Quirk and Marcou had a 3-on-1 as they broke the UVM blue line. Braun unleashed a hard slap-shot on Spillane who made the initial save. The rebound hounced loose and Marcou banged it into the net for his second of the game.

BRIAN TSUCHIDA/COLLEGIAN

Junior center Cory Quirk assisted on two UMass goals in two games against Vermont over the weekend.

Jordan Virtue tied the game at 3-3 at 4:57 of the second period off a feed from Matt Burto. A Vermont defenseman tried to clear the puck around the goal and out of the zone, but it kicked off the back of the net to Burto who patiently waited for Virtue instead of trying a stuff shot attempt on Spillane. Virtue headed for the slot, and Burto hit him in stride; the one-timer beat Spillane over his right shoulder.

Bad luck bit the Minutemen 10 minutes into the third period. Nolet and UVM's Jack Downing went into the corner to the left of Dainton. The players battled and Downing fell to the ice, but he maintained possession of the puck and blindly sent it in front of the net looking for a teammate. No Catamount was in front of Dainton, but UMass's Topher Bevis was. The puck deflected off Bevis' skate and by Dainton.

Colin Vock scored 2:27 later for a 5-3 lead before Marcou completed his hat trick with 5 seconds left in the game.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com

BRIAN TSUCHIDA/COLLEGIAN

Junior winger Chris Davis assisted on Martin Nolet's first period goal against Vermont on Saturday. Davis is second on the Minutemen with 12 assists, behind James Marcou's 15.

Harris leads on defense

W. BASKETBALL from page 10

awards, and is averaging 13.2 points and 11.3 rebounds from the center position.

Phillips was a non-factor for the majority of the game, and was held to two points on 1-of-3 shooting and six rebounds.

Teammate Amber Harris leads the team in scoring at 15.4 points per game, but she was also controlled on the offensive end, finishing the game 2-of-8 from the field with 10 points.

Despite her poor offensive performance, Harris made up for it on the defensive end. She grabbed seven rebounds and blocked a season-high seven Minutewoman shots.

UMass needs someone besides Mills, Rosanio and Teya Wright to grab rebounds this year, and Whitney McDonald did so against the Musketeers, finishing the game with eight.

"Whitney's tall, she's strong, she takes some pressure off, she sets good screens, and she battled," Dacko said. "She competed; every moment she was in there she gave us everything she's got."

NOTES

Xavier outrebounded the Minutewomen 41-35 overall, including 15-11 on the offensive boards ... Amber Harris won A-10 Player of the Week for her efforts in the wins UMass and Duquesne ... Tudy Reed came was the only player to score off the Xavier bench with nine points, while the solo UMass bench point came from Sakera Young.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu

Minutemen continue success with wins over Colgate, BC

BRIAN TSUCHIDA/COLLEGIAN

Zack Priest and the Minutemen defeated Colgate 190.5-90.5 in Hamilton, N.Y., over the weekend. Priest won the 100-yard backstroke for UMass with a time 54.57.

SWIMMING from page 10

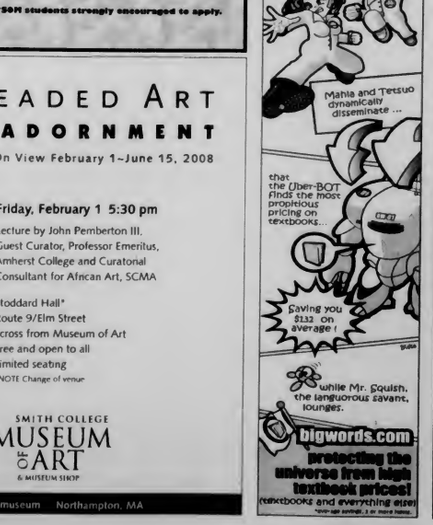
Freshman Jessica Starosielec continued her strong season, finishing first in the 200-yard breaststroke.

Christa Narus won the 200-yard butterfly, which she holds the school record for.

The Minutewomen fared better in their previous meet, against the Eagles in Chestnut Hill. Narus had an incredible day in the pool, winning three individual events. The Stony Brook, N.Y., native won the 100- and 200-yard butterfly events, as well as the 500-yard freestyle.

Starosielec and Walsh also took at least two events. Starosielec won the 100- and 200-yard breaststroke events, while Walsh took the 100- and 200-yard backstroke events. Starosielec was followed by junior Jackie Porter and freshman Tavis Potter. Walsh's time in the 200-yard backstroke was her fastest time of the season in that event.

Junior Karen Upperco took first-place in the 1-meter dive and Fogerty won the 3-meter dive.



The Minutemen had solid performances from three swimmers who each placed first in multiple events. Freshman Brian Schmidt took first place in both the 100- and 200-yard breaststroke events.

Sophomore Juan Moliere padded the Maroon and White's lead with wins in the 50- and 100-yard freestyle events. Schmidt and Moliere combined their efforts in the first-place lane of the 200-yard medley relay; Schmidt swam the lead leg while Moliere was at the anchor position.

Rappe led the charge for the Minutemen on the boards. He led a complete sweep in both the 1- and 3-meter dives. Johnson took second in both events, as all five UMass divers finished ahead of their opponents on both boards.

Redshirt senior Derek Castellana finished first in the 100-yard butterfly and was second only to sophomore Mike Berthaume in the 200 fly. Sophomore Andrew Willbrant won the 100-yard backstroke and freshman Max Butler won the 200-yard backstroke to round-out the top-finishers for the Minutemen.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Looking for a Job?
The Daily Collegian
is seeking a hard-working, motivated undergrads to fill our Advertising Representative Positions.
To Apply: Contact Alex Bender or Marsea Whooten @ 545-3500 for more information.
•Excellent business experience!
•Gain valuable sales experience
•Get credits for work
•Build your resume
*SOM students strongly encouraged to apply.

AFRICAN BEADED ART
POWER AND ADORNMENT
On View February 1~June 15, 2008

Friday, February 1 5:30 pm
Lecture by John Pemberton III, Guest Curator, Professor Emeritus, Amherst College and Curatorial Consultant for African Art, SCMA
Stoddard Hall*
Route 9/Elm Street
across from Museum of Art
Free and open to all
Limited seating
*NOTE Change of venue
ART MENTOR FOUNDATION LUCERNE
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP
413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS LOOKING FOR WRITERS WITHIN THE FIVE COLLEGE AREA INTERESTED?
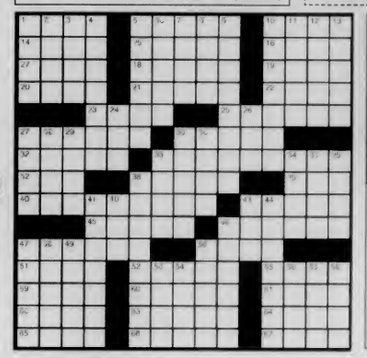
news@dailycollegian.com

TAKE A PHOTO OF YOURSELF WITH YOUR COMPLETED SUDOKU OR CROSSWORD AND SEE YOURSELF ON THE COMICS PAGE
COMICS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM



Skunky funk nugget.

			8	5	1			4
4							7
	5	9			3
6		7	3
8	9						5	3
					8	4		9
			4			8	2
	7							6
3			2	8	6

ACROSS
1 Kind of jockey
5 Fire remains
10 May or Ann
14 Exploiter
15 Tire in a trunk
16 Oast or kiln
17 Toward shelter
18 Enraged
19 Shoe form
20 Actress Olin
21 Where the action is
22 Dieter's word
23 Sound quality
25 Pants patcher
27 Leave in the lurch
30 Uncanny
32 Expunge
33 European distance
37 Hopper
38 Bolshevik leader
39 Climbing vine
40 Young plants
43 Wish granter
45 Incomes from properties
46 Makes merry
47 Enfeasting earnestly
50 Attended
51 Holiday song
52 Sibilant letters
55 Fuzzy textures
59 Head-to-head fight for honor
60 Post-game sum up
61 "Casablanca" role
62 Latin being
63 Irregularly notched
64 Intrusive
65 Lou or Wilis
66 Saw socially
67 Obtains

DOWN
1 Twofold
2 Wight or Skye
3 Witnessed
4 Invents
5 Obliquely
6 Skyline feature
7 Possess (go bragh!
9 Drug induced sleep
10 Make an impact
11 Benefit
12 Garlic-basil sauce
13 Go in
24 Mine output
26 Appendage
27 Collision newbies
28 HOME'S part
29 Rational
30 Airfoils
31 Yale alumni
33 Superman's alias
34 Prong of a pitchfork
35 Nefarious
36 Cereal grains
38 Stayed around
41 Instructed by repetition
42 Dykstra of baseball
43 Ritzy rock
44 Word before gown or primrose
46 Spoke roughly
47 Beneath
48 Provoke
49 V formation fliers
50 Knock off
53 Evening in Bologna
54 Aberdonian or Gaswegian
56 Burn balm
57 Hey over here!
58 Voices a thought

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN wants YOU!

Submit your comics!
comics@dailycollegian.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"That does not satisfy my logic circuits."

-Optimus Prime

CRESTFALLEN COMICS EDITOR WAITING IN VAIN FOR STUDENT COMICS BY T. REX

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
When normal cereal gets you down, mix it up by adding strawberry milk to a bowl of Cheetos. YUM!

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Take the time to interact with your many fans and various paparazzos. The people of UMass adore you.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
The devil is currently on sabbatical. Spire will be acting God of the Underworld until the end of add/drop.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Start a movement to kill the whales, the people of Earth are ready for a paradigm shift.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Use the introductions portion of your first Tuesday class as stage to perform a suggestive and racy interpretive dance.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
It is more than acceptable to steal internet if you are using it to post pornography on a public forum.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You smell better than a freshly opened can of tennis balls.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Avoid stress by addressing all the items posted on your brain's bulletin board in a timely manner.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Start an old school recess session outside of the Student Union with a box of sidewalk chalk and a Skip-It.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Your skin is looking a bit crocodilian. Find a burly man to aggressively scrub your entire body with a pumice stone.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
If anyone accuses you of being a fraidy-cat, simply grow a beard. There is nothing more fearless than facial hair.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Become a more complete person by wearing Calvin Klein undies and watching every movie that Mark Wahlberg has ever made.

Straight up, we got no comics so you best be sending some.
comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

PLACE YOUR CLASSIFIED AD HERE!

A Collegian classified is a great way to advertise to the Five College community. Reach over 20,000 readers daily!

• CALL (413) 545-3500 TO SPEAK TO AN EXPERIENCED ADVERTISING REPRESENTATIVE
• VISIT US AT WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TO SUBMIT YOUR CLASSIFIED ONLINE
• OR VISIT US IN THE CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT!

MONDAY - FRIDAY 8:30 - 3:30

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, JANUARY 29, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Maroon and White falls short

Late surge not enough against A-10 leader

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When point guard Chris Lowe's errant pass went to his coach, rather than to a teammate, Travis Ford used the ball — not his voice — to convey his displeasure about his team's performance.

Early in the second half with his Massachusetts men's basketball team falling further behind Xavier on Sunday night and struggling on offense, Ford pounded the ball into the ground, narrowly avoiding a technical foul from the officials.

Xavier	77
UMass	65

Already leading at the time, 39-30, Xavier proceeded to go on a 10-1 run immediately following the incident to pull away from the Minutemen — ultimately surviving a late UMass charge to win, 77-65, at the Mullins Center.

The Minutemen trimmed an 18-point Xavier lead to five at 68-63 with less than two minutes remaining, but the Musketeers scored on three straight possessions to ensure the victory.

"They played hard, but we're just not putting anything with it right now. We're just not playing very well; it's that plain and simple," Ford said after the game.

With their second consecutive loss, the Minutemen (13-6, 2-3 Atlantic 10) are likely on the outside looking in on the NCAA Tournament come March. Xavier (17-4, 5-1 A-10) took over the conference lead with the victory and moved to No. 15 in the Associated Press Poll from No. 23 yesterday.

Xavier struggled from the field in the first half (10-of-27, 3-of-15 from the perimeter) but shot well from the floor after halftime (15-of-30) after making a concerted effort to get shots inside. The Musketeers finished at just under 44 percent for the game, but hit 60 percent of their 2-point field goal attempts.

"We played an excellent UMass team on its court, and we struggled shooting the three – so for our basketball team to win this game, knowing that we can play better than our offense did is something very meaningful for our future," Xavier coach Sean Miller said. "We all know there are going to be those nights where the offense comes and goes, but that tough defense is something that has to be the constant. And we had that tonight."

UMass shooting guard Ricky Harris was held to a season-low seven points on 2-of-8 shooting, marking the first time in 19 games this season he failed

See BASKETBALL on page 7

MICHAEL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

Etienne Brower and the Massachusetts men's basketball dropped a 77-65 decision to Xavier Sunday at the Mullins Center. Brower led all scorers with 22 points despite coming off the bench for the Minutemen, who have now lost two consecutive Atlantic 10 games.

Well-rounded offense leads XU to victory

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Any athlete in any sport will tell you that balance is one of the most important keys to success.

In the Massachusetts men's basketball team's home loss to Xavier on Sunday, balance was evidenced on the court. Only that balance was exuded by the Musketeers — not the Minutemen.

Not only is Xavier the only team in the country that averages six players with at least 10 points per game, the Musketeers have one of the conference's best points guards in Drew Lavender and several talented big men.

"You can't just stop one or two guys," UMass coach Travis Ford said of Xavier. "They're as well balanced of a team that I've seen in a long time. They're a very good basketball team."

It's that kind of balance that Ford has wanted his team to achieve since the beginning of the season, especially on offense.

In direct contrast to Xavier's statistical anomaly, UMass is the only Division I team to have two players averaging 20 or more points. Senior forward Gary Forbes (20.5 points per game) and sophomore guard Ricky Harris (20.7) obviously lead the way on offense for the Minutemen.

But when the pair has trouble scoring, UMass becomes a team reliant upon its defense — something that it is not designed to be.

Against Xavier, Forbes and Harris combined for just 25 points, while shooting 30 percent from the floor. Each player struggled to create shots, as the usually reliable 3-point duo made one shot from beyond the arc.

Though, much of their offense is derived from penetrating to the basket from the perimeter. Had Forbes and Harris not managed 14 free throw attempts, the final score would not have been as close.

"These guys who consider themselves to be good players, maybe should step up and be good players," Ford said when asked about what needs to happen for his team to get back on track after losing two consecutive A-10 games. "I think we do have some really good players who need to step up and carry this basketball team."

Yet it remains to be seen if a team that places its scoring load on two players can distinguish itself in a competitive conference like this year's Atlantic 10. And with many young players, it will be difficult for UMass to redistribute the offensive burden.

Ford knows that his upperclassmen will need to continue scoring without meaningful contributions from the remainder of the roster. However, the Minutemen's primary scorers need to play to their potential and one

See BALANCE on page 7

Mass Attack slide continues

Winless streak stands at six after loss and tie with UVM

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A hat trick from freshman James Marcou and a solid performance on the power play weren't enough to earn the Massachusetts hockey team a victory in either end of a weekend series with Hockey East rival Vermont.

The Minutemen fell to the Catamounts, 5-4, Friday night before skating to a 2-2 tie with UVM Saturday night. UMass is now 0-5-1 in its last six games — all Hockey East matches. In that time, UMass fell from fourth place in Hockey East to eighth and from fifth to 15th in the USCHO/CSTV Division I Men's poll.

UMass	2
Vermont	2
Vermont	5
UMass	4

The road to the Hockey East Tournament continues this weekend for the Minutemen with a road game against Northeastern and match with Maine at the Mullins Center.

After allowing an early goal to UVM, the Minutemen drew two penalties within seven seconds of each other and quickly converted the 5-on-3 into a 2-1 lead.

Senior captain Mike Kostka took a pass from junior Cory Quirk at the mid point and waited for a screen to develop in front of Catamount net minder Joe Fallon. Kostka wristed the puck toward the net and it found its way through Fallon's legs. The goal was Kostka's fifth of the season — all five have come on the man advantage.

Kostka's goal came 25 seconds into the two-man advantage, giving UMass a 5-on-4 for 1:28.

UMass sent the puck into the Catamount zone and around the net. A scrum developed to the Fallon's right. Junior Chris Davis kicked the puck out of the tussle to Will Ortiz who turned and quickly fired the puck to sophomore Martin Nolet at the high left point. Nolet quickly sent the puck on net and past Fallon to give UMass a 2-1 lead.

The two goals gave UMass its first lead of the weekend, but the Catamounts came out strong in the second period. At 4:35, freshman Wahsontiio Stacey tied the game with his fourth goal of the season. UMass's sloppy play in the neutral zone led to an odd-man rush for Vermont, and the Catamounts didn't waste the opportunity.

See HOCKEY on page 8

BRIAN TRUSCOTT/COLLEGIAN

Vermont goaltender Joe Fallon denies UMass freshman winger James Marcou during Saturday's 2-2 tie at the Mullins Center. Marcou recorded a hat trick against the Catamounts in a 5-4 loss Friday.

Poor shooting dooms UMass

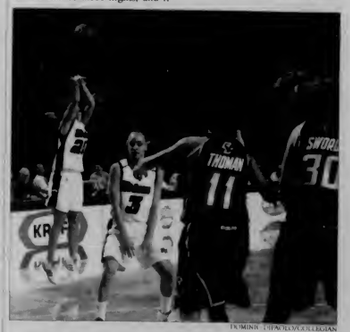
BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When a team shoots 57.2 percent for an entire game, they usually win. When both teams combine to shoot that same number, it becomes anyone's game.

The Massachusetts women's basketball team (9-10, 1-3 Atlantic 10) got senior forward Kate Mills 20 shots, but she struggled and missed 15, while the rest of the team was unable to muster enough points and fell on the road at Xavier, 51-39.

Xavier	51
UMass	39

The Minutewomen return home to play Fordham at 11:45 a.m. tomorrow at the Mullins Center.



"[Mills] was going 1-on-1, she shoots those shots every day, the same shots she gets against everybody we play," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "They didn't double up, they didn't triple up on her, she was getting it deep in the lane and turning with her hook shot but it just wasn't dropping. It was one of those nights, and it tormented her."

When Mills struggles, the Minutewomen need Pam Rosanio to score, and she did, scoring 14 points and grabbing seven rebounds, on an efficient 6-of-12 from the floor. However, she also had seven turnovers, and minus Mills' 14 points, the rest of the team combined for 11 points. Xavier (14-6, 4-1 A-10) made nine 3-pointers and that enabled them to secure the victory.

Although her team struggled to score points, Dacko was pleased with the Minutewomen's overall performance. The team has one road win this season, and had the team shot better, they would have had a chance to defeat one of the top teams in the conference.

One major concern for the Minutewomen coming in was former McDonald's All-American Ta'Shia Phillips. The freshman has eight A-10 Rookie of the Week

See W. BASKETBALL on page 8

DOMINIC CHAVEZ/COLLEGIAN

Stefanie Gerardot and the Minutewomen fell on the road to Xavier Saturday, 51-39. The junior struggled and had four points.

Minutemen sweep; Minutewomen split

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Multiple wins for individual athletes were invaluable for the Massachusetts swimming and diving teams in its last two meets. The Minutemen beat both Colgate and Boston College while the Minutewomen defeated BC and fell to Colgate.

The Minutemen won nearly every event at Colgate's Lineberry Natatorium, taking all but three swims. Senior A.J. Vozella was the first of three UMass captains to capture a win in an individual event. Vozella led a sweep of the first three places in the 200-yard freestyle. Vozella also led a sweep in the 100-yard freestyle as well.

Senior co-captain Zack Priest won the 100-yard backstroke and was part of the second-place-finishing lane in the 200-yard medley relay.

Senior co-captain John Weaver took two events as well. Weaver led a UMass sweep in the 100-yard breaststroke and won the 200-yard breaststroke event in his next swim.

Overall, the Minutemen took the top three places in five individual events, including the 1- and 3-meter dives, despite lacking senior co-captain R.J. Rappe. Freshman Adam Duffield filled the void left by the absence of Rappe in the 1-meter dive, taking first place. Sophomore Byron Johnson won the 3-meter dive.

Freshman Anne Fogerty gave the Minutewomen a boost in their meet, leading a sweep of both the 1- and 3-meter dives. However Fogerty's efforts weren't enough, as the Minutewomen fell to Colgate by 42 points.

Sophomore Elizabeth Walsh also scored points for the Maroon and White, winning the 200-yard backstroke and placing second in the 100-yard backstroke. Walsh also swam lead for the second-place-finishing lane in the 200-yard medley relay and swam anchor in the 200-yard freestyle relay in which her lane also finished second.

See SWIMMING on page 8

CAHOON SIGNS CONTRACT EXTENSION | PAGE 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 40 LO: 33 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 30, 2008

Republican Club secedes from MACR

Club president under fire

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Republican club seceded from the Massachusetts Alliance of College Republicans last night amid calls from leaders in the state-wide organization for club president Brad DeFlumeri to step down.

Voting 5-4 to sever ties with the organization, the decision came after MACR chairman Brian Gwozdz e-mailed members of the club and other campus Republican groups across the commonwealth urging them to impeach DeFlumeri on the grounds of alleged sexual harassment and inappropriate conduct.

"I think the decisions made by the Republican club were very sound and practical decisions that consisted with the long-term best interests of the club," DeFlumeri said. "I think the allegations set forward by MACR were unfounded and absurd and our votes clearly indicated that we rejected everything that they asserted and we stand firm and proud as an independent and fully functional UMass Amherst Republican club."

Gwozdz alleges that DeFlumeri has over the past several months, sexually harassed female members of the MACR member clubs. The e-mail signed by 29 MACR officials and leaders of campus Republican groups state-wide called for DeFlumeri's removal from his position as president by Feb. 6, at which time MACR would have moved to derecognize the UMass Republican club.

The Massachusetts Alliance of College Republicans has urged the Republican club President Brad DeFlumeri to step down from his post after allegations of inappropriate conduct.

"It's just gotten way out of control. We've gotten a lot of complaints over the past couple of weeks of harassing emails and Facebook comments," said Gwozdz, a former UMass student and UMass Republican club member who is currently enrolled at Boston College. "Some people are worried about their safety."

DeFlumeri rejected the allegations raised by Gwozdz and MACR calling them "outlandish and false."

According to DeFlumeri, Gwozdz had a prior conflict of a personal nature that has influence his move to unseat the Republican club president.

While Gwozdz confirmed the past dispute he refuted accusations that he had "a personal vendetta" against DeFlumeri.

"Our entire exec board all realized what he'd been doing

See REPUBLICAN on page 3

Catalan language taught

BY DAVID HUMPHREYS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When Andreu Pedró-Garcia walks into his class every afternoon, he is one of only two university instructors in the state teaching the Catalan language.

This class, which was launched at the University of Massachusetts last fall, is an intensive language course. The class currently has 10 students enrolled, and the potential for 20 more. In such an intimate setting, Pedró-Garcia can tailor the lessons to fit the students' needs and help them learn how to communicate effectively.

"I used to live in Barcelona, and everything's in Catalan and I never learned the language," said Ayami Mizuno, a freshman who took the course last semester. "Now I'm starting to understand what everyone's saying."

Alvaro Acosta, a self-described "language freak," took the course because he comes from Spain and never took the time in the past to learn Catalan.

"It's ironic … I never thought of learning Catalan in the States. I'm really enjoying it," he said.

Catalan is spoken by around eight million people in regions such as Catalonia and Valencia in Spain, the Balearic Islands, Andorra and the Italian island of Sardinia.

Although it is mainly spoken in a small corner of Europe, Catalan has had a troubled past. "The history of Catalan

See CATALAN on page 3

DC strives for local and fresh

BY ADRIENNE BENN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Students at the University of Massachusetts had the pleasure of dining on a locally grown dinner Sunday night at the Dining Commons.

Some 13,500 students on meal plans have the option to sample fresh fruits and produce, meats and fish that come from surrounding farms within five miles of the University's four DCs.

"We've changed our menu to integrate seasonal vegetables from local farmers," said Ken Toong, Director of Dining and Retail Services at UMass.

The national trend of eating only locally grown foods that travel less than 100 miles from home has entered campus, as University chefs use fresh produce, fruits, legumes and nuts while cooking. Much of the stock is tomatoes, spinach, asparagus, berries, eggs and apples, all of which are purchased locally.

This means that the made-to-order mode of service that is seen throughout the campus uses products that are fresher and healthier for its students. It also pushes them to become committed to local purchasing.

"The fresh quality I constantly received at the DCs pressed me to expand my grocery shopping," said UMass alumnus Jarrett Dawson. "I now shop as much as I can at local farm stands when it is in season."

The locally grown movement entered the UMass campus around five years ago, when heightened demands arose for more consistent products that were healthier for customers. Toong wanted to give students better quality and a more consistent product.

"Eat well, eat smart, small play, big flavor," said Toong. "I wanted to give students a better quality and more variety."

Toong succeeded in making a lasting impression when dealing with consistency and variety. Students who now live off-campus miss the selection of fresh vegetables they once received on a daily basis.

"You never get eight different vegetables to put on a salad when you are only buying for one person," said off-campus resident Chelsea Cerutti. "I used to be able to choose from carrots, cucumbers, and celery and could pick one of nine dressings to put on my salad. I really miss the variety of the DC."

UMass currently holds the record for being the third largest school in the country in terms of revenue. After falling short of Michigan State and Penn State University, UMass leads the way in terms of buying locally grown products within a five mile radius. In 2007, they purchased 20 percent of their stock from local farmers, up from 15 percent in 2005.

"We set aside $450,000 of our budget for local produce this year," said Toong. "This helped to support several farms in Western Massachusetts. By 2009 we project that 30 percent of our foods come locally."

This was no easy task for the small city-sized population of 25,000 students and the fragmented growing seasons in New England. Because UMass is the largest college campus in Western Massachusetts, farmers are more inclined to integrate their products because of the potential. Amherst College, Smith College and Hampshire College have all made the switch to locally grown products because of UMass.

"Because of our size," said Toong, "it makes it worth while for the farmers."

According to Toong, UMass looks for consistency and efficiency in its supply. They found Joe Czajkowski, the owner of Czajkowski farm in Hadley, Mass. As a local farmer, he acts as a farm broker for UMass. He operates as the mediator between UMass and five farms – Diemand Farm, North Hadley Sugar Shack, Warm Color Apiary, Cook Farm and his own – to ensure there is always enough supply.

"He makes it easy for us. The other farmers will drop off shipments to him," said Toong. "For us this means one stop shopping."

In 2006, UMass Dining received an environmental award from the state for its efforts in sustainability. The University continues to support the local efforts by posting the 6 community Involved In Sustainable Agriculture stickers above all locally grown products.

UMass Dining was also the first large public university to join the Seafood WATCH program in 2006. As part of this program, UMass serves only sustainable seafood in accordance with the guidelines for wild salmon, Pacific cod, American-farmed shrimp and other seafood.

Some of the other sustainable practices UMass offers are Fair Trade, shade grown organic coffee in the dining commons and retail outlets. Dining Services also works to compost all wet food waste and pushes to provide education of proper recycling to all of its students.

In addition, Toong is hoping to open the first Farmers Market on campus. The market will serve as another resource for students to expand their everyday eating habits.

UMass hosts an annual international conference to discuss flavor, sustainability and wellness. The "Tastes of the World" culinary exposition is a favorite among many students, as well as the Restaurant Nights.

"My favorite nights are when different chefs come in from different restaurants," said sophomore Julia Parker. "The food not only tastes great but I know it's a good quality and fresh."

Super Tuesday to include Patriots parade

(AP)

Boston officials have been planning a parade route that would pass polling places and are putting extra police officers on call, according to The Boston Globe.

Menino: 'no other choice'

Super Tuesday may be extra super, if the New England Patriots beat the New York Giants in the Super Bowl this Sunday.

According to Mayor Thomas M. Menino, the date of Boston's "Welcome Home Day" celebratory sports parade will be Feb. 5 – the same day as the Democratic and Republican presidential primaries – if New England wins on Sunday.

Candidates and voting advocacy groups are concerned with the possibility of the parade and the chance that the streets of Boston will be filled with rejoicing crowds rather than voters.

According to Menino, there is no other choice than to hold the parade on Tuesday. The New England football players will not be able to return home in time from Phoenix for a parade on the Monday following the Super Bowl, and several players are traveling to Hawaii for the Pro Bowl on Wednesday.

—Holly Seabury, Collegian Staff

Grant awarded to UMass biochemist

BY KRISTEN HEALY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A biochemist at the University of Massachusetts has received a four-year $308,000 grant from the American Heart Association.

The grant was awarded to Alejandro P. Heuck in order to further the development of molecular probes that are able to measure cholesterol levels in the membranes of single cells.

The probes are determined to be useful in evaluating the effect of new cholesterol-lowering drugs. There is also the potential that the probes could be used as a diagnostic tool for people with both Alzheimer's disease and atherosclerosis, hardening of the arteries.

According to Heuck, atherosclerosis is the major disease associated with cholesterol and lipid metabolism, and atherosclerosis vascular disease has the possibility of becoming a worldwide leading cause of death by 2020.

"Development of these molecular probes will allow us and others to precisely assess cholesterol levels in cell membranes and to study its regulation when cells are subjected to different stimuli or drug treatments," said Heuck.

One question Heuck plans to address with this grant is how a natural cholesterol-binding protein can be modified to develop these probes that measure the cholesterol levels in cellular membranes.

He said there is a certain type of protein from the pathogenic bacteria Clostridium perfringens that has evolved to specifically recognize cholesterol in eukaryotic membranes. Since this protein only attaches to membranes with high cholesterol levels, Heuck plans to take advantage of the properties of the protein in order to design these probes that recognize cholesterol on cellular membranes.

"In particular, we are looking for mutant proteins that recognize only low or high levels," said Heuck.

In addition, he will generate probes that selectively attach to cells with a specific level of cholesterol and then label each probe with a different color fluorescent dye. In this case, the probes will be used to study cholesterol regula-

See GRANT on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 3

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ABOUT LIFE; BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Huston

COPY EDITOR
Greg McCarthy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Marijuana may cause cancer

Smoking pot can hurt lungs

BY TAN EE LYN AND ALEX RICHARDSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Smoking a joint is equivalent to 20 cigarettes in terms of lung cancer risk, scientists in New Zealand have found, as they warned of an "epidemic" of lung cancers linked to cannabis.

Studies in the past have demonstrated that cannabis can cause cancer, but few have established a strong link between cannabis use and the actual incidence of lung cancer.

In an article published in the European Respiratory Journal, scientists said cannabis could be expected to harm the airways more than tobacco as its smoke contained twice the level of carcinogens, such as polyaromatic hydrocarbons, compared with tobacco cigarettes.

The method of smoking also increases the risk, since joints are typically smoked without a proper filter and almost to the very tip, which increases the amount of smoke inhaled. The cannabis smoker inhales more deeply and for longer, facilitating the deposition of carcinogens in the airways.

"Cannabis smokers end up with five times more carbon monoxide in their bloodstream (than tobacco smokers)," team leader Richard Beasley, at the Medical Research Institute of New Zealand, said in a telephone interview.

"There are higher concentrations of carcinogens in cannabis smoke ... what is intriguing to us is there is so little work done on cannabis when there is so much done on tobacco."

The researchers interviewed 79 lung cancer patients and sought to identify the main risk factors for the disease, such as smoking, family history and occupation. The patients were questioned about alcohol and cannabis consumption.

In this high-exposure group, lung cancer risk rose by 5.7 times for patients who smoked more than a joint a day for 10 years, or two joints a day for 5 years, after adjusting for other variables, including cigarette smoking.

"While our study covers a relatively small group, it shows clearly that long-term cannabis smoking increases lung cancer risk," wrote Beasley.

New Zealand scientists have found that a joint is as harmful to the lungs as 20 cigarettes.

"Cannabis use could already be responsible for one in 20 lung cancers diagnosed in New Zealand," he added.

"In the near future we may see an 'epidemic' of lung cancers connected with this new carcinogen. And the future risk probably applies to many other countries, where increasing use of cannabis among young adults and adolescents is becoming a major public health problem."

Anti-bacterial hand gel found not enough

BY TIMBERLY ROSS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Doctors and nurses on the go often skip soap and water in favor of an alcohol-based hand gel, thinking the quick-acting goo will kill bacteria on their hands and curb the spread of infection. It turns out that's not enough.

In a Nebraska hospital, medical workers nearly doubled their use of the alcohol-based gel, but their generally cleaner hands had no bearing on the rate of infections among patients.

The doctor who studied the problem pointed to many villains: rings and fingernails that are too long and hard to clean, poor handling of catheters and treatment areas that aren't sanitized.

"Hand hygiene is still important, but it's not a panacea," said Dr. Mark Rupp, an infectious disease specialist at the University of Nebraska Medical Center. He led the study at the adjoining Nebraska Medical Center.

The results of his study appear to contradict hospital guidelines from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention that say better hand hygiene – through frequent washing or use of hand gels – has been shown to cut the spread of hospital infections.

The spread of infection-causing germs in U.S. hospitals is a huge health problem, accounting for an estimated 1.7 million infections and 99,000 deaths each year, according to the CDC. These include drug-resistant staph, urinary tract infections and ventilator-associated pneumonia, among others.

"There are many factors that influence the development of hospital-acquired infections. It would be naive to think that a single, simple intervention would fix this problem," Rupp said.

His study appears in the January issue of Infection Control and Hospital Epidemiology.

Research has shown alcohol-based hand gels are more effective, faster and easier to use than soap and water. The findings of the new study were based on 300 hours of hand hygiene observations of nurses and doctors in two comparable intensive care units over a two-year period.

More gel dispensers were put in the units, and usage rose from 37 percent to 68 percent in one unit and from 38 percent to 69 percent in the other. Compliance for hand washing of any kind in most hospitals is estimated to be about 40 percent, according to experts, although some hospitals do better.

Every two months, bacteria samples were taken from health workers' hands, which were found to be cleaner when using the alcohol gel.

The infection rates in both ICUs were "relatively low," the study said. And researchers found "no significant relationship" between rates of hand gel use and infections among patients. In fact, in one unit the infection rate rose when the hand gel was widely available and its use promoted.

Rupp found the results surprising. However, he said hospital-borne infections cannot be stopped by better hand hygiene alone because infections aren't limited to person-to-person contact.

He suggested hand gels be combined with other measures, such as better cleaning of hospital units, proper insertion and maintenance of catheters, and doctors prescribing antibiotics only when necessary so more drug-resistant bacteria don't pop up.

He also said hospital workers shouldn't wear rings and should trim their fingernails even more than the CDC recommendation of no longer than a quarter of an inch. Rupp said bacteria showed up when nails extended just beyond the fingertip.

Mike Bell, who deals with infection control at the CDC, said that while he didn't agree that hand gels do little to reduce infection, Rupp was right to say they were just one part of the solution.

"If they don't do everything else right, having clean hands is not enough," he said.

Both Bell and Dr. David Hooper of Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston suggested that Rupp's study would have shown a reduction in infections if it was conducted over a longer period.

Hooper said the compliance rate for hand hygiene at Massachusetts General has been about 90 percent for the past several years. The number of drug-resistant staph cases was cut in half and continues to decline, he said.

Doctors and nurses who use alcohol-based hand gel instead of washing their hands with soap and water may be at risk for spreading more germs throughout hospitals.

THE WRONG FOOT
is no place to begin
start off right
with the most used books & more
home of THE HALF BACK GUARANTEE
We'll pay half of the purchase price at buyback for books with this sticker, guaranteed.
UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619
efollett.com ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.
Are you on THE list?
Register your textbooks for 5% more at buyback.
www.efollett.com/VIP

Student group says good-bye to state org.

Club's president commends move to secede

Republican club Vice President Derek Khanna voted against the move for the club to secede from the Massachusetts Alliance of College Republicans last night.

REPUBLICAN from page 1

Some of us had been contacted by him," he said. "It's a pretty unanimous decision that he needs to go."

Republican club Vice President Derek Khanna called on DeFlumeri to "step aside" in the best interests of the group, voting against the move to secede.

"I don't think secession serves any of our interests and it's a ludicrous opposition on the whole," Khanna said. "I think the decision was between impeaching an individual who has been guilty of numerous crimes – most of which have been proven, some of which have not been proven – and supporting him to the hilt or asking him to move aside and preserving the integrity of the organization."

According to Khanna, as an independent organization, the UMass Republican club could stand to lose both its affiliation with the Massachusetts Republican Party and its standing as the official Republican registered student organization at UMass.

"It's a very dangerous proposition," he said. "Best case scenario we're allowed to keep our name, and if we're allowed to keep our name we don't have to file as a new organization then we can hopefully keep our funding, but if the Massachusetts GOP pushes us really hard, which I believe they're going to do...that we would no longer be recognized as a Republican club."

Jonathan Tabb, club secretary and group publicity director, supported the move. According to Tabb, seceding gave the club more control over group events and removed oversight from MACR.

Khanna, concerned that the club might lose its recognition as a registered student organization in the wake of the both the allegations against DeFlumeri and the move to secede from MACR, disagreed.

"From my perspective I'm [vice president]. I'm supposed to support the objectives and goals of our clubs and those are furthered by continuing the existence of our club," Khanna said.

Derrick Perkins can be reached at news@dailycollegian.com.

Native speaker offers language course is a history that had to fight against all odds," Pedró-Garcia said.

CATALAN from page 1

Under Spanish Head of State Francisco Franco's nationalist regime, "the Catalan language was cruelly persecuted and officially prohibited," Pedró-Garcia said. "Most Catalan writers faced prison, exile, repression or even death."

Since Franco's death in 1975, the language has slowly become more mainstream. It now serves as an important business language in some Spanish cities, such as Barcelona, is broadcast on television and radio shows and is the official language of schools within borders of Catalan-speaking regions.

Currently, Pedró-Garcia is finishing his first semester teaching at UMass and is glad to be sharing his native language and culture with students here. "I'm passionate about the language... [and] I'm for the recuperation of [it]," he said.

A native Catalan speaker from Valencia, Pedró-Garcia studied at the prestigious Jaume I University in Castelló de la Plana for a degree in Translation and Interpreting before studying the teaching of modern languages at various other institutions.

After he earned his post-graduate degree, he taught Spanish at a grammar school in Belfast, N. Ireland and then Catalan and Spanish at the University of Cambridge in England.

Pedró-Garcia came to UMass through the Institut Ramon Llull, a global program founded to promote the learning of the Catalan language and culture in different countries. Currently, there are 19 other universities teaching Catalan in the United States through the Institut Ramon Llull.

While the UMass course has had a slow start, Pedró-Garcia hopes more will still sign up as they learn about the language and the history behind it.

With monetary support from the Catalonian government, a lack of funding for the program shouldn't be a problem. As long as students continue to sign up to learn the native language of tennis pro Rafael Nadal, architect Antoni Gaudí and surrealist Pablo Picasso, Pedró-Garcia will have succeeded in bringing the Catalan language to UMass.

David Humphreys can be reached at features@dailycollegian.com.

Andreu Pedró-Garcia, instructor of the Catalan language course, comes from Valencia, where Catalan is spoken.

Grant to be used for molecular probes

GRANT from page 1

tion in cell membranes of macrophages, which are immune system cells that affect the formation of the arterial deposits within atherosclerosis.

Heuck hopes that his work will allow other biochemists to "precisely assess cholesterol levels in the cell membranes, and to study its regulation when the cells are subjected to different stimuli or drug treatments."

"Initially, we will apply these novel probes to analyze cholesterol homeostasis in macrophages, given their key role on atherosclerosis," he said.

The American Heart Association Scientist Development Grant, which began Jan. 1, is awarded to highly promising beginning scientists. The program hopes to encourage and fund research projects in order to create a link between the completion of research training and competition as an independent researcher.

"The goal of this project is to develop unique molecular probes that will ultimately allow the quantification and imaging of distinct cholesterol levels in cell membranes," Heuck said.

Kristen Healy can be reached at khealy.a student umass.edu.

Visit us online at dailycollegian.com

VISITING COLLEGE CHEF SERIES
Welcome Donald R. Miller
University of Notre Dame, CEC, CCE, AAC
NOTRE DAME FAVORITES:
• Baja Chicken Enchilada Soup
• Thai Coconut Curry Braised Tilapia served with Basmati Rice
• Fall Squashes, Chicken and Penne Pasta in Cider Cream
• General Tso's Fried Chicken with Szechuan Noodles
• Raisin Bread Pudding
Wednesday, January 30, 2008
Berkshire DC from 5–9 pm
UNIVERSITY OF NOTRE DAME
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices

Dine & Win!
Enter to win a trip for two with $500 spending money.
UMass Dining, Coca-Cola®, and American Airlines® want to fly you and a guest to any destination during Spring Break in North America including 48 states and Canada!
Enter between January 28 and February 12, 2008 at any UMass Dining Commons or retail location.
*Official Rules
• No purchase necessary
• Must be 18 years old or older
• Open to UMass Dining customers
*For details: umass.edu/diningservices OR see entry boxes
Drawing will be held Wednesday, February 13 at 6 pm at Worcester Dining Commons
YCMP RESIDENTIAL Dining Services Food Management's BEST CONCEPTS

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 3

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Conners
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUES. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER ARC AS AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE...ional IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1934 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Huston

COPY EDITOR
Greg McCarthy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Marijuana may cause cancer

Smoking pot can hurt lungs

BY TAN EE LYN AND ALEX RICHARDSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Smoking a joint is equivalent to 20 cigarettes in terms of lung cancer risk, scientists in New Zealand have found, as they warned of an "epidemic" of lung cancers linked to cannabis.

Studies in the past have demonstrated that cannabis can cause cancer, but few have established a strong link between cannabis use and the actual incidence of lung cancer.

In an article published in the European Respiratory Journal, scientists said cannabis could be expected to harm the airways more than tobacco as its smoke contained twice the level of carcinogens, such as polyaromatic hydrocarbons, compared with tobacco cigarettes.

The method of smoking also increases the risk, since joints are typically smoked without a proper filter and almost to the very tip, which increases the amount of smoke inhaled. The cannabis smoker inhales more deeply and for longer, facilitating the deposition of carcinogens in the airways.

"Cannabis smokers end up with five times more carbon monoxide in their bloodstream (than tobacco smokers)," team leader Richard Beasley, at the Medical Research Institute of New Zealand, said in a telephone interview.

"There are higher concentrations of carcinogens in cannabis smoke ... what is intriguing to us is there is so little work done on cannabis when there is so much done on tobacco."

The researchers interviewed 79 lung cancer patients and sought to identify the main risk factors for the disease, such as smoking, family history and occupation. The patients were questioned about alcohol and cannabis consumption.

In this high-exposure group, lung cancer risk rose by 5.7 times for patients who smoked more than a joint a day for 10 years, or two joints a day for 5 years, after adjusting for other variables, including cigarette smoking.

"While our study covers a relatively small group, it shows clearly that long-term cannabis smoking increases lung cancer risk," wrote Beasley.

New Zealand scientists have found that a joint is as harmful to the lungs as 20 cigarettes.

"Cannabis use could already be responsible for one in 20 lung cancers diagnosed in New Zealand," he added.

"In the near future we may see an 'epidemic' of lung cancers connected with this new carcinogen. And the future risk probably applies to many other countries, where increasing use of cannabis among young adults and adolescents is becoming a major public health problem."

Anti-bacterial hand gel found not enough

BY TIMBERLY ROSS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Doctors and nurses on the go often skip soap and water in favor of an alcohol-based hand gel, thinking the quick-acting goo will kill bacteria on their hands and curb the spread of infection. It turns out that's not enough.

In a Nebraska hospital, medical workers nearly doubled their use of the alcohol-based gel, but their generally cleaner hands had no bearing on the rate of infections among patients.

The doctor who studied the problem pointed to many villains: rings and fingernails that are too long and hard to clean, poor handling of catheters and treatment areas that aren't sanitized.

"Hand hygiene is still important, but it's not a panacea," said Dr. Mark Rupp, an infectious disease specialist at the University of Nebraska Medical Center. He led the study at the adjoining Nebraska Medical Center.

The results of his study appear to contradict hospital guidelines from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention that say better hand hygiene – through frequent washing or use of hand gels – has been shown to cut the spread of hospital infections.

The spread of infection-causing germs in U.S. hospitals is a huge health problem, accounting for an estimated 1.7 million infections and 99,000 deaths each year, according to the CDC. These include drug-resistant staph, urinary tract infections and ventilator-associated pneumonia, among others.

"There are many factors that influence the development of hospital-acquired infections. It would be naive to think that a single, simple intervention would fix this problem," Rupp said.

His study appears in the January issue of Infection Control and Hospital Epidemiology.

Research has shown alcohol-based hand gels are more effective, faster and easier to use than soap and water. The findings of the new study were based on 300 hours of hand hygiene observations of nurses and doctors in two comparable intensive care units over a two-year period.

More gel dispensers were put in the units, and usage rose from 37 percent to 68 percent in one unit and from 38 percent to 69 percent in the other. Compliance for hand washing of any kind in most hospitals is estimated to be about 40 percent, according to experts, although some hospitals do better.

Every two months, bacteria samples were taken from health workers' hands, which were found to be cleaner when using the alcohol gel.

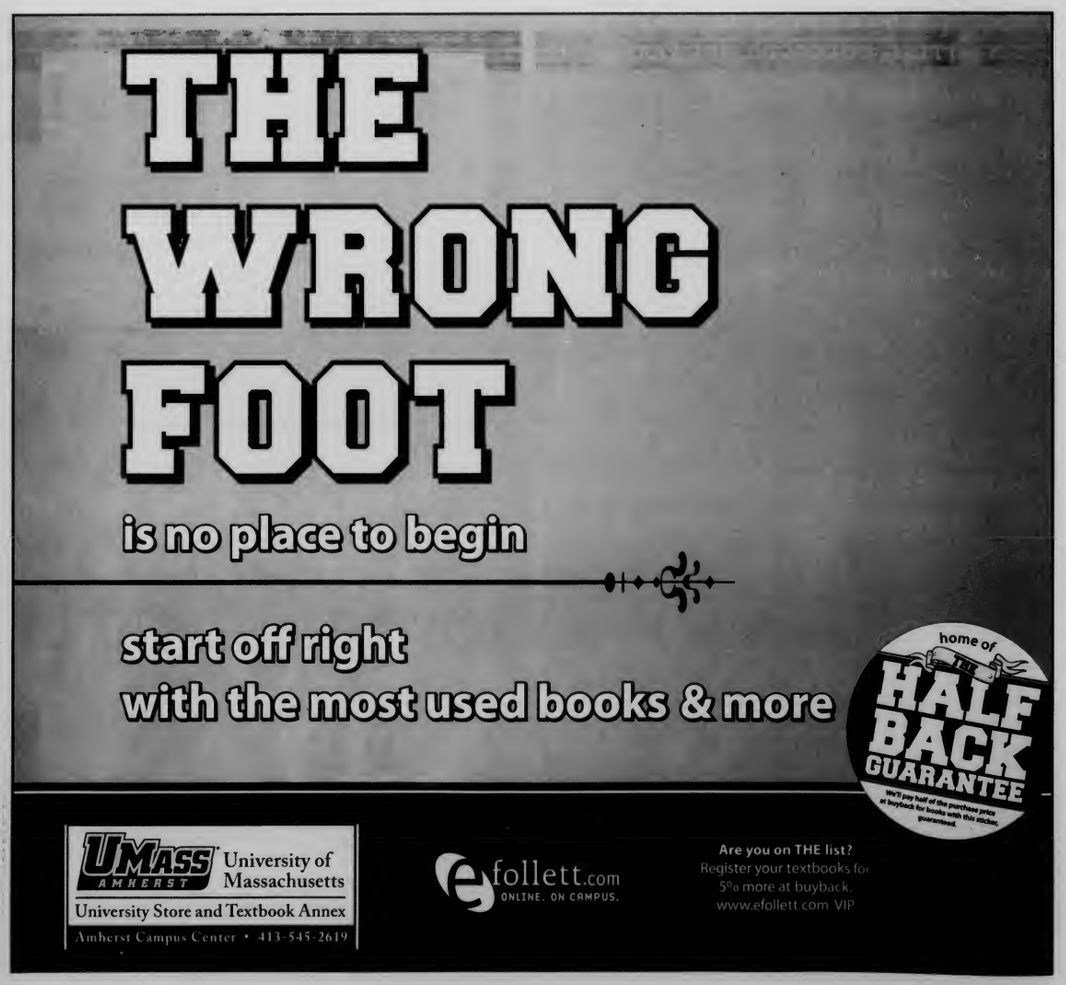
The infection rates in both ICUs were "relatively low," the study said. And researchers found "no significant relationship" between rates of hand gel use and infections among patients. In fact, in one unit the infection rate rose when the hand gel was widely available and its use promoted.

Rupp found the results surprising. However, he said hospital-borne infections cannot be stopped by better hand hygiene alone because infections aren't limited to person-to-person contact.

He suggested hand gels be combined with other measures, such as better cleaning of hospital units, proper insertion and maintenance of catheters, and doctors prescribing antibiotics only when necessary so more drug-resistant bacteria don't pop up.

He also said hospital workers shouldn't wear rings and should trim their fingernails even more than the CDC recommendation of no longer than a quarter of an inch. Rupp said bacteria showed up when nails extended just beyond the fingertip.

Mike Bell, who deals with infection control at the CDC, said that while he didn't agree that hand gels do little to reduce infection, Rupp was right to say they were just one part of the solution.



"If they don't do everything else right, having clean hands is not enough," he said.

Both Bell and Dr. David Hooper of Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston suggested that Rupp's study would have shown a reduction in infections if it was conducted over a longer period.

Hooper said the compliance rate for hand hygiene at Massachusetts General has been about 90 percent for the past several years. The number of drug-resistant staph cases was cut in half and continues to decline, he said.

Doctors and nurses who use alcohol-based hand gel instead of washing their hands with soap and water may be at risk for spreading more germs throughout hospitals.

Student group says good-bye to state org.

Club's president commends move to secede

Republican club Vice President Derek Khanna voted against the move for the club to secede from the Massachusetts Alliance of College Republicans last night.

REPUBLICAN from page 1

Some of us had been contacted by him," he said. "It's a pretty unanimous decision that he needs to go."

Republican club Vice President Derek Khanna called on DeFlumeri to "step aside" in the best interests of the group, voting against the move to secede.

"I don't think secession serves any of our interests and it's a ludicrous opposition on the whole," Khanna said. "I think the decision was between impeaching an individual who has been guilty of numerous crimes – most of which have been proven, some of which have not been proven – and supporting him to the hilt or asking him to move aside and preserving the integrity of the organization."

According to Khanna, as an independent organization, the UMass Republican club could stand to lose both its affiliation with the Massachusetts Republican Party and its standing as the official Republican registered student organization at UMass.

"It's a very dangerous proposition," he said. "Best case scenario we're allowed to keep our name, and if we're allowed to keep our name we don't have to file as a new organization then we can hopefully keep our funding, but if the Massachusetts GOP pushes us really hard, which I believe they're going to do...that we would no longer be recognized as a Republican club."

Jonathan Tabb, club secretary and group publicity director, supported the move. According to Tabb, seceding gave the club more control over group events and removed oversight from MACR.

Khanna, concerned that the club might lose its recognition as a registered student organization in the wake of the both the allegations against DeFlumeri and the move to secede from MACR, disagreed.

"From my perspective, I'm [vice president] I'm supposed to support the objectives and goals of our clubs and those are furthered by continuing the existence of our club," Khanna said.

Derrick Perkins can be reached at news@dailycollegian.com.

Native speaker offers language course

CATALAN from page 1

is a history that had to fight against all odds," Pedró-Garcia said.

Under Spanish Head of State Francisco Franco's nationalist regime, "the Catalan language was cruelly persecuted and officially prohibited," Pedró-Garcia said. "Most Catalan writers faced prison, exile, repression or even death."

Since Franco's death in 1975, the language has slowly become more mainstream. It now serves as an important business language in some Spanish cities, such as Barcelona, is broadcast on television and radio shows and is the official language of schools within borders of Catalan-speaking regions.

Currently, Pedró-Garcia is finishing his first semester teaching at UMass and is glad to be sharing his native language and culture with students here. "I'm passionate about the language... [and] I'm for the recuperation of [it]," he said.

A native Catalan speaker from Valencia, Pedró-Garcia studied at the prestigious Jaume I University in Castelló de la Plana for a degree in Translation and Interpreting before studying the teaching of modern languages at various other institutions.

After he earned his post-graduate degree, he taught Spanish at a grammar school in Belfast, N. Ireland and then Catalan and Spanish at the University of Cambridge in England.

Pedró-Garcia came to UMass through the Institut Ramon Llull, a global program founded to promote the learning of the Catalan language and culture in different countries. Currently, there are 19 other universities teaching Catalan in the United States through the Institut Ramon Llull.

While the UMass course has had a slow start, Pedró-Garcia hopes more will still sign up as they learn about the language and the history behind it.

With monetary support from the Catalonian government, a lack of funding for the program shouldn't be a problem. As long as students continue to sign up to learn the native language of tennis pro Rafael Nadal, architect Antoni Gaudi and surrealist Pablo Picasso, Pedró-Garcia will have succeeded in bringing the Catalan language to UMass.

David Humphreys can be reached at features@dailycollegian.com.

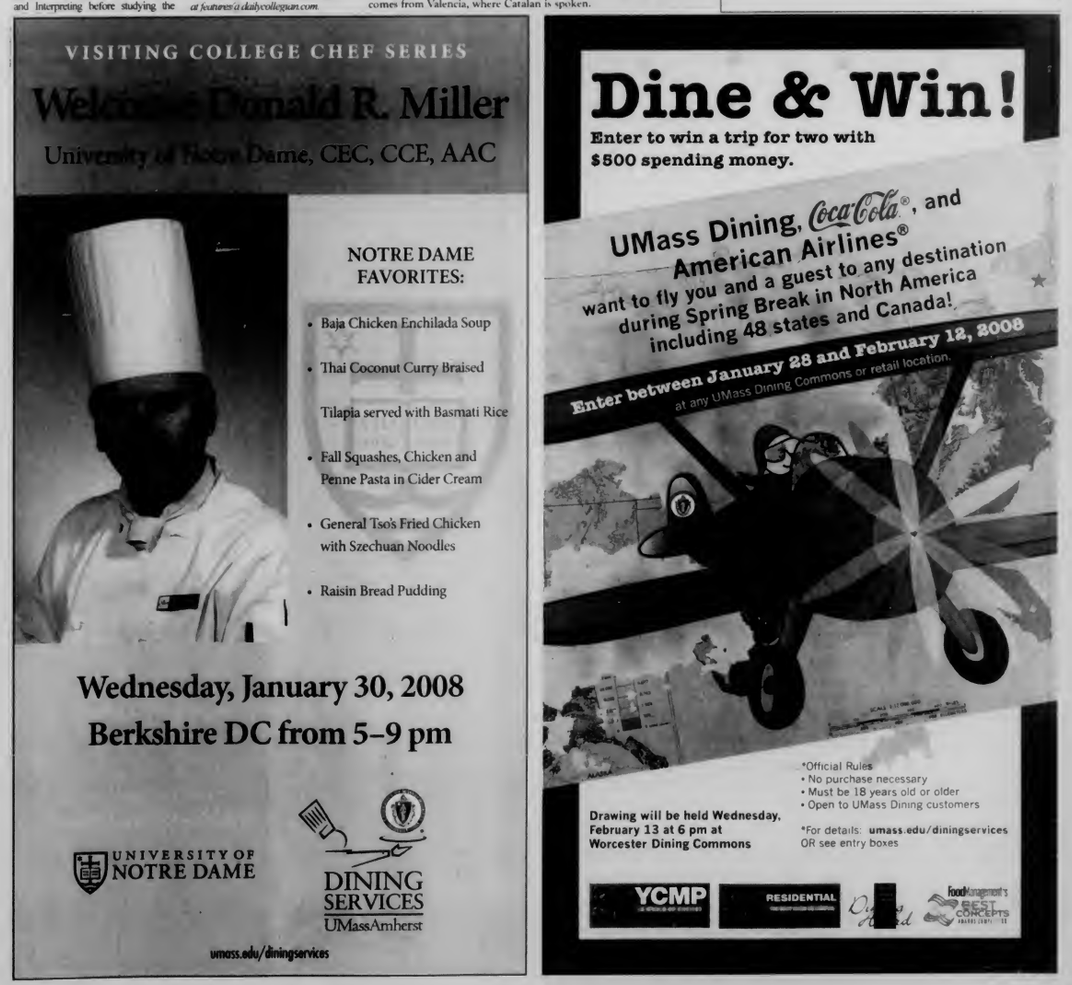
Andreu Pedró-Garcia, instructor of the Catalan language course, comes from Valencia, where Catalan is spoken.

Grant to be used for molecular probes

GRANT from page 1

tion in cell membranes of macrophages, which are immune system cells that affect the formation of the arterial deposits within atherosclerosis.

Heuck hopes that his work will allow other biochemists to "precisely assess cholesterol levels in the cell membranes, and to study its regulation when the cells are subjected to different stimuli or drug treatments."



"Initially, we will apply these novel probes to analyze cholesterol homeostasis in macrophages, given their key role on atherosclerosis," he said.

The American Heart Association Scientist Development Grant, which began Jan. 1, is awarded to highly promising beginning scientists. The program hopes to encourage and fund research projects in order to create a link between the completion of research training and competition as an independent researcher.

"The goal of this project is to develop unique molecular probes that will ultimately allow the quantification and imaging of distinct cholesterol levels in cell membranes," Heuck said.

Kristen Healy can be reached at khealy@student.umass.edu.

Visit us online at dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 30, 2008 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Hugo brings the heat

Nick Milano

Once again this winter, even reluctant television viewers will see advertisements for Citizen Energy Corporation featuring Joseph Kennedy II's emphatic declaration that "no one, no one should be left out in the cold." Accompanied by a look of the utmost determination on Kennedy's face, a fist pump and a meaningful stare directly into the camera lens, the crusader makes it known that nothing will stop him in his quest to deliver heating oil to low-income Americans.

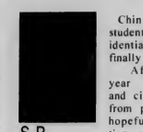
This is a statement few can disagree with. But in the United States, heralded as the greatest and richest country in the world, too many people can see their breath inside their own homes as his commercial details. The important part of the ad, however, lies in Kennedy's statement that the only oil company that agreed to give his organization a discounted rate was the one run by the vilified Hugo Chavez's Venezuelan government.

For a brief period after the news came out that Exxon Mobil made over $10 billion in the last quarter, there was shock and dismay that in a time of war and increasing oil prices, a company could reap profits so large. Exxon Mobil was also the most profitable company in 2006, with numbers nearly topping $40 billion – the highest ever for any American business.

Yet although oil companies are recording such great profits, only one has stepped forward to offer heating oil at a discounted rate for Kennedy's group to bring to low-income people who need it most. Is it not remarkable that a communist country, no doubt much poorer than the United States, with a leader who seems to incite more fear in conservative commentators than even illegal immigrants, is responsible for keeping some of America's most vulnerable alive and healthy through the long winter months? The question of Chavez's motivations cannot be ignored. Is he doing it out of the benevolence of his heart or is he doing it, as CNN contributor Glenn Beck claims, to create a legion of 'fifth' soldiers here in America?

The last thing policymakers want to see is Hugo Chavez making friends with low-income Americans.

Neither answer sounds quite right. Having launched a series of public improvement measures, Chavez has helped to bring healthcare, education and food to millions of Venezuelans. Internationally, he draws ire for his attempts to make Venezuela a South American power to be reckoned with. His socialist approach to government, though apparently successful for the poor of Venezuela, frightens American commentators and politicians who have made many comparisons between his regime and Fidel Castro's. But with oil prices shooting over $100 a barrel, Venezuela's position as one of the world's top oil producers and exporters limits the United States' ability to act against Chavez and his government. The last thing policymakers want to see is Hugo Chavez making friends with low-income Americans.



Yet nothing has changed. Major oil companies and OPEC have continued to ignore Joe Kennedy's requests for discounted prices. There are 36.5 million people living in poverty in the United States. There are almost 47 million Americans living without health insurance. As we have suffered a frighteningly chilly and snowy winter, how many people have been unable to keep warm? The medical consequences of being exposed to the cold can wreak havoc for a household barely scraping by as it is.

In an editorial ranting against the partnership between Venezuela and Kennedy's organization, not once did the Wall Street Journal address the issue at the heart of the matter. How can a communist, a purveyor of an idea ardently opposed by the Catholic Church, put all the major oil companies to shame in benevolence? The lesson seems to be that Kennedy and those Congressmen who support the partnership with Chavez have formed an unholy alliance with a communist. Instead, the lesson should be that there remains a large block of Americans who simply do not have the money to stay warm in the winter. The lesson should be that major American oil companies have consistently turned a blind eye toward social responsibility, even in times of record profits.

Is it war profiteering? Is it inhumane? I do not know. The same goes for Chavez. He is probably not discounting oil because he is a nice guy; he wants the American public to realize that he is not the devil. He is not trying to tear America down from within, but unlike other chief executives, he is attempting to make people's lives easier. Chavez is not inherently evil, but the question remains: are the major American oil companies?

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

Who wants to draft a president?

S.P. Sullivan

Chin up, college students; the presidential race is finally relevant.

After over a year of pomp and circumstance from presidential hopefuls, election season has annexed the several months previous like Christmas hijacked Thanksgiving. It's no surprise that Christmas is coming early for candidates across the board, either. In the bad movie sequel that is George W. Bush's second term, everybody – Democrat and Republican alike – is eager to skip to the credits.

For many of us, the upcoming presidential election is to be the first we can vote in. Personally, I've always enjoyed all the pageantry; as a young adult, nothing makes me feel more mature than watching grown-ups call one another names like "flip-flopper" and make fun of each others' haircuts.

The presidential race has also proven to equal-opportunity naysayers that issues of sex and race are still highly prevalent in our society. It's been a gallows-humor sort of amusement watching Hillary Clinton try to prove that she's feminine-but-not-too-feminine and Barack Obama that he's black-but-"electable" – whatever that's supposed to mean. Can a black man or a woman be president? I think raising the question every time one of them makes a public appearance shows that the answer isn't as obvious as it ought to be.

But regardless of race or gender or religion, one thing can be said about all the candidates: I liked them all a lot better before they started running for president. Presidential candidates like to follow the old maxim: "You can't please all of the people all of the time, unless you pay close attention to the latest Gallup polls." A viable candidate has to be a real compromiser (read: hypocrite), a people-person (read: two-face) with ambition (read: megalomania).

If you want intelligent, level-headed people to do a job that sucks, there's only one way to do it: make them.

Washington Post columnist David Broder put it best when he said, "Anybody who wants the presidency so much that he'll spend two years organizing and campaigning for it is not to be trusted with the office."

What does that say about folks like Rudy Giuliani, who have been running since September 12, 2001? Or Hillary Clinton, who got too comfortable in the White House during her eight-year stay in the '90s?

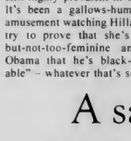
The presidency is like jury duty: any rational human being wouldn't want the job, and anybody chomping at the bit to do it ought to have their head examined. Say what you will about the now-defunct Fred Thompson campaign – I liked him by sheer virtue that he didn't seem all that interested in running.

So why not run the electoral process like jury duty? If you want intelligent, level-headed people to do a job that sucks, there's only one way to do it: make them.

Because the presidency is a terrible job, one that nobody in their right mind should want. We live in the "two Americas" America; half the country is bound to be pissed off no matter what you do. George Washington didn't want it, so do you know what they did? They made him.

Not really – not by any systemized jury duty mechanism like the one I'm proposing, at least. His overwhelming sense of duty, coupled with overwhelming public opinion in his favor, behooved him to take the job he never wanted to begin with.

So where are the brilliant men and women with a sense of duty that would obligate them to fill the presidential seat? They're called idealists, and lobbyists and bureaucrats don't like them; they don't test well in focus groups, either.



I don't have a lot of recommendations in mind, but then again I don't agree with the status quo of what makes a "viable candidate." I think cognitive scientist Stephen Pinker might make a good president – if we make him. Neil deGrasse Tyson, whom Time Magazine called "the Carl Sagan of the 21st century," would be a good jury-duty candidate as well.

I like the idea of bookish scientists running the country – since rich white guys with an aversion to facts and a propensity for "staying the course" no matter where it takes us haven't exactly been an asset to representative democracy. But maybe there are other prodigious leaders we could force to do the job.

Then, rather than watching a bunch of mudslinging and empty promises for 14 months before an election, we can watch a lot of brilliant leaders, noble men and women, try to wriggle their way out of the obligation. That way, candidates will be honest about one of the most important considerations that today's candidates won't ever mention: Why they'd be no good at or too busy for the job anyways.

S.P. Sullivan is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at spsulliv@dailycollegian.com

A sailor's view from the Middle East

Brad DeFlumeri

I write to the UMass community from the Kingdom of Bahrain, a tiny country to the east of Saudi Arabia, the hub of naval activity in U.S. Central Command and an important strategic position to the two-front war being fought in Iraq and Afghanistan. Bahrain is home to a multitude of U.S. forces: active-duty soldiers, sailors, airmen, Marines, reservists, national guardsmen and the often forgotten but inescapably important contractors and civilian support personnel.

These men and women are selfless and mission-oriented. They stand 24-hour watches without coffee breaks or time clocks. This New Year's holiday, while countless Americans passively enjoyed the freedom their forces are providing, these men and women were working through the night to ensure that our ships in the Persian Gulf – and our troops on the ground – were properly equipped and supported to help win the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

The men and women with whom I work are serving under the flag of U.S. Naval Forces Central Command – NAVCENT for short – and they primarily provide logistics support to Marines and naval and joint forces ships. They approach their job with the sobering seriousness such an awesome task demands. They serve under three-star Vice Admiral Kevin Cosgriff. Their morale is high and their sense of responsibility and service is even more so. They often encounter sailors and Marines who were deployed to the ground in Iraq and they know firsthand that what they do – and how well they do it – directly affects our warfighters on the ground.

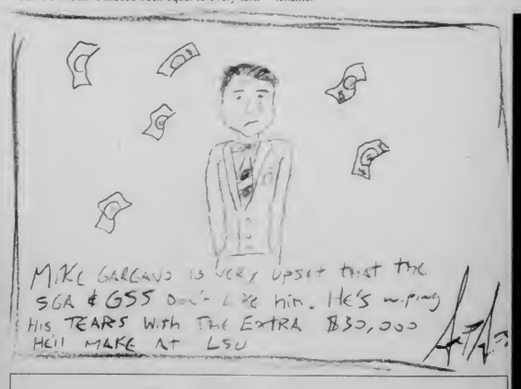
I want to thank them, and all Central Command Service members, for their dedication to the important mission currently being undertaken in Iraq. As our latest American hero, General David Petraeus, recently asserted, our troops in CENTCOM have indeed been equal to every task thrown their way. Moreover, they have shown commendable will, intelligence and motivation even as the nature of the fight continues to change and pose new challenges. The efforts of those serving in this area of responsibility have directly contributed to the stability of Iraq, and continue to effect social and economic benefits for moderate and well-meaning Muslims – and natives in general – throughout the region.

As the media most assuredly will not tell you, the military in CENTCOM, and worldwide, is steadfastly dedicated to engendering positive community relationships, building homes and villages in economically downtrodden areas, establishing safe and stable areas, and promoting economic growth and health by employing hundreds of thousands of native civilians on Department of Defense installations.

Bahrain has been made a prosperous nation in large part due to its Westernization and acceptance of capitalism.

It is intensely heartening and even emotional to have random Bahraini civilians approach you – as happened to me recently – and thank you for everything the U.S. military does to help their country. This particular civilian noted how his father had been out of work for years until the Navy hired him as a landscaper. It is stories like these that give new motivation to troops as they battle in often grueling and unfathomable conditions. Bahrain has been made a prosperous nation in large part due to its Westernization and acceptance of capitalism. The nation in general could not be more supportive of its U.S. military tenants.

I have the thankful luxury of supporting the military's noble cause from the comfortable confines of NAVCENT offices. I appreciate how lucky I have it in this regard, and cannot give enough credit to the brave soldiers and Marines who are on the ground actually fighting – and winning – this war. It is for them that our logistical support is provided, and it is to them that all Americans owe their sincere support and appreciation.



Lastly, if Vladimir Putin is Time's "Person of the Year" because of the intensifying and ghastly threat he poses to his country's liberty and to the world's balance of power, then the sailors, soldiers, airmen and Marines serving under the U.S. Flag – and General Petraeus's command – deserve to be honored by all Americans as this country's men of the year.

I report that the servicemen in Bahrain with whom I am so proudly serving could not be more attuned to our important mission of supporting the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan and helping the Navy project power, deterrence and American strength within the Persian Gulf and throughout the Middle East. For the amazing opportunity of allowing me to serve with such honorable men and women I am sincerely thankful to the Navy and, for more broadly being able to support our warfighters.

I could not be more appreciative.

Indeed, the honor of serving in this region with these outstanding people has reinvigorated my already powerful pride in being an American and part of the greatest military in the world. It's reawakened my indestructible belief in the greatness of this nation, the world's foremost champion of liberty and prosperity. It is for these reasons that I rise every morning and put on my desert cammis with a smile on my face, while hoping 2008 brings continued successes for the U.S. military in the Middle East.

Brad DeFlumeri is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bdeflume@student.umass.edu.

FEELING CRANKY?

RANTS & RAVES ARE WELCOME AT THE DAILY COLLEGIAN'S NEW ONLINE FORUM!

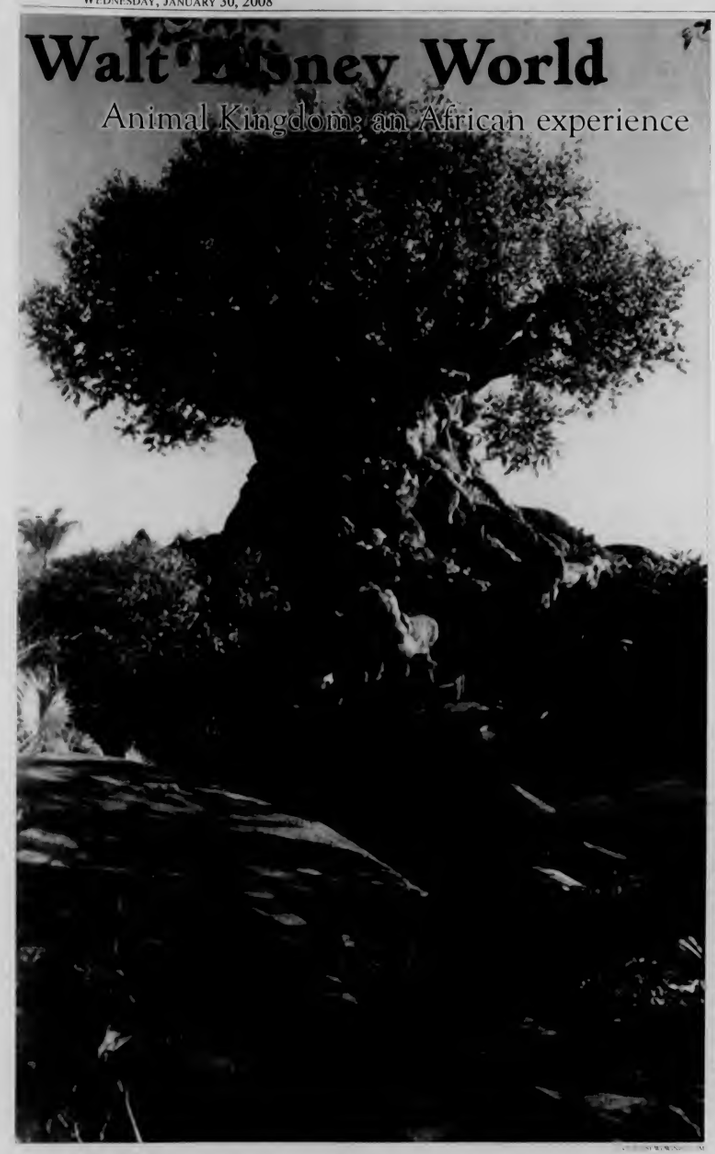
LOOK FOR THE LINK AT: WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR!

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor 113 Campus Center Amherst, MA 01003



THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 30, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Walt Disney World

Animal Kingdom: an African experience

The Tree of Life stand at the center of the newest Disney park, the 500-acre Animal Kingdom. While a majority of the land is set aside for animals, with a safari and nature trails, Animal Kingdom is also home to the newest thrill ride, the Expedition Everest roller coaster.

By Stephanie McPherson
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is part three of a week-long series about Walt Disney World.

Ever wonder what a trip to the Cretaceous period would be like? What about how it would feel to finally reach the peak of Mount Everest, only to find a Yeti waiting to throw you back down? Or what about taking a safari through the open African savannah? At Disney's Animal Kingdom, added to the theme park family in 1998, all of this is possible...sort of.

There are seven themes sections of Animal Kingdom, with animal exhibits from monkeys to warthogs lining the streets. Each section is unique, representing a different part of animal conservation. Beautifully and accurately designed, Anna Shaketange from Namibia and Mayenziwe Ntando Khuluse, known around Animal Kingdom as "Prince" from South Africa, both agree that Animal Kingdom makes them feel at home.

At the center of the 500-acre expanse is the Tree of Life, a massive tree, into whose trunk is carved an intricate array of wildlife, from horses to lions to gorillas to bugs.

Underneath the Tree of Life is the 3D animation show based on the movie "A Bug's Life," called "It's Tough to Be a Bug." After waiting in a line that weaves around the base of the tree, which offers a fantastic up-close view of the carvings and is lined with spoof movie posters like "Beauty and the Bees," audience members are welcomed to sit back, relax and enjoy a show all about the beneficial nature of insects.

Things get out of control when Hopper, the villain from "A Bug's Life," gets wind that bugs and humans are consorting. It's an entertaining sensory experience, and definitely something to Fast Pass, if you're not squeamish about spiders, stinkbugs and other creepy crawlers.

If there is one thing to do in Animal Kingdom, it's the Kilimanjaro Safari, found in the Africa section. According to Prince, "they did the safari ride beautifully...I see the animals and I feel at home."

The 20-minute safari takes you on a journey through wetlands and forests and out onto the Serengeti. Riders get to see okapis, elephants, lions and much more. Riding in the morning is the best chance you have to see the most animals and avoid the longer lines that will develop in later hours.

Also in Africa is the Pangani Forest Exploration Trail, where you follow a self-guided tour to see hippos, birds and gorillas. You are left to take as much or as little time as you want while traveling through – there are signs with information not only on the animals, but on steps taken toward conservation as well. In Asia, there is another version of this walk-through animal viewing called the Maharajah Jungle Trek, on which you see animals native to Asia's jungles, like Komodo dragons and tigers.

Multimedia Online

As far as thrill rides go, Animal Kingdom doesn't have too much to offer. The Kali River Rapids found in Asia are a white-water rafting adventure with a warning – you will get wet. You most likely will get drenched. This ride is a Fast Pass must, but as you're breezing down the Fast Pass lane, make sure to check out the ornate and unique decorations that are lining the walls. This is one to do at the hottest point during the day, and if you're wearing white, buy a poncho from the conveniently located poncho kiosk located right outside the ride's entrance.

In 2006, Disney unveiled Expedition Everest, a new roller coaster thrill ride that puts you face to face with the legendary yeti. The coaster takes you forward on a slow climb up the mountain, and then sends you careening backwards through the dark.

The Dinosaur ride, located in DinoLand USA, is also partially in the dark, but in this ride you are sent back to just a few brief moments before the fatal meteor collision that wiped out the colossal beasts. You are charged with task of returning safely with an Iguanodon for study purposes. How could anything go wrong?

Primeval Whirl, also in DinoLand USA, is a slow-moving coaster with a lot of twists and jerks. Those who are prone to motion sickness should probably avoid this ride, but otherwise, it's a surprisingly good time.

Since there are so few thrill rides, the lines are usually pretty long, and Fast Passes in Animal Kingdom are pretty necessary. There are plenty of things to do while waiting for your return time, as Animal Kingdom plays host to a huge variety of shows. While you're walking around, take time to stop if you see something interesting. There are clown shows, acrobats, African drummers and more lining the streets, and it's these types of shows that make Animal Kingdom really worthwhile.

The stage shows, like "Festival of the Lion King," a 30-minute adaptation of the movie, or "Flights of Wonder," about the beauty and majesty of birds, are both nice reprieves from the blazing sun. There's also a train that leaves every few minutes from Rafiki's Planet Watch and takes you to the petting zoo, which, in the Disney style, is called Affection Section.

Because of all the animals, the park generally closes at 5 p.m., which lets you explore other parks at night. Disney's Animal Kingdom is the park to see for animal lovers of any age.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcphers@student.

Creem-filled nostalgia trip

By Michelle Abbasciano
Collegian Staff

One of the most well-known and frequently recognized music magazines for decades has been Rolling Stone, which was founded in 1967. It has been famous for influencing the pop culture in the '70s and turning into a mainstream, well-exposed publication. There is, however, another highly influential rock magazine that is finally getting its due diligence: Creem.

While Rolling Stone would do well to cease honoring itself with its countless book spinoffs and collections, the severely underrated Detroit publication Creem Magazine is long overdue for a tribute compilation of their own.

The reminiscent book, entitled "Creem: America's Only Rock 'n' Roll Magazine," features the best of the magazine's immense archives of photos, illustrations and articles. Expertly compiled by editors Robert Matheu and Brian J. Bowe, it includes nearly 300 pages of eye-popping, colorful, glossy pages with the infamous "Hoy Howdy!" profiles, Stars Cars spotlights, featured articles, selected interviews with memorable photographs and so much more.

Creem dubbed itself "America's Only Rock 'n' Roll Magazine" and was rampant through the '70s and '80s until its downfall in 1988. Its sole purpose was to stir up the spirit of rock 'n' roll and rally the faithful followers of the genre.

They had a purpose, a goal and the audacity to publish the content and material that no one else dared to touch during that time period.

Its closest competitor was the aforementioned Rolling Stone magazine, which also featured some "rock" at times, but when compared to Creem, it was considered fairly safe and something too political. For some, rock 'n' roll was just another form of music, but in Detroit, Creem's birthplace and hometown of its creator, it was a lifestyle and a culture.

Creem employed an unimaginable array of writers of a broad literary and cultural scale with a first-rate sense of humor, including Robert Christgau, Dave Marsh, Patti Smith, Greil Marcus, the young Cameron Crowe and of course, the ruthless ramblings of Lester Bangs.

In the Midwest, before Creem's legacy began, rock music in the press was difficult to come by. There were, of course, other magazines that made attempts, but they fell short and were usually only publishing the record company propaganda and amateur photos.

Creem provided all the intimate details one could hope for, as well as good pictures and interesting album and concert reviews, and topped it all off with witty and large amounts of scandalous humor. The writers and editors pushed the envelope and developed a magazine unlike any other at the time.

This anthology of the innovative publication does not fall short and provides page after glossy page of all your favorite rock gods, including Pink Floyd, Sex Pistols, New York Dolls, Led Zeppelin and Alice Cooper.

Whether you've never heard of this magazine before, or have been a diehard fan of its work and featured musicians for years, it provides something for everyone. It provokes nostalgia for those faithful to the legendary rock scene and offers truly great journalism for those just looking for a fun-loving read.

Michelle Abbasciano can be reached at mabbasci@student.umass.edu.

Detroit-based Creem magazine has been covering rock music for the better part of three decades and has finally produced a compilation book.

The exciting world beyond Amherst

By Brittany Bell Dalphond
Collegian Correspondent

Editor's note: This is the first in a series of pieces written by students abroad.

I feel like I should be looking in your eyes, shaking your hand and introducing myself in person. After all, my hope is that "we" will establish this type of a relationship, and I want to tell you everything I will experience as a college student living abroad in Ireland.

Hopefully, I can convey my journey so you know what it is like to be in my shoes, and experience all the wonder vicariously. So let's start, shall we?

I will be spending this semester in Ireland, at the University College at Cork, while taking advantage of my proximity to Europe's most fantastic travel destinations, and relating what I experience to you. But right now, I am at home in Massachusetts and I have seven days to clear two important hurdles in my race toward Europe: to say goodbye and to pack.

That means I had seven days to fill three suitcases with necessities for five months.

So I have packed, unpacked, weighed and reweighed suitcases, stuffed my as-seen-on-TV space bags to the brim, consulted travelers and traveler's books and read about Ireland's weather.

Each was helpful, but I soon came to the realization that what you ultimately end up packing is largely personal preference and may not always be practical.

So the first thing I threw into my suitcase was a thick envelope filled with pictures of family, friends and the beach. From there, I packed all that unimportant stuff, like clothing, my favorite face lotion and shoes.

Though difficult, packing was far easier than saying goodbye to family, friends and familiar surroundings. With hugs, plenty of tears and an order for them to build fires outside French Hall and smell the trees blossoming in the spring, I pulled shut the door to that 10-by-16-foot, white cement cubicle deemed a dorm room, stopped, reopened the door, took one last look, a deep breath, turned around and pulled it shut.

For New Year's I joined my family in our living room for our usual Dick Clark and Chinese food. What wasn't usual was our 4 a.m. wake-up call in order to be at the airport by 6 a.m. Half awake, suitcases in hand, we walked into Logan airport and met Carolan, my friend and soon to be roommate, and her family.

After a tearful goodbye, hugs and plenty of parental safety tips, including an oh-so-subtle suggestion from my mother to bring home a nice blue-eyed Irish boy, we waved goodbye one last time from the end of the security line and headed for our gate. As our transatlantic took off, Carolan and I clutched onto each other's arm in anticipation as we watched America's east coast slip away behind us.

See you in five months, Boston.

Brittany Bell Dalphond can be reached at bdalphon@student.umass.edu.

Teen pregnancy and sarcasm mix in 'Juno'

Writing, directing combine for surprisingly solid comedy

By Kevin Koczwara
Collegian Staff

Diablo Cody's script for the movie "Juno" is, for lack of a better word, fantastic. It is a first-time script from the young writer – and hopefully not the last.

The story is a wholesome comedy about finding who you are, love and its true meaning, and to top it all off the movie is PG-13. This is a monumental accomplishment in the world of cinema today, with most comedies full of potheads, unrealistic sexual lives of high school kids and language that no mother would approve of. Who thought a movie about a pregnant girl could end up being very funny and not show a birth sequence? Who thought a comedy could be very funny these days without including at least one scene where the main character takes a large hit from a bong in the script?

Well, Cody did. He wrote the genuine script that is "Juno," and director Jason Reitman ("Thank You For Smoking") contributed to the movie a strong direction and a light and airy mood. Reitman's direction is a major piece of the movie and its pacing, tone and overall dry atmosphere lead to so many of the laughs.

The story revolves around a teenage girl, Juno, played by the exceptional Ellen Page ("Hard Candy"), who becomes pregnant after sleeping with her best friend Paulie Bleeker, played by the bumbling Michael Cera ("Superbad" and "Arrested Development"). The two have sex and forget one vital piece: a contraceptive.

The two share a unique chemistry on the screen. Where Page has a quick mouth that gets her into most of her troubles, Cera slowly stumbles over each word and cannot express himself in the time allotted to him by Page.

After telling her best friend Leah – played by Olivia Thirlby, a newcomer who looks like she'll hang around for some time – Juno decides to tell her parents. The parents are played by two veteran actors, J.K. Simmons (the "Spider-Man" movies) and Allison Janney ("The West Wing," "Hairspray" and "American Beauty"). Her parents are in disbelief and, frankly, very funny in their confusion. They are of no help and almost unable to believe that Bleeker could be the one who Juno had slept with.

Juno hastily decides to get an abortion. That plan falls through when she finds out from a pro-life classmate that babies have fingernails and the girl working the desk inside continually talks about her sex life with her very own boyfriend and what the condoms taste like. Juno needs another plan and her best friend has one. The main plot of the movie now comes to the forefront.

Juno and Leah then search the Pennysaver for parents seeking to adopt, and find the perfect couple: Mark and Vanessa Loring (Jennifer Gardner and Jason Bateman). The couple seems a little too perfect on the outside. Juno lays on the sarcasm heavy at the first meeting and each subsequent meeting there after.

After one meeting Juno goes as far as to say, "You should've gone to China, you know, 'cause I hear they give away babies like free iPods. You know, they pretty much just put them in those T-shirt guns and shoot them out at sporting events."

She brings insult to injury to the couple seeking a child who for some unknown reason cannot conceive themselves. Juno's own adolescent rage and blindness don't allow her to see what is truly going on underneath; her hormones are pretty active and shield her from contacting with anyone on an emotional level.

Juno and Mark share many of the same tastes, including music, horror movies and a cynical outlook on the consumer driven world. Where Mark seems like a rebel, Vanessa seems to be the one who has brought him down and bottled him up in the sweet suburban life where they now live. Juno and Mark watch old horror movies together while Vanessa is working her corporate job. Mark seems to be the perfect man for Juno's child, but hidden deep within him is an unexpected secret.

Mark and Vanessa struggle to find their relationship and keep their footing, and so does Juno. She struggles with her feelings for Paulie. At times she shows her inner self to him and then shuts the door as he begins to step into her world.

Paulie is not the usual Prince Charming and that is what gives him a charm. The bumbling and fumbling teenage boy is Cera's strong suit, as evidenced in "Arrested Development" and "Superbad." Cera has now done a few stints as this character and he has really perfected it. Over time, he will lose appeal due to his lack of range, but for now it is his niche.

The truth about Paulie and Juno is revealed at the end and the two sit on steps singing their song, alternating verses with choruses. The ending doesn't feel forced or cheesy. The movie has a great way of ending with one note, then bringing the audience to another that is happy and uplifting, and each is of a happy couple.

Kevin Koczwara can be reached at kkoczwar@student.umass.edu.

Much of the plot revolves around Juno, played by Ellen Page (right), trying to decide if seemingly perfect couple Mark and Vanessa (Jennifer Garner and Jason Bateman) are right to adopt her unborn baby.

Ellen Page and Michael Cera have a unique chemisty on screen as a teen couple dealing with an unplanned pregnancy in "Juno."

Juno

STARRING:
ELLEN PAGE AND
MICHAEL CERA

A–

Looking for a Job?

The Daily Collegian

is seeking a hard-working, motivated undergrad to fill our

Advertising Representative Positions.

To Apply:
Contact Alex Bender
or Marsea Whooten
@ 545-3500 for

•Excellent business experience!
•Gain valuable sales experience
•Get credits for work
•Build your resume
*SOM students strongly encouraged to apply.

WANTED

GRAPHICS STAFFERS

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

WE ARE SEARCHING FOR HARD-WORKING, MOTIVATED UNDERGRADS TO FILL GRAPHIC STAFF POSITIONS.

VISIT THE COLLEGIAN AT THE BOTTOM OF THE OF THE CAMPUS CENTER

Charity stripe woes continue

FREE THROWS from page 10

collective 62 percent.

To put the figures in perspective, Zarryon Fereti leads the A-10 at 89 percent this year, excluding players with less than 50 attempts.

That type of consistency may be out of reach for the Minutemen this season, but improving upon its 66 percent clip is certainly not out of the question.

Against Xavier last Sunday, UMass made 68 percent of its free throws, which included an encouraging 10-of-11 from senior forward Etienne Brower.

However, Forbes missed five of 10 attempts – a clear sign for concern of a player who is averaging 71 percent this season. The senior also struggled against Saint Joseph's last week, as he went 4-for-10. At one point, Forbes had a chance to shrink his team's deficit to nine points. But the forward missed four consecutive free throws derived from a shooting foul and a technical foul on Saint Joe's coach Phil Martelli. The team made half of its 18 attempts in that game.

Yet before these two losses, there were auspicious signs from two of the Minutemen's traditionally weaker free-throw shooters.

In the team's last win (Charlotte, Jan. 19), the Minutemen made the same percentage of foul shots as their average – but that game more importantly featured strong free-throw shooting performances from senior center Dante Milligan and freshman point guard Gary Correia. Consistent free throw success from players other than Harris and Forbes will be important for the Minutemen down the stretch.

Milligan, who shot 47 percent last season and entered the game with the lowest percentage among players with at least 20 attempts, is improving as the season progresses. Milligan converted 11 of 14 attempts against the 49ers – one of the reasons why UMass earned the seven-point victory.

The senior credits his success to freshman forward Matt Glass, whose advice and patience drove Milligan's improvement this far.

"The past two weeks, Matt Glass has been working with me and staying after practice and the night before games," he said after the Charlotte game. "I give a lot of the credit to him because he's helped me to stay focused. As long as its positive advice, I'll take it from anyone. He didn't try to change my shot, only to help me concentrate and hold my follow through."

Ford knows that games can be won or lost on the foul line and that his team needs to collectively improve – even if it means freshmen helping upperclassmen.

"Whatever works, they need to keep doing it," Ford said. "Dante shot them well [against Charlotte], and I never thought I would have him in [late in the second half] for free throws. But overall we still need to improve our free throws."

In that same game, Correia demonstrated his ability to make free throws in a pressure situation. With senior forward Gary Forbes and junior point guard Chris Lowe both having fouled out, Correia had the opportunity to demonstrate his prowess at the line.

Although Correia missed a pair on the team's second-to-last possession, the freshman effectively sealed the victory for the Minutemen with 35 seconds remaining. His two free throws extended the UMass lead to five points.

"We practice free throws everyday, but obviously practice is a lot different than a game," Correia said. "Knowing that the game was on the line, I just tried to compose myself and put them in."

Despite the situation with Forbes and Lowe, Milligan was confident in Correia's ability to seal the victory.

"He's a good free-throw shooter and he makes shots in practice, so we were pretty confident in him," Milligan said.

Regardless of the team's struggles from the line, the Minutemen have an excellent free-throw shooter as their coach. Ford led his team in free-throw percentage for two consecutive seasons, shooting 88 and 91 percent from the line in the early '90s during his playing days at Kentucky. He is also first in UK career free-throw percentage.

Michael King can be reached at mking a dailycollegian.com

Despite coming off the bench, senior forward Etienne Brower led all scorers with 22 points Sunday in the 77–65 loss to Xavier.

Mills gets accolades

SENIORS from page 10

Texting still banned

While the state of Massachusetts would like people to stop texting when they drive, the NCAA would like to keep a ban on coaches from texting while they recruit. Division I coaches will continue to be banned from texting recruits as delegates from the NCAA student-athlete advisory committee voted 240 to 65 against texting. The ban was put in effect on Aug. 1, 2007, to limit coaches from texting recruits at all sorts of hours. The coaches are allowed to email recruits as it is considered different from texting.

Mills earns two honors

After being named to the Atlantic 10 All-Conference Third Team last year, the writers had high predictions for Mills this season. They named her to the A-10 All-Conference Second Team, and she has not disappointed.

On Dec. 17, Mills shared A-10 Co-Player of the Week honors with Charlotte's Sabrina Gregory. The senior forward averaged 17 points, 6.5 rebounds and 2.5 blocks, while shooting 56.5 percent from the floor. The team went 1-1 in this span, including a 75-51 loss against Villanova in which Mills was an efficient 8-of-10 from the field for 18 points. In a 59-50 win over Wagner, Mills filled up the stat sheet with 16 points, nine rebounds, four blocks and three steals.

Just two weeks later, Mills picked up her third A-10 Player of the Week Honors, this time winning it solo. Similar to her previous award, the team finished the week 1-1. This time, Mills averaged 20.5 points, 7.5 rebounds and 2.5 blocks, while shooting 69.2 percent from the field.

Level of competition

In its early non-conference play, Richmond played three opponents ranked in the top 15 in the Associated Press Poll. They lost to Georgia by 28, Maryland by 30 and Notre Dame by 25. However, these games may have prepared them for conference play.

The Minutewomen played some good non-conference opponents such as Hartford and Boston College, but nowhere near the caliber of Richmond's non-conference schedule. Dacko says that putting highly-ranked opponents on the schedule is always a consideration, but the team may not get anything out of the game if they're demoralized from losing by such a large margin.

Defending the perimeter

One thing the Minutewomen will need to work on is defending the 3-point line. In losses of over 20 points to Villanova and Richmond, the Minutewomen allowed 29 3-pointers. On the year, they're allowing opponents to shoot an alarming 38.1 percent from beyond the arc, compared to their own 30 percent shooting from three.

In order to stop some of these teams, they may have to extend the defense to the perimeter. Some teams pound the ball inside and have better interior players, while other teams have more deep threats. Some of the best teams have both threats, and these are the teams that are the most difficult to guard, but the Minutewomen certainly would like their perimeter defending to improve.

Mike Connors and Steve Games can be reached at sports a dailycollegian.com.

Sophomore guard Kim Benton is tied for the team-lead in made 3-pointers (21) and is fourth in assists with 47.

UMass hosts Rams in matinee game

W. BASKETBALL from page 10

team played a solid game overall, she was displeased with some of their offensive sets.

"When we get to 12 and 13 seconds on the clock, we don't have to stop and set up," she said. "We can continue the flow, cut hard to spots and get people open."

Against the Musketeers, the team stopped running its offense when the shot clock ran down to 10, and Dacko doesn't want this to happen again.

Sakera Young and Kim Benton will be doing the majority of the ball handling for UMass. Young began the season starting with Benton coming off the bench, but since then their roles have been reversed.

It will be the job of Benton and Young to limit Mahoney's production. The latter is the quicker of the two, while Benton is the better shooter from the perimeter, although she has yet to find her range this season, shooting 27.2 percent from the field.

Seniors Kate Mills and Pam Rosanio will lead the UMass on the offensive end of the floor. Both are shooting over 52 percent on the year, and they also lead the team in rebounding, which will become valuable against Fordham. The Rams have been outrebounded by nine per game, so second-chance opportunities are likely to present themselves for UMass.

Junior Stefanie Gerardot is the team's third-leading scorer at 9.2 points per contest. She is also 21-of-50 from beyond the arc this season, and this becomes especially helpful when Rosanio and Mills can find her from their positions in the post.

While the game is an unusually early start, it is Field Trip Day, and Dacko is excited that the team will be able to play in front of young kids. The Minutewomen have yet to exceed 800 in attendance this year.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor a student.umass.edu

CHECK OUT OUR MULTIMEDIA SECTION ON OUR WEBSITE!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

SUMMER STUDY INTERNSHIP PROGRAM

BOSTON UNIVERSITY SUMMER TERM

Earn 10 academic credits in 12 weeks. You choose two courses, and we'll arrange your internship.

Areas of Study:
• Arts and Culture
• Business and Management
• Film and Media Studies
• Graphic and Web Design
• International Studies
• Politics and Public Policy
• Psychology and Social Policy
• Self-Designed Track

APPLY BY MAY 2, 2008

www.bu.edu/summer/internship
617-353-0556

"I was able to land an internship at the architecture firm of Shepley Bulfinch Richardson & Abbott. The firm currently designs buildings throughout the country and even internationally. I am interested in "green" building and SBRA makes this a priority."
Graphic and Web Design intern, 2007

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™

Serving others since 1969 -- and STILL making a difference!

A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)

REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!

••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN

Spring Semester 2008 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Room 101 • Feb. 4 (Mon) • Feb. 5 (Tues) • Feb. 6 (Wed)

• Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Feb. 7th @ Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!

Volunteer, while earning credit!

AFRICAN BEADED ART
POWER AND ADORNMENT
On View February 1–June 15, 2008

Friday, February 1 5:30 pm
Lecture by John Pemberton III, Guest Curator, Professor Emeritus, Amherst College and Curatorial Consultant for African Art, SCMA

Stoddard Hall*
Route 9/Elm Street
across from Museum of Art
Free and open to all
Limited seating
*NOTE Change of venue

ART MENTOR FOUNDATION LUCERNE

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART

413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

Teen pregnancy and sarcasm mix in 'Juno'

Writing, directing combine for surprisingly solid comedy

By Kevin Koczwara
Collegian Staff

Diablo Cody's script for the movie "Juno" is, for lack of a better word, fantastic. It is a first-time script from the young writer – and hopefully not the last.

The story is a wholesome comedy about finding who you are, love and its true meaning, and to top it all off the movie is PG-13. This is a monumental accomplishment in the world of cinema today, with most comedies full of potheads, unrealistic sexual lives of high school kids and language that no mother would approve of. Who thought a movie about a pregnant girl could end up being very funny and not show a birth sequence? Who thought a comedy could be very funny these days without including at least one scene where the main character takes a large hit from a bong in the script?

Well, Cody did. He wrote the genuine script that is "Juno," and director Jason Reitman ("Thank You For Smoking") contributed to the movie a strong direction and a light and airy mood. Reitman's direction is a major piece of the movie and its pacing, tone and overall dry atmosphere lead to so many of the laughs.

The story revolves around a teenage girl, Juno, played by the exceptional Ellen Page ("Hard Candy"), who becomes pregnant after sleeping with her best friend Paulie Bleeker, played by the humbling Michael Cera ("Superbad" and "Arrested Development"). The two have sex and forget one vital piece: a contraceptive.

The two share a unique chemistry on the screen. Where Page has a quick mouth that gets her into most of her troubles, Cera slowly stumbles over each word and cannot express himself in the time allotted to him by Page.

After telling her best friend Leah – played by Olivia Thirlby, a newcomer who looks like she'll hang around for some time – Juno decides to tell her parents. The parents are played by two veteran actors, J.K. Simmons (the "Spider-Man" movies) and Allison Janney ("The West Wing," "Hairspray" and "American Beauty"). Her parents are in disbelief and, frankly, very funny in their confusion. They are of no help and almost unable to believe that Bleeker could be the one who Juno had slept with.

Juno hastily decides to get an abortion. That plan falls through when she finds out from a pro-life classmate that babies have fingernails and the girl working the desk inside continually talks about her sex life with her very own boyfriend and what the condoms taste like. Juno needs another plan and her best friend has one. The main plot of the movie now comes to the forefront.

Juno and Leah then search the Pennysaver for parents seeking to adopt, and find the perfect couple: Mark and Vanessa Loring (Jennifer Gardner and Jason Bateman). The couple seems a little too perfect on the outside. Juno lays on the sarcasm heavy at the first meeting and each subsequent meeting there after.

After one meeting Juno goes as far as to say, "You should've gone to China, you know, 'cause I hear they give away babies like free iPods. You know, they pretty much just put them in those T-shirt guns and shoot them out at sporting events."

She brings insult to injury to the couple seeking a child who for some unknown reason cannot conceive themselves. Juno's own adolescent rage and blindness don't allow her to see what is truly going on underneath; her hormones are pretty active and shield her from contacting with anyone on an emotional level.

Juno and Mark share many of the same tastes, including music, horror movies and a cynical outlook on the consumer driven world. Where Mark seems like a rebel, Vanessa seems to be the one who has brought him down and bottled him up in the sweet suburban life where they now live. Juno and Mark watch old horror movies together while Vanessa is working her corporate job. Mark seems to be the perfect man for Juno's child, but hidden deep within him is an unexpected secret.

Mark and Vanessa struggle to find their relationship and keep their footing, and so does Juno. She struggles with her feelings for Paulie. At times she shows her inner self to him and then shuts the door as he begins to step into her world.

Paulie is not the usual Prince Charming and that is what gives him a charm. The bumbling and fumbling teenage boy is Cera's strong suit, as evidenced in "Arrested Development" and "Superbad." Cera has now done a few stints as this character and he has really perfected it. Over time, he will lose appeal due to his lack of range, but for now it is his niche.

The truth about Paulie and Juno is revealed at the end and the two sit on steps singing their song, alternating verses with choruses. The ending doesn't feel forced or cheesy. The movie has a great way of ending with one note, then bringing the audience to another that is happy and uplifting, and each is of a happy couple.

Kevin Koczwara can be reached at kkoczwar@student.umass.edu.

Much of the plot revolves around Juno, played by Ellen Page (right), trying to decide if seemingly perfect couple Mark and Vanessa (Jennifer Garner and Jason Bateman) are right to adopt her unborn baby.

Ellen Page and Michael Cera have a unique chemisty on screen as a teen couple dealing with an unplanned pregnancy in "Juno."

Juno

STARRING:
ELLEN PAGE AND
MICHAEL CERA

A–

Looking for a Job?

The Daily Collegian

is seeking a hard-working, motivated undergrad to fill our

Advertising Representative Positions.

To Apply:
Contact Alex Bender
or Marsea Whooten
@ 545-3500 for

•Excellent business experience!
•Gain valuable sales experience
•Get credits for work
•Build your resume
*SOM students strongly encouraged to apply.

WANTED

GRAPHICS STAFFERS

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

WE ARE SEARCHING FOR HARD-WORKING, MOTIVATED UNDERGRADS TO FILL GRAPHIC STAFF POSITIONS.

VISIT THE COLLEGIAN AT THE BOTTOM OF THE OF THE CAMPUS CENTER

Charity stripe woes continue

FREE THROWS from page 10

collective 62 percent.

To put the figures in perspective, Zarryon Fereti leads the A-10 at 89 percent this year, excluding players with less than 50 attempts.

That type of consistency may be out of reach for the Minutemen this season, but improving upon its 66 percent clip is certainly not out of the question.

Against Xavier last Sunday, UMass made 68 percent of its free throws, which included an encouraging 10-of-11 from senior forward Etienne Brower.

However, Forbes missed five of 10 attempts – a clear sign for concern of a player who is averaging 71 percent this season. The senior also struggled against Saint Joseph's last week, as he went 4-for-10. At one point, Forbes had a chance to shrink his team's deficit to nine points. But the forward missed four consecutive free throws derived from a shooting foul and a technical foul on Saint Joe's coach Phil Martelli. The team made half of its 18 attempts in that game.

Yet before these two losses, there were auspicious signs from two of the Minutemen's traditionally weaker free-throw shooters.

In the team's last win (Charlotte, Jan. 19), the Minutemen made the same percentage of foul shots as their average – but that game more importantly featured strong free-throw shooting performances from senior center Dante Milligan and freshman point guard Gary Correia. Consistent free throw success from players other than Harris and Forbes will be important for the Minutemen down the stretch.

Milligan, who shot 47 percent last season and entered the game with the lowest percentage among players with at least 20 attempts, is improving as the season progresses. Milligan converted 11 of 14 attempts against the 49ers – one of the reasons why UMass earned the seven-point victory.

The senior credits his success to freshman forward Matt Glass, whose advice and patience drove Milligan's improvement thus far.

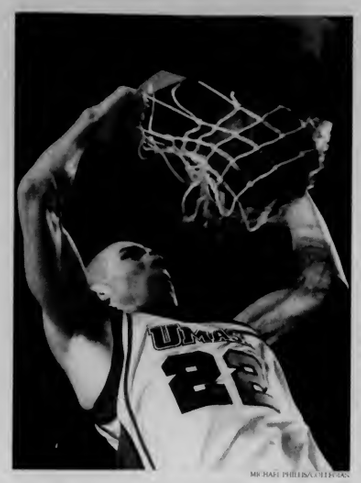
"The past two weeks, Matt Glass has been working with me and staying after practice and the night before games," he said after the Charlotte game. "I give a lot of the credit to him because he's helped me to stay focused. As long as its positive advice, I'll take it from anyone. He didn't try to change my shot, only to help me concentrate and hold my follow through."

Ford knows that games can be won or lost on the foul line and that his team needs to collectively improve – even if it means freshmen helping upperclassmen.

"Whatever works – they need to keep doing it," Ford said. "Dante shot them well [against Charlotte], and I never thought I would have him in [late in the second half] for free throws. But overall we still need to improve our free throws."

In that same game, Correia demonstrated his ability to make free throws in a pressure situation. With senior forward Gary Forbes and junior point guard Chris Lowe both having fouled out, Correia had the opportunity to demonstrate his prowess at the line.

Although Correia missed a pair on the team's second-to-last possession, the freshman effectively sealed the victory for the Minutemen with 35 seconds remaining. His two free throws extended the UMass lead to five points.



"We practice free throws everyday, but obviously, practice is a lot different than a game," Correia said. "Knowing that the game was on the line, I just tried to compose myself and put them in."

Despite the situation with Forbes and Lowe, Milligan was confident in Correia's ability to seal the victory.

"He's a good free-throw shooter and he makes shots in practice, so we were pretty confident in him," Milligan said.

Regardless of the team's struggles from the line, the Minutemen have an excellent free-throw shooter as their coach Ford led his team in free-throw percentage for two consecutive seasons, shooting 88 and 91 percent from the line in the early '90s during his playing days at Kentucky. He is also first on UK career free-throw percentage.

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com

Despite coming off the bench, senior forward Etienne Brower led all scorers with 22 points Sunday in the 77-65 loss to Xavier.

Mills gets accolades

SENIORS from page 10

Texting still banned

While the state of Massachusetts would like people to stop texting when they drive, the NCAA would like to keep a ban on coaches from texting while they recruit. Division I coaches will continue to be banned from texting recruits as delegates from the NCAA student-athlete advisory committee voted 240 to 65 against texting. The ban was put in effect on Aug. 1, 2007, to limit coaches from texting recruits at all sorts of hours. The coaches are allowed to email recruits as it is considered different from texting.

Mills earns two honors

After being named to the Atlantic 10 All-Conference Third Team last year, the writers had high predictions for Mills this season. They named her to the A-10 All-Conference Second Team, and she has not disappointed.

On Dec. 17, Mills shared A-10 Co-Player of the Week honors with Charlotte's Sabrina Gregory. The senior forward averaged 17 points, 6.5 rebounds and 2.5 blocks, while shooting 56.5 percent from the floor. The team went 1-1 in this span, including a 75-51 loss against Villanova in which Mills was an efficient 8-of-10 from the field for 18 points. In a 59-50 win over Wagner, Mills filled up the stat sheet with 16 points, nine rebounds, four blocks and three steals.

Just two weeks later, Mills picked up her third A-10 Player of the Week Honors, this time winning it solo. Similar to her previous award, the team finished the week 1-1. This time, Mills averaged 20.5 points, 7.5 rebounds and 2.5 blocks, while shooting 69.2 percent from the field.

Level of competition

In its early non-conference play, Richmond played three opponents ranked in the top 15 in the Associated Press Poll. They lost to Georgia by 28, Maryland by 30 and Notre Dame by 25. However, these games may have prepared them for conference play.

The Minutewomen played some good non-conference opponents such as Hartford and Boston College, but nowhere near the caliber of Richmond's non-conference schedule. Dacko says that putting highly-ranked opponents on the schedule is always a consideration, but the team may not get anything out of the game if they're demoralized from losing by such a large margin.

Defending the perimeter

One thing the Minutewomen will need to work on is defending the 3-point line. In losses of over 20 points to Villanova and Richmond, the Minutewomen allowed 29 3-pointers. On the year, they're allowing opponents to shoot an alarming 38.1 percent from beyond the arc, compared to their own 30 percent shooting from three.

In order to stop some of these teams, they may have to extend the defense to the perimeter. Some teams pound the ball inside and have better interior players, while other teams have more deep threats. Some of the best teams have both threats, and these are the teams that are the most difficult to guard, but the Minutewomen certainly would like their perimeter defending to improve.

Mike Connors and Steve Games can be reached at sports@dailycollegian.com.

Sophomore guard Kim Benton is tied for the team-lead in made 3-pointers (21) and is fourth in assists with 47.

UMass hosts Rams in matinee game

W. BASKETBALL from page 10

team played a solid game overall, she was displeased with some of their offensive sets.

"When we get to 12 and 13 seconds on the clock, we don't have to stop and set up," she said. "We can continue the flow, cut hard to spots and get people open."

Against the Musketeers, the team stopped running its offense when the shot clock ran down to 10, and Dacko doesn't want this to happen again.

Sakera Young and Kim Benton will be doing the majority of the ball handling for UMass. Young began the season starting with Benton coming off the bench, but since then their roles have been reversed.

It will be the job of Benton and Young to limit Mahoney's production. The latter is the quicker of the two, while Benton is the better shooter from the perimeter, although she has yet to find her range this season, shooting 27.2 percent from the field.

Seniors Kate Mills and Pam Rosanio will lead the UMass on the offensive end of the floor. Both are shooting over 52 percent on the year, and they also lead the team in rebounding, which will become valuable against Fordham. The Rams have been outrebounded by nine per game, so second-chance opportunities are likely to present themselves for UMass.

Junior Stefanie Gerardot is the team's third-leading scorer at 9.2 points per contest. She is also 21-of-50 from beyond the arc this season, and this becomes especially helpful when Rosanio and Mills can find her from their positions in the post.

While the game is an unusually early start, it is Field Trip Day, and Dacko is excited that the team will be able to play in front of young kids. The Minutewomen have yet to exceed 800 in attendance this year.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

CHECK OUT OUR MULTIMEDIA SECTION ON OUR WEBSITE!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

SUMMER STUDY INTERNSHIP PROGRAM

BOSTON UNIVERSITY SUMMER TERM

Earn 10 academic credits in 12 weeks. You choose two courses, and we'll arrange your internship.

Areas of Study:
• Arts and Culture
• Business and Management
• Film and Media Studies
• Graphic and Web Design
• International Studies
• Politics and Public Policy
• Psychology and Social Policy
• Self-Designed Track

APPLY BY MAY 2, 2008

www.bu.edu/summer/internship
617-353-0556

"I was able to land an internship at the architecture firm of Shepley Bulfinch Richardson & Abbott. The firm currently designs buildings throughout the country and even internationally. I am interested in "green" building and SBRA makes this a priority."
Graphic and Web Design intern, 2007

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™

Serving others since 1969 -- and STILL making a difference!

A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)

REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS

Your life will NEVER be the same!

••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN

Spring Semester 2008 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Room 101 • Feb. 4 (Mon) • Feb. 5 (Tues) • Feb. 6 (Wed)

• Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Feb. 7th @ Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!

Volunteer, while earning credit!

AFRICAN BEADED ART
POWER AND ADORNMENT
On View February 1–June 15, 2008

Friday, February 1 5:30 pm
Lecture by John Pemberton III,
Guest Curator, Professor Emeritus,
Amherst College and Curatorial
Consultant for African Art, SCMA

Stoddard Hall*
Route 9/Elm Street
across from Museum of Art
Free and open to all
Limited seating
*NOTE Change of venue

ART MENTOR FOUNDATION, LUCERNE

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART

413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

UNH, PC pull off sweeps

By Ricky Eddleston
Collegian Staff

It was a good weekend for No. 7 New Hampshire and No. 14 Providence. Both teams pulled off weekend sweeps of Hockey East Rivals. UNH beat Boston University 4-2 in game one of the weekend series and 5-3 in the second contest.

PC pulled into a third place tie with Northeastern after sweeping the No. 13 Wildcats this past weekend. The Friars won both games convincingly, winning the first game 5-1 and the second game 5-2.

PC has played very well of late and seems to be getting hot at the right time of the year. The Friars are 7-3 in their last 10 games, with victories over four ranked opponents, most notably No. 5 Michigan State in the Great Lakes Invitational.

UNH has also stepped up in recent weeks, going 6-0 in conference play since the middle of December. Because of this recent hot streak, the Wildcats have shot up to the top of the Hockey East standings 23 points, a point ahead of second place Boston College.

The Eagles have not only been one of the hottest teams in Hockey East, they are one of the hottest teams in the country. BC is 4-0-2 in their last six games – all conference matchups – and holds a 9-1-2 record since Nov. 30.

Hockey East

Players of the week

Tyler Sims of PC won CCM/RBK Player of the Week honors this past week. The senior goaltender made 55 saves on 58 shots in a pair of victories over Northeastern.

Vermont's Wahsontiio Stacey was named the Pro Ambitions Rookie of the Week. Stacey had a three-point weekend in the Catamount's two games against No. 15 Massachusetts. He recorded two goals and an assist as well as posting a plus-4 rating.

UNH senior goaltender Kevin Regan won Pure Hockey Defensive Player of the Week honor for his performance in a weekend sweep of BU over the weekend. Regan recorded 54 saves over the weekend, 28 in game on Friday night and 26 on Saturday.

Hockey East in the Polls

Hockey East had six representatives in this week's release of the USCHO.com/ CSTV Div. 1 Poll. UNH was the highest ranked team at No. 7. Boston College dropped one spot from last week, down to nine.

Northeastern fell two spots from No. 11 to No. 13. Both UMass and UMass Lowell dropped one spot in this week's poll; UMass dropped from No. 14 to No. 15, while UML dropped from No. 15 to No. 16.

The team making the biggest splash in this week's poll was Providence. The Friars came in at No. 14, after being unranked last week ... Merrimack finished its non-conference schedule unbeaten, with a 6-0-1 record. The last time the Warriors had an undefeated non-conference record was 1988 ... Northeastern has gone 1-4-1 since their 11-game unbeaten streak was ended by Merrimack ... UMass Lowell's 1-0 loss to Minnesota-Duluth was just the second 1-0 loss in UML's history; the only other 1-0 loss was to Alaska-Anchorage on Oct. 18, 2003, in the Nye Frontier Classic.

Ricky Eddleston can be reached at sports@dailycollegian.com.

Senior defenseman David Leaderer has played in all 23 games this season for the Minutemen, registering two goals and three assists.

Cahoon displeased with recent slide game, but the Minutemen let the 2-0 lead slip away and fell to the Wildcats 3-2 to start their current six-game winless streak.

CAHOON from page 10

Mental adjustment

Cahoon expressed displeasure with his team's recent performance. The Minutemen allowed the Vermont offense to do anything it wanted during last weekend's series. Although the Catamounts did receive some favorable bounces in the pair of games, UMass didn't help itself; especially on the defensive end.

UVM's fourth goal on Friday caromed into the net off the skates of junior defenseman Topher Bevis. After the game, Cahoon said that while it was certainly bad luck, Bevis could have positioned himself better to avoid such a situation.

"Stick-positioning on the ice, posture on the ice, awareness, communication, these are all things that we need to emphasize on the ice," Cahoon said. "We need to focus on drills that commit us to that type of play in games.

"You can't blame it on any one thing. I know that it all came after a part of our schedule that our players absolutely detest. To say they dislike [winter break] is an understatement. [UMass] is a ghost town, they have a lot of free time even with a majority of them taking courses, and it's just not a healthy environment for them. That's not an excuse, it's just the reality."

UMass's last game before the break was a 5-4 victory over Colorado College in the championship game of the Lightning College Hockey Classic. The win was the first ever for UMass in a holiday tournament. The championship earned the team a No. 5 national ranking – the highest in the program's history.

Complacency then set in, and the urgency that pushed UMass to the top of Hockey East.

"We need to be a little more desperate in the third period. Vermont played to win in the third period. They played to win, and we played to not lose," Kostka said.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com.

Carnival goes well for Small, Hawkins

Several skiers place in Top 10; men win giant slalom event

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's and women's ski teams put forth another strong showing over the weekend at the Plymouth State University Carnival in Waterville, N.H. Several skiers had top 10 finishes in each event.

Senior Jason Small had an outstanding performance at the PSU carnival in the giant slalom, registering a first-place finish for the Minutemen. He completed the race in 2:13.55.

Small was not the only UMass skier to finish well. Sophomore Andrew Hawes finished with a time of 2:16.59, earning fifth place. Ian Hohmeister placed eighth finishing in 2:18.23. Their performances gave the Minutemen three skiers in the top 10. Small's brother, Matthew, also had a good run coming in 16th place (2:20.43).

In the regular slalom event, Matthew Small led the Minutemen with a 10th place finish. Alex Zahoruiko finished two spots behind him.

UMass came in second position in the giant slalom and third place in the regular slalom. The PSU Panthers ruled their turf, earning first place in the overall standings – on the strength of having four racers who finished in the top 10 in the giant slalom.

The Panthers have been a force all season, with first-place team finishes in every race thus far. UMass gave a good performance but it was disappointing for them to have performed so well, only to come up just short of a win.

Freshman Jamie Taloumis continues to impress in her debut season. Over the weekend she came in fourth place in the women's giant slalom event with a time of 2:22:56. This was her second fourth-place finish in as many weeks; she placed there in the giant slalom at the UConn Carnival. In addition, Taloumis came in seventh place in the regular slalom event with a time of 1:36.52.

Taloumis was not the only female skier to have a good weekend. Emily Shilleto competed in two events over the weekend and wound up with two finishes in the top 10. She finished the giant slalom in 2:24.03 to come in 10th place, in addition to her fifth-place finish in the regular slalom coming via a time of 1:36.34.

As the only senior on the women's team, Eliza Hawkins is being counted on to provide consistently solid results. She did just that in the women's slalom event, coming in third place with time of 1:35.46. This was the highest finish in any event by a female skier.

The Minutewomen came extremely close to a first-place finish in the regular slalom but were barely edged by Colby Sawyer College. The team was not as successful in the giant slalom, finishing in fifth place.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

NOTE TO SELF! Write For Sports
sports@dailycollegian.com

College can be stressful. Paying for it doesn't have to be.

1.866.245.6179 | sovereignbank.com/forstudents
Sovereign Bank

You have enough on your plate. You shouldn't have to worry about getting the money you need for educational expenses. With a Sovereign Direct Student Loan, you get a smart way to pay for school when federal loans just aren't enough. For more information, call 1-866-245-6179 or visit sovereignbank.com/forstudents.

Member FDIC © 2007 Sovereign Bank | Sovereign Bank and its logo are registered trademarks of Sovereign Bank or its affiliates or subsidiaries in the United States and other countries. Sovereign Direct Student Loans are funded by Sovereign Bank and are not guaranteed by the federal government and not classified as federal loans.

Seven O's
Every Wednesday
Karaoke
★★★★★
Every Tuesday
Beer Pong
Live Band
Saturday, 2/2/08
Shut up & Dance
Looking for exposure? Student bands welcome to play at Seven O's
Looking for a place to have a private event/party?
Call 413-530-6996
Route 116, 330 Amherst Rd
Sunderland, MA 01375
(413) 665-6786
3 PM to 1 AM M-F
1 PM to 1 AM Sat&Sun
Next to Cumtaxi Apts.

Put some pep in your step.

5								9
	9	4		5	3		7
			2	4
4	2		5	8
	5						6
				7	4		2	3
				2	7
	8		1	3		9	4
2								1

ACROSS
1 Support crew
6 Not as much
10 Up for the job
14 Underwater scanner
15 Word of honor
16 Sketch
17 Make fun of 18 Marmaduke, e.g.
20 NFL scores
22 School period
23 Hindered
27 Actress Sandra
28 Farm enclosure
30 Traffic tie-ups
35 Before, poetically
36 Schnoz
38 Dream time
39 Jazz phrase
41 Branches
43 Vesuvian flow
44 Not active
46 Places
48 RPM part
49 Antenna
51 Harry and Norma
53 Distress signal
55 Countersign
56 Woodland heights?
61 Classifieds
62 Does certain caretaking
64 Consumed
68 Seniors' org.
69 U.S. border lake
70 Type of drum
71 QB Aikman
72 Ilk
73 Tarnish

DOWN
1 Mach+ plane
2 Little piggy
3 Gasteyer of "SNL"
4 Make secure
5 Fender and others
6 Yule wood
7 Pitcher parts
8 Charger
9 Disgraces
10 Finds the sum of 11 Annoying child
12 Daily Planet reporter
13 Large-mouth pitcher
19 High school years
21 Penn and Asiin
23 Spain's place
24 Of the sea
25 Give priority
26 Plummets
29 Lessing or Day
31 Each and every one
32 Grim figure
33 Projecting handles
34 Meager
37 One-tenth
40 Calendar abbr.
42 Davis of "Thelma & Louise"
45 Brief sample
47 Most melancholy
50 Sets free
52 Actress Soto
54 V.P. Agnew
56 Be ... as it may
57 Laugh boisterously
58 New Greek coin
59 Catch a glimpse of 60 Move emotionally
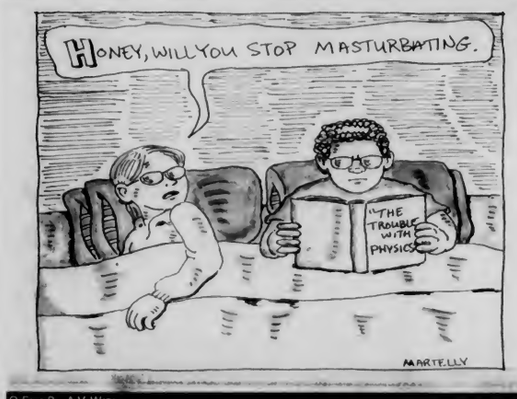
63 Harden
65 Mai ... cocktail
66 Sea eagle
67 Bottom line figure

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

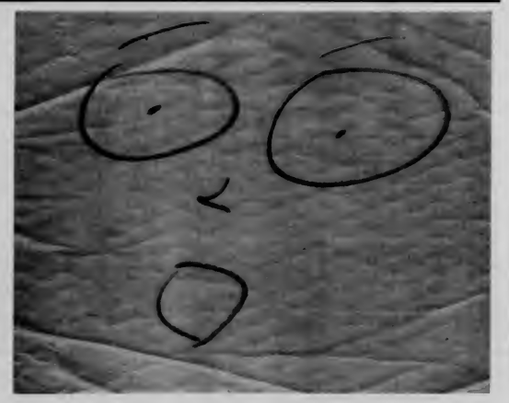
A new photo has been posted for this week's caption contest. See the image and submit funny, witty, or absurd captions at:

www.dailycollegian.com/caption

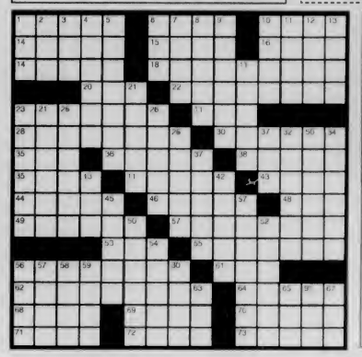


Winning captions will be published in Friday's paper with the author's name. People will definitely like you more if you win.

Quote of the Day



"I like school. It's just too bad classes get in the way."



–Mark Paul Gosselaar as "Zak Morris"

Labrat By Richard Martelly

O-Fall By A.V. Watkis

Submit your comics!
comics@dailycollegian.com

Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Quit playing the sidekick role of Jonas Brother to some freshman girl's Hannah Montana. You are your own man.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You're a hot sack of potatoes.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Columbo had only one working eye and yet look at how observant he was. It's simply amazing.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Although you may mean well, picking things out of a stranger's hair certainly crosses the line between friendly and weird.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Daughters are great, but moms are way more fun and twice as freaky.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You will rebuild a broken friendship using kind words and sticky tack.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Divide your free time equally between bringing life back into a vapid world and mackin' on mad shorties.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Try listening to country music for at least one hour. Suffering can be a productive and beneficial learning experience.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You are caught between a rock and a hard place. Turn into goo like Alex Mack and drip your way out of trouble.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You will begin a prosperous rap career marked by a hoarse, croaky voice and the stage name "Snoop Frog."

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You're acting too much like Sassy the stuck-up cat from Homeward Bound. Try acting more like the fun-loving Chance.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Build up your roommate's hopes with a fictious secret admirer, then crush her dreams with the truth when she makes you angry.

In the midst of a sloppy, sloppy world, Comics are neat.

comics@dailycollegian.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Apt. for rent

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms. Now showing for June and September. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879. View apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. Now showing for June and September. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherst lincolnrealty.com.

Employment

Summer Ranch Jobs The C Lazy U Guest Ranch in the Colorado Rocky Mountains has positions available for students who are available until mid-August. Applications on the website - www.clazyu.com or call Phil 970-887-3344

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Employment

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders & more.

Employment

Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today toll free at 1-888-684-2267 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

Services

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Services

Spring Break from $199 Land price starting from $199 for 7 days. We also have an all inclusive hotel start from $799 per person. Give us a call today it's not to late to still get away 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Travel

Spring Break 08
Hot Deals
Hot Destinations
Hot Parties
Ask about Group Deals
And FREE TRIPS.
1-800-426-7710

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSWEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 30, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass set to 'duke' it out

Duquesne hosts Minutemen in clash of high-powered offenses

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

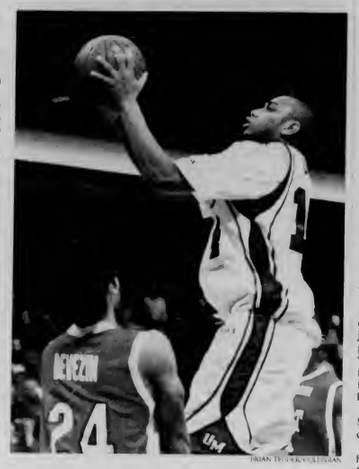
Two teams that play a similar brand of basketball – and also share a similar need to improve their respective postseason résumés – convene in Pittsburgh, Pa., tonight for an Atlantic 10 matchup with March Madness implications.

Massachusetts and Duquesne enter tonight's tipoff at the A.J. Palumbo Center as the two highest-scoring teams in the conference – and two of several solid A-10 squads that are fighting for a possible postseason spot.

UMass (13-6, 2-3 A-10) appears to be in a more dire situation than the Dukes (13-5, 2-3 A-10), having lost two straight conference games. The Minutemen fell to Saint Joseph's for the second time this season and then followed that with a home loss against conference-leading Xavier.

Duquesne had lost two straight A-10 games by a combined three points – on the road against Rhode Island and Fordham – before winning at home against St. Bonaventure and George Washington entering tonight's matchup. The Dukes are 9-1 at the Palumbo Center this season, with their only loss coming against then-No. 12 and undefeated Pittsburgh on Dec. 5.

Both teams love to run up and down the floor, creating an abundance of fast-break opportunities – and the final score will likely resemble last season's meeting at the Mullins Center (UMass 101, Duquesne 87). This season, the Minutemen rank last in the A-10 in scoring defense, allowing 78.4, 4.9 more points than the team directly ahead of them. Part of that, though, is due to the tempo that UMass plays – which creates more possessions than an average NCAA game.



Despite leading the conference with 86 points per game, Duquesne's leading-scorer (Shawn James, 14.6) doesn't crack the top 15 in the A-10 in scoring. The Dukes feature a very well-balanced offensive attack with eight players averaging at least seven points per game – including three in double figures. Strangely enough, they rank at the bottom in the conference in 3-point field goal percentage, at 31.1 percent.

Other than their season-opening win over Howard, 129-59, no Dukes player has scored over 22 points in a game – despite the fact that they have scored over 90 points as a team six times this year. Duquesne regularly uses an 11-man rotation, with all of those players averaging more than 10 minutes per game.

UMass coach Travis Ford said he won't make as many substitutions as the Dukes do, citing that it's too big of a drop-off in production when he does. But he did say that he was considering altering the lineup a little bit, and that it's something that the coaching staff will definitely address.

"They've got more experience and depth than we do," Ford said about tonight's opponent before Monday's practice. "They have just as talented individuals as we have. It's not going to be easy, that's for sure. They are a very talented team."

The biggest challenge for the Minutemen will likely be contending with James in the low-post. The 6-foot-10 junior big man leads the conference in blocks (4.18 per game), helping the Dukes limit opponents to the lowest field goal percentage (40.1 percent) in the A-10.

Point guard Chris Lowe and the Minutemen play Duquesne tonight in Pittsburgh, Pa., for a key Atlantic 10 matchup.

"I don't think there is any strategy you can use," Ford said, commenting on how his players approach facing James in the middle. "You just better know he's there. If he's around you, you better find the open man because your shot is probably not going to get off."

James's 7.3 rebounding average paces the team and Duquesne's 40.1 per game are tops in the conference. The Dukes also lead the conference in assists per game (19) and steals (10 per game). UMass is second in blocks (136) to Duquesne (143), but the Minutemen hold the slight edge in per-game average.

"Probably more so than any other team in the country, their defense fuels their offense," Ford said.

Offense will certainly not be at a premium tonight between these two teams. But the team that puts the bigger emphasis on defense will likely leave happy.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

Cahoon signs new extension

Hockey coach to remain with team for foreseeable future

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts hockey coach Don Cahoon has agreed to a contract extension, although the terms of the deal were not disclosed.

Cahoon's current contract is not yet expired and, despite the recent struggles of the Minutemen, last season's NCAA Tournament berth displayed the progress Cahoon has made in his eight-and-a-half seasons at the helm of the program.

"I didn't even know I needed a new contract," Cahoon joked after the team's practice yesterday. "I'm just glad to know I'll be here for the foreseeable future. I'm comfortable with where I am, and I'm happy to be here."

UMass athletic director John McCutcheon was unavailable for comment.

In his time at UMass, Cahoon has posted a record of 101-139-28. Prior to UMass, he spent nine seasons as the head coach at Princeton University. He had similar success with the Tigers, and after a few tough seasons, they became a consistent contender in the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference.

Aside from the NCAA Tournament appearance last season, Cahoon guided the Minutemen to one appearance in the Hockey East finals and three appearances in the semifinals of the conference tournament.

"We've made some good progress in my time here, and I'm glad to know that I'll be around to hopefully continue that," he commented.

WHERE'S WESSBECKER?

Junior defenseman John Wessbecker has not played since Nov. 30 against Cornell due to an undisclosed injury – the game ended in a scoreless tie.

Cahoon said yesterday that there is no timetable for his return to the UMass lineup, and he is not going to hurry him back.

"He's definitely out for the foreseeable future. There's no way of knowing exactly how long because of the type of injury," Cahoon said.

UMass Hockey

In his absence, redshirt freshman Kevin Kessler, redshirt senior Patrick Dineen and freshman Doug Kublin have all seen time on the blue line.

"They've all stepped in and done a great job for us when called upon. It's been great," senior captain Mike Kostka said. "Obviously, with John out, we need that from them. They've shown that they're all capable defenseman in John's absence."

Kessler is in his second season with the program. After sitting out all of last season, he provided a steady reserve for the Minutemen. His first game of the season came against New Hampshire on Dec. 8. In the matchup against Hockey East's top offense, Kessler posted a plus-1 rating.

Dineen also made his season debut in a match with the Wildcats. He scored UMass's first goal in the

See CAHOON on page 8

Free-throw follies for UM

The struggles at the charity stripe for the Minutemen have continued to frustrate coach Travis Ford over the past two seasons.

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last season, a trip to the foul line for any member of the Massachusetts men's basketball team sent a cringe across coach Travis Ford's face. It's not that the veteran coach doesn't appreciate the value of free throws; it's that the team struggled from the line as a whole in 2006-07.

This year, the Minutemen have only slightly improved their free-throw shooting, up four percentage points to 66 percent. However, the team ranks last in the Atlantic 10 in this category for the second consecutive year. Even so, UMass has made the most free throws in the conference, but also has far and away the largest number of attempts.

The team's 537 foul shots are 51 more than Charlotte, the team with the second-highest total, creating a disparity that can largely be explained by two reasons.

The Minutemen's up-tempo style creates more possessions, meaning they have more opportunities to get to the line.

Second, the team's two leading scorers, senior forward Gary Forbes (20.3 points per game) and sophomore shooting guard Ricky Harris (19.9) derive much of their offense from penetrating toward the basket from the perimeter – thus leading to more fouls.

It's not a coincidence that Harris and Forbes lead the team in both free throws made and attempted. However, each of their percentages fall in the mid-seventies – figures that don't place either of them among the Top 10 in the league.

Yet the situation with two reasonably consistent free-throw shooters taking most of the attempts is much better than that of last season.

Center Stephane Lasme took a team-high 188 attempts, but made only 62 percent in 2006-07. Shooting guard James Life led all players with 82 percent last season, but he only attempted 45 free throws, as a part of the team's

See FREE THROWS on page 7

UMass hockey coach Don Cahoon recently received a contract extension from athletic director John McCutcheon.

Mills, Minutewomen ready for Fordham

Maroon and White look to break A-10 skid vs. Rams

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After winning its first conference game by 38 points, the Massachusetts women's basketball team dropped its next three, and now looks to regain momentum when it hosts Fordham at 11:45 a.m. today.

The Rams have yet to win a game in their 20 attempts this season, but despite their record, UMass (9-10, 1-3 Atlantic 10) coach Mamie Dacko isn't putting this game into the win column just yet.

"[Fordham's] record is not indicative of the way they play. They play hard; they took Saint Louis and George Mason to overtime," Dacko said.

One player she mentioned in particular was point guard Megan Mahoney. The freshman leads the team with 15.2 points per game, including 21.2 in Fordham's five conference losses.

Mahoney captured her third A-10 Rookie of the Week honor on Jan. 28, after averaging 18 points, 6.5 rebounds and 2.5 steals in a pair of games. She is the leading freshman scorer in the conference, but hasn't had enough help to lead the Rams to a successful season.

The team's other double-digit scorer is Annie Zopf. The junior guard is averaging 10.4 points and also leads the team with three assists per game. Though putting up double figures in scoring, neither of the Rams' leading scorers are high-percentage shooters. Mahoney shoots 38.3 percent while Zopf shoots 31.5 percent.

Dacko recently watched the Rams drop a 66-42 home game against Duquesne and noticed that the opponent likes to play an up-tempo, fast break offense. Limiting Mahoney and Zopf's production will be a key step in preventing Fordham's transition game.

In the Minutewomen's most recent loss the team scored a season-low 39 points against Xavier, and although Dacko thought her

See W. BASKETBALL on page 7

Junior Stefanie Gerardot ranks third on the team with a scoring average of 9.2 points per game and is tied for the team-lead in 3-pointers made.

Seniors play key role during 2007-08 season for Dacko

BY STEVE GAMES & MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In their final seasons at Massachusetts, seniors Pam Rosanio and Kate Mills are playing some of their best basketball.

The duo has led the team in scoring in 16 of the 19 games the women's basketball team has played this season. Junior guard Stefanie Gerardot has also proved to be a consistent scoring threat as the leading scorer in those other three games.

Mills and Rosanio have combined for 32.8 points per game, more than half of the team's scoring output. No other player averages double figures in scoring; Gerardot's 9.2 points per game ranks third on the team. Mills also leads the team in rebounds (6.8 per game) and Rosanio is right behind her with 5.3 per contest.

Both players have a similar style on the court, as they both like to play with their back to the basket accompanied by a consistent outside shot. Rosanio is a smaller forward, but she still gets a lot of her baskets in the paint by drawing fouls.

UMass Basketball

Mills is a traditional power forward in that when she has the ball in the post, she has an arsenal of moves. However, Mills is more versatile than most power forwards, with the ability to stretch defenses with her solid mid-range jump shot.

Rosanio scores a lot of points in the paint but has proven to hit from outside the three-point line; she is shooting 40 percent from the outside. In the month of January, the Minutewomen have outscored their opponents 186-110 in the paint. Their record in those six contests was 3-3.

See SENIORS on page 7

INSIDE: UMASS TOPS DUQUESNE 94-80 | PAGE 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 36 LO: 22 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, JANUARY 31, 2008

New dorms at UMass Boston

First campus residence halls

BY ASHLEY COULOMBE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

At the end of last year, officials at the University of Massachusetts-Boston proposed a plan to build their first-ever dormitories on campus in Dorchester.

The 25-year plan, proposed to the University's Board of Trustees, would spend an estimated $750 million over the next 10 years to build two dorms for about 1,000 students, according to a December 2007 article in The Boston Globe.

The first phase of the plan also includes the construction of three academic buildings and a 1,000 space above-ground parking garage to replace one that was recently shut down and declared to be unsafe.

UMass Boston is currently the only university in the UMass system without dorm rooms on campus.

"I don't think I'd ever go to a school that didn't have dorms," said UMass Amherst junior Rachel Beaulieu. "Living in a dorm is part of the college experience that I wouldn't want to miss out on."

Many supporters of the proposal agreed that it would create more unity among students, as well as give the school a much-needed makeover. Most of the buildings on the Boston campus – built in the early 1970s – are falling apart.

"It will change the whole culture of the campus," Chancellor J. Keith Motley said in an interview with The Boston Globe. "It will create a much more open and vibrant community."

Boston Mayor Thomas M. Menino, who originally opposed a similar plan presented in 2003, is supporting the current plan based on the movement UMass officials have made to accommodate the surrounding neighborhoods' requests.

Those that oppose the building of dorms on campus believe that it will forever change the dynamic of the surrounding neighborhoods.

"They have an agreement with the community that it would be a commuter college and that there would be no dorms," said member of Columbia Savin Hill Civic Association, Joe Chaissin. "They will turn family restaurants into college bars."

Despite some of the complaints, UMass Boston plans to move ahead with the first phase of construction.

To fund the project, the University looks to increase enrollment, and is also receiving $181 million from the $2.9 billion budget that was approved by the UMass system last September.

Ashley Coulombe can be reached at acoulomb@student.umass.edu

The only campus in the University of Massachusetts system without dormitories, officials at UMass Boston have proposed spending $750 million over the next 10 years for the construction of two new residence halls.

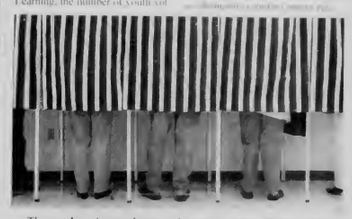
Youth voters triple in Florida primary

DAVID HUMPHREYS

With the results from Tuesday night's vote in Florida already behind the candidates, the youth vote may have played a critical role in the Sunshine state's primary.

According to Florida PIRG, the number of voters in the state between the ages of 18 and 29 has more than tripled for both Democrats and Republicans since 2000.

In 2000, Florida PIRG reported the number of youth Democrat, numbering at 38,639 and young Republicans at a further 41,970. In contrast, the group said in 2008 that there were 151,545 Democrats and 134,425 Republicans.



According to The Center for Information and Research on Civil Learning, the number of youth vot[illegible] available [illegible] primaries except in Iowa, where the number of youth Republicans dropped by 10,000.

Young voter[illegible] may now equal a quarter of the electorate, and play a critical role in the 2008 election, [illegible] reported.

Since 2000, the [illegible] registered more than 600,000 18 to 29 year olds and nearly 650,000 participated, peer to peer contacts to get young people out to the polls, the PIRG said.

Young people contacted by the Student PIRGs Vote Veteran Project turned out at a rate 11 percentage point higher than a group of demographically similar individuals who also registered to vote within six months of the election.

Dave Humphreys can be reached at dhumphre@student.umass.edu

The number of voters between the ages of 18 and 29 has tripled in Florida since the 2000 election.

Removing snow from campus, like outside the Morrill Science buildings, is the responsibility of the Physical Plant Grounds Service.

No snow days for physical plant crews

Ground Services working overtime to keep campus clear

BY LUCAS CORREIA
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Ground Services at the University of Massachusetts has been hard at work plowing through another winter of wild weather in the western half of the Commonwealth.

According to Jack Rogala, supervisor for Landscape Services, the mess left over from this winter's abundance of snow has been dealt with thoroughly.

The operation is "well orchestrated to serve a tight, compact city," he said.

During snow emergencies, Physical Plant Grounds Services is responsible for maintaining the safety of the 1400-acre campus and its 94 acres of parking lots, 20 miles of roads, 50 miles of sidewalks, nine acres of plazas and terraces and over 200 buildings.

During each heavy snowfall, over 60 workers from Grounds Services, private contractors, and volunteers from other departments are hard at work clearing safe pathways for the UMass community.

The proactive management team meets at least eight hours before a storm is predicted to start planning the most effective strategy. Grounds Services consults local weather reports and the Amherst Police Department to determine the possible severity of the situation both on and off campus.

The team also goes over the University's schedule to accommodate for any events that may be planned throughout a day of winter precipitation. University Health Services, the UMass Police station, and the dining halls are given first priority, followed by buildings that may be hosting special events.

With two inches or more on the ground, work crews start plowing, keeping the roads on campus clear throughout the storm.

Crews from the University Grounds Services begin plowing as soon as more than two inches of snow accumulates on the ground.

The storm's timing also plays a [illegible] role in decision making.

If it is predicted that snow will fall throughout the day, the judgment

See SNOW on page 3

Edwards steps aside and exits from '08 campaign trail

BY LISA DEBENEDICTIS AND SHRUTI SEHGAL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Democratic candidate John Edwards publicly announced his decision to quit the presidential race on a visit to New Orleans yesterday.

Having recently lost Iowa's caucus, the New Hampshire first-in-the-nation primary and in South Carolina, Edwards ended his campaign with the words, "it's time for me to step aside so that history can blaze its path."

The two forerunners, Hillary Rodham Clinton and Barack Obama, are now head to head in the Democratic race.

Although his withdrawal from the race came as a shock to many, especially after his public announcement last week that he would stay in the race until "Super Tuesday," students at the University of Massachusetts were not very surprised by his decision.

Postgraduate student Michael Bell and organizer of the UMass for John Edwards 2008 campus group expressed his disappointment in the decision.

"Obviously, I am upset," said Bell. "I think that Edwards was the most electable candidate amongst the Democratic Party. He had middle class values, and supported middle class America. But, part of me was half expecting it. He did not win Iowa, and wasn't considered amongst the top two [Democratic candidates] right away."

Freshman student Alexander Lombardi, an advocate for Obama, agreed with Bell's assessment.

Following a string of defeats in primaries across the nation Edwards exited the presidential race yesterday.

"Although Edwards aroused a decent response from the Democratic community, most of his efforts were

See EDWARDS on page 3

McCain leads GOP candidates

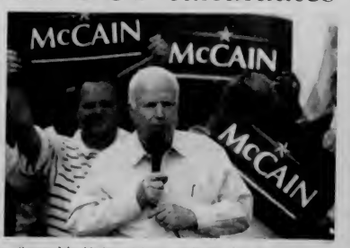
Race tightens for republicans

BY JOSHUA WALOVITCH
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

With "Super Tuesday" coming up on Feb. 5, all eyes are on the seven remaining candidates still in the 2008 presidential election.

John McCain, 71, is one of them, back in the race again after losing to George W. Bush in 2000.

Known as a "maverick" among political pundits, McCain challenges not only his party, but Beltway norms as well. He in the past voted twice against George W. Bush's tax cuts, was one out of four Republicans to vote against the Private Securities Litigation Reform Act of 1995 and was the only Republican to vote against the Freedom to Farm Act in 1996.



Hoping to have more success this year than in 2000, McCain is making another run at the presidency. McCain's familiarity – due in large part to his race against President Bush in 2000, along with his legislative success and military experience – have propelled him to the front of the GOP run-off.

According to campaigns and media reports, some of the potential advisors include Rick Davis, McCain's campaign manager in 2000, Phil Gramm, former U.S. Representative and Senator of Texas, and Toni Loeffler, who is a former U.S. Representative from Texas as well as the national finance co-chair for Bush's 2000 campaign.

McCain has come out against abortion rights, except in cases of rape, incest or if it could protect the life of the mother.

He has been a supporter of the War in Iraq and has voted for use of military, however, McCain voted in March 2008 for the removal of

See MCCAIN on page 3

Senator John McCain, of Arizona, is heading into "Super Tuesday" on Feb. 5 with momentum after winning Florida earlier this week.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 74

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szagun
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.U. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphrey
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Stonczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Landa Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan Mcskeff
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntire
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael Ivins
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olsen
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Sudbury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenstein
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leil Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Gaines

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nicholas Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Across the Nation Around the World

Marijuana vending machines hit LA

BY DAISY NGUYEN
ASSOCIATED PRESS - WRITER

The city that popularized the fast food drive-thru has a new innovation: 24-hour medical marijuana vending machines.

Patients suffering from chronic pain, loss of appetite and other ailments that marijuana is said to alleviate can get their pot with a dose of convenience at the Herbal Nutrition Center, where a large machine will dole out the drug around the clock.

"Convenient access, lower prices, safety, anonymity," inventor and owner Vincent Mehdizadeh said, extolling the benefits of the machine.

But federal drug agents say the invention may need unplugging.

"Somebody owns (it), it's on a property and somebody fills it," said DEA Special Agent Jose Martinez. "Once we find out where it's at, we'll look into it and see if they're violating laws."

At least three dispensaries in the city, including two belonging to Mehdizadeh, have installed vending machines to distribute the drug to people who carry cards authorizing marijuana use.

Mehdizadeh said he spent seven months to develop and patent the black, armored box, which he calls the "PXM," or prescription vending machine.

A sliding fence protects the tinted windows of his dispensary, barely distinguishing it from a busy thoroughfare of strip malls, automobile dealers and furniture shops. A box resembling a large refrigerator stands inside the nearly empty shop, near a few shelves stocked with vitamins and herbs.

A guard in a black T-shirt emblazoned with the word "Security" on the front stands at the door. A poster of Bob Marley decorates a back room.

The computerized machine requires fingerprint identification and a prepaid card with a magnetic stripe. Once the card and fingerprint are verified, a bright green envelope with the pot drops down a slot.

Mehdizadeh says any user approved for medical marijuana and registered in a computer database at his dispensaries can prepurchase the drug and then use the machine to pick up.

The process provides convenience and privacy for users who may otherwise feel uncomfortable about buying marijuana, Mehdizadeh said.

At the Timothy Leary Medical Dispensary in the San Fernando Valley, the vending machine is accessible only during business hours. An employee there said the machine was introduced about five months ago, and provides speedy service.

"It helps a lot of patients who are in a lot of pain and don't want to wait around to get help," Robert Schwartz said. "It's been working out great."

Mehdizadeh said he sought the advice of doctors, and decided to limit the amount of marijuana per user to an ounce per week. Each purchase from the machine yields 1/8th or 2/8th of an ounce. By eliminating a vendor behind the counter, he said, the machine offers users lower drug prices. The 1/8th ounce packet would cost about $40 — $20 lower than the average price at other dispensaries.

A spokesman for a marijuana advocacy group said the machine also benefits dispensary owners.

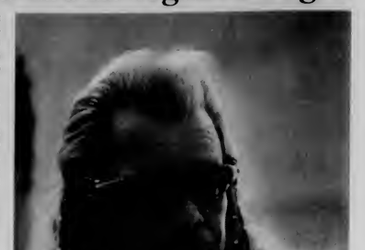
"It limits the number of workers in the store in the event of a raid, and it'll make it harder for theft," said Nathan Sands, of The Compassionate Coalition.

Marijuana use is illegal under federal law, which does not recognize the medical marijuana laws in California and 11 other states.

The Drug Enforcement Agency and other federal agencies have been actively shutting down major medical marijuana dispensaries throughout the state over the last two years and charging their operators with felony distribution charges.

Dog freed from legal charges

Duane "Dog" Chapman cannot be extradited to Mexico to face criminal charges in his capture of serial rapist and fugitive Andrew Luster in 2003, a three-judge panel in Mexico has ruled.



The unanimous ruling was handed down Tuesday. The TV bounty hunter, his son Leland Chapman and associate Tim Chapman faced being sent to the resort town of Puerto Vallarta, where they captured Luster, who had jumped a $1 million bond on charges that he drugged and raped three women.

"He's a free man," Chapman's San Francisco-based attorney, James A. Quadra, said in a telephone interview late Tuesday. "They can't reinstate any criminal charges and as a result of that, there's no basis for them to then seek extradition."

Luster's disappearance during his trial in California set off an international manhunt by police, FBI and bounty hunters trying to recoup some of the bond money. After his capture, he was taken back to the U.S. to serve a 124-year prison sentence.

Because bounty hunting is illegal in Mexico, prosecutors in that country charged the trio with detaining Luster and asked U.S. authorities to arrest Chapman and his colleagues and send them to Mexico.

"The three of them — Duane, Leland and Tim — have always been absolutely certain they did the right thing and proud of what they accomplished," Quadra said.

A three-judge panel in Mexico has ruled against a possible extradition of Duan Chapman on deprivation of liberty charges.

A judge in Mexico dismissed the deprivation of liberty charges in July, ruling prosecutors had taken too long in their attempts to bring the trio to trial. But Mexican prosecutors appealed the ruling.

"We are ecstatic that this nightmare is finally over, and happy to see the Mexican justice system works," Chapman and his wife, Beth, said in a statement. "We can all now move forward."

Super Bowl may harm health

BY MALCOLM RITTER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

For rabid fans of the New York Giants and New England Patriots, this Sunday's Super Bowl won't be just a game. It may be a health hazard. Heart attacks and other cardiac emergencies doubled in Munich, Germany, when that nation's soccer team played in World Cup matches, a new study reports.

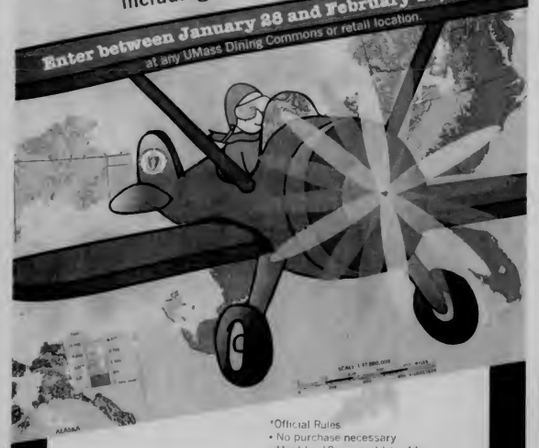
While history suggests European soccer fans can get a bit more worked up than the average American football fan, doctors think there are some valid warnings to be shared.

"I know a little bit about the Super Bowl," study author Dr. Gerhard Steinbeck of Ludwig Maximilians University in Munich said in a telephone interview. "It's reasonable to think that something quite similar might happen."

He and his colleagues present their results in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine. They blamed emotional stress for the heart problems, but they note that lack of sleep, overeating, wolfing down junk food, boozing and smoking might have played a role too.

Previous studies suggest that events like earthquakes and war can boost the risk of heart problems. Findings for soccer have been inconsistent.

The new work "confirms something people have been highly skeptical about ... that soccer (would) produce that kind of emotional investment that might trigger a heart attack," said psychologist Douglas Carroll of the University of Birmingham in England.



"People who are not interested in sport find it very difficult to comprehend this," said Carroll, who in 2002 reported a link between World Cup soccer and heart attacks in England.

The new paper included heart attacks, cardiac arrests, episodes of irregular heartbeat and activations of automatic implanted defibrillators. The researchers noted the number of cases reported in the greater Munich area during World Cup competition in Germany in the summer of 2006. They compared that to the totals for similar periods in 2003 and 2005, and for several weeks before and after the tournament.

Dine & Win!
Enter to win a trip for two with $500 spending money.

UMass Dining, Coca-Cola, and American Airlines® want to fly you and a guest to any destination during Spring Break in North America including 48 states and Canada!

Enter between January 28 and February 12, 2008
at any UMass Dining Commons or retail location.

Drawing will be held Wednesday, February 13 at 6 pm at Worcester Dining Commons

*Official Rules
• No purchase necessary
• Must be 18 years old or older
• Open to UMass Dining customers

*For details umass.edu/diningservices OR see entry boxes

YCMP RESIDENTIAL Food Management's BEST CONCEPTS

Looking for a Job?
The Daily Collegian
is seeking a hard-working, motivated undergrads to fill our Advertising Representative Positions.

To Apply:
Contact Alex Bender or Marsea Whooten @ 545-3500 for more information.

•Excellent business experience!
•Gain valuable sales experience
•Get credits for work
•Build your resume

*SOM students strongly encouraged to apply.

NOW LEASING FOR SUMMER/FALL '08

SUGARLOAF ESTATES
28 River Road Sunderland
665-3856
www.sugarloafestates.com

Aspen Chase & Alpine Commons
APARTMENT HOMES
133 Belchertown Road, Rt. 9, Amherst
256-0741
www.aspenchaseapartments.com
www.alpinecommons.com

• Deluxe 2 bedroom apartment homes
• FREE Cable & High Speed Internet
• FREE Heat & Hot Water
• Basketball, Volleyball & Refreshing Pool *
• Washer/Dryers in selected styles
• Pet Friendly Community
• On-Site Storage Facilities*
• Free On-Site parking
• Minutes from UMASS on FREE Bus line
• Fitness Center*

• Spacious 1, 2, 3 & 4 bedroom apartment homes
• ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED
• Patio or Balcony in selected styles
• On-Site Laundry Facilities
• Pet Friendly Community
• Off Street Parking
• On the PVTA Bus line
• Minutes from UMASS & the Center of Amherst
• Washer/Dryers in selected styles

*Available to all the residents of our beautiful communities.

Win a wii — Reserve your apartment today

Edwards' withdrawal no surprise at UM

EDWARDS from page 1

dwarfed by the success of both Clinton and Obama in the primary," Lombardi said. "Edwards is a candidate that we have seen before. The grand theme in this election seems to be change, the notion of doing something different. Edwards certainly has the ability to create change. But, on a visual level, both Clinton and Obama represent figures that we have not seen before. People can see this difference."

Freshman Patrick Sammon, a Republican, held a similar opinion.

"I figured Edwards would eventually drop out. Though I am doubtful over whether a Republican will win this election, I definitely don't think that Edwards would have won."

"I didn't think that he would drop out, but I didn't think he had a chance at being president," said Republican freshman student Kira MacLean. "Though it is understandable, considering that his wife has breast cancer. It must be a difficult time for the both of them."

Diagnosed with breast cancer after the 2004 election, Elizabeth Edwards announced that her cancer had returned and was incurable in 2006.

According to Bell, Edwards' lack of appeal to the wealthy and powerful backers contributed to his downfall.

"One of the reasons he was not considered amongst the top two right away, aside from the 2004 election, was his approach. He appealed to the working class, not the rich and powerful," Bell said. "If he wanted to win candidacy, he would have to change his approach. He always talked to people as though he was their equal. But, to make himself more marketable, he would have to look and act in a more presidential manner."

According to Lombardi, "Edwards had a lot of great policies, particularly his stance on poverty.

"What attracted me to Edwards initially was his long term plan to eliminate poverty in the US. The fact that he wanted to do it, and had a plan, really drew me into him," Bell said.

Prior to declaring his decision, Edwards spoke with both Obama and Clinton to ensure that his poverty concerns remain discussed in the campaign. As of yet, Edwards has not endorsed either candidate.

"We do not know who will take the final steps to 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, but what we do know is that our Democratic party will make history ... and with our convictions and a little backbone we will take back the White House in November," said Edwards.

Students at the University of Massachusetts found Edwards' move to exit the campaign trail unsurprising.

Lysa DeBenedictis can be reached at ldebenedi@student.umass.edu

Shruti Sehegal can be reached at Ssehgal@student.umass.edu

McCain stands on political experience

MCCAIN from page 1

most U.S troops.

"Having been a POW, I support John McCain in his proposed courses of action when it comes dealing with issues on war," said George Kelly III, a junior at the University of Massachusetts.

His stance on immigration is just one issue that has caused controversy within the public eye. McCain's Comprehensive Immigration Act of 2007 was a compromise between the legalization of illegal immigrants and the funding for an increased tightening of the border, including a security fence. The bill has received criticism from both the left and the right.

McCain supports President Bush's current social security plan, which allows workers to divert some social security payroll taxes to private accounts.

Sophomore Albert Lee, a Barack Obama supporter said, "Economically, McCain is not so good. He said it himself during the Florida debate, mentioning that he had a lot to learn economically."

Mitt Romney, McCain's number one competitor as of right now, has challenged McCain on the issue of the economy. Romney has presented himself as the best choice when it comes to fiscal conservatism.

"No one needs to give me a briefing on the economy. I won't need to choose a vice president that understands the economy because I know the economy," Romney said.

McCain — born into a family of naval admirals — graduated from the United States Naval Academy, fifth from the bottom of his class. While in the Naval Academy, he racked up over 100 demerits and competed as a lightweight boxer for three years.

He later completed training as a naval aviator, surviving two plane crashes with minimal injuries. After serving little time on an aircraft carrier, he worked as a flight instructor before pushing for a combat assignment.

During the Vietnam War, McCain saw some action as a participant in the Operation Rolling Thunder campaign, surviving 22 bombing missions against North Vietnam. In 1967, McCain's aircraft was gunned down; he became a POW and was held captive for close to six years. Offered early release several times, he refused to leave without his fellow captives. The cost was five extra years of incarceration.

McCain retired from the Navy in 1981 at the rank of captain. A year later, McCain won a seat in United States House of Representatives. Five years later, he decided to run for senator in Arizona after Senator Barry Goldwater retired.

McCain was elected senator in 1986 and still holds that position today.

In 2000, McCain had an unsuccessful run at the presidency, losing to George W. Bush as the Republican candidate in the national election. McCain had received just over 31 percent of the Republican primary votes while Bush racked up 62 percent of the votes. This election cycle, McCain has won primaries in New Hampshire and South Carolina while receiving 38 delegate votes, second only to Mitt Romney, who holds 73 delegate votes.

As senator, McCain was one of five senators involved in the Keating Five scandal, which helped set up the collapse of many savings and loans institutions in the United States during the late 1980s.

Along with being a decorated war veteran, McCain has had a measure of legislative success. The Indian Economic Development Act of 1985, the Line Item Veto act of 1996, the Bipartisan Campaign Reform act in 2002 and the McCain Detainee Amendment of 2005 were all signed into law.

The Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act is one of the more controversial pieces of law that McCain has approved. Its purpose is to regulate the financing of political campaigns, making him unpopular with many of his colleagues who raise money during the election process.

With the Massachusetts primary taking place at the beginning of next month, and McCain carrying momentum into Tuesday's festivities, there is still plenty of time to explore each candidate's platform before "Super Tuesday."

Snow removal job appreciated by students

SNOW from page 1

pus activities is submitted through the University chain of command.

The decision is passed on to the director of the Physical Plant, who passes their recommendation on to the Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance. The recommendation is presented to the Chancellor, who makes the final decision.

John Deere loaders, farm tractors reconfigured as snow-blowers, and several dozen 10-wheelers are then put to work clearing snow away from the roads and sidewalks.

"They do a good job compared to other schools ... they manage to keep the roads here safe," said sophomore Ben Becker.

Plow operators are subject to 10-12 hour shifts that can last longer in the event of a particularly bad storm. At least two trucks are assigned to specific routes on campus. More trucks can be assigned depending on the severity of the storm. Private contractors are hired to clear out the parking lots as well.

After the snow is cleared, it is hauled to more appropriate areas of campus that aren't being utilized. If the snow piles become too excessive, it is taken to other designated areas on the outskirts of campus. The University has not had to use that option so far this season.

According to Rogala, teams of shovelers play the most critical role in the snow removal effort. Volunteers from Construction, Custodial and Housing Services are hard at work shoveling safe pathways and entrances all over campus.

Grounds Services is currently equipped with over 8,000 gallons of Liquid Magic and over 1,000 tons of salt from We Care Organics. Before being used, the salt is treated at Spring Valley Landscaping, allowing the salt to perform better at lower temperatures. The treatment also breaks down the salt to make it more environmentally friendly.

"[Their services] are pretty effective," said James Sherman, a senior here at UMass. "My shoes are dry."

Lucas Correia can be reached at lcorreia@student.umass.edu

Plow operators work shifts ranging from 10 to 12 hours during heavy winter storms to keep the campus clear of snow and ice.

GO PATS GO!

Sunday, February 3, 2008
At all DCs from 4–9pm

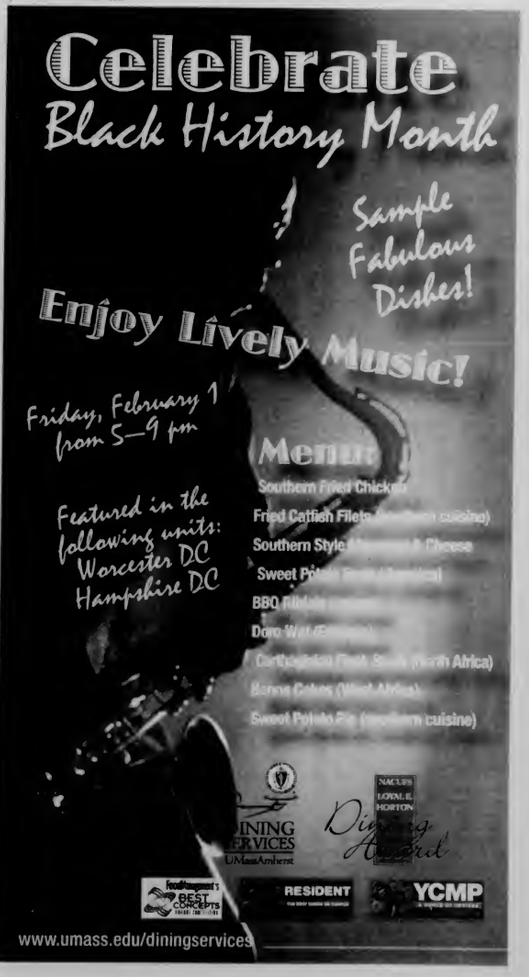
Go Pats Go Specials
New England Clam Chowder
Buffalo Wings
Meatball Sub
Patriot Pizza
Cranberry Coffee Cake
And more!

NACUFS LOYAL E. HORTON Dining Award
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
Food Management's BEST CONCEPTS RESIDENT YCMP

www.umass.edu/diningservices

*No New York Style Bagels Served Super Sunday

Celebrate
Black History Month



Sample Fabulous Dishes!

Enjoy Lively Music!

Friday, February 1 from 5–9 pm

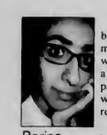
Featured in the following units:
Worcester DC
Hampshire DC

Menu
Southern Fried Chicken
Fried Catfish Filets (Southern cuisine)
Southern Style Macaroni & Cheese
Sweet Potato Pone (Jamaica)
BBQ Ribs
Doro Wat (Ethiopia)
Carthaginian Fish Stew (North Africa)
Banana Cakes (West Africa)
Sweet Potato Pie (Southern cuisine)

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
NACUFS LOYAL E. HORTON Dining Award
Food Management's BEST CONCEPTS RESIDENT YCMP

www.umass.edu/diningservices

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN



EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, JANUARY 31, 2008

"It were best that we not all think alike; it is difference of opinion that makes horseraces." - Mark Twain

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

President Bush goes abroad

Parisa Saranj

This winter break, being thousands of miles away from home, which would cost me a fortune to visit, I packed some stuff and wandered around as the residential halls closed.

Around that time, a very important man was traveling, too. Unlike me, though, he had a very serious and imperative reason to travel. George W. Bush went to the Middle East. BBC correspondent Matthew Price travelled with him to watch the president's progress closely.

I thought about what I'm going to achieve from my traveling. I couldn't find any answer, but the president did. At first, he'd said he genuinely believed that there could be a comprehensive peace treaty between Israel and Palestine signed by the end of this year. Price wrote in his tour diary, however, that this strikes him as pretty unlikely since he had actually lived in Jerusalem for almost four years.

For me, visiting towns where poverty and social injustice stands is sign of "Western uncivilization."

My first stop was Florida. I had accepted a kind invitation from a very dear friend to accompany her on a week-long vacation. There, the homes of the wealthy and those who can afford to travel, struck me. The tourist side of me saw huge beach houses and expensive brand-name stores ornamented by New Year's themes everywhere. The journalistic side of me saw beggars with empty cups in the middle of shining boulevards where many tourists shop for designer products.

As for Mr. Bush and Price, their first stop was Tel Aviv. What struck the tourist Mr. Bush was his confidence about a negotiated peace deal by the end of the year. And what struck the journalist Price was the noticeable difference between what he heard from Bush's aides, and what he heard from people on the streets. He wrote, "like my taxi driver this morning, who told me with that weary sigh everyone here has when talking about such visits: 'It won't achieve anything.'"

I didn't get much from Florida, rather, the entire time I was worried about my not-very-full bank account. On the other hand, my fellow travelers to the Middle East didn't have to worry about that. Price observed that the logistics going into this trip were phenomenal somehow the White House is reluctant to say how much. Costing millions of dollars, George Bush clearly thinks it is worth it. "He left this troubled land [Israel/Palestine] still talking of his confidence."

I, on the other hand, left Florida thinking about where to stay for the next four weeks with no confidence.

While on my way to upstate New York to visit a friend, Mr. Bush traveled to Bahrain. There, he welcomed a new Iraqi law that allows thousands of former junior supporters of Saddam Hussein's Baath party to take up government jobs. Well, it was Mr. Bush's administration that supported the removal of Baath party officials from office in the first place, soon after the occupation of Iraq in 2003.

I don't think I have any entry to add to my winter break diary on this new law.

In Port Jarvis, I settle down at the mercy of my kind friend and her family; off to Saudi Arabia President Bush went.

"Welcome to the Middle Ages, baby!" That's what someone in the travelling White House press corps said as Price and other journalists hit the ground in Saudi Arabia and women on board were discussing wearing headscarves.

For them, touring in a region I am from brings about questions of whether a dress code is the sign of uncivilization. For me, visiting towns where poverty and social injustice stands is sign of "Western uncivilization." This part of my trip was an actual middle age. It just didn't feel right to see such sceneries in a country whose president claims to be the most powerful man in the world, or a country whose economy claims to be in the best shape.

In his trip, President Bush called for countries across the Middle East to be more democratic and liberal, to introduce economic and social reforms. He says each country must manage changes in its own way.

To many, including Price, it feels like he's trying to impose Western cultural values onto the Arab world.

Finally, Price wrote, "I always feel the same when leaving the Middle East. Slightly sad." As I was reviewing my tour diary of all the places I visited, he went on – "this is a special place, a place that has suffered so much, a place that is so misunderstood by so many people."

I thought to myself how much of what we see around us and beyond our borders is actually interpreted correctly and acceptably. Then, I thought in each trip to a new place, and in each observation of a new culture, how many times do we judge a society with the intentions of imposing our own opinions?

What about me? How much of what I saw was rigid elucidation of my background?

Parisa Saranj is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at psaranj@student.umass.edu.

Boys will be boys

Nicholas O'Malley

In the next town over, there's a guy by the name of Bud Selig, and he's in charge of a little club called Major League Baseball. All the parents in town had taken their kids to play at the club for years and years, and they all loved it. Even when new clubs starting opening, Bud's club was always the most popular.

That was until a few years ago when all of the kids made up a group called the Players' Association and put their buddy Donald Fehr in charge. The Players' Association had stopped playing at the club until Bud made it better.

Since that time, though, Bud's club hasn't been as popular. Many of the parents had started taking their kids to new clubs in town, like the National Football League club. Needless to say, Bud was quite nervous that the kids would stop going to his club, much like what happen to the National Hockey League club.

One day, he saw that a few of the kids were having fun; in fact, they were having more fun than any kids he had ever seen. Bud was proud of the kids, so he put their names down on his wall of fame, where all the fun-loving kids' names went.

It turned out that some of the kids had been using a new toy in order to have fun, something called "steroids." The only problem was that the new toy was dangerous, and none of the parents in town wanted their kids playing with it. In fact, most of the clubs in town had banned the toy and checked the kids to make sure they didn't have it.

The biggest part of the paper, however, was when Mr. Mitchell said little Roger Clemens had used the toy many, many times.

After a while, a lot of the kids were playing with steroids at Bud's club. He knew that he really should have cracked down on the toy, but the parents were happy with how much fun their kids were having. Bud couldn't bring himself to stop it.

Everything was fine until a couple kids hurt themselves with the toy. When all of the parents had found out, they demanded that Bud ban the toy. Although they didn't want to shut down the club, the parents would take their kids to different clubs.

Bud knew that many kids were using "steroids," but didn't know which ones. It was just wrong to punish them all. Bud wanted to check the boys to see if they had the toy, but Donald Fehr and his Players' Association wouldn't let him.

Many boys continued to get away with using the toy until Congress, a group of the meanest parents in town, threatened to punish everyone if the boys kept using the toy. Congress demanded that Bud check all of the boys for the toy. Even Donald Fehr was afraid to go up against such mean parents, so Bud finally started checking the boys.

Bud couldn't keep the boys from using the toy, though, and every time that a boy seemed to be having a lot of fun, everyone else thought he was using it. Even Barry Bonds and Roger Clemens, two boys who had been having the most fun longer than anyone, were suspected of using it. Many of the parents complained, saying that if the boys were using the toy, they didn't belong on the wall of fame.

Congress eventually sent the smartest parent in town, George Mitchell, to find out who in the club was using the toy. So Mr. Mitchell went snooping around the club, trying to find how the boys had gotten hold of the toy.

Mr. Mitchell wrote down everything he found and gave the paper to all the parents. The paper was very long, so many parents relied on what others had said upon reading it.

It turned out that Mr. Mitchell had named a great deal of kids that had used the toy, a couple of whom admitted to using it. The biggest part of the paper, however, was when Mr. Mitchell said little Roger Clemens had used the toy many, many times. Even though Roger had said he never used the toy, many now questioned whether or not he belonged on the wall of fame.

So this is how Bud's club is today. After a recent meeting between the mean parents, Bud, and Donald Fehr, everyone is clamoring about how the toy is simply unacceptable; however, no one is willing to take full blame for the boys using the toy.

It's time, though, to realize that it does not matter whose fault it really is, as long as the boys stop using the toy. As for the boys, it's simply time to acknowledge that they had used it, and move on. All you parents out there, meanwhile, need to stop focusing on who used the toy and what it means for the club, all that matters is all the fun the boys have had. Because when it comes down to it, it's all for the fun of the game.

Nicholas O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

A DOGGY WE'RE CLEVER BUT WE CAN'T DRAW.
EDITORIAL CARTOONISTS WANTED
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Insurance or bust

Devon Courtney

Most of us can feign a sizeable amount of concern over big-time political scandals. And why not? There are plenty to choose from. Former Republican hopeful Rudy Giuliani had been hypocritically making campaign ads in Spanish, while simultaneously condemning the quest for citizenry from those who can't "habla Ingles." Political strategist Hillary Clinton has been crying buckets on national television, producing results which are defying convention by somehow gaining her popularity.

In spite of all this troubling national ballyhoo, nobody has been addressing the most important scandal of all, which is about insurance here in Massachusetts. The reason you need to be concerned about this is more obvious than a gun-point robbery, and twice as literal; if you've got any unresolved health insurance issues this month, you'll be owing the state money.

Our home state has graciously offered to take some of that cumbersome money off of our hands.

Our home state has graciously offered to take some of that cumbersome money off of our hands if we're not to be bothered with a luxury like health insurance. Most of you may not have to worry about this, but the recently passed Massachusetts insurance law has raised my personal threat meter to an even more abstract fluorescent color.

So what are the penalties for those people like me who, for one reason or another, don't happen to have a fat wad of insurance stuffed in their back pockets? They will be asked to pay small and easily manageable fines ranging from hundreds to thousands of dollars annually, increasing with every income bracket.

Wait, did I say "small and easily manageable fines?" I don't know how that slipped in there, sorry about that. I of course meant "oh my, I'm ruined."

The uninsured living right here in Massachusetts (and you might be one of them) will face fines of "$76 a month for those with moderate incomes," according to an article in the Boston Globe.

An absurd question crossed my mind: If an individual could afford to pay that fee, couldn't it instead easily be put towards a personal insurance policy for him?

Of course it could. People don't choose to be uninsured, just the same as they don't choose to be poor. If people can't afford insurance, what makes state legislators think that these people can afford to pay ridiculous penalties? Somehow, I don't think that "be healthy – or else" is a fair or effective policy.

There are over 748,000 uninsured people living in Massachusetts, which, according to The Boston Globe, is a leap of 10 percent over last year. In other words, there are 66,000 more people right here at home who are essentially up the creek without the paddle of health necessity, down the waterfall of incessant taxation. The legislature is kicking them while they are down, and it's not as if they can simply get up and stagger into a hospital for treatment.

Some of you might even be wondering why those in lower income brackets can't simply apply for free coverage, thereby sparing themselves the costly punishments levied by the state.

I'm glad you asked. For people like me, who have applied for MassHealth insurance and been granted full coverage, there is a uniquely dubious scenario. My "full coverage" has been cancelled – without my knowing – multiple times for frivolous things like "emergency hospital visits," and "needing to see a specialist."

I will always remember the first time I applied as an independent applicant for insurance from MassHealth. I remember getting the admission letter full of fake enthusiasm, along with a nifty little membership card and a book of regulations and proceedings that was so lengthy that it would have made the great Dostoevsky wet himself.

All of those letters and novels about how good their coverage was were very comforting to me, especially when I desperately needed that thing that they were haphazardly providing (medical attention).

I suspect that there are many others in the same predicament that I was in. If this is where the people with lower incomes turn to for medical coverage, then the legislative process which now forces the poor to adopt this garbage is like speed dating for the hopelessly awkward.

I now realize the conundrum. Heath insurance companies are businesses, nothing more. People like me are going to get fined because businesses are interested in making money. Conversely, they're not interested in the health and well-being of everyone, unlike the friendly and benevolent state legislators are. Oh yeah, about that; they're already contemplating raising the aforementioned penalties for the uninsured even higher, because the Boston Globe reported concern that the fees are "too low."

With all these ridiculous decisions being made for me, I wouldn't be surprised if the end of the world really did arrive soon. Not too soon, I hope. I still need to get insurance.

Devon Courtney is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu.

Ledger's death reveals fatalistic fixation

Evan Powers

Just hours after he died prematurely and alone, Heath Ledger's name was already entered on the online Wikipedia listing for people who died before the age of 30, and who were known for reasons other than their death. It's a long list of popular rock musicians, actors, stage performers and other various celebrities who lived life in the spotlight but always seemed to battle personal issues. Accidents and illness take some, particularly those who made their name from sporting prowess, yet the words "drugs" and "overdose" crop up repeatedly, particularly alongside the names of actors and musicians, Ledger included.

No matter how they die, the sadness at the waste of talent, and the grief of admirers and fans who have invested parts of their own identity into their adored idol, builds a glamour around the death of these idolized individuals that staples their careers with a premature death.

Ledger, the on-the-rise actor, was still only 28-years-old and was the headline of the much-anticipated Batman movie, "The Dark Knight," playing the sociopathic Joker. It's been a little over a week since he was found dead of an apparent overdose on sleeping pills in his apartment, but has already gone from movie star to cultural touchstone.

In just 48 hours, his memorial page on Facebook had over 30,000 members. TMZ, an entertainment company, had generated over 74 pages of condolences on their Web site comments, and hundreds of eulogies and goodbyes appeared on The Sydney Morning Herald's Web site, Ledger's native Australian newspaper. That's not even including the questions, mystique and hype surrounding Ledger's role in the Dark Knight and what it will do to boost the number of people who will go to see the movie in theaters when it premiers in July.

The death of someone cut down in the prime of life brings home our own mortality, and it makes us realize that they, just like us, are not immortal.

What accounts for this need to pay public tribute? Successive generations have felt that impulse – the need to make sense of untimely death, and even justify it, by celebrating the dead young person in an outsize way, or even to attend the funeral of someone they don't know. It's been happening for years; the grunge listeners of Generation X lost Kurt Cobain when he committed suicide in 1994. The lead singer of Nirvana still remains an iconic legend in rock music, given his album sales that make him one of the most lucrative musicians today.

Other icons over the years – James Dean, Marilyn Monroe, Elvis Pressley, Freddy Mercury and Chris Farley – are all celebrities whose careers are still talked about today. Their movies still have cult followings, and their music is still bought, downloaded and listened to at Tribute Concerts to this day.

Death and suicide is a very frightening thing to all of us. It is an unknown dimension that is talked about and experienced by every person, whether directly or indirectly. People are drawn to entertainment, they are drawn to other people, and they are drawn to the unknown world that is death. It's why we live vicariously through TV when a natural disaster occurs, it's why we read the obituaries in the newspaper, it's why we become fascinated with the premature deaths of celebrities, like we are now with Ledger.

The death of a star actor frightens us and fascinates us. The death of someone cut down in the prime of life brings home our own mortality, and it makes us realize that they, just like us, are not immortal.

The death of Heath Ledger is unfortunate; I'm sorry to see his family and his two-year-old daughter have to continue living without someone who was destined to become a very fine actor for a number of years. But for Ledger, like other young icons who died prematurely, their careers can be compared to the story of Achilles, who was told by his mother that he could either take the safe road, stay home from war against Troy and drift off with history, or he could fight and risk his life and one day become a legend.

Achilles chose the latter; he died in battle and remains a popular legend to this day. Like him, Ledger chose gutsy performances like a drug-addict in Candy, a gay cowboy in Brokeback Mountain, and the much-hyped villain in "The Dark Knight," rather than the easy roles. Those risks, coupled with his popularity and successful career that was just beginning to take off, proves that only the good die young.

Evan Powers is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at epowers@student.umass.edu.

In the pursuit of a definition for 'happiness'

Solmaaz Yazdiha

Used, abused, recycled and reused, happiness is one of those words we've assigned to classify a ridiculously indescribable emotion. Think about it. How does happiness feel? Call me Nostradamus, but chances are you tried to use "happy" in your description.

"Being happy" has become a luxury in America, ranking right up there with owning the largest Louis Vuitton bag on the market, or getting laid by Victoria Beckham.

ABC's 20/20 recently covered the age-old 'happy question,' characterizing America as the land of happy hours and happy meals. The truth is, everyone wants to be happy; it's a human desire and a never-ending quest.

Even among college students, happiness ranks above health and money. As if that's not enough of a head-scratcher, could it be possible that in a country so boastful of its capitalist upbringing, this so-called happy factor could be, at most, a mirage? In a want-more, need-more society, is happiness even really attainable?

I, myself, have taken happiness out to play once in a while, slowed time at moments in my life and said, "Wow, I am really truly happy. This is it," only to recall other times where I've taken happiness out with the trash, tossed it angrily away sure that there is no way it could possibly exist. With war, hunger, poverty, heartbreak and good ol' Bush, believing in happiness can seem as foolish as a flying unicorn.

But, never-fail, there was always a point where I'd amble out reluctantly and dig through the litter, resurfacing the happiness I'd hopelessly tossed, like a homeless man realizing he'd thrown away his last scrap.

In my pursuit for happiness, I've done what any Journalism major word do – a bit of research. According to most experts (is an expert on happiness inherently happy?), happiness revolves around whomever one revolves around; in other words, the people around you.

WebMD actually reported that regular sex is better for one's happiness than money. Street-walkers nationwide rejoice.

Studies by ABC, NBC and other corporate-owned media outlets show that socializing may equal joy. This could be why so many people think entering a marriage will be the ultimate blissful moment, and for many it is. But in order to play the oh-so beloved role of Devil's Advocate, I'll mutter only two words – divorce rate. Many believe that having children will bring happiness into their lives. In fact, studies have shown that children really make little impact negatively or positively on a parent's sense of happiness.

Other experts claim that it is the little things that make us happy, the things we all seem to seek when unhappy – puppies, chocolate, sex. Amidst one of the biggest sexual revolutions of all time, sex has been emphasized as a more than effective mood-booster, the key to true happiness, according to some. WebMD actually reported that regular sex is better for one's happiness than money. Street-walkers nationwide rejoice – "and they said money can't buy happiness."

There are countless other studies that show simply acting happy can cause happiness. The question arises, isn't that just faking it? Americans everywhere have been paying hard-earned dollars to participate in laughing classes. These classes don't employ chocolate, puppies or even drugs or booze (which admittedly would make a lot more sense to many), but simply the exercise of a deep thunderous belly laugh.

If all this is true, it seems like the key to happiness lies in being super social, super sexual, and smiling like a madwoman. Does this mean that for a monk living in solitude, happiness is not possible? What about the woman with no friends or family but her pet Chihuahua, who recently left Dr. Phil baffled on his own show, unsure about how to treat someone who seemed and claimed to be extremely happy? The irony of it all lies in the probability that, if such a person existed that claimed to be wholeheartedly happy, one who walked around with a gleaming smile as permanent as a tattoo, it would only be days before they'd be exiled to some sort of psychiatrist. The same way that Dr. Phil treated his dog-loving guest like a ticking time bomb, society would likely cast her off like a broken appliance in need of fixing, all because she was happy.

As much as happiness can be poked, prodded, diagnosed and prescribed, it is not something that can be measure or classified. Something ably measured needs to be tangible or finite; happiness is neither. It is a mortal emotion that is overemphasized in our country as necessity.

It is only human nature to feel sorrow, dissatisfaction or simply indifference. To be completely and unconditionally happy is clearly an unrealistic state. Because of this, in America, happiness has become more of a marketing ploy than a genuine emotion. My only question is – who does that make happy?

Solmaaz Yazdiha is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at syazdiha@student.umass.edu.

Obama's familiar message

Eric Magazu

"I'm not talking about a budget deficit. I'm not talking about a trade deficit. I'm not talking about a deficit of good ideas or new plans. I'm talking about a moral deficit. I'm talking about an empathy deficit. I'm talking about an inability to recognize ourselves in one another."

These are the words of Senator Barack Obama, from a speech given in Atlanta on Jan. 20, 2008.

Senator Obama, a true American patriot, speaks with hope and optimism of a more united America, an America where each of us sincerely cares for one another. He does this, uniquely among the presidential candidates, by speaking with a clear moral vision, and is not shy about referring to God or his Word in his speeches.

This expression of a complete moral vision is the appeal of Senator Obama. Human beings seem to respond naturally to a moral language. It is the native language of the human soul, and discussions infused with this language will be much more intense than dry discussions of statistics or economics. Senator Obama speaks of a world where disparities in social and economic class don't exist and where peace prevails among the nations.

The vision of Senator Obama becomes very possible … because what is impossible for mankind is entirely possible for God.

Yet we have continually seen that these visions often fail once implemented. We strive to create such a perfect world, but we end up creating more suffering and hardship. In the early part of the 20th century, many idealists were inspired by the communist revolution in Russia, but we have seen that this regime only made for the basest of human tyrannies. We ask ourselves what is wrong here. We yearn for a better world, yet fail each time we try to make our dreams into reality.

Our natural tendency is to try to blame others for this state, such as a foreign culture or a rich corporation, but the blame lies in our own nature. The division between good and evil is not between one man and another, or one nation and another, but between all of mankind, who is evil, and God, who alone is good. While our souls yearn for redemption, our hearts are corrupt. We try to do right by our family, friends and acquaintances, but, in truth, we generally live our lives seeking the profits and pleasures that will benefit ourselves.

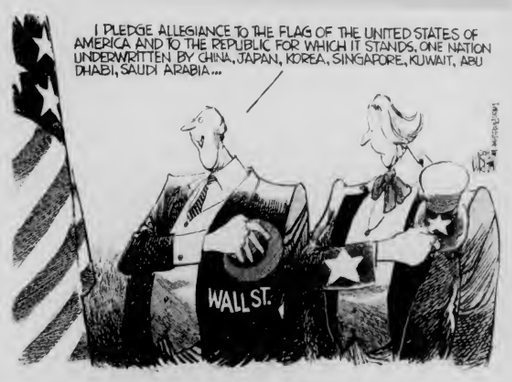
There is nothing necessarily wrong with living this way, but, as we can learn by listening to the vision of Senator Obama, it is not the way things ought to be. If we place this ideal vision upon the human spirit in its present state, through government intervention or some other form of force, it will inevitably fail, as this vision is impossible for mankind.

We go through life make certain presuppositions as to the way things are, whether we are directly conscious of it or not. Many of us assume quite naturally that everything we see is what truly is. If this is a faulty assumption, then we are simply tricking our own senses. Our eyes are our window to the world. If our eyes perceive the world falsely, then we truly live in great darkness.

If someone placed sunglasses on you on the day you were born, you may go through life assuming that the entire world is darker than it actually is. Philosophers and scientists cannot much improve on this vision because they perceive the world through the same sunglasses. It would take someone outside of our world to seek us and inform us of our destitute state.

Therefore it ought to be equally valid to start with the assumption of the existence of God. The vision of Senator Obama becomes very possible with this assumption, because what is impossible for mankind is entirely possible for God. If we trust in ourselves, we will always see things too darkly. It is only when we trust in God, who knows the problem that exists in man, that our sunglasses can be removed. This is the reason we must look to God for our redemption.

The ways of God become clear once our sunglasses are removed. His ways are not hard for us or far from us, but exist in our mouths and in our hearts. We see plainly that God does not treat us with justice, as we have thus far gotten away living our lives without punishment or repercussions for our actions. For this reason, we must place our trust in God's mercy, live new lives in the brightness that is redemption, and animate all of our relationships in perfect and unconditional charity. The only question that remains is how one can be assured of God's pardon.



This is the nature of love. Love is the only true path to make real the vision that is given to us by patriots like Senator Barack Obama. We cannot afford to place our trust in philosophers or scientists, nor in ministers or politicians. We know that trusting in men will fail us. We must place our trust in God, and become new people walking in His ways. This cause starts today and it starts with you, and you must live as if it depends on you alone.

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at emagazu@student.umass.edu

Check out the new Collegian forums!

New this semester at dailycollegian.com, our forums allow you, the reader and UMass community member, to sound off on important campus-related issues, provide feedback and criticism of our coverage and suggest ideas for campus stories you'd like to see covered.

For more details check out the Forums page at dailycollegian.com.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

NEW REC CENTER DOESN'T HOLD WATER

Dear editor:

As members of UMass Aquatics Masters (UMAMA) swim club, we are proud to be part of this excellent community outreach program provided by UMass Athletics.

We are men and women ranging in ages from 22 to 72 years old. We are united by a passion for swimming, a commitment to fitness, and strong support for the UMass men's and women's outstanding swimming and diving teams.

We were dismayed to learn that the new $50 million-plus UMass Student Recreation Center, which will upgrade recreation and fitness opportunities for UMass students, does not include an aquatics facility.

A state-of-the-art aquatics facility should be a priority in any new UMass recreation facility. UMass swimming and diving teams are among the university's most successful competitive varsity sports despite operating with uncompetitive facilities and recruiting against teams with much larger budgets.

Plus, a modern aquatics facility would enhance the quality of student life for the average UMass student. When polled by the university about their personal priorities in a new recreation center, a substantial percentage of UMass students said that they would use a new pool intensively (at least twice per week) for lap or recreational swimming.

UMass should also consider the importance of providing quality recreational facilities and programs to faculty, staff, their families and the community. Because there is no major, public aquatics venue in Western Massachusetts, a multipurpose Olympic-size pool would enhance UMass's broader contribution to its community as well as its stature and reputation.

As we all know, such factors translate to stronger and broader public- and private-sector support for a university. We urge the planners and decision makers of the student recreation center to reconsider their decision and support the building of a state-of-the-art pool – a pool that all of UMass and the UMass community will use with pride.

Terry Singer
Judy Dickson
UMass Aquatics Masters Amherst

STUAF COMES THROUGH

Dear editor:

Re: "Gargano resigns before new term," Back To School Spring '08, News.

In the "Spring Back to School 2008" edition of the Daily Collegian, readers may have been left with the impression that the former Vice Chancellor Gargano did not follow through with financial commitments he had made to the UMass Spring Recess RSO prior to his resignation. In reality, the group, surprised by the sudden resignation, was not aware that the Vice Chancellor did indeed secure finances for the RSO.

Despite this miscommunication, UMass Spring Recess continues to be grateful for the financial assistance from Student Affairs. The funds will help over one hundred UMass students build hope and homes in New Orleans this March.

Amanda Baldi
President
UMass Spring Recess: Gulf Coast 2008

OLDER BUT NOT WISER

Dear editor:

I hope you will print this letter, because I want to raise public awareness about the extent of drunk driving by young persons in the United States, and the peril faced by college students because of it.

On Sept. 25 2005, the sheriff of Greene County, New York got busted for DWI. The kid was only 65-years-old.

On Jun. 14 2004, a Detroit police lieutenant got drunk and drove the wrong way down a one-way street, causing a head-on crash. That kid was even younger. He was only 56 years old. The crash killed 20-year-old college student Nehemiah Thompson.

On Oct. 7 2000, a Honolulu cop got drunk and sped through a red light, causing a crash. That kid was even younger. He was only 48 years old. The crash killed 19-year-old college student Dana Ambrose.

Naturally, another victim was added to the official tally of "teenagers killed in drunk driving crashes," a tally that fuels political debate, guides the legislative process, and promotes prejudice against teenagers.

On Mar. 2, 2006, a motorist with eleven prior drunk driving convictions got drunk and drove a pickup truck onto the wrong side of Tavern Road in Burton, Ohio, crashing head-on into a car with three Hiram College students.

Believe it or not, that kid was even younger still: He was only 47 years old. Grace Chamberlain and Andrew Hopkins, both 18, were killed. Ivan Dasilva, then 19, spent weeks in the hospital getting his face put back together with metal plates.

What should be done to reduce the peril faced by college students? More sting operations at liquor stores? Making ID's tougher to counterfeit? Tougher penalties on people under 21 caught drinking responsibly?

Folks should send their best ideas to state and federal lawmakers. Tell them you can figure out why they'd rather impose the drinking age on everybody under 21 than punish just the drunk drivers, by imposing tougher drunk driving laws on themselves.

Tom Alciere
Webmaster
Underage Drinkers Against Drunk Driving

BAHRAIN PAIN

Dear editor:

Re "A sailor's view from the Middle East," Brad DeFlumeri, Ed/Op Jan 30, 2008

While sifting through the jingo-drenched ode to the "White Man's Burden" penned by Brad DeFlumeri, I was overcome by the irony of this particular statement:

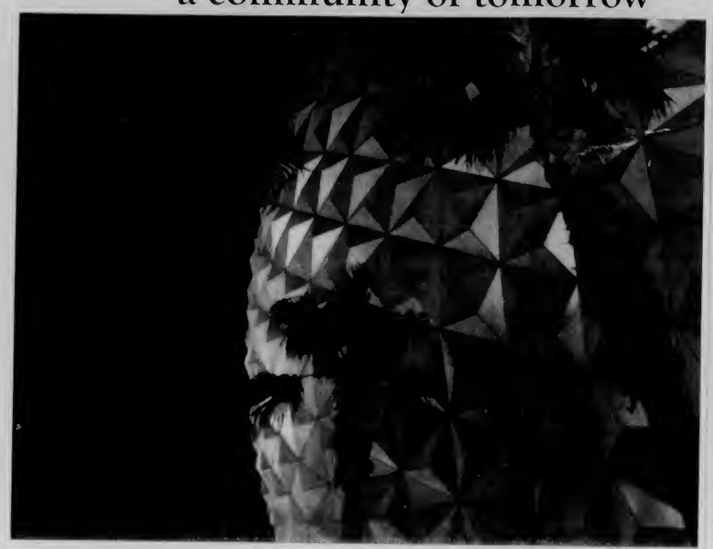
"Bahrain has been made a prosperous nation in large part due to its Westernization and acceptance of capitalism." As evidence, he cites feel good anecdotes of the Bahrainis thanking him on the street for the Department of Defense's employment opportunities, which he says provides jobs for "hundreds of thousands." Bahrain's population is a little over 700,000 and its labor pool is about 340,000.

Thus, if he only meant 200,000 people, the United States government is providing jobs for over half of Bahrainis. How odd that the President of the campus Republican Club would advocate such socialist-like policies. Ronald Reagan would be spinning in his grave if that were the case here, not FDR. And yet the CIA World Factbook states that Bahrain's unemployment rate is 15 percent as of 2005. If there is prosperity in Bahrain, it is concentrated in oil and financial interests, a typical Republican constituency.

Perhaps the most ironic thing of all is a comparison between his utopian Bahrain and the domestic issue of poverty as described in Nick Milano's column. Milano states that there are 36.5 million people living in poverty in the "world's foremost champion of liberty and prosperity," as DeFlumeri likes to call the United States.

That is equal to 52 Bahrains worth of people.

Chris Amorosi
UMass student



Letters to the editor should be no longer than 550 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com or submitted online at dailycollegian.com. We regret that, due to space constraints, not all letters will be printed.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, JANUARY 31, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Walt Disney World
a community of tomorrow

The Epcot golf ball is well known for its strange shape, but it also is home to the Spaceship Earth, a ride telling the story of the evolution of communication. Spaceship Earth is the entrance way to the rest of the Epcot park which consists of Future World and the World Showcase.

BY STEPHANIE MCPHERSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Editor's note: This the fourth and final part of a series about Walt Disney World

In the late 1960s, Walt Disney had a crazy idea. Crazier than making full-length animated films for a living, crazier than building a living on a cast of mice, ducks, and dogs, crazier even than opening theme parks based on those animals. Disney had the crazy idea of one united Earth, where everyone lived and worked in harmony, using new technologies to benefit everyone, not for new power plants or weapons of mass destruction. He called this place EPCOT – Experimental Prototype Community of Tomorrow.

Today, Epcot is a favorite destination of many a Disney guest. Opening in 1982, the park has 11 countries represented in its World Showcase, employing people who call those countries home, along with the front section completely devoted to technology and new innovations.

There is so much to do and see, Art Ramos, a cast member at Disney for the past four years, had the right idea when he said you need "three days for Epcot – a day for the front, a day for the showcase, and a day for stuff you want to do again."

Now of course, spending three days at one park is not an economical use of time for the average Disney-goer, so here are the top rides and shows to experience while in Epcot, along with tips to make the most of the World Showcase.

A lot of people are unaware that the huge thing resembling a golf ball at the entrance of Epcot is actually a ride, called Spaceship Earth. Guests travel back to the beginning of recorded time, taking a trip through history to discover the evolution of communication. At the end of the ride, during your return to "present" time, you are asked a series of questions, which then are compiled to show you your own future. It's worth a visit if only just to say you've been inside the Epcot ball.

If you've ever wanted to travel through space, this is the ride for you. Located in Future World, Mission: SPACE "sends" you to Mars, but not before you get a briefing by Gary Sinise. If you're prone to motion sickness, you might want to go on the green line version, that omits the spinning to simulate the G-forces. If you want the real space experience, go for the orange line, where you are so plastered to the back of your seat you can barely move.

Test Track makes you the test dummy in this GM test track simulation. At one point, you are racing through the open skies at 67 mph, and another time you are sent through intense heat, cold and corrosive materials.

Soarin' simulates a hang-glider ride over the beautiful scenery of California. This is a great ride, and definitely one to Fast Pass, if you can find it. Down a long pathway in a building called The Land, Soarin' is not to be missed.

World Showcase is a beautiful collection of 11 countries from around the world. The best way to enjoy the showcase is to eat and drink your way around. Each country, from Mexico to Norway to Italy to England have restaurants serving ethnic food – most have both sit down and take out places. There are kiosks serving beer and other mixed drinks unique to each of the 11 worlds.

Some countries have rides, like Norway's Maelstrom, and others, like China, have videos about the culture and heritage. Each country has shops selling traditional wares from the country.

The biggest draw to Epcot is the nighttime fireworks, IllumiNations. Set to music, the fireworks are a breathtaking display, during which a mechanic Earth floats into the World Showcase Lagoon. The Earth is a giant screen, displaying scenes from around the world. If there is one fireworks display to see, it is Epcot's IllumiNations.

After about 50 years of making dreams come true, Disney has only gotten better, and will continue to get better for years to come.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smepherson@student.umass.edu

UMass goes abroad
An American down under

BY PHILIP MECIK
FOREIGN CORRESPONDENT

As a second semester junior, I have come to terms with the fact that my college experience is coming to a close. Being over the hill can be depressing, especially when one feels that their time hasn't been as fruitful or fleshed out as it could have been. This sentiment is what brought me to my decision to travel abroad this spring semester.

I ended up in the CAPA (Centers for Academic Programs Abroad) internship program, which would allow me to gain valuable work experience while participating in some non-descript-looking classes – satisfying credit requirements and the like. My choice to travel to Sydney was influenced by a variety of factors, the foremost two being language and family. I have some semblance of an extended family in Australia, including my uncle David who has promised to show me around.

After slogging through mountains of paperwork and bills, I could barely contain myself as the Jan. 19 departure date drew close. My excitement died shortly, as when I arrived at the airport, I found that my flight was cancelled due to crew oversights. With both patience and some very persuasive argument, that crushing blow was resolved by the wonderfully overqualified United Airlines staff at Washington-Dulles airport. After a humbling flight totaling about 23 hours, I arrived in Sydney – barely conscious.

Despite my personal haze of exhaustion, I quickly began to notice the vast differences in culture. Americans could, by comparison, be seen as stiff and reserved. There is a great deal of honesty or even bluntness within Australian custom. They are not harsher or kinder, more helpful or more malicious as a whole – but if any individuals are any of these things, they will make it much more apparent.

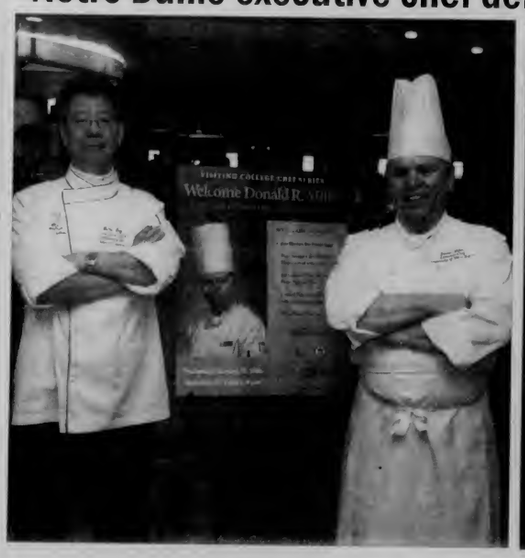
The experience of culture shock is much the same as in any foreign country, even with the lessened burden of a new language. The English is the same for the most part, though many Aussies revere the differences and peculiarities of their lingo, shunning British and American accents and terminology that pervaded their television and other media until just a few decades ago.

I felt that a good way to begin exploring Australia would be to learn how to navigate Sydney's geography. I walked up one of the main business districts to an area named Circular Quay (pronounced 'key' by Aussies) and spent a good hour staring at the breathtaking view of the Sydney Harbor Bridge, in perfect juxtaposition to the Opera House – just a visual stone's throw to the right from the Quay. Much of Sydney's architecture is modern and striking, but the Harbor Bridge and the Opera House are two prime examples.

The next day, I took a similar walking trip to Fox's secured Sydney compound, where I would be working. More precisely, a leased space called the Frank Hurley Grandstand building, named after the great Australian explorer and photographer who journeyed into the Antarctic on the ship HMS Endurance, and was marooned in the ice for nearly two years.

With all this walking, I do not want to give the impression that to live in Sydney is to develop blistered feet. It has a low-cost public transportation system that rivals Boston's or maybe even New York's in its scope and efficiency. As such, I have been wary to leap on it and get lost, but so far, it has been good to me in respect to travel to classes and such.

Other than sampling the local culture at various hotels (bars that serve decent food for liquor licensing purposes) and pubs, as well as my meager attempts at sightseeing, I took a trip to Tarronga Zoo, one of the best I have been to. It is also one of the world's leading zoos in animal care and animal rights.



Indeed, I did not see any sickly beasts – even among the exotics like the lions, red pandas or Kodiak bears. However, what was of real interest to me was the multitude of native species within the zoo. Australia's incredibly diverse wildlife lends itself to zoos and nature lovers alike, and I saw more koalas, wallabies, kangaroos, bilbies and other indigenous creatures than I didn't know what to do with. I look forward to perhaps seeing some of these exotic and strange creatures in their natural habitats.

I often feel overwhelmed here, as if there is simply too much for me to accomplish and see within the short course of three months. Especially while working, taking classes, and making sure I sample enough local beer. I am, however, making attempts to absorb all I can of the culture down under and to bring back with me the fondest of memories.

Cheers mates.

Philip Mecik can be reached at Philip.mecik@gmail.com

Notre Dame executive chef delights tastebuds at Berkshire

DAILY COLLEGIAN

Donald R. Miller, the executive chef from University of Notre Dame brought his skills to UMass' Berkshire Dining Commons yesterday as part of the Visiting College Chef series. On the left: Miller poses with UMass executive chef, Willie Sng. On the right: Miller checks on the meals of several UMass students.

'Untraceable' proves unworthy
Lane, Hanks disappoint

BY FRANK GODINHO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

After watching "Untraceable," most viewers will be left with nothing more than a bitter taste in their mouths. In what presents itself as a new-age psychological thriller, equipped with the premise of virtual crime, "Untraceable" fails to leave a lasting impression. Diane Lane stars in the cyber-thriller as Special Agent Jennifer Marsh, a woman who is constantly called on to investigate internet crime, along with her partner Agent Griffin Dowd (Colin Hanks).

For this particular bureau of the FBI, Jennifer and her colleagues find themselves dealing with the criminal mind of a serial killer who enjoys torturing his victims and airing their murders live over the internet. By using a Web streaming video device, the viewers who tune in to witness each murder are unknowingly active participants and accomplices. For each and every additional viewer to the video, the more torture his victim must endure.

This idea of murder via the Web is not only gruesome in its concept, but also unimaginable in its approach to actually function systematically in a moral world. The insinuation that millions and millions of computer users would participate in such a deviant act, despite serious warnings from the FBI, is almost like accusing every member in the audience of "Untraceable" of doing the exact same thing.

Diane Lane and Colin Hanks attempt to bring down an internet killer in the new police thriller "Untraceable."

The uncharted world of the internet is a dangerous one, to say the least. Even though we can shop, write letters and nowadays even attain a college degree online, one should not forget that it's also a place of identity theft, internet stalkers, and in this film's case, murder.

While "Untraceable" tries very hard to take cyber crime to the next level, its partaking is very formulaic, predictable and bizarre. The fact that the serial killer's motive is either blurry or nonexistent doesn't help "Untraceable's" cause. In addition, the notion that a 20-year-old could create a Web site that remains untraceable to all sorts of government agencies and bureaus such as the FBI, CIA and so forth, doesn't seem plausible. Besides, the killer's dimwitted Web site, titled Killwithme.com, in which Web surfers log on to watch murders while simultaneously participating in them, is nothing that hasn't been seen before on an episode of "CSI" or "NYPD Blue."

Diane Lane, who's yet to really give an outstanding performance in any of her films, doesn't improve here either. An actress from "Law & Order" could've replaced her, and no one would have even noticed the difference. While still turning in satisfactory work, she falls short in her attempt to make the audience really care for her character. Whether it's a lack of character development, run-of-the-mill acting, or both, Lane simply doesn't have the same caliber of screen presence of some of her contemporaries like Jodie Foster or Michelle Pfeiffer.

That being said, Lane still delivers the most among a cast of boring and forgettable performances that aren't even worth mentioning. Colin Hanks (yes, that is Tom Hanks's son) as Agent Griffin Dowd only further proves the point that the only reason he has an acting career is because of his father.

In the end, the film tries too hard to be a gripping thriller and doesn't grasp its subject matter fully in order to comprehensively attribute it to the big screen. "Untraceable" is a flop that's unworthy of the admissions price.

Frank Godinho can be reached at fgodinho@student.umass.edu

UNTRACEABLE

STARRING: DIANE LANE AND COLIN HANKS

C

Old superstitions, new music
Ouija board inspires Mars Volta release

BY DAVID HUMPHREYS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Mars Volta's latest release, "The Bedlam In Goliath," marks their return to perfect chaotic bliss and cements the group as the premiere prog/experimental-psychedelic/Latin rock group.

Sounding like the love child of "De-Loused In The Comatorium" and "Frances The Mute," "Bedlam" combines the best of their earlier days with the experience that comes only with age. And with the number of band members, experience is one thing The Mars Volta doesn't lack.

Led by the falsetto vocals of Cedric Bixler-Zavala and Omar Rodriguez-Lopez's beautiful nails-on-a-chalkboard guitar riffs are accompanied by, once again, the seminal John Frusciante, from Red Hot Chili Peppers fame.

With their newest release, the odd time signatures and abrupt syncopation that listeners have come to know and love still goes strong, although some riffs are very similar to "De-Loused."

As for the vocals, if you plan on understanding them, the cover insert is a must. Between Zavala and the eight other members, lyrics come out garbled, yet perfect. Everything in "Bedlam" was crafted and molded and put in it's own place for a purpose: to create a story. And oh, is there a story.

According to legend (and an article posted on themarsvolta.com), Rodriguez-Lopez was in a Jerusalem curio shop looking for a gift for Bixler-Zavala. While there, he found a very old Ouija board, aptly named "The Soothsayer."

Originally bought as a novelty gift, the Soothsayer brought eerie coincidences and odd occurrences, and a phenomenal CD along with it.

During their tour with The Red Hot Chili Peppers, The Mars Volta started to mess around with The Soothsayer after shows. As they did, they started to get names, such as Goliath, and a story about a man, a woman and her mother – a story about love and curses and murder. And eventually, the board asked the band for a story in return.

The band started to take some phrases and make songs, started to make their newest release, but never gave anything to The Soothsayer. So, Goliath got angry. Equipment issues plagued the band, the former drummer quit, Bixler-Zavala needed surprise foot surgery, the sound engineer quit the project, Rodriguez-Lopez's studio flooded.

As the board started to make demands and threats, the surface peeled off to reveal a pre-Aramaic language scrawled over cone shapes.

The Mars Volta made an executive decision and buried the board in an undisclosed place.

Yes, it may be a modern myth or, I daresay a lie, but damn, it makes one hell of an interesting back story.

The album is equally as strange as the story behind it. If you're not sure that you like The Mars Volta, buy it. If you want something different to listen to, buy it. If you're into The Spice Girls, TLC and Hanson, it's time to update your collection. Whatever you decide, buy this album and enjoy it.

This is quite possibly THE album release of the year. It may be way off the mainstream, but "Bedlam" is necessary to start or complete any collection, all while broadening your musical horizons.

David Humphreys can be reached at dhumphre@student.umass.edu

THE BEDLAM IN GOLIATH

MARS VOLTA

UNIVERSAL MUSIC

4.5/5

When in Jerusalem, one of the members of Mars Volta bought a Ouija board. Soon after, strange things started happening to the band, leading them to write their new album "The Bedlam in Goliath."

NOTE TO SELF!

WRITE FOR ARTS

arts@dailyCollegian.com

AMHERST / HADLEY
413-256-8911
Rt 9 Across From Stop & Shop
Store Hours:
Open 11am-4am Thurs.-Sat.
11am -3am Sun.-Wed
Mt. Holyoke Location: 593-9500
www.Dominos.com
13 DRIVERS ON FOR SUPER BOWL!!!
My Wings or Kickers Special
10 Buffalo Wings or Domino's Pizza Buffalo Chicken Kickers & an Order of Cheesy Bread
$9.99
Three or More Medium 1-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 each
Three or More Large 1-Topping Pizzas
$7.77 each
Doubles
Two 1-Topping Pizzas Plus an Order of Cheesy Bread
Medium $15.99
Large $18.99
Any 3 Breads
Choose 3 From:
Garlic Breadsticks, Cheesy Bread OR Cinna Stix
$9.99 Plus Tax
9018
WE ACCEPT OCMP
Find Out More About autismspeaks.org

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
Serving others since 1969 — and STILL making a difference
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Spring Semester 2008 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Room 101 • Feb. 4 (Mon) • Feb. 5 (Tues) • Feb. 6 (Wed)
• Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Feb. 7th at Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pick up the notification letter.
Volunteer, while earning credit!

SKYPLEX
18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
3 Different Rooms/3 DJ's spinning the best in Top 40, Dance, House and Select Mashup
THE ULTIMATE HOT BODY CONTEST
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female
The Hottest 18 Plus SATURDAY NIGHT Dance Party
PROMOTORS WANTED FOR 18+ SATUROAYS! TO SIGNUP VISIT: WWW.SKYPLEX.US
SATURDAYS
SkyPlex 10 Stearns Sq. Downtown Springfield 413.827.9000 www.SkyPlex.us

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
JANUARY WINE SALE 10-30% OFF MIX & MATCH *REGULAR PRICED 750 ML BOTTLES OF VARIETAL WINES
WINTER WINE DINNER
SATURDAY, FEB. 16 • THE LONE WOLF RESTAURANT
ALL ATTENDEES WILL RECEIVE A COMPLIMENTARY TICKET TO UMASS VS. ST. LOUIS (BASKETBALL) ON SUN., FEB. 17!
Hennessy Cognac X.O. 750 ml $122.99
Grand Marnier 100yr Centenaire 750 ml $109.99
Crown Royal Cask 16 Whiskey 750 ml $94.99
Glenmorangie Burgundy Wood Finish 750 ml $49.99
Jose Cuervo Platino Tequila 750 ml $49.99
Glenmorangie Madiera Wood Finish 750 ml $49.99
Ardbeg 10yr Islay Single Malt Scotch 750 ml $47.99
Tanqueray Gin 1.75 liter $33.99
Grand Marnier Cordon Rouge 750 ml $33.99
Hennessy Cognac V.S.O.P. 750 ml $44.99
Hennessy Cognac V.S. 750 ml $28.99
Belvedere Pure Vodka 750 ml $27.99
10 Cane Rum 750 ml $26.99
Chopin Polish Vodka 750 ml $27.99
Jim Beam Bourbon 1.75 liter $20.99
Bailey's Original Irish Cream 750 ml $20.99
Bailey's Flavored Irish Cream* 750 ml $20.99
*Mint Chocolate and Caramel
Jose Cuervo Flavored Tequila* 1.0 liter $20.99
*Citrico, Tropina, Oranjo
Jose Cuervo Gold 750 ml $18.99
Captain Morgan Spiced Rum 750 ml $14.99
Captain Morgan Parrot Bay Rum* 750 ml $14.99
*Including Coconut, Mango, Pineapple, Passion Fruit
Smirnoff Vodka 80° 750 ml $11.99
Smirnoff Twist Flavored Vodka* 750 ml $11.99
*Including Strawberry, Watermelon, Raspberry, Black Cherry
Sale 1.24 - 1.30
333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

UMass wins nail-biter

W. HOOPS from page 10

UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "I took her out of the starting lineup and had a nice talk with her yesterday and on the second team she's just performed to perfection."

With a three-point lead, the Minutewomen quickly lost it as Fordham guard Annie Zopf scored on a three-point play to tie it at 55-55. With 1:25 left in the game, Mahoney sliced through the defense and scored the go-ahead basket.

On the next possession, UMass forward Kate Mills answered with a jump shot from the elbow to tie it at 57 apiece. With 51 seconds left, Mahoney went too aggressive to the basket as senior forward Pam Rosanio stepped in to take charge, giving UMass the ball back.

On the next possession, Mahoney made up for it by forcing a turnover from UMass junior guard Sakera Young.

"I told the kids, 'It's your ball, you can't just give it away its in your hands and we have to be focused,'" Dacko said.

With Mahoney scoring at will late in the game, coach Dacko decided someone else needed to step up for Fordham. Out of a timeout the Rams tried to get the ball to Mahoney, but Tatham and Young forced her away from the ball. Zopf tried to inbound the ball, but Mills deflected the pass and the 6-foot-2 forward dribbled half the court for the go-ahead lay up.

"We knew they were going to go to [Mahoney] and we took the person off the ball a little bit and we knew we had fouls to give," Dacko said. "Mahoney played a great game and she goes after it."

To limit the guards, Dacko used a defensive lineup that featured freshman Teya Wright, Tatham and Young. Wright had a thunderous block with two steals and six rebounds, but was unable to take care of the ball as she had a game-high seven turnovers. Even though the Minutewomen held Fordham to 41 percent shooting, Tatham thought they could have played better.

"I think our defense was struggling and we needed to stop some of their guards and box out a little more, but I think we pulled away at the end very well," Tatham said.

"We just didn't step up, we had a lot of defensive let downs," Dacko said.

The Fordham guards combined for 42 of the team's 59 points, while the UMass forwards combined for 53 points.

Mills led all scorers with 26 points on 11-of-23 shooting. She started the game going 4-of-5 from the field and then went cold mid-game but came back strong toward the end, hitting five of her last nine shots.

"I think we learned that we can't take any team for granted in the A-10, it's pretty close record wise and talent wise," Mills said. "Just from here on out we have to come ready to play."

GAME NOTES

The Minutewomen had 20 assists on 24 field goals for the game … sophomore point guard Kim Benton was held scoreless in 24 minutes, but had three steals and three assists, while back up point guard Young had one point along with six assists in 16 minutes … junior forward Stefanie Gerardot hit the game's only 3-point basket as UMass was 1-for-7 from behind the arc … Tatham scored 10 points and grabbed four rebounds … Rosanio scored 15 points, hitting 7-of-11 from the foul line.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

Mills dominant inside again for UM

MILLS from page 10

Kate Mills added 12 rebounds to her 26 points, as well as four assists, two blocks and a pair of steals.

again. Six seconds after Mills put UMass ahead, the freshman point guard rushed down the court and hit a short jump shot.

Alisha Tatham eventually won the game with seven seconds left, and the Rams turned the ball over when they tried to force a pass onto Mahoney, who was smothered by Minutewomen defenders.

Though they both gave their teams the best scoring options and chances to win the game, Mahoney and Mills play different styles. Mahoney consistently found a way to the basket by using her quickness to penetrate through the lane, while Mills used an inside-outside game to keep defenders off balance.

"Kate has a big presence inside," Dacko said. "I don't think they could have stayed with her 1-on-1, and they didn't, but we still got to get her more and more looks and she's got to make more baskets."

Mills began the game 4-of-5 and was fouled on three made baskets early in the first half, converting on 2-of-3 free throw opportunities. She struggled from the field after her hot start in the first, and went into the locker room with 14 points on 6-of-13 shooting.

However, she got back on track in the second half, and finished the game with 26 points. Equally as impressive were Mills' rebounding numbers. The team has struggled all year on the boards, and the senior forward grabbed 14 against the Rams.

While her outside shot will be available for the majority of the Minutewomen's games, Mills was able to physically dominate her defenders inside yesterday. Fordham had no one to match up with her in the paint, and when she is able to excel from inside and outside the paint, she is nearly impossible to stop.

Fordham has no chance of achieving success this year, but with Mahoney's ability to score points at will as a freshman, they are looking at a brighter future.

Mahoney's first half statistics were less than impressive, but her presence was made known. She was 3-of-8 from the floor, including 1-of-2 from beyond the arc, and finished the half with 10 points.

The UMass coaching staff wanted to stop Mahoney from singlehandedly winning the game, so with four minutes remaining in the game, they elected to put Tatham on the point guard. While she played more effectively than Kim Benton or Sakkara Young, the Rams used screens to free Mahoney.

UMass left with the victory, but Mills and Mahoney left no doubts as to who two of the Atlantic 10's premium players are.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu

Forbes, Gaffney key in victory against the wall," Gaffney said. "It was a gut check and Gary Forbes probably led us better than anyone has led us all year.

M. HOOPS from page 10

While Gaffney thrives on doing whatever he can to help the team, senior forward Gary Forbes' contribution is usually derived from scoring points. Though he led all players with 23, Ford was impressed with the captain's all around performance, including 10 rebounds.

"I thought this was the best game he's played in a very long time," Ford said. "His playmaking ability was absolutely incredible tonight."

Coming into the game, Ford wanted his team to limit Duquesne's effectiveness in transition, thereby forcing the Dukes into uncomfortable offensive half-court sets.

Though the Minutemen turned the ball over 19 times, many resulted in stoppages of play, such as traveling, which prevented Duquesne from exploiting the change of possession with transition baskets.

The Minutemen spent much of the early part of the first half trailing Duquesne. Since the Dukes failed to establish its pair of 6-foot-10 centers in the post, their lead evaporated. Shot-blocking phenom Shawn James – the conference leader with four per game – failed to redirect a single ball.

The Minutemen kept James at bay by driving toward the basket and kicking the ball out to players of the perimeter.

"I don't think he ever really bothered our offense," Ford said of James.

That style created a season-high 24 team assists and a 51 percent shooting performance. UMass made only nine shots from beyond the arc, with a perfect five-for-five from senior forward Etienne Brower.

The Minutemen also survived foul trouble from its two best ball handlers, junior point guard Chris Lowe and Forbes, who each had three fouls by halftime.

UMass continues its difficult series of game to open the conference schedule Saturday as the team travels to Saint Louis (11-9, 2-4 A-10).

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

Dayton's Gregory, Roberts honored in the Top 25, but both Dayton and URI are still receiving votes.

A-10 HOOPS from page 10

XAVIER LEADING THE PACK

As a result of overall strong play, particularly in a Nov. 24 upset over then No. 8 Indiana, the Musketeers found themselves in the national polls yet again, this time standing at No. 23. Xavier would continue to drift from spot to spot in the back end of the polls and also got some A-10 company along the way.

Currently, the Musketeers stand at No. 15 in both the Associated Press and ESPN/USA Today national polls. Although the Rams and Flyers have both fallen from both polls, Saint Joseph's and UMass are receiving votes.

The A-10's impressive play doesn't stop there; just 19 teams in the nation have six victories against teams ranked in the top 100 of the RPI (Ratings Percentage Index) through Jan. 27. Among them are A-10ers UMass (six), Xavier (six) and the Charlotte 49ers (seven).

DAYTON'S GREGORY HONORED

Dayton coach Brian Gregory earned the Jim Phelan mid-season coaching honor in January for his work so far this season. The Flyers stand at 14-2 and are No. 16/19 in the national rankings.

At one point this season, Dayton had won 10 straight games, including impressive victories over Rick Pitino and the Louisville Cardinals (70-65) and a route over the No. 6 ranked Pittsburgh Panthers (80-55), which was the Panther's first lost of the season.

Gregory, who played for former Jim Phelan Award winner Greg Kampe at Oakland University (1999-2000), narrowly beat out Vanderbilt's Kevin Stallings by two votes to receive the honor. Rhode Island's Jim Barron came in at fifth in the voting, finishing two first place votes behind Gregory. Former UMass head coach and current No. 1-ranked Memphis Tigers head coach Jim Calipari finished in third, trailing the Flyers' coach by 10 votes.

The Jim Phelan Award is named after the legendary Mount St. Mary's head coach Jim Phelan who won more than 800 games and coached in the most college basketball games in history, the award is presented annually by CollegeInsider.com to the top coach in America. Washington State's Tony Bennett was the recipient of the award last season, which was presented at the Final Four in Atlanta.

ROBERTS ON WOODEN LIST

The Los Angeles Athletic Club's John R. Wooden Award Committee announced the 30 NCAA players named to the John R. Wooden Award midseason list ,and the Dayton Flyers' senior guard Brian Roberts was among them. The John R. Wooden Award is considered the most prestigious individual award in all of college basketball.

Former notable recipients include Larry Bird ('79), Michael Jordan ('84), Tim Duncan ('97) and last year's recipients, Kevin Durant of Texas and Candace Parker of Tennessee.

Should Roberts win the award he will join the likes of former A-10 winners Mark Macon of Temple (1988), Massachusetts' Lou Roe (1995) and Marcus Camby (1996), David West of Xavier (2003) and Saint Joseph's Jameer Nelson (2004).

Mike Barba can be reached at mbarba@student.umass.edu

PLAY IT SAFE

During the 2008 NFL Playoffs

vs. ny

SUPER BOWL XLII

Alcohol violations and disorderly conduct can have SERIOUS consequences, such as:

- Arrest & conviction
- Major legal expenses
- A lasting criminal record
- Loss of your driver's license
- Suspension or expulsion form the University
- Large costs for civil penalties (i.e. damages)

Violations that can really kill your buzz include:

- Driving under the influence
- Rioting and inciting to riot
- Assault and battery of a police officer
- Disturbing the peace and vandalism
- Use of false identification
- Under age drinking and possession of alcohol and MORE...

READ THE CODE OF STUDENT CONDUCT

The UMass Football team was not the only loser in the 2006 NCAA Division 1AA championship:

- Over 55 UMass students were cited
- Over 5 UMass students were expelled
- Over 28 UMass students were suspended
- Over 22 UMass students received deferred suspensions

Sponsored by the Student Government Association & Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center
413-545-1995

This poster does not constitute legal advice. UMass Amherst students may contact the SLSO to arrange an appointment for legal advice.

UNIVERSITY OF Massachusetts Amherst

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
PROVIDING THE BEST OFF CAMPUS LIVING EXPERIENCE
24 HOUR MAINTENANCE
SAFE APARTMENTS
FRIENDLY STAFF
TWO GREAT LOCATIONS:
AMHERST CENTER AND HOBART LANE
WE START SHOWING APARTMENTS
FEB. 6TH FROM 11:30AM – 4:30PM M-F

AFRICAN BEADED ART
POWER AND ADORNMENT
On View February 1–June 15, 2008

Friday, February 1 5:30 pm
Lecture by John Pemberton III, Guest Curator, Professor Emeritus, Amherst College and Curatorial Consultant for African Art, SCMA

Stoddard Hall*
Route 9/Elm Street
across from Museum of Art
Free and open to all
Limited seating
*NOTE Change of venue

ART MENTOR FOUNDATION LUCERNE

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP

413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

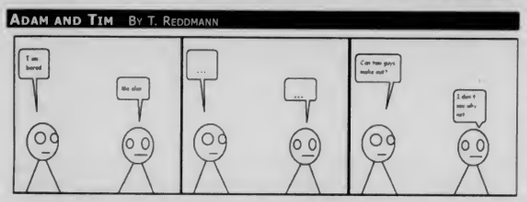
Andrew Gauvin, reigning Sudoku King of UMass STRIKES AGAIN!

Floppy Fink Diggler.

1		7	5			4	2	9
	2
	9			7	8
		6		2	1
8								2
			9	3		7
			7	8			6
							9
2	4	8			9	5		7

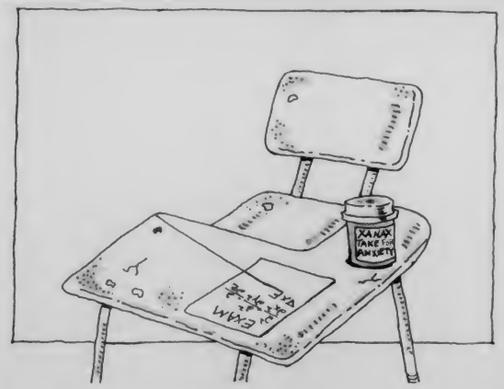
Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

QUOTE OF THE DAY



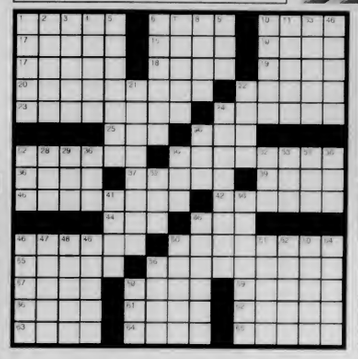
"A man on a date wonders if he'll get lucky. The woman knows."

–Monica Piper



RETRO GEEK BY STEVEN DICKINSON AND TODD CLARK

ADAM AND TIM BY T. REDDMANN



LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELLY

ACROSS
1 Period in a process
8 Actor Gunness
10 Lingerie pieces
14 Central parts
15 Collide gently
18 Word of honor
17 Chips in chips
18 Whisker
19 Clarinet relative
20 Called off by a cloudburst
22 River of Rouen
23 Parker and Powell
24 Break one's heart
25 TV network
26 "A Nightmare on ___ Street"
27 Relative intensity
31 Divides into three
36 Toward the center of 37 Cook in an oven
39 Tex-Mex order
40 Gastvegian, e.g.
42 Break in the action
44 Swallow
45 London bell
46 Assign to a fiendlot
50 1983 Matthew Broderick film
55 Enticements
56 Baking dish
57 Garfield's pal
58 Lads
59 "Blow Blues" playwright
60 Thailand, once
61 Rational
62 Place
63 Lays a lawn
64 Chops down
65 More cunning

DOWN
1 Frighten
2 Of sound
3 Clarinetist Shaw
4 Actress Davis
5 Central theme
6 Dossets
7 Hawaiian feasts
8 Send forth
9 EMT specialty
10 Voiced disapproval
11 Fanatical
12 Make amends
13 "Platoon" co-star Charlie
21 German watchdog
22 Houston and Huff
24 Slides like a snake
26 Hoso. sections
27 Opposite of pral.
28 SASE, e.g.
29 Classic Pontiac
30 Decay
31 Earth tone
32 LAX info
33 Hip dude
34 Fort Worth sch.
35 Distress signal
38 Mare's tidbit
41 Gets the point
43 Eats
45 Deep voices
48 Dental-care product
47 Sound element
48 Harmonic chord
49 Abounds (with)
50 Singer Newton
51 Sprite in "The Tempest"
52 Daddy's mate
53 Flee to wed
54 Madrid master
56 Sweet talk
58 Youth org.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

WANTED
GRAPHICS STAFFERS
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
WE ARE ALWAYS LOOKING FOR MOTIVATED PEOPLE TO FILL UNDERGRAD PART-TIME POSITIONS. ALL MAJORS WELCOME.
VISIT THE COLLEGIAN AT THE BOTTOM OF THE OF THE CAMPUS CENTER

Submit your comics!
comics@dailycollegian.com

Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Have your plumber's license ready at all times as proof that you are qualified to walk around with your crack out like that.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Excluding airline passengers and pilots, we are all under the weather.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
You eat like a ferret and it is very upsetting for the other diners at your table. Acknowledge this behavior and correct it.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Explore your inner maternity by writing poetry about breast feeding.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Teach your roommate to use a litterbox located outside your apartment and you'll have a bathroom all to yourself.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Purchase a hanging plant to increase the aesthetic appeal of your room as well as the flow of fresh oxygen.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Your hair looks great today but no one will notice because they're too busy checking out your pelvic region.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Seek out the original Creedence Clearwater from the days prior to the infamous revival.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
"MMM bop tick a ta ba do ba dubi da ba do ba tick a ta ba doo yeah eh yeah" Yup, now "MMM Bop" is stuck in your head.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Cut three individual hairs in the front of your head to a length of 2 inches. Bang, bang, bang.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Have you ever tried macaroni and cheese with pieces of hot dog in it?

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Listening to Phil Collins will help you gain that inner coolness that you've been so desperately seeking.

YO YO YO,
CHECK OUT THE CAPTION CONTEST AT:

www.dailycollegian.com/caption

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT. FOR RENT

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms. Now showing for June and September. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879. View apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Ranch Jobs
The C Lazy U Guest Ranch in the Colorado Rocky Mountains has positions available for students who are available until mid-August. Applications on the website - www.clazyu.com or call Phil 970-887-3344

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lake-front cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today toll free at 1-888-684-2267 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

EMPLOYMENT

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab.linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

TRAVEL

Spring Break from $199 Land price starting from $199 for 7 days. We also have an all inclusive hotel start from $799 per person. Give us a call today it's not to late to still get away 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Spring Break 08
Hot Deals
Hot Destinations
Hot Parties
Ask about Group Deals
And FREE TRIPS.
1-800-426-7710

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, JANUARY 31, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutewomen survive

Tatham wins it late against 0-21 Fordham

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

At the end of a close game, most Atlantic 10 teams would think the ball is going inside to either Kate Mills or Pam Rosanio, but against Fordham yesterday, Alisha Tatham had the best chance to score.

Tied at 59-59 and with only 20 seconds left, senior forward Alisha Tatham found an open lane as she drove past her defender for the go-ahead basket. With only seven seconds left and Fordham trailing by two, Tatham sealed the game with a steal at half court to give the Massachusetts women's basketball team a 61-59 win.

UMass	61
Fordham	59

"We were just trying to run the set and hopefully get it inside, but when I saw the lane I just took it," Tatham said about the last basket.

"Alisha took the ball in with confidence, so we were all pretty happy about that because we've struggled with games coming down to the end," senior forward Kate Mills said.

The Minutewomen improved their Atlantic 10 standing to (2-3) and (10-10) overall. Fordham drops to (0-21) despite a 24-point effort by freshman guard Megan Mahoney.

Fordham was trailing 51-41 with 6:44 left to play, but the Rams chipped away at the lead and cut it to one until Tatham hit a layup to push the lead to three.

"Alisha's been hot and cold,"

See W. HOOPS on page 8

Alisha Tatham scored 10 points, including the game-winning lay up with under 20 seconds left to give UMass the two-point win. Fordham has yet to win it's first game, despite taking two teams to overtime.

UMass knocks off Duquesne

Three players score 20 points as Minutemen roll over Dukes

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

One of the hallmarks of a post-season-caliber team is the ability to follow a disappointing loss with a better performance. For the second time this season, the Massachusetts men's basketball team snapped a two-game losing streak with an impressive road victory.

UMass	94
Duquesne	80

Two weeks ago it happened at Dayton, and last night the Minutemen (14-6, 3-3 Atlantic 10) defeated Duquesne (13-6, 3-3 A-10) for a 94-80 win at Palumbo Arena. The Minutemen turned a nine-point halftime lead into a 20-point advantage by the midpoint of the second and never looked back.

"I liked our focus ... you could see it in our eyes that we needed this game," UMass coach Travis Ford said.

In a game featuring two teams with similar up-tempo styles, many predicted a high-scoring affair. However, only UMass satisfied scoring enthusiasts, besting its season average by 10 points. In the end, it was defense and rebounding — two areas where the Minutemen have struggled at times — that was the difference in the game.

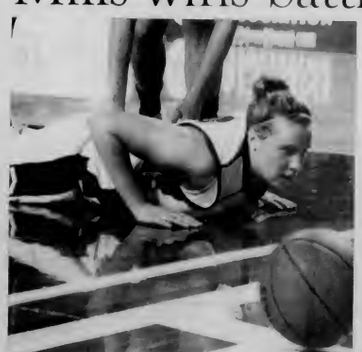
The Minutemen's active zone defense forced Duquesne to take 31 shots from beyond the arc — a season high for an opponent.

Though UMass won the rebounding battle, it allowed the Dukes to pull down 27 offensive rebounds, but even that was not enough for Duquesne to mitigate its poor shooting performance (34 percent).

For the first time since the 1999 season, three UMass players recorded at least 10 rebounds.

"We're never going to be a great rebounding team," Ford said. "Our team right now is fighting for its life in terms of rebounding. We always have to do whatever we can to get rebounds."

None was grittier in the paint than junior forward Tony Gaffney. Despite facing two of the conference's better post players in Shawn James and Kieron Achara, Gaffney registered career highs in both boards (12) and blocks (six).



"We looked at this game and saw it as a must win with our backs

See M. HOOPS on page 8

Gary Forbes had a double-double with a game-high 23 points along with 10 rebounds in the Minutemen's win over Duquesne last night.

Mills wins battle vs. Mahoney

Senior forward Kate Mills scored a game-high 26 points in the win over Fordham, outdueling the Rams' Megan Mahoney, who had 24.

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For the first 38 minutes of the Massachusetts women's basketball team's 61-59 victory, Fordham point guard Megan Mahoney and Minutewoman forward Kate Mills established themselves as go-to players. In the final two minutes of the game, it was no different.

With about 1:30 remaining in the game, Mahoney drove into the lane, as she had done effectively all game. This time she missed the shot but got the rebound and immediately scored, giving the Rams a 57-55 lead.

Kate Mills took an 18 foot jump shot 14 seconds later and tied the game at 57 points.

Annie Zopl played well and finished with 12 points for Fordham, but as the game progressed, it became obvious that Mahoney would try to take over in the final minutes, and Pam Rosanio expected it, drawing a charge.

After a steal by Mahoney, Mills stole the inbounds pass from Zopl at half court, and took the ball the distance to put the Minutewomen ahead, 59-57.

"I knew there was no one in the backcourt, and if I was able to get ahead of No. 50, she wouldn't catch me," Mills said. "As soon as I got it, I just said, 'Go to the basket,' and I was able to score."

Not surprisingly, the fate of the Rams rested in the hands of Mahoney, who delivered once

See MILLS on page 8

Xavier leads packed A-10, climbs polls

BY MIKE BARBA
COLLEGIAN CONTRIBUTOR

As January comes to an end and college students all across America wrap up winter break, the NCAA men's basketball polls begin to take form. With March Madness less than two months away, each game takes on more importance than the last.

A-10 Basketball

In years past, the Atlantic 10 has been left out of the mix when tournament talk would come up, however this year the A-10 is right in the thick of things. As of Jan. 14 the Dayton Flyers, Xavier Musketeers and Rhode Island Rams were all nationally ranked.

Individual play in the A-10 has also been recognized throughout the league. Coaches and players were honored throughout January for their performances this season.

A-10 PRESENCE FELT IN POLLS

The A-10 started the season off strong going 57-30 in non-conference play. Given the conferences play in years past, this impressive start was particularly eye-popping.

Currently boasting a record of 120-66 (.645) in non-conference play, the A-10 is ranked seventh among the 31 Division I conferences in the NCAA. The last time the A-10 was winning at this rate, gasoline cost a buck per gallon, Bill Clinton was sitting in the White House, and Tom Brady was fighting for a starting quarterback position at Michigan.

The Jan. 7 poll marked the first time three A-10 teams were ranked in the Associated Press Top 25 since the Mar. 10-16 2003 poll, when the Xavier Musketeers came in at No. 10; the Dayton Flyers were ranked No. 22, and the Saint Joseph's Hawks No. 25.

In the most recent poll released on Jan. 28, only Xavier remained

See A-10 HOOPS on page 8

COLLEGIAN SPORTS ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

RICKY HARRIS, GUARD
MEN'S BASKETBALL

The sophomore shooting guard has been one of the most improved players in all of college basketball this season.

And thanks to a superb shooting display over 10 games during school intermission, he is the first Collegian Sports Athlete of the Week of the spring semester.

Harris scored in double figures in all but one of the 10 games, including a string of 20-point scoring performances in five straight games. The 6-foot-2 guard scored 197 points during break (19.7 per game) and connected on 31 3-pointers at a 42.5 percent clip.

His career-high for points in a game prior to this season was 14 ... he surpassed that total in every game over break except for Xavier on Jan. 27. His new career-high is 30, which he registered in a tight loss to Saint Joseph's on Jan. 23. Harris rebounded from a poor first half (four points) with a terrific performance in the second stanza against the Hawks, scoring 26 points helped UMass get back into the game.

The Minutemen won their first four games of the break, all against non-conference teams. Harris scored 64 points during that span, but he saved his best games for a big matchup against then-undefeated and No. 15 Vanderbilt and against Atlantic 10 opponents.

Harris shot 50 percent from 3-point range against the Commodores, scoring 25 points to go along with his five rebounds and two assists. UMass fell just short in upsetting Vanderbilt but showed that they could contend with elite teams in the country on the road.

Conference play began after that, beginning with Saint Joseph's. Harris matched the 25 points he scored in the previous game but the Minutemen dropped another close affair to the Hawks. He hit four 3-pointers on the night, the second of a five-game stretch in which he hit at least that many.

During the five-game span before UMass's last game over break against Xavier, Harris averaged 25.2 points per game. He hit over 50 percent of his 3-point attempts (23-of-44) and was named ESPN National Player of the Week by Andy Katz.

COLLEGIAN / UMASS ATHLETIC RELATIONS

RUNNER UP:
JUAN MOLIERE
SWIMMING AND DIVING

Moliere, a sophomore on the Massachusetts swimming team finished no worse than second place in each of his individual events during the month of January. Moliere was never beaten in the 50-yard freestyle event and came in second place only once in the 100-yard freestyle.

The former high school soccer goalkeeper's talents are used in relay events as well, Moliere is used primarily as the anchor leg in a relay but can also swim lead.

In the meet against the BC Eagles, Moliere won both the 50- and the 100-yard freestyle and also swam the anchor leg of the winning lane in the men's 200-yard medley relay.

FEBRUARY

BREU'N UP A STORM IN THE MULLINS | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

RAIN/ICE/WIND : HI: 34 LO: 31 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 2008

Primary election wins send Clinton onward

BY KRISTEN FORRELLI
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

University of Massachusetts students are getting geared up for Super Tuesday by talking politics – and many see Sen. Hillary Clinton as a contender.

With primary election wins in Florida and New Hampshire against contender, Sen. Barack Obama, Clinton is a force to be reckoned with.

"This race is extremely exciting," said UMass freshman Melissa Black, a registered Democrat. "Either way, it's going to get better."

Clinton lays claim to two traits during speeches: experience and strength.

"Hearing her talk about the presidency, her policies and answers for America's big problems, we are hugely impressed by the depth of her knowledge, by the force of her intellect and by the breadth of, yes, her experience," said the New York Times editorial board in an article that announced their endorsement of Clinton for the presidency.

Yet, Francesca Caruso, a sophomore, questioned at least one of those claims.

"I don't believe in supporting Hillary just because she's a woman, and I think she lacks experience, because being first lady is not an elected position," Caruso said.

Others, like senior Loren Halman and Alana Goodman, sophomore Republican Club member, believe her strengths lie somewhere else.

"She definitely knows how to fight dirty," Goodman said.

"Her promotion team seems to be into abusing other candidates, backbiting Obama, and he doesn't seem to do that," said Halman.

Despite Clinton's campaign tactics, others look to her policies to decide.

"The war is the issue that matters most to me," said junior and Republican Club member, Becky Martin.

The Iraq war has been a major point of criticism for Clinton.

In 2002, she voted in favor of deploying troops to Iraq, a decision she does not regret.

"I take responsibility for my vote," said Clinton during the 2007 South Carolina primary debate on MSNBC. "Obviously, I did as good a job I could at the time. It was a sincere vote based on the information available to me."

Some UMass students support Democratic candidate Hillary Clinton, while others are wary.

If elected president, Clinton said she would start a phased withdrawal within 60 days of taking office, with the goal to have troops out by the end of 2013, according to her Web site.

Black considers the war and the economy to be the two biggest issues.

Clinton has proposed a $70 billion plan to "jump start" the economy. This includes stopping Bush's tax cuts for households earning more than $250,000, strengthening

See CLINTON on page 3

Building his résumé

Businessman, CEO, governor, Romney aims to keep rising

BY AMBER L. VAILLANCOURT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With 41 percent of the Republican delegates' support at stake, the heat is being turned up on Mitt Romney as Feb. 5 looms ahead.

On Wednesday, former Republican primary candidate Rudolph Giuliani threw his support behind Romney's biggest competitor, John McCain. California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger did the same on Thursday while McCain was visiting the Golden state.

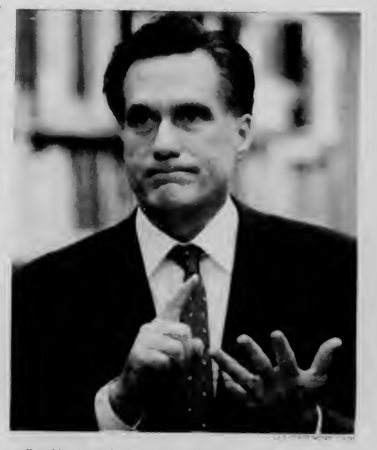
Though McCain scored the win among registered Republicans in Florida, with 36 percent of the votes, Romney didn't trail far behind, gathering 31 percent. As the race draws closer and 24 states ready themselves to vote, Romney has spent $17 million of his own money to fund television advertisements in California's expensive media markets.

Romney, a 60-year-old Mormon businessman-turned-CEO of the 2002 Winter Olympics, turned Massachusetts governor, now hopes to add commander in chief to his resume.

Born in Detroit, Mich. in 1947, Willard Mitt Romney is the son of George Romney, who served as the governor of Michigan for three terms.

Romney attended Stanford University before moving to France for 30 months to serve as a missionary for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Afterwards, Romney attended Brigham Young University, followed by the Harvard Business School where he earned his MBA.

Romney served as vice president at Bain & Company, Inc., a leading management firm from 1978 to 1984. He then founded Bain Capital in 1984, a venture capital and investment company.



Romney credits his economic experience to having been involved in these companies.

"I've spent my entire life in the real economy," he said. "I know why jobs come; I know why they go ... the economy is my DNA."

As far as being a being a Republican, Romney definitely fits the bill.

He calls for a stronger military, saying that troops need to be

See ROMNEY on page 3

Republican presidential candidate Mitt Romney fits the mindset of many UMass students who lean toward the right.

The Food Bank Farm in Hadley offers superior produce than that of large chain supermarkets, according to its director.

Big business goes local

Whole Foods finds buying local necessary

BY DEVON COURTNEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Organic and locally grown produce might traditionally be thought of as more expensive than the non-local variety, but that is about to change.

Local farms and large businesses like Whole Foods are discovering that locally-grown is becoming increasingly more practical.

"There are lots of energy costs in food today," said Michael Docter, director of the Food Bank Farm in Hadley. "Over 90 percent of the energy required to manufacture produce is transportation."

According to Docter, large retail chains and supermarkets have "no direct impact" on his farm's business, but he said customers know the processed produce at retail places is "inferior" to produce places like Food Bank Farm offer.

One of the largest differences between organic, local produce and non-local produce is cost, the former being typically more expensive.

"The rising cost of energy is quickly making foods that have to be shipped from far away more expensive," Docter said. "Most food gets processed in places like California."

This results in retail chains like Whole Foods discovering that buying locally is not only becoming less expensive, but ultimately necessary.

Instead of spending money on rising shipping costs, retail buyers can save that money by purchasing their produce locally.

"We are big investors in local agriculture," said Whole Foods representative Robin Rehfield.

Cost effectiveness isn't the only advantage of locally-grown produce.

"It's a lot fresher, too ... at least four days fresher," said Lynn Bowmaster, co-director of the Food Bank Farm. "Local food just tastes a whole lot better."

Local farms do various things which help the local community. Food Bank Farm donates approximately 50 percent of all of its produce to the Western

See LOCAL PRODUCTS on page 2

Library creates database interface

BY ADAM COULTER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Keeping up with the new technological trends and inventions of the times, the W.E.B. Du Bois library has unveiled a new and improved Research Database Interface.

The libraries offer more than 280 research databases and are easier to locate, due to a new "database locator." The new interface is the product of a design overhaul conducted over the last few months.

The library staff enlisted the help and opinions of undergraduate and graduate students with the goal of creating a better system of helping students write research papers.

Laurice Guillory, a University of Massachusetts graduate student, was riding the library's elevator Wednesday afternoon after working on her Literature Characters in Education dissertation.

"The new databases are more user friendly," said Guillory, as she exited the elevator to the fourth floor.

The new database interface helps students locate databases by many different options, including by subject, name, or type of material, such as encyclopedias.

"We repeatedly saw problems with the previous version of the database locator during Web site usability testing and at the reference desk," said library staffer Kelcy Shepherd.

Advanced users had problems as well with the search box because it only worked with very general keywords.

Students basically had to rely on luck to find a relevant database.

"Since the new interface went live, we've collected user feedback through our web comments form," said Shepherd.

Descriptions of the content and what is covered by each database is also displayed. A new tool included in the new Research Database is a list of up to five "best bets" that are provided within each subject area.

These "best bets" are the most useful and vital resources in that particular field and are selected by librarians with expertise in the subject, again, with the design of ultimately providing a better way to write a research paper or dissertation.

The "best bets" appear at the top of the list for each subject area. For example, the "best bets" databases in Sports Management are ABI/INFORM Global, Business Source Premier, IBISWorld United States, Mintel Reports, and LexisNexis Academic.

Some of the power users have expressed frustration that their favorite feature is now an extra click away, but the majority of users echo Guillory in saying the new interface is now more user friendly. Not all UMass students are quite aware of the new interface, however; many expressed surprise when asked about it.

"Since the semester has just begun, a lot of students don't know much about the interface's overhaul," said communication assistant Leslie Schaler.

Adam Coulter can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu

The W.E.B. Du Bois library has created a new interface for searching through research databases.

New minor prog. approved

BY ELIZABETH HAWLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A new Scandinavian Studies minor has been approved for the University of Massachusetts German and Scandinavian Studies program.

"[Scandinavia] is a great place that people need to know about," said professor Sherrill Harbison, a Scandinavian Studies professor and Undergraduate Advisor, who says the minor will add to overall German and Scandinavian Studies program.

According to Harbison, students had expressed interest in a Scandinavian Studies minor in the past, completing the requirements of the program as it exists today, but were unable to graduate with a minor at the time because the program did not exist.

Today, "a handful" of students have already expressed their interest in the new minor, according to Harbison.

The German and Scandinavian Studies program is the only program in the Northeast to offer classes in four Nordic languages, including Swedish, Finnish, Old Norse and Norwegian, through the Five College Center for the Study of World Languages.

The new minor is expected to add to this depart-

See SCANDINAVIAN MINOR on page 2

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 5

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Stymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALMA LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. IT BECAME DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN WAS REDESIGNED SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. Sullivan

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

Bush administration's 2009 budget to resonate at home

BY KEVIN FREKING
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - President Bush's 2009 budget will virtually freeze most domestic programs and seek nearly $200 billion in savings from federal health care programs, a senior administration official said Thursday.

Overall, the Bush budget will exceed $3 trillion, this official said. The deficit is expected to reach about $400 billion for this year and next.

Bush on Monday will present his proposed budget for the new fiscal year to Congress, where it's unlikely to gain much traction in the midst of a presidential campaign. The president has promised a plan that would erase the budget deficit by 2012 if his policies are followed.

To that end, Bush will propose nearly $178 billion in savings from Medicare over five years — nearly triple what he proposed last year. Much of the savings would come from freezing reimbursement rates for most health care providers for three years. An additional $17 billion would come from the Medicaid program, the state-federal partnership that provides health coverage to the poor.

The budget for most domestic programs funded by Congress will look similar to last year's, according to the official, from the Office of Management and Budget.

"It's a very small increase," he said. "Very small."

A second administration official said domestic discretionary spending would increase by less than 1 percent under Bush's proposal.

Both officials spoke on condition of anonymity because the budget has not yet been released.

In his State of the Union address Monday, Bush said his budget envisioned a surplus in 2012. "American families have to balance their budgets, and so should their government," he said.

The federal government is expected to spend about $650 billion on Medicare and Medicaid in 2008. It represents more than $1 out of every $5 spent by the federal government.

The OMB official said the president views the budget as a final opportunity to slow the growth of entitlement programs but recognizes that Congress probably won't go along.

He said spending on Medicare would increase under Bush's new budget, but not as quickly as had been expected. "Medicare will grow at 5 percent. It just won't grow over 7 percent," he said.

Savings also would come by charging wealthier people higher monthly premiums for Medicare's drug program.

The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services said the Bush budget would project the 10-year cost of the program, from 2008 to 2017, at $915 billion. That's $117 billion less than what had been forecast last summer. The agency attributed the lower estimate to smaller increases in the cost of medicines, and better deals negotiated between insurers and drug manufacturers.

The agency said 25.4 million people were now enrolled in a Medicare drug plan.

Bush last year asked Congress for nearly $65 billion in Medicare savings over five years. Congress refused to go along.

Independent experts have warned that the government needs to address the rising cost of health care for businesses to stay competitive and for the government to be able to pay for other important programs in the decades ahead.

"In fact, if there is one thing that could bankrupt America, it's runaway health care costs. We must not allow that to happen," David M. Walker, the U.S. comptroller general, told lawmakers Tuesday during a congressional hearing.

But Democrats said Bush's budget targets the wrong health care providers for cuts. They said insurers subsidized to provide Medicare coverage are being overpaid.

"The president is proposing to once again slash health care coverage for seniors and low-income working Americans," House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., said. "The president's cuts are exactly the wrong medicine when the cost of health care and the number of uninsured continue to rise and families are feeling economically insecure."

Health care providers said the president's recommendations would make it harder for them to meet expenses, which would continue to rise as a result of inflation, even as their reimbursement rates were frozen.

"That level of reduction is so outrageous that it will be summarily rejected by members of both parties in Congress," said Tom Nickels, senior vice president of federal relations for the American Hospital Association.

"I don't think it will be taken seriously."

President George Bush's budget will exceed $3 trillion, and funding for domestic programs will only increase slightly.

UMass adds new minor

SCANDINAVIAN MINOR from page 1

ment. Harvard University is the only college in the northeastern United States to offer a similar program to the Scandinavian Studies minor.

The program will consist of 15 credits and includes four required classes and one additional class within the department; it is designed to parallel the German Studies minor already in existence and is expected to incorporate Scandinavian language and literature with culture, including history, political science, art history and sociology.

"There are people who come to these classes from other departments," said Harbison, who believes the program will bring additional students and courses into the department.

Students interested in the minor can contact professor Harbison at harbison@german.umass.edu.

Elizabeth Hawley can be reached at ehawley@student.umass.edu.

Sherrill Harbison believes the new minor will attract more students.

Sport management prof. recieves grant

BY ERIK TABER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Todd Crosset, an associate professor of sport management at the University of Massachusetts, received a two-year, $5,000 grant to leverage the work of his experimental learning class, Sport and Community Relations.

The 2007-09 Faculty Fellowship for Youth grant from the Rhode Island and Massachusetts Campus Compacts is intended to support the growth of faculty engaged in community-based learning, particularly involving critical issues affecting youth development.

Crosset's Class, Sport and Community Relations, attempts to expand ties between the campus and the Springfield community.

"UMass-Amherst has an opportunity to make a significant difference in Springfield, but it must follow the lead of those communities," said Crosset.

The course is restricted to 16 sport management majors, and only enrolls juniors and seniors, according to Crosset.

Crosset poses a main question to his class: How can the University respond to the expressed needs of the community?

The class runs the Key Players Project, a community service-learning effort that annually honors 10 Springfield men of color as Key Player Ambassadors. The Ambassadors are nominated by the young people whom they serve and are chosen by pervious ambassadors and representatives from community organizations.

They are chosen for their profound influence on the area's children. Artists and athletes, educators and ministers, businessmen and community organizers – the ambassadors come from different walks of life, but all use their individual skills to enrich the lives of Springfield's children and the community.

The project was conceived seven years ago by Crosset and is a joint venture with community groups in Springfield, the Boston Celtics and the Isenberg School of Management.

Crosset hopes to facilitate discussions between Key Player Ambassadors and Amherst campus faculty, students and staff.

He'd also like to match community projects and efforts using the appropriate resources on campus.

Crosset knows first hand how this grant will help the Springfield community. "I live in Springfield, and this is a way to tie my work world into the world I live in."

Erik Taber can be reached at etaber@student.umass.edu

Local farms prove a vital asset for stores

LOCAL PRODUCTS from page 1

Massachusetts Food Bank, which is the reason for the farm's name.

Many local farms also participate in Community Supported Agriculture (CSA) projects, like the widely popular FarmShare programs.

"It's good for prices, because it eliminates all the middle men," said Docter. "Around 180 thousand pounds of fresh vegetables have been sold back to over 700 shareholders in the community."

CSA membership is attained through a fee paid by the shareholder. That person can then come to the farm and retrieve a quantity of produce. The exact amounts of each are determined on an individual basis.

Because of strong programs like these, local farms are able to compete well in the produce market throughout western Massachusetts. Still, Docter would like to see more people interested in Community Supported Agriculture.

When asked about non-participating retail chains, Docter said, "The poorer they do, the better it is for us."

Devon Courtney can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu

Strong community programs make local farms like the Food Bank Farm in Hadley competition for supermarkets.

WE'VE GOT OUR BLOG ON.
DAILYCOLLEGIAN.BLOGSPOT.COM
CHECK IT OUT!

AFRICAN BEADED ART
POWER AND ADORNMENT
On View February 1–June 15, 2008

Friday, February 1 5:30 pm
Lecture by John Pemberton III, Guest Curator, Professor Emeritus, Amherst College and Curatorial Consultant for African Art, SCMA

Stoddard Hall*
Route 9/Elm Street
across from Museum of Art
Free and open to all
Limited seating
*NOTE Change of venue

ART MENTOR FOUNDATION LUCERNE

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP

413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

Looking for a Job?
The Daily Collegian
is seeking a hard-working, motivated undergrads to fill our Advertising Representative Positions.

To Apply:
Contact Alex Bender or Marsea Whooten @ 545-3500 for more information.

•Excellent business experience!
•Gain valuable sales experience
•Get credits for work
•Build your resume
*DOM students strongly encouraged to apply.

Educational policies give Clinton 'edge' unions and ensuring trade laws work for all Americans. She also plans on lowering taxes for middle class families.

CLINTON from page 1

"Since I'm just finishing school, the issue I'm most concerned about is higher education," said UMass senior Sophia Bruneau.

As president, Clinton claims she will lower the cost of college through a $3,500 tuition tax credit, which is enough to cover more than 50 percent of the cost of tuition at the average public institution for many families. Clinton also wants to rid of the red tape in obtaining financial aid, according to her Web site.

Bruneau believes Clinton's policy on higher education gives her a "strong edge."

"Global environment reform is huge for me," Caruso said.

According to her campaign Web site, Clinton said she would establish a cap-and-trade system to reduce carbon emissions 80 percent below 1990 levels by 2050.

She would also establish a $50 billion Strategic Energy Fund, paid for in part by oil companies, to fund investments in alternative energy. She also said she will begin an aggressive action to transition the economy toward renewable energy sources, with renewable sources generating 25 percent of electricity by 2025 and 60 billion gallons of home-grown biofuels available for cars and trucks by 2030.

When it comes to gay rights, Clinton believes states should maintain their jurisdiction over decisions concerning same-sex unions, she said in a Democratic primary debate sponsored by the Human Rights Campaign on gay issues in August of 2007.

"I am absolutely in favor of civil unions with full equality of benefits, rights and privileges," Clinton said.

Born in 1947, to a staunch Republican father and a homemaker mother, Clinton grew up in Park Ridge, Ill.

"My father was an old-fashioned conservative," Clinton said in a recent interview with The New York Times. "He believed in hard work and that everyone had to do their part and be willing to take responsibility."

Clinton was a self-declared tomboy and never received an allowance as a child. She grew up with the same conservative beliefs as her father, until challenged by a local youth minister who took Clinton to see Dr.Martin Luther King, Jr.'s address, "Sleeping through History."

In 1965, Clinton attended Wellesley College, where she majored in political science and during her freshman year, was the president of the Young Republican Club.

Clinton slowly edged towards the left during her college years, and in 1968 attended both political conventions. A pivotal moment in Clinton's clarity on the subject of political allegiance may be seen in her 1969 commencement speech, which openly challenged Republican Sen. Edward Brooks.

Her speech was so warmly received it was featured in Life magazine. After Wellesley, Clinton attended Yale Law School where she met her future husband, Bill Clinton.

When Mr. Clinton became president in 1992, Hillary got what she calls "eight years with a front-row seat on history," she told The New York Times.

Clinton made 79 trips to foreign countries, where she wielded "soft power," turned cold war enemies into friends, supported human rights, and encouraged non-profit and goodwill endeavors.

Her greatest achievement may have been her speech in 1995 to the United Nations concerning women in Beijing when she said "humans' rights are women's rights and women's rights are humans' rights."

However, her largest assignment as first lady, a health care initiative, was a well-documented failure and during President Clinton's most trying times, when trying to decide whether to bomb Afghanistan, she wasn't even speaking to her husband, let alone advising.

In Clinton's autobiography, "Living History," she claims the two toughest decisions of her life were whether to stay with her husband and if she should run for U.S. Senate.

Clinton decided to run New York senator for the term starting Jan. 3, 2001. She won.

Yet some UMass students, like junior and native New Yorker, Jake Pearlstein, question Clinton's motivation for running.

"She showed up in New York because that was the easiest state for her to get elected," said Pearlstein. "I can't trust anyone so political. Anyone who says 'ya'll' is not a New Yorker."

Despite any criticism, Clinton was re-elected in 2006.

The Massachusetts primary is on Feb. 5.

Kristen Forrelli can be reached at kforrell@student.umass.edu

Some UMass students question Hillary Clinton's motivation in running for President.

Former governor still has supporters at UM increased by 100,000, and 4 percent of the country's gross domestic product must be dedicated to the defense to help with the critical needs of the armed forces, not contractors.

ROMNEY from page 1

Romney plans to confront what he calls the 'radical jihad' by launching a new type of Marshall plan that he says would unify non-military sources of power, in turn supporting moderate Muslims.

Romney also would tighten the America's economic sanctions against Iran, which he hopes would diplomatically isolate Iran, thus forcing the indictment president Ahmadinejad under the terms of the Genocide Convention.

Romney's tough stance on immigration makes him popular among conservatives and he plans to solve the problem of illegal immigration by securing the boarder, which he believes would reaffirm the country's appreciation of legal immigrants.

Romney's stance on abortion and gay marriage are exhibited on his Web site under the title "American culture & values."

According to the site, Romney feels that, "Roe v. Wade should be overturned so that the issue of abortion can be revisited by the American people and the elected representatives," and also says he is against abortion except in the cases of incest, rape and to save the life of the mother.

Romney makes it clear to voters that he does not support gay marriage in saying that he "supports a federal marriage amendment defining a marriage as a union between one man and one woman."

Matt Giancola, a University of Massachusetts senior political science major who has been working on the Barack Obama campaign on campus, points to statements Romney made in the past.

"You really don't know where he stands," he said. "In the 90s he was pro-choice and said he was more pro-gay rights than Ted Kennedy. Today, he backs away from those statements."

Giancola felt it was important for a nominee to have a clear set of goals.

"As a citizen of Massachusetts, I saw what he did as governor," Giancola said. "It was not just one thing he screwed up, but a whole bunch of stuff."

Giancola said that Romney closed a lot of mental health institutions, forcing people who needed help onto the streets and into emergency rooms, backlogging them for everyone else.

"I'm a Democrat, so Romney's ideology I completely disagree with it," Giancola said.

UMass senior environmental science major Ernesto Campbell had different things to say about Romney.

"I think he is a good candidate," said Campbell. "He stands firm in his beliefs and he doesn't change. The American consensus is very left, politically — and he doesn't change his policy."

"I very one hates him because he was the governor of Massachusetts, but it's not like he sent the state into recession," said Campbell.

Though Campbell is a registered Republican and has already filled out his absentee ballot, he is not hopeful about this coming election.

"As far as Republican candidates, it doesn't matter who runs for the Republicans, they're not going to win," he said. "I even if we put Jesus Christ against Hillary Clinton, the Republican's wouldn't win."

While some students on campus may be losing hope, others feel more confident.

Brad Del-lumeri, the president of the Republican Club said he felt roughly 35 percent of the club supports Romney as a candidate. As president, Del lumeri says he feels Romney would be strong on national defense, oppose homosexual rights, have strong morals and would support strong immigration laws.

"The president as chief executive of the country needs to articulately express what he believes in," said DeFlumeri, who helped Romney campaign in New Hampshire.

He also said he feels no other candidates have the same management success as Romney, or anything close to it.

Del lumeri thinks Romney's lack of popularity on campus can be explained.

"He didn't make an effort to come here at all," DeFlumeri said. "He turned down the school several times. The administration didn't want him to come here, they felt he had turned his back on them because he was more concerned with getting Republicans on the board of trustees than coming to UMass."

While the Republican club does not endorse candidates during the primary, it's not hard at all to find students at UMass who do not support Romney in any capacity.

"His policies are whack," said Christina Jones, a junior anthropology major. "He was never here when he was governor, he's a social climber."

"I think Mitt Romney has more support in Michigan because his name resembles the state," said senior social thought and political economy major and Radical Student Union core member Matt Morin, who pointed out that the state looks like a mitten.

Morin, who supported Edwards before he dropped out of the Democratic primary, felt the top issues of this election were the environmental crisis and the war in Iraq topics he feels the Democrats were discussing, but the Republicans were not.

DeFlumeri pointed out that if Romney had any weakness, it would be foreign policy.

"John McCain has 20 years in the Senate, more foreign policy experience, stronger ties to international leaders and international credibility. But that is not a weakness [on Romney's part] but inexperience."

Amber Vaillancourt can be reached at availlan@student.umass.edu

GO PATS GO!
Sunday, February 3, 2008
At all DCs from 4–9pm

Go Pats Go Specials
New England Clam Chowder
Buffalo Wings
Meatball Sub
Patriot Pizza
Cranberry Coffee Cake
And more!

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
RESIDENT
YCMP
www.umass.edu/diningservices
*No New York Style Bagels Served Super Sunday

Celebrate
Black History Month
Sample Fabulous Dishes!
Enjoy Lively Music!
Friday, February 1 from 5–9 pm
Featured in the following units:
Worcester DC
Hampshire DC
Menu:
Southern Fried Chicken
Fried Catfish Filets (Southern cuisine)
Southern Style Macaroni & Cheese
Sweet Potato Pone (Jamaica)
BBQ Pulled Pork
Dirty Rice (Louisiana)
Zarbeyaan Fried Squid (North Africa)
Nonnie Cakes (West Africa)
Sweet Potato Pie (Southern cuisine)
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
RESIDENT
YCMP
www.umass.edu/diningservices

Dear UMass Students,

We would like to welcome every student back for the Spring Semester of 2008. Over the break, the university has made exciting changes ranging from the appointment of an interim Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs to a newly renovated Student Union. In addition to that, the New England Patriots have also made a huge accomplishment of finishing the NFL season undefeated and being a contender for the Superbowl XLII title.

Our university has a rich history of demonstrating, protesting, and speaking out. Unfortunately there is also a negative history which has included senseless rioting. It is appropriate for us [the students] to participate in the energized culture that this university inherently possesses, but it would be unreasonable to demand respect and student autonomy without recognizing that there are also issues in the student community of which we must take ownership. Acknowledging and taking responsibility for past rioting gives us a framework to understand what can be done to subvert our actions, and more importantly, an opportunity for us to set a higher standard for student expectations.

If we do not exercise a heightened sense of responsibility as well as constraint, our students' safety will become an issue and the integrity of UMass students will be compromised. We encourage everyone to enjoy "The Big Game" on February 3. We strongly urge every student to continue to challenge the expectations that were here before us—that we do not come to UMass to riot before we graduate.

In Solidarity,
Your Student Leaders

Aaron Buford SGA President	Carla Dominguez Speaker of Undergraduate Senate	Ruth Thompson Student Trustee	Matt Giancola President of University Democrats	Kevin O. Bolduc Southwest Senator Chair - AA
Katelyn R. Canty Central Area Senator	TJ Hurrie University Programming Council	Danny Soto ALANA Caucus	Michael Megaro Central Area Governor	Jacob Descheneaux Pi Kappa Phi Fraternity
Michael Megaro Central Area Government	Mallory Brideau Panhellenic President	Alexander King Inter-Fraternity Council

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

An American in Israel

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES

Greg Collins

Arriving at Ben Gurion International Airport in Tel Aviv at the start of my 10-day trip to Israel, I, along with other students from the Five-College area, noticed the first sign of authentic, ancient Middle Eastern culture: a giant sign cut out of grass, right outside the terminal, saying, "Nokia: Connecting People."

It is amazing how interconnected the world is. For all of the criticism leveled at Thomas Friedman's theory about the flattening of the world, my experiences in Israel illustrated the advancement of a global economic structure and the influence of American culture overseas.

The Nokia presence was just one of the many examples I encountered which exhibited this influence. One of my roommates, an Israeli soldier named Elad, told me he not only has seen the first three "American Pie" movies, but also the fourth, fifth, and sixth ones, all of which I was previously unaware had existed. Lian, an Israeli girl I befriended, knew the exact lyrics to the Dire Straits' "Sultans of Swing" and Wham!'s "Wake Me Up Before You Go Go."

My most embarrassing moment as a naive American, as someone who wrongly assumed foreigners' lack of familiarity regarding American pop culture, occurred during a discussion I had with our security guard named Ori.

After he mentioned Michael Jackson in a conversation one day, I proceeded to test his knowledge out on other America celebrities.

I asked if he had heard of 50 Cent, Tom Hanks and Britney Spears, and each time he shook his head "no," thereby confirming my suspicion that he was yet another foreigner completely ignorant of our robust American pop culture.

But then Ori paused, stared at me for a second, and said flatly, "You idiot, of course I know who those people are."

The impact of American pop culture in Israel signals why the country is hailed justifiably as a beacon of light in the Middle East. Its commitment to liberal democracy, pluralist politics and tolerance in general became evident during our trip.

Ten Muslims are in its Parliament, and non-Jews have equal voting rights. Most public signs are written in Hebrew, English and Arabic. Freedom of the press exists in a ubiquitous fashion, and, subsequently, the free flow of information (including crude American song lyrics) is apparent throughout the whole country.

The impact of American pop culture in Israel signals why the country is hailed justifiably as a beacon of light in the Middle East.

More so, there were no security issues as we traveled to somewhat historically contentious areas, such as Northern Israel and East Jerusalem. Contrary to the sensationalist media portrayals of the Arab-Israeli conflict, never once did I fear for my safety. There were few security guards at Ben Gurion International Airport, and the areas we visited bordering Lebanon, Syria and Jordan were peaceful without any signs of hostile activity.

That being said, I feel that in terms of economic development and freedom, Israel is more similar to its surrounding Arab states than America. Most Israelis live in apartments; I saw few, if any, houses resembling the suburban homes Americans have come to accept as permanent staples of typical residential living.

These living arrangements are a symptom of Israel's 51 percent income tax, which pays for, among various luxuries, its universal education system. This heavy burden creates a great hindrance for Israelis to move in and out of socioeconomic brackets as easily as people do in the United States.

Additionally, in contrast to America, military service is mandatory in Israel. This does not necessarily reflect poorly on the Israeli's government insistence on force-feeding Spartan-like military prowess in its citizenry. Rather, it demonstrates, in some ways in a tragic sense, Israel's security realities of protecting itself from neighboring adversaries.

Still, as I talked with the Israeli soldiers my group befriended on our trip, I felt guilty that they were required to devote a substantial portion of their young adult years to military affairs (albeit most soldiers' responsibilities were more civilian related), while I enjoyed much more freedom attending college in America to pursue internships, academics and recreational activities.

Without a doubt, Israel's rich cultural heritage becomes apparent whenever you place a note in the Western Wall or hike up the Masada Mountains.

But taking into account Israel's burdensome military, residential and economic structures, I view Israel as a country which still has a long way to go before living up to America's profound examples of free markets and free people. Of course, among Middle Eastern countries, it is the closest to achieving these noble goals.

Ironically, while my experiences validated why Israel is considered an incredible country, it also confirmed my feeling that America is truly the land of the free.

As I head to Egypt, the next country during my Middle East excursion, we will see if Arab countries possess the roots of liberty clearly evident in Israel.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu

We need to secede

Dear Editor:

On Tuesday night the UMass Republican Club voted to secede from the Massachusetts Alliance of College Republicans (MACR), a statewide umbrella organization comprised of an elected executive board, whose main mission is to guide individual college republican chapters at schools throughout the Commonwealth.

Such a decision was made, in large part, because of spurious accusations leveled against President Brad DeFlumeri by MACR Chairman (and former UMass Republican Club Vice President) Brian Gwozdz of Boston College.

Gwozdz alleged heinous personal misconduct on the part of DeFlumeri, and yet, when pushed by the Center for Student Development could not produce corroboration for his claims. As our meeting played out, it became increasingly clear to us that the nature of the accusations made against President DeFlumeri were more fit for "Days of Our Lives" than prosecution in a criminal court - Gwozdz is content to turn college love triangles into fodder for his own personal power play. We firmly reject such nonsense and stand steadfastly in support of our President, Brad DeFlumeri.

Furthermore, Gwozdz gave us an ultimatum - impeach President DeFlumeri within a week or lose recognition by MACR. Such a notion borders on absurdity on so many levels - why should a successful, active, and well-funded RSO here at UMass answer or kowtow to royal decrees made by students at other schools?

In an effort to apparently bolster his claims, Gwozdz circulated a letter condemning DeFlumeri which, prima facie, appeared to by signed by a plethora of MACR officials. However, upon further examination at Tuesday night's Republican Club meeting, one of MACR's own top officials, Western Massachusetts Vice Chairman Becky Echevarria of Mt. Holyoke, indicated that the signatures on the letter were not exactly valid, and that many of the "undersigned" who appeared to be condemning DeFlumeri were curious as to why their names even appeared on such a letter.

This is a complicated matter that we don't expect the UMass community to follow with immovable interest - we have a difficult enough time getting students to come to our events without protesting our every move.

However, we would like to note that while Tuesday night's meeting admittedly produced just as many questions as answers, what is undeniably clear is that this University will without question continue to recognize the Republican Club as one of its oldest and most handsomely-funded political clubs.

We will continue to execute energetic and passionate conservative programming, aggressively recruit new members, and, undoubtedly continue to put more stock in the opinions of the UMass community and our own members than bitter bureaucrats absentmindedly sitting in Boston offices.

We mark our newfound independence from MACR as a step toward localizing our efforts to bring a conservative message to this community and the Pioneer Valley, while rejecting the efforts of a state organization that demands an independently operating UMass registered student organization turn into one of its many slavish puppets.

UMass Republican Club

Experiencing the world

Leigh Greaney

At the writing of this column, I am miles up in the clouds looking down into the Atlantic. After two weeks in England, I came to realize on the way back that there was more to my trip then just ancient buildings, double-decker buses and perfectly English accents. There were memories. There were experiences. There was life.

Seeing the world may be the most influential and essential part of life. To not only learn about culture, but to actually interact with it, is an experience we should all have. Whether it is your dream to go to Hawaii, Nepal, Australia or Chicago, there always seems to be a barrier in between the dream and the reality.

Much too often, travel is associated with opportunity. Almost always, it's connected with money and the lack thereof. This is not a barrier, however. This is the lack of making your own opportunity. Money comes and goes, as do opportunities. To truly have a grasp on what you want to do, you have to make it happen yourself.

If seeing the world is something you always tell yourself you want to do, simply do it. Make a plan for yourself. Whether it involves getting a job or whether it involves not spending all the money you make at your job, there are things you can do to make room for travel.

One great way to save up money, no matter what your financial situation may be, is setting aside a certain amount of money every day or every week. Whether you set up a travel bank account or you have a manila envelope you slip cash into, make an effort to designate money to only spend on trips.

Putting a few dollars away each day is much easier than it sounds. Resist your two-shot-hold-the-foam latte and pocket those four bucks for Ireland. Hold back from buying a few scratch tickets next time you're at the gas station and save that money for your jet-setting adventures to Peru. Buy yourself a Brita filter and save yourself the 300 bottles of water you probably buy a year and keep that extra cash for a trip to Japan.

The little things add up. A few dollars here and there is not a huge life style change or a hole in your pocket. Five dollars a day for a year is $1,825 for you to get out there. You can do that.

Another good way to make opportunity for yourself is to save up with a friend. Traveling alone might not be your ideal, so find a friend or group of friends with similar travel ideas. Friends are great pressure for saving up money too. Peer pressure works as middle school so perfectly exhibited.

If seeing the world is something you always tell yourself you want to do, simply do it.

Also, if you happen to have a friend who is traveling abroad, living somewhere you'd like to visit, or has family living somewhere you'd like to go, take the opportunity to go there first. Not only do you not have to pay for a hotel, but you are able to experience your destination in a whole new way. To go somewhere and live like a local is an experience in its own.

Once you are at your place of choice, try your best to acclimate yourself with where you are. Don't feel obligated to check out every tourist attraction and waste all your money on scams. It's free to go look around and drink in the culture. Meet people who live there, check out natural attractions and see where life takes you.

Also, when it comes to your big decision of where you want to go, think out of the box. The commonly advertised places like Orlando, Florida and Cancun, Mexico, might be cheap to buy tickets to, but once you're there you spend just as much money as if you were flying across the world. Think about the long run and how worth your while it will be at the end of your trip.

A huge misconception people have with seeing the world sometimes isn't thinking in the box, it's thinking outside of the United States. There are places right here in this country with no oceans to cross and no passports needed that are potential memory making escapades.

Whether you cram a van or RV full of friends together and motel jump to California or you spend a weekend on Lake Michigan, your trip money can go toward great things.

The important part is that you do it. Don't just say it. Your life isn't going to wait for you to have money to burn. What better time than now to do what you want? If you want to see the world, then go see it. Stop making excuses and start making your life happen.

Leigh Greaney is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu

Presidential race closing in

Michael Phillis

Whether or not he knows it, Edwards may well have decided the Democrats' nominee when he dropped out of the race.

This year's Democratic race for the presidential nomination is like none other in history. The makeup of the top three candidates included the wife of one of the most beloved presidents in recent memory, the first viable black candidate and possible leader of a new progressive movement and a white guy. Unlike in past races however, the power of the white guy is not in his viability as a candidate, but instead in choosing either Clinton or Obama as the party's nominee.

The poll results from New Hampshire gave the first indication of what might lay ahead in the Clinton-Obama struggle for the White House. Clinton had typed out two concession speeches for New Hampshire's election night after the polls predicted a possible double-digit loss to rival Obama. Clinton's campaign was in trouble. In trouble, that is, until the results came in. As most know, Clinton won by roughly 3 percent and the barrage of pundit speculation ensued.

The makeup of the New Hampshire voting body told the story. The vast majority of voters in New Hampshire are white, with a surprising number of late deciding independent voters that make New Hampshire an extremely difficult place to do polling.

On the surface the voters of Iowa and New Hampshire do not seem to differ all that much, except for one major factor: Iowa held caucuses and New Hampshire held a primary election.

Obama won as big as he did in Iowa because of his message of hope and change that seemed to resonate with the people. In Iowa caucuses, voters looked at each other face to face and everybody's vote was out in the open. If a voter had spoken highly to his friends about Obama and his ideals, then he would be hard-pressed to change his vote in the face of such public pressure.

This pressure allowed Iowans to apply pressure and, thus, some took an ideological risk for Obama instead of a more comfortable Clinton vote.

Racism has played a role in this race and that fact can not be overlooked.

In New Hampshire, the elections and the vote were private.

The large constituency of middle-aged Democrats went to the polls, sat down and reconsidered. This time they had no need to tell anyone what their votes were going to be. Voters could make the safe choice without their friends knowing that they voted against someone as exciting to the Democratic Party as the young senator from Illinois.

Edwards, on the other hand, has been to the left of the other two major candidates from the beginning – and when the white guy is more radical then the black guy the chances of the latter drastically improve.

Edwards' role in this election was essential. White voters in South Carolina had a relatively even split between the three candidates showcasing the vital role of Edwards as one way to shave off some of the white voters from Clinton, a service that Obama badly needed.

During this past summer, the Democratic establishment attempted to support Clinton because they deemed her the "inevitable" nominee. Since the summer, though, many Democrats have reassessed their position on the presidential race.

John F. Kennedy's daughter, Caroline Kennedy and Senator Edward M. Kennedy hold a lot of weight with the Democratic Party, but their endorsements of Obama may have come too late. Clinton has been established.

The Clinton name has been around for so long that even with Obama's undeniable charisma, the American electorate wants someone safe after the Bush years.

Now that Edwards is no longer in the race, whites who were upset about the economy and are skeptical of Obama's viability now only have one place to go: the Clinton camp.

Racism has played a role in this race and that fact can not be overlooked. Billary's campaign has realized this and gone so far as to compare Obama's campaign to that of Jesse Jackson's – one of the more obvious attempts by the Clintons to grasp the insecurities of a white electorate hesitant to cast their vote for an African-American.

Obama is a different kind of candidate however, because he represents a shift in the thinking of Americans beyond what is normally expected for an election cycle. He is the face of a progressive movement, of change and of togetherness. Those qualities in a candidate may be what one wing of the Democratic Party is looking for, but at the same time that kind of fundamental change is apt to scare its own large group.

Edwards leaving the race provides Clinton with the votes of many whites who may not particularly care for the Clinton camp but are scared of the kind of ideological change on which Obama has based his campaign. Edwards' biggest impact on the race for the Democratic ticket might prove to be leaving at such an important crossroads.

This election may just be decided on Feb. 5 after all.

Michael Phillis is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mphillis@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Earn your degree at the BreUniversity

Comedian Breuer comes to the Mullins Center tonight

BY RYAN MCASKILL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Tonight Jim Breuer brings the BreUniversity Tour: An education on LIFE! to the Mullins Center at 8 p.m.

In a phone interview Breuer spoke about his beginnings, satellite radio, the current tour and why he was counting down the days to the University of Massachusetts show from the start.

RYAN MCASKILL: You have been a stand-up for a long time. How did you start?

JIM BREUER: An amateur night. That was the first stand-up. But I was cocky and I never really speared the stage. Once I did it I never turned back. I was right out of high school. By the time I moved to Florida I can honestly say I played everything and anything with the exception of strip clubs. Local clubs, talent shows, tiki bars, beaches, street performances. I just played any place that would give me time.

RM: Did you know comedy was something you always wanted to do? How exactly did doing stand-up start?

JB: Sixth grade I was in Ohio and my sister was playing a Steve Martin record. And I remember thinking it was the funniest thing in the world. I had never heard such a thing as comedy on a record. I learned the whole thing by heart. [Steve Martin] was the beginning, then I saw Richard Pryor and I saw George Carlin and HBO and it never ended past there.

RM: So comedy was something you knew early on you wanted to do?

JB: Without a doubt. I knew by sixth grade that performing and being funny performing [was for me], I didn't know if I was going to be wearing leather pants with a kangaroo [or] a rock star. I knew it was going to be funny and entertaining. Plus, I was fat and had to fend people off.

RM: So if you weren't doing comedy do you have any idea what you might be doing?

JB: I'd be a teacher somehow.

RM: Any subject in particular?

JB: Probably more of the social worker line. I can say that now but who knows? I might [have been] a waiter forever.

RM: With your work on "Saturday Night Live" who do you get asked to do more: Goat Boy or Joe Pesci?

JB: Oh, Goat Boy ... well ... yes, Goat Boy, definitely Goat Boy. Because a lot of people are still not sure if that's me doing the Joe Pesci. I had the fake nose and the hair and the eyes. Goat Boy they know right away. Goat Boy for some reason is a monster. He has his own action figure.

RM: Which of those two did you like to do more?

JB: I'm gonna' go with the Pesci

RM: Why?

JB: Pesci was easier. Goat Boy was all timing with that goat noise. You can't write it. It's not "All right, Jim says 'My next guest bah, bah, bah, is going to be, bah.' I just had to wing it."

RM: You're doing a radio show on Sirius Satellite Radio. How did that thing start?

JB: It started when I was on "Saturday Night Live." My favorite part of "Saturday Night Live" was going home and talking with friends. That was my plug into real life. We would hang out and just belly-laugh for hours. We always thought, "I wonder if people would be interested in listening to us right now." I would have never imagined 10 years later that would become one of the most popular shows on Sirius.

RM: Did you go to Sirius or did they come to you?

JB: I first went to Sirius and XM. I knew this was a revolution in radio and I knew it was going to be a huge opportunity for me because regular radio doesn't allow you to go into areas like God or deep theories on anything. It's immediately ridiculed. It's so ridiculous and phony and that world is going to come to an end.

RM: You said you knew satellite radio was going to be big. You also have a YouTube channel, your Web site is very interactive; you seem to be embracing technology and what it has to offer.

JB: I learned so much about that world and I have to thank Dane Cook for that. The industry couldn't stand him and he was like, "I don't need the industry; I have MySpace," and that's what I said. You know that everything I want to do [the industry] wants to mangle it, own it and legally steal it. With this forum I can take my time, I can make it exactly the way I want it.

I definitely have this vision of the future and [satellite] is where it's at. I was there before it started booming. Its like finding real estate before the big boom comes.

RM: The current tour is called the BreUniversity Tour: An education on LIFE! How did this tour come about? Had you done a college tour before and wanted to do again or is this a first for you?

JB: I've done college tours but it hasn't been for at least five, six years. I'll do one college here one college there. I haven't done any tour in at least five years.

RM: So why did you want to do a tour now?

JB: I'm on a mission in life man, I really am. I have a drive to get messages out there. In the past I was doing it just to collect a paycheck. it was like "Lets throw a little 'goat' at them, little 'Halfbaked' get paid and go on vacation." You can only live that way for so long until you get disappointed in yourself. I'm going say this is going be a powerful special when it's all done.

RM: What can college students that come out expect to learn about life from you?

JB: I'm gonna' teach the basics about how to survive when you get out of college without the education. Because, frankly, it's like, "OK, now go out and be educated. Ok now what?" I'm gonna' say that 95 percent of people don't enjoy what their doing and [are] bankrupt. It's a rock star syndrome, "Hey man, every rose has its thorn," and no one cares. There's 50 million others, get in line.

RM: So this is all new material geared at college students?

JB: It's geared for everyone really, but I think college will listen more. I'll be honest; I'm on such a natural high right now. I've done three shows to three standing ovations. The thing that I'm blown away by the most is that I'm performing at universities and talking about being a son, a father and a husband and getting standing ovations.

RM: What made you want to do this tour?

JB: I have a lot of family in the college world. I would talk to them and they really encouraged me to do this. They were like, "Wow that stuff's powerful and funny. You need to get that stuff out there. Colleges need to hear it. Unless they were just tying to get rid of me.

RM: And you're documenting the tour.

JB: Everything man, everything. From waking up in the morning to the performances to doing radio interviews to right now.

RM: Are you looking forward to the UMass show?

JB: I'm all hopped up for UMass, I'm already counting down the days 'til that show.

RM: What about UMass has made this particular show big for you?

JB: I've played UMass before and it's always a huge turnout. There are a lot of other things they could be out doing. I just know the size of the crowd and UMass is going to be hot. Plus, I can relate to everyone in Massachusetts, I'm a Long Island boy. We all share one thing in common: We hate the Yankees.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil@student.umass.edu

COURTESY KEITH MAJOR

Comedian Jim Breuer is on a mission to spread his message to as many college students as are willing to listen. Tonight he brings the BreUniversity Tour: An education on LIFE! to the Mullins Center.

JIM BREUER
MULLINS CENTER
TONIGHT
8 P.M.
$11 STUDENT
$21 PUBLIC

Americana invades Calvin

BY JOE STAHL
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Born in Virginia and raised in Washington, Neko Case is a singer-songwriter most notorious for a solo career and her vocal contributions to the indie-pop sensation, The New Pornographers.

Neko Case is a dying breed in today's country music scene and a hard act to catch live. With a new solo record in the making, she will make only six stops on her winter tour. One of the stops happens to be at Northampton's Calvin Theatre Feb. 2 with opening act Eric Bachmann.

Neko Case may not sell as many records as successors Martina McBride or Faith Hill, but the fiery redhead can blow any Country Music Channel hotshot out of the water with unbreakable vocals sure to send shivers up your spine. While attending college in Vancouver, British Columbia, Case got her start in a few local bands, ultimately landing her a spot in The New Pornographers.

From then on, she was flooded with music offers, resulting in five charming solo LPs. Her latest work, the 2006 "Fox Confessor Brings the Flood" released on indie label Anti, is hands-down her greatest album yet. Case stopped both stiff critics and her dearest fans in their tracks.

Case has a polished folksy and alternative country sound that strays from being overproduced. She manages to remain honest to her homegrown style of music, which serves as her most endearing attribute. Her timeless voice has grabbed the attention of lucrative labels, but Case prefers to take the indie route, working with labels that are generous enough to grant her artistic freedom. Other artists on Anti sounding like Case are Michael Franti and Tom Waits.

In a nutshell, Neko Case has the plaintive voice of 50s country-star Loretta Lynn, the ability to tell a story like Tori Amos, the despair of Jenny Lewis and the sexiness of Nicole Kidman.

Think of her music as a mix of American bluegrass with a twist of 60s throw-back pop. Case comes off very "coalminer's daughter" through her expressive twang and regretful and wishful lyricism. Her style has proven successful whether playing with the power-pop clan The New Pornographers, or folksy and punk groups from her Canadian past. Her ability to perform in different styles qualifies her to be a part of almost anything that comes her way.

Case recently released a live show recording from Austin, Texas, covering a large span of her solo work. The 14-track recording will gives a good idea of how she sounds in front of a crowd. The recording is sold through iTunes and other major digital music distributors.

A new album is currently in the works and Case plans on experimenting with new material and the assistance of a full band. Don't be alarmed, however – her voice usually shines as the centerpiece at live shows. Calvin Theatre will be an excellent venue to showcase her strong and poignant vocals due to the crisp acoustics and dark atmosphere of the music hall.

Opening up for the headliner tomorrow is Eric Bachmann. Once a member of the band Crooked Fingers, Bachmann is a cross between Bruce Springsteen and M. Ward, as well as a a protégé of indie god Conor Oberst. Although he is an artist on Saddle Creek Records, he does not come from the plains of Nebraska, but from North Carolina. He creates a sedated tone and holds a demeanor to match Sam Beam, the frontman of Iron & Wine. Before releasing his newest album entitled, "To The Races," Bachmann laid down the entire soundtrack for the movie "Ball of Wax." Prior to his solo albums, Bachmann's work can be traced in the folk band, Archers of Loaf, the Saddle Creek ladies of Azure Ray and others.

As Case fortifies her talent time after time, her fanbase continues to expand. Despite her growing popularity, she continues to perform mainly in small and intimate music clubs and theatres such as the Calvin. Tickets for tomorrow's show are still being sold and can be purchased online at nbotickets.com.

Joe Stahl can be reached at jstahl@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY ANTI RECORDS

Indie singer-songwriter Neko Case brings her unique style to Northampton this weekend. Her stop at the Calvin Theater is one of only six on her current nation-wide tour.

NEKO CASE
CALVIN THEATER
FEBRUARY 2
$20–30

Sibling relationship forefront in new film

Linney eyes the Oscar gold

BY KEVIN KOCZWARA
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Laura Linney ("The Squid and the Whale," "Mystic River," "Kinsey") is nominated for her third Oscar this year for her outstanding performance as Wendy Savage in Tamar Jenkins's new coming of age movie "The Savages."

Linney shines in the role as a neurotic, lost, and confused person with a false sense of ambition. She has to compete on screen with Phillip Seymour Hoffman ("Capote," "Almost Famous," "Magnolia," "Punch-Drunk Love") who is a masterful actor and one who steals the screen in any number of films. Linney holds her own on the screen with Hoffman, however, and at times outshines the more widely-recognized actor.

Jenkins's film revolves around Linney's character, Wendy Savage, and her meaningless life where she has a nightly fling with a married neighbor. She takes up temporary jobs and constructs grants for the plays she hopes to write. Her ambition outweighs her reality. She is middle-aged and confused about her path in life. She even applies to receive money from FEMA after the 9/11 attacks on the World Trade Center in New York because of the stress it had caused her.

The movie is about the father of Jon (Hoffman) and Wendy, Lenny Savage played by Phillip Bosco ("Deconstructing Harry," "Hitch"), who suffers from dementia. Lenny's girlfriend and sugar momma' dies, leaving him without a home or money. Lenny is the father who forgot his children and whose children forget and leave him behind. Jon and Wendy are then forced to take care of him despite having not seen or heard from him in many years

Wendy and Jon travel to Arizona to pick up their father who is suffering immensely with his dementia and unable to communicate. Bosco is a strong figure on the screen. He continually shows his age and mental condition with great accuracy and strength.

Lenny's children constantly bicker about what to do about their father, deciding whether to place him in an eldery home or an assisted-living complex. Both Jon and Wendy seem to agree that it is out of the question that their own father lives with either one of them.

Jon Savage wants to put his father into the elderly home and arranges for one by his house in Buffalo where he teaches college drama classes. Jon is the successful child, researching the complex nature of Brecht's plays. His girlfriend is a Polish immigrant whose green card has expired. Jon loves her but refuses to marry her, despite her pending deportation. Jon is a physical and mental wreck who tries to receive just as many grants as his sister but fails equally as miserably as she does. He is a bomb waiting to explode on the screen and often fulfills this prophecy.

The movie revolves around the brother and sister pair as they deal with the regrets they have about their father and their own lives. Each is seeking a new path. While Wendy is struggling to define love and find her way, she scrapes food and money together from the temp jobs she works.

The void left by her father wares away at her as she repeatedly tries to understand why he has to live in a hospital-like building with a roommate and a curtain providing privacy. She feels the immense guilt of the placement of her father bearing down. She receives her first and only condolence from a worker in the elderly-home, her father's caregiver, Jimmy (played by Gbenga Akinnagbe,) who encourages her to continue with her play-writing career.

The movie is a slow-paced drama with a humorous touch. Chuckles are the result of the absurd nature of the characters to a viewer, when in fact they deal with everyday problems and are any number of people in society.

Wendy stretches and follows an exercise workout by tape in front of the TV, while Jon continually delays his work on Brecht. Both strive to be bigger and happier but are continually brought down by one another and themselves. They both explode and implode more than once on their peers and their each other, usually in front of their father, who sits and listens to them talk about him and what to do with him. Their father sits nearby listening to the grievances and mistakes each child has made.

Jenkins script is heartfelt, but her directing sometimes feels disconnected. Some scenes need to be drawn out more while others need to be cut or shortened. At times, the emotion is lost or never there at all. The acting is superb, however, and Linney may finally get her due for her deserved Oscar after being nominated twice previously.

Kevin Koczwara can be reached at kkoczwar@student.umass.edu

COURTESY KEITH MAJOR

Philip Seymour Hoffman and Laura Linney star as siblings attempting to care for their ailing father while sorting out their own personal turmoil in the new movie "Savages."

Hoffman and Linney deliver strong acting performances, though the film's direction falls short at times.

THE SAVAGES
STARRING:
LAURA LINNEY AND PHILIP
SEYMOUR
HOFFMAN
B

Writers strike lingers on

BY ANDREA MURRAY
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Heading into week 13 of the Writer's Guild of America strike against the Alliance of Motion Picture and Television Producers, the first question on one's mind is probably this: When is a new episode of "The Office" coming on?

And rightfully so – viewers have been waiting weeks to see what becomes of the budding romance between Jim and Pam while they battle the dark Sith Lord known as Dwight K. Schrute. Let's be reasonable, though, something more important is going on, right? Oh, yes, the WGA is a union of real people with real demands that need to be negotiated. So you've heard about the strike, but do you really know what the strike is about, what the demands are?

Let's first take a look back at the 1988 WGA strike. The 1988 strike began on March 7 and ended 22 weeks and six days later on August 8 – the longest writer's strike in history. The strike cost the American Entertainment industry an estimated $500 million dollars at the time. Even though it was the longest in history, its effects were not as harsh as the current strike due to timing.

They had similar demands, such as a bigger share of new technologies profits like today's writers. The AMPTP demanded that the WGA accept a sliding fee scale for domestic hour-long syndicated re-runs, while the WGA demanded a bigger slice of the foreign-sales pie. This strike ended in negotiation on both sides when the demands were fulfilled.

The current 2007-2008 WGA strike has come during prime television production season. The new demands include an increase in payment for writers' recycled or original work distributed on new media at an across-the-board rate of 2.5 percent of revenue as opposed to the current varying rates that are dependent on usage.

Where does this leave the current state of network TV? It's caught right smack in that dreadful place known as limbo. Shows like the "The Office" and "Grey's Anatomy" have shut down production in the middle of their current seasons. The last strike had a significant impact on the size of TV audiences. This could create a potential problem for new shows like "Pushing Daisies" and "Cashmere Mafia," which have ceased production mid-season as they are just beginning to build their audiences.

It is said that the 1988 WGA strike may have been in part responsible for the cancellation of shows like "Moonlighting" and "Kate and Allie."

The strike also affects support staff jobs in film and TV. Some have already been laid off, and there is potential for more dismissals as the strike continues.

David Letterman's production company, Worldwide Pants, struck an interim deal on December 28, 2007 and went back into production, saving the jobs of all writers and support staff. Other late night TV shows such as "Late Night with Conan O'Brien" and "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno" produced by their respective networks cannot strike deals with the WGA, and went back into production without their writers.

On January 7, 2008, Comedy Central shows "The Colbert Report" and "The Daily Show with Jon Stewart" went back into production without writers as well. It was initially rumored that Stewart's production company had struck a deal to pay writers out of pocket, but a spokesperson for Stewart has denied this on several occasions.

As an act of solidarity, both shows have tweaked their titles for the time being. "The Daily Show with Jon Stewart" has become "A Daily Show with Jon Stewart" while the Ts in "The Colbert Report" – which are usually silent – have been pronounced.

Don't lose hope, however. There could be an end in sight. It was announced Jan. 25, 2008, that the WGA has made an interim agreement with "Lions Gate" and "Marvel Studio." Many critics are saying they believe the strike could be over within two weeks. Similar upbeat news in early December ended with both the WGA and AMPTP ceasing negotiations all together.

It is believed that whenever the strike ends it could still take anywhere two to six weeks for halted shows to air their first post-strike episodes. The longer the strike goes on, the more unlikely it is that many TV shows will continue production at all this season. If the strike lasts another 60 to 90 days, it will definitely affect next fall's TV lineup and pilot productions.

Until your favorite show comes back on there are plenty of ways to pass the time. For instance, use the Internet to catch old episodes that you've missed. You could read a book – or become a "COPS" fanatic.

Andrea Murray can be reached at akmurray@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY REED SAXON

As the Writers Guild of America enters its third month on strike, it is still unclear as to when negotiations may cease and an agreement will be made between studio executives and union members.

UM looks to rediscover form

HOCKEY from page 12

Defenseman Mike Kostka and Martin Nolet scored nearly identical goals to take a 2-1 lead in the first.

Vermont tied it in the second and neither team could close in on a win, but Cahoon and his players took a lot of positives from the game, particularly the improvement on the power play.

"I know we played better [on Saturday]," Cahoon said. "We have game objectives and it's not often that we hit 11 of our 14 objectives at home and not win. It was just a simple matter of finishing a few plays that was the difference between winning and not winning."

UMass went 2-for-4 on the power play Saturday after going 0-for-4 in a nine-goal game the previous night. The team's recent slide effectively began when the Minutemen failed to capitalize on a third period 5-on-3 situation at home against New Hampshire.

UMass went ahead 2-0 early in the game but fell 3-2 despite having ample chances to even the score.

The two power-play goals in their most recent game may have marked the end to the Minutemen's losing streak, but a very physical Huskies team stands in their way.

"They play a very physical style," Cahoon said. "They're committed to playing really hard. They sprint everywhere and battle for every puck."

The size of the rink seems to always play a role in Hockey East games, especially for a team like UMass, which plays on one of the largest sheets in the conference at the Mullins Center (200 by 95 feet).

The ancient Matthews Arena, which holds about 5,900 spectators, at 200 by 90 feet, is not as small as Merrimack's Volpe Athletic Center (200 by 85), but the atmosphere is certainly a different one.

The bleachers sit right on top of the ice, and the arena is very loud for such a small space, especially compared to the cavernous Mullins Center.

UMass plays two more games against Northeastern, a home-and-home series two weeks from now on Feb. 15 and 16.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

PETER SAMUELS/COLLEGIAN

Senior captain and defenseman Mike Kostka has scored five goals this season. He has also recorded nine assists for a total of 14 points.

Hawks stand in way of .500 A-10 mark

W. BASKETBALL from page 12

In addition to Gomez, St. Joe's has three other effective perimeter shooters. Jenna Loschiavo has hit a team-high 39 threes and has also attempted over five per game (108 total). Amy Gillespie has hit 29 and Amy Wold has converted 26.

The latter is shooting 30.5 percent this year, which doesn't rank up with her other teammates, but Ducko mentioned her in particular, mainly because she was 5-of-6 from deep in the Temple loss.

The Minutewomen's best counter from beyond the arc is junior Stefanie Gerardot. She began the season coming off the bench but is now starting. She has converted on 22 shots from the outside this year, and while seniors Kate Mills and Pam Rosanio shoot a higher percentage from outside, neither of them shoots the three as often as Gerardot.

Starting sophomore point guard Kim Benton gives the backcourt another 3-point shooter but she's yet to find her rhythm this year, shooting 25.9 percent from behind the 3-point line.

The Hawks also have the ability to get the ball inside. Center Sarah Acker has only been with St. Joe's for this year, but the freshman has immediately given them an inside presence. She leads the team in per-game averages in points (11.9), rebounds (7.5) and blocks (1.5).

"She has a really strong, dominant left hand, so we really got to force her right and make her be uncomfortable," Ducko said. "Katie, [senior] Whitney McDonald and [freshman] Jeya Wright should be more mobile than she is, more athletic than she is, but she's very strong inside."

As always, Mills will be the focal point of the UMass offense. The senior forward leads the team in points (17.4) and rebounds (7.1). Ducko hopes the Minutewomen pound the ball into the low post to Mills, as well as limit the Hawks to one chance on offense.

St. Joe's outrebounded Temple by 10, and UMass often allows opponents to hurt them on the offensive glass. Ducko wasn't pleased with her team's performance in Wednesday's victory over Fordham, and this will be a key to victory for her team tonight.

Rosanio and Wright rank second and third in rebounding, respectively, and will be relied upon to help on the boards.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu

SLU hosts Lowe, Minutemen

M. BASKETBALL from page 12

by legendary coach Rick Majerus, who is in his first year with the program. In his 17 years as a head coach, he has not suffered one losing season.

Saint Louis has received considerable attention for the first time in years, but for the wrong reasons. They infamously lost to conference foe George Washington Jan. 10, scoring an Division I record-low for points in a game since the shot clock was instituted in college basketball for the 1985-86 season.

The Billikens shot 14.6 percent from the field (7-of-48), hit one of their 19 shots from the perimeter and scored seven points in the first half. SLU has scored 40 or fewer points in a game four times this season. It scored 39 in a loss to Boston College, a team the Minutemen defeated earlier in the season.

Saint Louis' play has improved lately, as it beat La Salle, a good Rhode Island team and came close to both Temple and Dayton – losing to each team in overtime. But the Billikens stumbled again in their last game, losing to Dayton for the second time, scoring just 36 points in the process.

But most of the attention for SLU has been off the court – focused on coach Majerus for his off-the-court views.

On the court, the Billikens are a tough team to figure out. They lead the 14 teams in the Atlantic 10 in scoring defense (59 points allowed per game), but rank last in steals (3.7 per game), blocked shots (2.5 per game) and rank eighth in opponents field goal percentage (42.4).

Offensively they average a conference-low 57.6 points per game; almost five full points fewer than Charlotte, which ranks in 13th. Their 29.3 rebounds per game also rank last in the conference, but the points scored and rebound totals are a bit skewed because possessions are at a premium when SLU plays.

Saint Louis features a rather small lineup, playing mostly three guards. It has justone center listed on the roster, Bryce Husak, but he doesn't start and averages under 20 minutes per game.

SLU has two players averaging over double figures, junior guards Jommie Liddell III (11.9) and Kevin Lisch (13.4). The third guard in the regular starting lineup, Dwayne Polk, averages just 2.4 points per game and is shooting 29.1 percent from the field and 19.2 from the perimeter.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

Senior forward Gary Forbes leads the Minutemen in scoring this season, averaging 20.4 points per game. He led UMass with a game-high 23 points against Duquesne Wednesday night in a 94-80 victory.

WANTED

GRAPHICS STAFFERS

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

WE ARE SEARCHING FOR HARD-WORKING, MOTIVATED UNDERGRADS TO FILL GRAPHIC STAFF POSITIONS.

VISIT THE COLLEGIAN AT THE BOTTOM OF THE OF THE CAMPUS CENTER

Does Your Group Need Money?

The UMass Amherst Alumni Association helps RSOs and other student organizations fund projects that will improve and enhance student life.

Awards are limited to $2,000 per applicant group per academic year.

Visit UMassAlumni.com for an application and grant guidelines today or call the Alumni Association at 545-2317.

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Deadline for the next grant review is Tuesday, February 5!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian. Throwing down daily since 1967

A-10 tune up for UM

Runners to use URI Invitational to prep

BY ADAM MILLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts track and field teams view this weekend as an opportunity to figure out how they will approach the Atlantic 10 Championships scheduled for Feb. 16.

This weekend's Rhode Island Invitational will offer plenty of competition and is the same track UMass will run on for the championship.

The Minutemen come off a third-place finish at the Reebok Invitational Jan. 25. The sophomores gave UMass a decisive edge over many of the teams with their performance. Tyler Cotto had a second-place finish in the 55-meter hurdles with a time of seven minutes, 73 seconds while Jonathan Pierce won first in the 5,000 meter run with a time of 15:09:66.

Minutemen coach Ken O'Brien said this weekend will be a chance to experiment with athletes in different events.

After running one of the longer events, Pierce will move to the mile event in order to keep his legs fresh.

O'Brien alternating runners between long and short events is just one way he has dealt with his team's inexperience. He acknowledged he likes the set of talent he has available, but knows there will be challenges starting with the A-10 championships.

"They lack experience," O'Brien said. "Each meet they go to will be the first time at that level."

However, Cotto will gain valuable experience this week going against two of the best runners in the A-10.

On the women's side, UMass took fifth place in the Invitational. Redshirt senior Danielle Bolt took first place in the 55-meter dash with a time of 7.16 seconds, the third-fastest time at UMass in school history.

The Minutewomen's second visit to URI will not be anything like the first time when they competed in Rhode Island for the Jan. 11 New Year Classic. If anything, their meet this weekend should be more representative of what they will face at the A-10 Championships.

"The last time we were at URI, it was almost like an ice-breaker," said UMass women's coach Julie LaFreniere. "It was an open meet so it wasn't very competitive."

UMass will face the likes of URI, UNH, and Quinnipiac this weekend. The team prepared itself with a difficult workout Tuesday night.

"I'm hoping their legs will feel a little better," LaFreniere said.

North Kingston will also be a physical test for UMass in preparation for two weeks ahead. The Minutewomen will run in more events as part of the tournament, which explains why senior Christina DeRosa, who normally does not run more than a 5K, will participate in the mile race this weekend.

"DeRosa is a little out of her element when she runs the mile," LaFreniere said. "She's going to have to really work hard."

But even runners not participating in the A-10 have reason to push themselves this weekend. LaFreniere expects many of the freshmen to reach personal records as the team makes a last assessment before the championship.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill0@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

UMass women's track and field coach Julie LaFreniere leads her team into the URI Invitational Saturday in North Kingston, R.I. This meet marks the second time the women have competed in Rhode Island this year.

Fox sets high expectations for skiers

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The weather will be crisp and the slopes will be frozen this weekend when the Massachusetts ski team travels to New Hampshire to compete in the MIT Carnival.

The first event takes place tomorrow at Pat's Peak in Henniker, N.H., and features a regular slalom race. Then, on Super Sunday, the Minutemen and Minutewomen wake up early and head to Lincoln, N.H., to race in the giant slalom.

UMass is coming off an up-and-down campaign last week in the Plymouth State Carnival. While each team had some success, such as Jason Small's first-place finish in the giant slalom and Emily Shiletto's back-to-back top-10, the weekend was marred by a few disqualifications.

UMass coach Skip Fox expects the team will have a much better showing this weekend.

"We had a good week of training, and the kids are looking really sharp," said Fox. "All we need is a couple seconds here and there."

The primary competition at this weekend's carnival will be Colby-Sawyer College. Fox noted that they have a very deep and talented group of skiers, and a lot of athletes who can score points. Plymouth State University, especially the men's team, is one of the toughest groups to face in the league. However, he feels his squad can match up with any other team in the conference.

"I really do feel, that if our guys ski up to our potential, we can take first place on any given day," Fox said.

With only four more events left in the regular season, Fox said there is a sense of urgency among his athletes. They will need to be as sharp as possible for the ESIA Regional Championships in two weeks.

The Minutemen will rely on their most consistent skiers to score points. Small has been a top skier all season long and will be looking for another first-place finish to match last week's showing. Sophomores Andrew Hawes and Ian Hohmeister posted top-10 finishes in the giant slalom last week, and the Minutemen need them to perform at that same level this weekend.

"If those guys perform like I know they can, I think we can take first in one of these races," Fox said.

As for the Minutewomen, senior standout Eliza Hawkins has been consistent, so she will be counted on to come through with a strong finish this weekend.

The performance of first-year skier Jaime Taloumis has been a pleasant surprise and key addition to the Minutewomen. Taloumis, whom Fox referred to as the team's star freshman, has posted back-to-back fourth-place finishes in the giant slalom and added a seventh-place finish in the regular slalom. UMass hopes she can continue her strong start.

Fox also mentioned Shilleto and Ashley Hawes as two skiers he was looking for to give a solid performance. He was quick to note the players he mentioned were not the only ones who must do well; a victory will require a team effort.

When asked whether he thought his team would do better in the giant slalom or the regular slalom, Fox was noncommittal.

"I think we are equal in both events, we have some ladies and some gentlemen who are better in one event than the other, but I don't think we have a preference, we'll take either one," Fox said.

Fox would not offer up a specific prediction, but sounded pretty optimistic.

"I'm looking for a nice weekend, I just got a good feeling about it," he said.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

Men's swim team fighting for spots from the work they have put in all season, which includes the double practices they had five days a week during January.

SWIMMING from page 12

"[The Rams are] better than they were last year, but I think we are too," Newcomb said. "It should be very difficult for us to win this meet, but that happened last year and we beat them in the A-10s."

Newcomb is expecting the divers to do very well in Saturday's meet.

As the Minutemen and Minutewomen use the meet to prepare for the A-10 Championships, they will also honor the seniors on their respective teams.

The senior class is known as a very vocal, boisterous group that led the team and always had a good time.

"These are the people that put in a lot of time into this program. They have been the leaders of the team," Newcomb said.

The meet will start out with the seniors being honored by the coaches "to make them feel special," according to Yarworth. "[I'll] miss each one of them as individuals. After four years you really get to know them, the athlete is one thing, but you really miss the person."

The seniors have mixed emotions about this being their last home meet. They are sad, but they have been doing this for so long that they are getting ready to move on. They have given everything that has been asked of them all season, according to Newcomb.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu

PLAY IT SAFE
During the 2008 NFL Playoffs
vs.
SUPER BOWL XLII

Alcohol violations and disorderly conduct can have SERIOUS consequences, such as:
- Arrest & conviction
- Major legal expenses
- A lasting criminal record
- Loss of your driver's license
- Suspension or expulsion form the University
- Large costs for civil penalties (i.e. damages)

Violations that can really kill your buzz include:
- Driving under the influence
- Rioting and inciting to riot
- Assault and battery of a police officer
- Disturbing the peace and vandalism
- Use of false identification
- Under age drinking and possession of alcohol and MORE...

READ THE CODE OF STUDENT CONDUCT

The UMass Football team was not the only loser in the 2006 NCAA Division 1AA championship:
- Over 55 UMass students were cited
- Over 5 UMass students were expelled
- Over 28 UMass students were suspended
- Over 22 UMass students received deferred suspensions

Sponsored by the Student Government Association & Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center
413-545-1995
This poster does not constitute legal advice. UMass Amherst students may contact the SLSO to arrange an appointment for legal advice
University of Massachusetts Amherst

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
Serving others since 1969 -- and STILL making a difference!
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Spring Semester 2008 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Room 101 • Feb. 4 (Mon) • Feb. 5 (Tues) • Feb. 6 (Wed)
• Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Feb. 7th in Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pick up the notification letter!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

COMEDY LEGEND
Great Comedy without the Mess! "No Sledge Show"
Thursday March 27th 8pm
Slaughter
On Sale Now!
Student Discount
Bowker Auditorium
Tickets available at the Fine Arts Center box office.
To charge by phone call 413-545-2511 or 800-999-UMASS.
For tickets online go to www.fineartscenter.com.
Flash Photography Allowed. May contain Adult Content

amherst cinema
Fri. Feb. 1 - Thu. Feb. 7
The SAVAGES 2:00 4:30 7:00 9:30
The KiteRunner 1:30 7:15
JUNO 1:45 4:00 6:45 9:00
COUNTER CLOCKWISE 4:15 9:45
Showing in Amherst (413) 253-2547 www.amherstcinema.org

PLEASANT STREET THEATER
There Will Be Blood Daily 2:45 6:00 9:15 PLUS 10:00 am Wed. 2/6
THE DIVING BELL AND THE BUTTERFLY Daily 2:00 4:30 7:00 9:30 PLUS 10:15 am Wed. 2/6
57 Pleasant St. Northampton, MA 01060 www.pleasantstheater.org (413) 584-5848

Arithmetical Crack.

	8			4		9
7			1			3
	3					1	5	8
4				1	3		8
				8
	6		7	2				4
8	4	7					2
		9			2			6
	2		5				7

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 A bit eccentric
6 Arp's art movement
10 Volcanic discharge
14 Chilean peanut Claudio
15 Farm team
16 Slate firmly
17 Mel of cartoon voices
18 Gale
20 Charlie Chaplin's brother
21 Rub the wrong way
23 Yours, long ago
24 High regard
26 Rooted out
27 Lose hope
29 Misfortune
30 Pointing: as a gun
31 3-D displays
35 Present Persia
37 Pursue relentlessly
39 Grow less
40 Rational
42 Gained knowledge
44 Curtain holder
45 Bears
46 Loud uproar
50 Northern U.S. neighbor
51 Put on again
52 Former Vegas casino
53 Bivouac bed
56 All of us
58 Yep
60 High point
61 Continental prefix
62 Up the ante
63 D'Urbervilles girl
64 Narrow valley
65 City on the Ruhr

DOWN
1 Touches lightly
2 Paris airport
3 Retailer
4 Summer shade
5 Mexican peninsula
6 Depressant
7 Self-evident truth
8 Disavow
9 "War Peace"
10 Woodworker's machine
11 Duck around
12 Early Sci-Fi writer
13 Packing heat
19 Point the way
22 Reside beside
25 Prouties
26 Tree-covered area
27 Speaker's platform
28 Dublin's land
29 Triumph
31 Expected
32 Hugo or Nebula
33 Some Mexican musicians
34 ... of Cleves
35 Sitcom stages
38 Prehistoric
41 Twisted humor
43 Sign of a correction
45 Bryce or Kings e.g.
46 Crawled
47 Earthen dike
48 Locations
49 Student scores
50 Key military group
52 Spirit
54 River into the Wash
55 Next
57 Besmirch
59 Owns

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

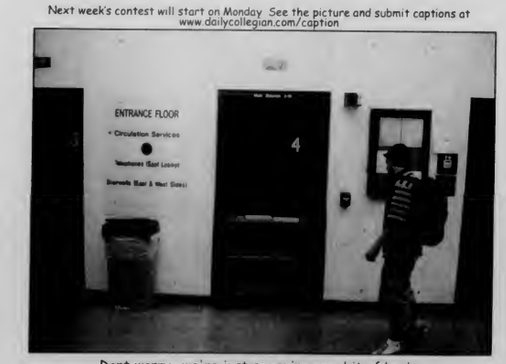
$ CASH FOR YOUR CLOTHES $
how does it work?
If you bring us your awesome clothes we sell them... you make money!
40% to be exact
it's so easy!
No appointment necessary
Buy & Sell at the area's BIGGEST & BEST consignment store!
Drop & Shop Rewards
Urban Exchange
233 Main Street Northampton MA
413-585-8729
(walking distance from Smith College)

QUOTE OF THE DAY

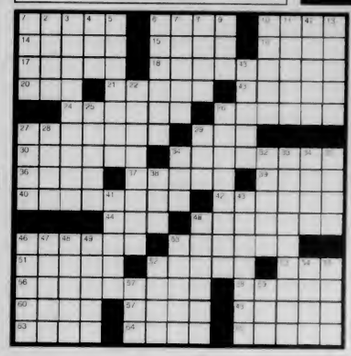
"Who was the first guy that looked at a cow and said, 'I think that I'll drink whatever comes out of those things when I squeeze them?'"

– Calvin and Hobbes

RETRO GEEK BY STEVE DICKINSON AND TODD CLARK



PAUL BY BILLY O'KEEFE



CAPTION CONTEST

Winning caption submitted by: Jessica Manches

Next week's contest will start on Monday. See the picture and submit captions at www.dailycollegian.com/caption

Dont worry...we're just sweeping up a bit of brain off the crashed elevator floor...open next week!

Submit your comics!
comics@dailycollegian.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Set up three chairs, one table and a sign saying "Invisibility Club" on the Campus Center concourse...then walk away.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
How many babies can you make this weekend?

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Speak softly and carry a big stick of spearmint gum to hide your horrendous halitosis.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Add a saucy twist to a relaxing midday teaparty by giving it a strip club theme. Pinkies and G-strings up!

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Brave the icy chill of Amherst in search of the elusive quadruple breasted UMass snow leopard.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Right now it is very important that you disregard the lack of a meaningful message in this horoscope and simple celebrate the fact that it's four lines long.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Help pisces find out the answer to their astrological query.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
People think you're stupid for complaining about how much your shoes hurt instead of simply taking them off.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You have the boyish good looks and prepubescent voice of Aladdin. Try wearing a purple vest with no shirt underneath it.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Your roommate has a tendency to burst into the room unexpectedly so choose your happy alone time wisely.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
It takes far more energy to hate someone than to blatantly ignore them while you joyfully go about your day.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Despite what you may believe, oh self ordained Parking Ticket Fairy, removing tickets from people's cars does not actually help them.

NOTHING SAYS COMICS LIKE POLKA DOTS!
(Note: Polka dots do not actually speak, it's sort of a metaphor. I hope you don't mind.)
comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT. FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING June and September. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Ranch Jobs
The C Lazy U Guest Ranch in the Colorado Rocky Mountains has positions available for students who are available until mid-August. Applications on the website - www.clazyu.com or call Phil 970-887-3344

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today toll free at 1-888-684-2267 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

EMPLOYMENT

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab.linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

TRAVEL

Spring Break from $199 Land price starting from $199 for 7 days. We also have an all inclusive hotel start from $799 per person. Give us a call today it's not to late to still get away 1-800-GET-SUN-1

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Mass Attack seeks first win of '08

BRIAN THEISEN/COLLEGIAN

Senior forward assistant captain P.J. Fenton has played in all 23 games this season for the Minutemen, registering 16 points on four goals and 12 assists. UMass has two Hockey East games this weekend, one Friday against Northeastern and a day later against Maine at the Mullins Center.

Key HEA games await UM in busy weekend

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts hockey team tries again to earn its first win of 2008 tonight at Matthews Arena in Boston, where the Minutemen take on Northeastern.

The game is the first meeting between No. 15 UMass (9-8-6, 4-7-5 Hockey East) and the 13th-ranked Huskies (11-8-3, 8-7-2 HEA) this season.

Last year UMass swept the season series by a combined 9-4 score, but the 2007-08 Huskies are a much improved team.

Northeastern has nearly reached its 2006-07 wins total (13) and conference wins (nine) and held the top spot in Hockey East for several weeks earlier in the season.

Sophomore goaltender Brad Thiessen returns after a stellar freshman season and has once again been reliable in net for the Huskies.

However, it's been some increased firepower that has Northeastern relevant in postseason discussions this year.

"They have more weapons, and they've found ways to score goals with more people," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "But their goaltender Thiessen is one of the premier goaltenders in our league."

Both teams have struggled since returning from the break, especially the Minutemen, who after winning the Lightning College Hockey Classic have lost five straight and are 0-5-1 in their last six.

The Huskies are 2-4-1 since the break and have lost their last three, including a home-and-home sweep at the hands of Providence.

UMass seemed to have shaken out of its funk in its last game, a 2-2 tie at home against Vermont. After losing 5-4 to the Catamounts last Friday, the Minutemen played a much better game (though so did UVM) Saturday.

The Minutemen scored both their goals less than a minute apart during a two-man advantage.

See HOCKEY on page 9

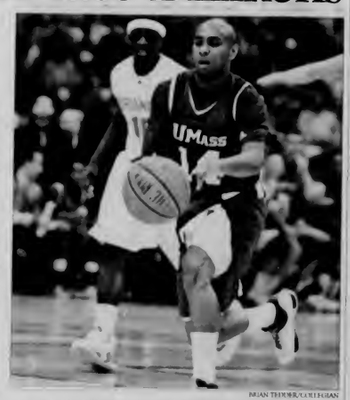
UMass travels to face Billikens

Minutemen look to sustain recent A-10 success vs. SLU

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's basketball team couldn't schedule two consecutive opponents more contrasting than Thursday's matchup against Duquesne and the upcoming road tilt against Saint Louis tomorrow afternoon.

The speed, tempo, offensive and defensive schemes (and just about everything else) will be the complete opposite of what it was Thursday – the Minutemen just hope the result stays the same.



UMass (14-6, 3-3 Atlantic 10) recorded a much-needed victory over the Dukes in Pittsburgh, Pa., Thursday night, 94-80, stopping a two-game conference losing streak and improving its postseason credentials. A loss against the struggling Billikens (11-9, 2-4 A-10) would set the Minutemen back, essentially negating the key win over Duquesne.

"It was big," said UMass forward Tony Gaffney after the victory. "We were coming off two losses and saw this as a must-win game. We were not leaving here without a win. As a team we did a lot of soul-searching. If we play as well as we can, we're one of the best teams in this league."

The Dukes play a similar style of offense as the Minutemen, constantly pushing the ball up the court and trying to run the other team out of the gym. Saint Louis will walk the ball up the court in an attempt to severely slow the game down – preferring to limit possessions and win games with its defense. How UMass handles the seismic shift in opponent strategy will likely be the determining factor.

The Billikens have played well at home this season, winning eight of their 11 games at the Scottrade Center in St. Louis, Mo. St.L. is led

See M. BASKETBALL on page 9

BRIAN THEISEN/COLLEGIAN

Point guard Chris Lowe and the Minutemen play against a Saint Louis team with a contrasting style of offense.

Dacko and Co. look to even A-10 mark

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

While the Massachusetts women's basketball team tries to win consecutive conference games to bring its Atlantic 10 record to .500, Saint Joseph's will try to reach that same conference mark by snapping its three-game losing streak Sunday afternoon at the Mullins Center.

The Hawks (10-10, 2-3 A-10) began conference play with victories over St. Bonaventure and Fordham but have dropped their last three to Xavier, Dayton and most recently, a three-point loss to Temple.

"They're hot and cold, they're much like us," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "They've got inside presence and outside presence; they play very hard. They're a very good basketball team; they're very well coached."

When UMass (10-10, 2-3 A-10) traveled to Philadelphia last year for its matchup with the Hawks, it was beat from the perimeter. Sophomore Jen Oyler, who is no longer on St. Joe's roster, converted 5-of-11 attempts from beyond the arc and finished the game with 20 points and 10 rebounds. The Hawks penetrated into the lane and kicked the ball outside. They went 10-of-24 from deep as a team, and their shooting enabled them to win the game, 72-67.

They also played a 2-3 zone defense against the Minutewomen in the second half, after playing man-to-man defense in the first. St. Joe's has played man defense for the majority of this season, but Dacko wants her team to be prepared to face either defense.

Dacko also says the Hawks move the ball well, and similar to a Phil Jackson coached team, they run the triangle offense.

St. Joe's 36.5 percent shooting from outside the 3-point line leads the A-10 this season, and defending the arc has not been one of the Minutewomen's strengths – UMass has allowed opponents to shoot 38 percent from 3-point territory this season, which ranks last in the conference.

Timisha Gomez, the Hawks second-leading scorer, is deadly from beyond the arc. The senior guard is second on the team with 11.2 points per game, and is an efficient 21-of-48 on her 3-pointers, good for nearly 44 percent.

See W. BASKETBALL on page 9

Final laps for class

Seniors to be honored in final home meet of season Saturday

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

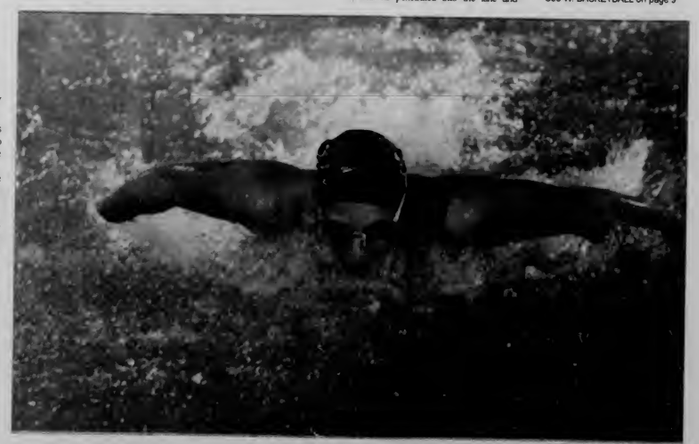
The Massachusetts swimming and diving teams will honor their seniors at the last home meet of the season on Saturday against Fordham.

The dual meet for both the men's and women's teams will be held at 1 p.m. in the Joseph Rogers Pool in Boyden Gym.

Both squads have high hopes for this meet, but they have been concentrating on the Atlantic 10 Championships that will be held at the end of February. They are using this meet to fine-tune themselves for the A-10s, but women's coach Bob Newcomb is still hoping they go out and swim the best they can to make sure they are ready for the championships.

"Fordham is probably one of the most improved teams in the conference," men's coach Russ Yarworth said.

The men will face tough competition from sophomore twins Justin and Ryan Coombs, who Yarworth tried to recruit to come to UMass.



"Our strength is in our balance from top to bottom," Yarworth said.

The men are using this meet to establish the final roster for the A-10 Championship. There are four or five athletes fighting for the final two or three positions on the A-10 roster. The coaches will use this meet to evaluate them for the last couple of spots.

The men have been mentally preparing for the meet. The athletes battling for their spots have been getting focused for this meet and they are ready to compete.

The Minutewomen have been working toward the championships, as well. They only had two practices this week because they are letting their bodies recover

See SWIMMING on page 10

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior swimmer Samantha Demty and the men's and women's swimming and diving teams will compete in their final home meet at Boyden Gym this season Saturday against Fordham. Coaches for both teams view the event this weekend as a stepping stone to the Atlantic 10 Championships.

INSIDE: MINUTEMEN FALL TO SAINT LOUIS | PAGE 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 42 LO: 32 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 2008

Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick addressed a crowd of Barack Obama supporters Saturday morning in Amherst center.

Patrick speaks in Amherst

Governor rallies supporters of Democratic pres. candidate

BY S.P. SULLIVAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Governor Deval Patrick delivered a brief speech in Amherst Saturday morning endorsing Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama.

"Are you fired up?" Patrick asked the scores of Five College students and area residents who had gathered for the event, organized by the Hampshire County Get Out the Vote (GOTV) campaign for Obama.

The crowd, many of them wielding "Obama '08" placards, responded in unison with a "Yes."

Patrick was also joined by members of area government, and said he was not alone in his support of the Illinois senator.

"Every single member of the delegation for the House in Hampshire County has endorsed Obama," he said, referring to Massachusetts state representatives.

"I know something about you," Patrick said to the rally's attendants from the steps of Amherst Town Hall. "You are ready for a change."

Patrick went on to advocate Senator Obama as the "agent of change" who will rid Washington of the status quo of "business as usual."

"Everybody is talking about change – even the Republicans are talking about change," said Patrick. "Barack Obama understands that we can't just talk about change."

While the governor praised Obama's rival for the Democratic candidacy, Senator Hillary Clinton, as "a fine candidate," he was critical of her initial support for the war in Iraq.

Patrick said that when it came time to vote on the authorization of Operation Iraqi Freedom, Clinton and Obama came to very different conclusions.

"One listened to her pollster; the other listened to his conscience," he said.

Supporters of Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama gathered in Amherst while Governor Deval Patrick led the rally.

Patrick's statements resonated with many members of the audience, who are eager to see widespread reform in Washington and agreed with Patrick's characterization of Obama as an agent of change.

"Hillary [Clinton] is going about traditional routes, but Obama is not going to be going through the power brokers in Washington to get things done," said Joe Blotnik, a volunteer for GOTV.

Organizers of the rally said that it came together in a matter of 36 hours. Patrick, who was an early supporter of Obama's candidacy, had been doing grassroots campaigning for the Illinois senator across Massachusetts. Rep. Ellen Story, D-Amherst, in cooperation with the Hampshire County Get Out the Vote Campaign

See PATRICK on page 2

Students show strong support

Candidate popular on UMass campus

BY ELIZABETH HAWLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Students across the nation and at the University of Massachusetts have strong feelings about Illinois Senator and candidate for the Democratic nomination for president in 2008, Barack Obama.

"This is the first time that I've been actively campaigning for a politician," said UMass for Barack Obama media coordinator Ashley Coulombe, who said she initially joined the organization as a way to become more involved on campus.

"[I] see him as the person who can make the change that our country needs right now," she said.

The UMass for Barack Obama Campaign – an official chapter of the Students for Barack Obama Campaign – is the most visible student campaign group on campus. With a table set up in the Campus Center on each day of last week and flyers passed out in the dorms, the campaign is good at getting noticed.

Although a Facebook-group search pulled up over 500 results for both Obama and opponent Hillary Clinton, Obama is the candidate who has most actively pursued the student vote. Students for Obama is an official wing of the Obama campaign, according to Coulombe, who said that being a part of Students for Barack Obama gave UMass for Barack Obama the tools to build visibility.

"Everything I do on campus, I think about how I can get people to vote for Barack Obama," Coulombe said.

While the UMass for Barack Obama group is currently focusing on getting out the vote, last semester they held bi-weekly meetings and invited guest speaker Anthony Lake.

Perhaps because of the group's efforts, Coulombe feels that Obama is very popular among the UMass student body.

"He's got great standing among UMass students just as he has great support among national students," Coulombe said.

See OBAMA on page 2

One of the frontrunners for the Democratic party's presidential nomination, Illinois Senator Barack Obama has been targeting younger voters in his bid for the White House.

Obama campaign focuses on youth

BY MICHELLE OSORIO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As the Democratic and Republican presidential primaries get underway, it has become clear that Senator Barack Obama has tapped into a demographic full of young, enthusiastic and technology-savvy college students.

While other Democratic candidates have held up the usual strategies on the campaign and focused on the more predictable demographics, Obama has concentrated a large effort on appealing to younger voters. The 46-year-old Illinois senator worked up a challenge for young voters, urging them to become more involved in the political process.

Appearing on television shows like "Tyra" in his usual blue suit with no tie and advertising through text messaging and Facebook, the senator has become the most prominent Democratic presidential candidate on college campuses.

"He wants to be the president of the United States, which includes our generation," Matthew Cadwallader, chapter coordinator of UMass for Barack Obama, said.

"When the political pundits say young people don't go vote and we do, he's proving them wrong, and we're proving them wrong along with him."

So far Obama's strategy has worked to his advantage as his recent victory in South Carolina and an endorsement from Massachusetts Senator Ted Kennedy shows, along with the $32 million raised in January alone.

Once Senator Edwards dropped out of the race the Democratic nomination narrowed down before the Republican nomination. The Democratic Party continues to emphasize the change running rampant in politics, as the Democratic nominee most likely will be for the first time either a woman or an African-American man. Obama and Senator Hillary Clinton of New York lead the voting for the Democratic nomination thus far.

It is this change in the demographics of the candidates that has come to the forefront recently. However, Clinton has taken some heat from critics as well as Obama supporters, which point to her candidacy as a continuation of the past 20 years, where the White House laid under control of either the Clinton or Bush family.

"There's a lot to be said about the soft power image that comes from him," UMass senior Peter Lukasik said. "I think we're at a really pivotal point right now, and we need change. Hillary Clinton's nomination would be a regeneration of the 1990s."

With this campaign for change, Sen. Obama has consistently concentrated a good portion of his efforts on reeling-in younger voters.

Though Sen. Obama is accused, at times, by Sen. Clinton of being overly optimistic and untested, his success among young voters remains strong. He is still found to be the most approachable by many Democratic college students.

"Sen. Clinton seems to count her time as first lady as experience. That calculus doesn't work in my book," Lukasik said.

See YOUTH on page 2

BC set for major expansion

New buildings mark $1.6 billion plan

BY EMILY REYNOLDS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In early December, Boston College announced that over the course of the next 10 years, the school will institute a $1.6 billion expansion plan.

The Institutional Master Plan includes the hiring of 100 new faculty members and more housing for undergraduate students.

"We have had major housing shortages for the past few years, so we definitely need more housing somewhere. I just found out last week that I need to live off campus next year," said Brian Gwozdz, a junior at Boston College.

The plan also calls for four new academic buildings, including an Institute for Liberal Arts and another for Integrated Sciences, and more than a dozen other centers and institutes, including more space for the fine arts and for students.

Along with that, the school also plans to build new intercollegiate and intramural athletic fields and recreational facilities.

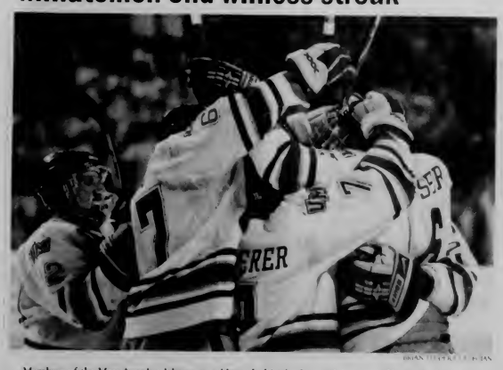
Some of the land for the planned expansion is coming from the Boston Archdiocese, which sold the school 65 acres of land.

"I just can't imagine how the university will look in ten years," Gwozdz said. "When I look at the map of the expansion, a lot of the major buildings on campus are in different places or on Brighton. It will be a very different campus."

The school is hoping to have much of the construction finished by its 150th anniversary in 2013.

According to the BC expansion Web site, $800 million will go towards construction and renovations on the campus, $300 million of the construction will go towards academic buildings and another $43.5 million per year will go towards new academic programs.

The school is getting money from various places to



See BC on page 2

COURTESY BC.EDU

Boston College's expansion plan proposes several new academic buildings, including those in this sketch.

Minutemen end winless streak

BRIAN THEISEN/COLLEGIAN

Members of the Mass Attack celebrate a goal by red-shirt freshman defenseman Kevin Kessler, as a part of the team's 5-3 victory over Maine Saturday. The victory ended the team's seven-game winless streak.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 1

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COPY EDITOR Adam Stagin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Stromczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marwa Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUES. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE. RENAMED THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1904 AND THE DAILY WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED BY SPJ AND APA SINCE 1996. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Will McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Nichole Amaral

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

Check out the News Blog at www.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.blogspot.com

Patrick speech rallies support for Obama, asked the Massachusetts Governor on Wednesday to make an appearance on the Amherst common.

PATRICK from page 1

Patrick agreed.

"The governor is a big Obama supporter," said Jill Higgins, another Get Out the Vote volunteer. "He's getting out a lot more than other governors."

Patrick told participants in the rally to do whatever they could to spread Obama's message of change.

"What happens the day after Tuesday or the day after the November election [if] we have more of the same?"

Patrick encouraged Obama supporters to attend the UMass Get Out the Vote phone bank, organized by the Hampshire County GOTV in cooperation with UMass for Barack Obama. Volunteers from the University of Massachusetts and Amherst community gathered at the Campus Center immediately after Patrick's speech to organize and make cellular phone calls to potential voters.

Participants said that Patrick's endorsement speech bolstered attendance at the cell phone bank.

"The rally united the town's Obama organization with the UMass students' organization," said Emma Einhorn, junior.

"At the phone bank it was split evenly between adults and students, something I have not experienced before," she said.

After the conclusion of Patrick's speech, the governor took time to greet and speak with participants in the rally. As he ascended the stairs of Amherst Town Hall, the crowd took part in a brief chant of "Yes we can."

Ashley Coulombe contributed reporting to this article.

S.P. Sullivan can be reached at spsulliv@dailycollegian.com.

CAITLIN GOODRICH/COLLEGIAN

Supporters of Barack Obama made calls to voters on behalf of the candidate from the Campus Center following Saturday's rally.

Candidate popular on campus

OBAMA from page 1

Not all students agree.

"This is for those of us who know Barack Obama for who he really is, a two-faced and extremely partisan opportunist," declares the homepage of the Facebook group "Anti-Obama and damn proud of it."

The group maintains through its on-line description that Obama is only popular because of "a speech in which he gave lip support to bipartisanship."

However, the group claims Obama's own record is purely Democratic on the important issues.

The group is not the only anti-Obama group on Facebook. Others include "Against Barack Obama (One Million Strong)" and "A Few Reasons Why We Shouldn't Vote for Barack Obama."

While many students actively show their support for the senator, they are not the only first-time voters supporting the Democratic candidate.

According to a recent Wall Street Journal article, Obama is significantly aided by increased black voter registration and turnout across the southern United States. Obama is the son of a Kenyan man and a Caucasian woman. While race has not been a key point in the Obama campaign, it is something many feel cannot be escaped.

"Still in this country, it's always on the table," said Obama's wife Michelle, in an interview with CNN's Soledad O'Brien.

"The fact that we are talking about the possibility of having the first African American, and that is, for some, so emotional that it brings tears is a statement about how far we have to go in terms of race."

Michelle Obama said she is "amazed at how people are ready to move beyond it. No one in Iowa ever asked me any questions about 'what is it like to be a black woman?'"

According to David Leonhardt of the New York Times, Obama hopes to create a "popular mandate for policy changes that could reverse a slow wage growth and outlast any one administration." If elected He intends to do this by shifting the tax burden to the wealthy, and by making initially costly investments that will benefit the economy in the long run, in areas such as health care, education and researching alternative energy sources.

Obama hopes to reduce America's dependence on foreign oil and improve America's standing as a leader on climate change issues by reducing carbon emissions by 80 percent by 2050, according to his campaign Web site. He wants to invest $150 billion in clean energy over the next decade and support new kinds of renewable bio fuels.

In the realm of education, Obama's Web site says that he plans to help lead states into voluntary universal preschool programs for children under five years of age. He also promises to recruit math and science teachers in an effort to make those subjects a more national priority. He wants to expand and support afterschool and summer programs and support college outreach programs. Obama also supports transitional bilingual education.

For college students, Obama plans to create a tax credit that would essentially make the first $4,000 of college expenses free for most students. The credit would also cover about two-thirds of an average public university's tuition bill and cover all of most community college tuition bills.

"The project of the next president is figuring out how you create bottom-up economic growth, as opposed to the trickle down economic growth that George Bush has been so enamored with," Obama said in an interview with Leonhardt.

He added that as president, he will raise payroll taxes for high end earners and look for a permanent tax credit for families in the bottom 90th percentile of the income distribution.

"We have to disaggregate tax policy between the wealthy and the working class or middle class," Obama said. "We have to be able to say that we are going to at once raise taxes on some people and lower taxes on others."

In addition to offering new economic policy, Obama would bring a new approach to diplomacy, according to Michael R. Gordon and Jeff Zeleny of the New York Times, who said Obama would "engage in aggressive personal diplomacy" with Iran. Obama believes forging a new relationship with Iran would play an important role in an Iraq pull out, Gordon and Zeleny argue.

Younger voters key for Obama's run

YOUTH from page 1

Throughout the campaign other candidates in the Democratic Party pointed at the senator's record saying his experience in national politics is not long enough. Sen. Obama has pointed out his consistency on issues like the war on Iraq, which has been plaguing Clinton since the beginning of her campaign and has proven to be the issue that just will not die. For Obama supporters though, the fact that he doesn't have the amount of experience as the other candidates is a plus.

At the last Democratic Debate held at the Kodak Theater in California last week, which will be the last one-on-one before Super Tuesday, it was hoped that the differences between the candidates would become clear.

One issue that did mark a difference was Sen. Clinton's vote for Iraq, which resurfaced again during the debate.

"I was opposed to Iraq from the start," Obama said. "And I say that not just to look backwards but to also look forwards because I think what the next president has to show is the kind of judgment that will ensure that we are using our military power wisely."

Other questions worked around the differences in policy between the two remaining candidates. Though both acknowledged there are significant differences in their strategies to work with things like healthcare, they emphasized there was a much greater difference between the Democratic and Republican policies.

One of the differences between the two lies in the approach to healthcare. Whereas Clinton is working toward a mandate for universal healthcare, Obama believes that if healthcare becomes affordable, people will buy it voluntarily.

His plan would lower premiums by $2,500 per family, per year and includes a mandate for children. His healthcare system would also cover people aged under 25, which he refers to as "young people who are healthy but think they are invulnerable," as they would be covered under their parent's healthcare.

"I've met people that have premiums so high they don't have health insurance, they have house insurance," Obama said.

One of the problems pointed out with Sen. Obama's healthcare plan is the free rider problem that arises from the voluntary component of his strategy. Because the tax payer would end up paying for the people who decline to pay for insurance when they become sick and need healthcare under his system the senator created a plan where these people would need to pay back premiums.

The Obama campaign also has used a technology-savvy youth to not only tap into a new electoral demographic but also to send the word out to the older generations. Back in July, the senator was the first to take the stage when the College Democrats had their national convention.

Obama's campaign revolves about change not just of the political strategies but also of a change of regimes of generational leadership. His campaign has worked around generating a fresh, young image around the senator. With the release of his book "The Audacity of Hope," his mixed heritage and his early admissions to having tried marijuana, he has become the presidential candidate that exudes hope and change.

Senator Obama's strategy has worked consistently to his advantage starting at the Iowa and New Hampshire caucuses. The passing of the torch strategy is not entirely new however. John Kennedy was 43 when he was elected president, just three years shy of Obama's current age. During that campaign the former president played up his youth in comparison to the older leaders of the nation.

By using an old and long forgotten political strategy Sen. Obama has successfully tapped into the youth of the electorate and moved to prove Washington can be led by more than just the good ole' boys.

Michelle Osorio can be reached at lodentha@student.umass.edu.

BC reveals expansion plan

BC from page 1

fund this new project, including $52 million in annual grants, $95 million from alumni and BC's endowment, which stands at $1.75 billion.

"We are a strong university that wants to become even stronger," said Rev. William Leahy, BC's president, in an Associated Press article.

The plan has been in the making for two years, stemming from a study that included over 200 students, faculty and administrators from the school. Together, they put forth seven "strategic directions" for the school to strive for, some of which include becoming a leader in education, student formation, creating research that handles problems of society and promoting the school's religious background.

"Each offers the possibility of distinguishing Boston College from its peers," wrote Leahy on the college's Web site.

As of right now, BC is No. 35 in "US News and World Report" for top US schools, yet it is ranked fourth in number of applicants.

"It's a really ambitious plan. I think Brighton Campus will help to push BC into the top tier of American universities," said Gwozdz, referring to the large swath of land BC recently acquired.

The Institutional Master Plan will also have benefits outside of boosting BC's rankings among other US schools. In the plan that BC had to file with Boston Redevelopment Authority, there was mention of the economic and community impacts, which included references to employment during the expansion, as well as more revenue for local businesses.

Although the 10-year plan has only recently been put into action, there has already been more long-term planning for the school.

According to the BC Web site, a long-term campus vision plan has already started to develop, looking into the future another 30 to 50 years. It all starts with the plans for these next 10 years.

Emily Reynolds can be reached at ereynold@student.umass.edu.

WANTED
GRAPHICS STAFFERS
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
WE ARE SEARCHING FOR HARD-WORKING, MOTIVATED UNDERGRADS TO FILL GRAPHIC STAFF POSITIONS.
VISIT THE COLLEGIAN AT THE BOTTOM OF THE OF THE CAMPUS CENTER

THE BOLTWOOD
PROJECT™
Serving others since 1969 – and STILL making a difference!
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Spring Semester 2008 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Room 101 • Feb. 4 (Mon) • Feb. 5 (Tues) • Feb. 6 (Wed)
• Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Feb. 7th @ Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

EDITORIAL OPINION

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

In Palmer, it's all a gamble

Katy Bruck

The concept of Las Vegas is often greeted by New Englanders with the same kind of detached skepticism as places like Los Angeles and Paris. Maybe it's our Puritan roots, but generally I find that staunch Yankees are more likely to engage in fantastical support of global warming than fantasize about a blow-out trip to the Vegas casinos. We often forget that there actually are casinos – like Mohegan Sun and Foxwoods – right in our backyards.

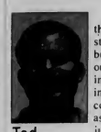
It makes sense, since "gambling" as a term evokes images of flashing neon lights and women in feathered outfits dancing and serving drinks (not exactly a common East coast association). But since the Boston Globe reported that the owner of Mohegan Sun hopes to erect a "Mohegan North" in Palmer, those flashing lights and showgirls seem a little less foreign.

Now, admittedly, Mohegan Sun is not all that much like the stereotypical Vegas casino, but the reputation surrounding the idea of those Vegas establishments is brought to mind whenever a new casino is proposed. The associated crime, pathological gambling and general degenerative influence of the Vegas strip aren't just concerns for the tiny town of Palmer that could potentially host the casino. With the town directly off the Mass. Pike exit that leads drivers to the University of Massachusetts, there's an added bonus for the Mohegan owners – and a potential negative for the community – because everyone knows that there isn't any population more prone to risk-seeking behavior than college students.

Everyone knows that there isn't any population more prone to risk-seeking behavior than college students.

In 2005 Phineas Baxandall and Bruce Sacerdote, researchers from Harvard and Dartmouth respectively, released a report stating that a community is generally only negligibly affected by the introduction of casinos, whether for the good or the bad. But this report – all 48 pages of it – does not devote any research to an area like Palmer. It does state that the majority of casinos tend to establish themselves within counties where the populations are already large – therefore any increase in crime or employment or bankruptcy tends not to affect the larger community.

The obvious difference with Palmer is that the counties affected by the introduction are populated by a larger-than-average population of college students, individuals who are often simultaneously financially distressed and more likely to take risks with their money (credit card debt, anyone?). No one seems to have done any research into the effects of a casino on an area that includes one of the largest public universities in the country as well as four private colleges –and that's just east of Springfield.



To be fair, the Minnesota Institute of Public Health did do a study in 1995 exploring the relationship between gambling and college students. And, surprise, surprise, at universities located within a short distance from high-stakes gambling establishment, 92 percent of males and 85 percent of females engaged in some form of gambling within a 12-month period of when the survey was taken. I doubt there would be comparable numbers if this same survey was done at UMass right now, despite the popularity of online and real-life poker and cards. As such, for most of these students, gambling proved to be a benign experience, rarely leading to any kind of pathological addictive disorder.

Just like heavy drinking, promiscuous behavior or any other college-related "behavioral problem" that parents bite their nails over, most people mature out of risk-seeking behavior. But what of the damage that could be done before such maturation occurs?

I'm not talking about the general degradation of our morals here. In a time when an unprecedented number of young people are literally preyed upon by private loan and credit card companies, can we trust that the establishment of a high-stake gambling facility will teach us all the value of money (if we lose it) or free us from the burden of debt (if we win it)? For Deval Patrick, who seems so concerned with the financial plight of those in Massachusetts pursuing higher education, it seems he hasn't put all that much thought on how the supposed economic stimulus of a casino will affect college students in the area.

Katy Bruck is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kbruck@student.umass.edu.

When will someone stop this Regan mania?

Ted Rogers

I think I might be the only person who still has this opinion, but I need to get it out there. I think the inappropriate loving of dead people, commonly known as necrophilia, is just plain wrong and weird. There, I said it.

The thing is, all the Republican presidential candidates, at least one of the Democratic candidates and a good 64 percent of Americans disagree with me. For those of you that think I'm overestimating this problem, I only have to mention one name: Ronald Wilson Reagan.

Ever since the ex-president kicked the bucket in 2004, it seems that every man, woman and child in politics has rushed to make a comparison between themselves and Reagan. Oddly enough, they somehow mean it in a good way. The problem I see with this is that, to put it lightly, Reagan was not a good president. More than any other administration, present included, Reagan's was the most forwardly corrupt. Anything that brought shame to the nation could be brushed away with a sheepish grin and a timely invasion of a third world country.

It's true, as a country we do owe a lot of things to the man. Without his tough stance on crime, we might not have the largest prison population in the world. We owe him a debt for creating a huge military industrial complex that drains away into our literal national debt, another thing that Reagan left us. Above all, we can thank him for starting the trend of presidents not needing to be held accountable for their actions.

Most Republican candidates want to copy Reagan's approach to business, claiming "Reaganomics" would create a better economy. As college students are about to go out into the job market, we need to pray that they are lying. The economy under Reagan went great for some people, as long as they were already loaded. For everybody else, it was a process of waiting for some of that cash to hopefully trickle down. And for the record, even that bubble burst in 1987. Is this the system we want to go back to?

When somebody talks about bringing around Reaganesque national security measures, don't get too excited.

You also hear praise about Reagan when politicians want to talk about national security. However, more than any other president in the past, we can thank Reagan for the mess we are in now. It was under Reagan's administration that Muslim fanatics in Afghanistan were given all sorts of weapons, training and money to help solve the threat of the Soviets. And yes, Osama bin Laden was one of these men. After the Soviets limped back home, more needed aid to Afghanistan was denied, setting the stage for the murderous Taliban.

Unsatisfied with this, Reagan's administration also sold weapons to Iran, a problem that I'm sure will end up haunting us in the near future. This was in order to pay anti-communist rebels in Central America. In addition to overthrowing a democratically elected government, these rebels also contented themselves with looting, killing public servants, and shooting nuns. Reagan managed to avoid any repercussions from this because his underlings all claimed he had no idea what was happening. When somebody talks about bringing around Reaganesque national security measures, don't get too excited.

Others gush about Reagan's integrity and invoke his name whenever they want to seem morally upstanding about something. This is an odd choice to make. Among other unpleasant things, they're talking about a man who ignored the AIDS crisis during its first five years. The first time he ever mentioned it in public was after his acting buddy Rock Hudson succumbed to the disease. By that time, 6,000 others had already died from it. If that's the new definition of moral integrity, we're in a lot of trouble.

I doubt morals would relate to Reagan's ultra tough policies on illegal drugs, either. Instead of finding ways to fight addiction among people and promoting rehabilitation, his policies dictated imprisonment. We have the highest prison population out of any country because of this. The especially cruel sentencing for crack over powder cocaine is another scary part of these policies. Both drugs are equally threatening, but the people who buy cocaine tend to be rich and white. Said to be done because crack is that much more dangerous, the specific policy adds an extra 15 years in jail for being born in a ghetto.

At the end of the day, I think I understand why Reagan gets so much undue praise. He was one of the last presidents before America turned a new corner. And in this new era, we need all the heroes we can get. The question is, do we need heroes like him?

Ted Rogers is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at trogers@student.umass.edu.

The ED/OP section is invading your television set!

The Daily Collegian and UVC-TV will be debuting the new editorial TV show "The Daily Collegian UMass Yak-Back!"

STAY TUNED TO UVC AND THE EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE FOR DETAILS!

The revolution will not be television

Thomas Sitzer

In the past, forms of media like television and the telephone wire have produced wildly unexpected outcomes. Today's media, as expansive as it already is, will likely produce forms of communication that leave the ways of the older mainstream media archaic. The future of media will be a product of its evolution.

As the internet grows and people pursue interconnection, communication changes into something that, in the past, was restricted in form and utilized only by certain people. The telephone brought single people together over great distances, while the television allowed a single source to broadcast to, eventually, millions of people. Until the internet age, however, communication only connected people in the forms of one-on-one or one-to-many.

By now, as we move past the first decade of the new century, it seems almost everybody who has, at least, a telephone, also holds basic knowledge of e-mail and Web browsing skills. Yet, most people are totally unaware of the power at their fingertips when they sit down to check out their favorite sports and news Web pages, nor do they acknowledge the fact that there are many places to convene with people of the same interest.

This power granted to "Joe Sixpack" can activate the citizen by enabling him to publish whatever he wants to express on the internet for no more than the cost of a connection, or simply a visit to the library. Really Simple Syndication, or RSS as we call it, means that people can post and update information whenever and nearly wherever. Meanwhile, other people with the same interests are able, and dare I say, obligated, to share their experiences. Able, because there are easy-to-use tools and methods there: obligated, because there is no reason to get up off of the couch and use them – especially in the case of a professional looking to connect to consumers and colleagues.

When the technology to connect the potential within the minds of employees is there, but underutilized, it is a shame.

As to the future of citizen journalism the outlook is more like a democratic morphing of the way information is built and shared than a standard advance in mainstream media. Right now, as it stands, the internet has a lot of untapped potential that can really only come about by active citizens taking a role to improve the status of, say, the common blogger.

From the example of one of today's "big corporations" – the kind with the looming shadows and duh, duh, duh next to it – a societal parallel might be drawn. Within a business there are intranets, to interconnect workers. These are the sorts of people that gave rise to the e-mail, before it really became the post-pilferer it's known as today. Companies tend to hire people, as they grow, not for their abilities to find solutions, but rather to complete tasks. When the technology to connect the potential within the minds of employees is there, but underutilized, it is a shame. However, in the big real world the average citizen thrives on connections. So it is obvious that the internet will grow, and people will begin to form together in response to mainstream media.

The New York Times is a form of mainstream media that is a big business as well. In anticipation of the online citizen movement, they hired a specialist with experience in all types of media to look forward and help the Times adapt to the audience. He applies practical knowledge to his experiences with the traditional media industry to find solutions and forecast the future of media. In speculating the evolution, he captures the essence of the unpredictability of technological advanced blended with the minds of active participants.

"And finally, I'm not sure that the real value of a futurist is to predict the future – the future is always going to surprise us in one way or another – but rather to get others thinking about it in a creative and flexible way."

The evolution of the media entirely depends upon the activism of the audience. For the first time in mainstream media history, the news crier has someone to talk to, and it is up to the big companies to engage in the conversation.

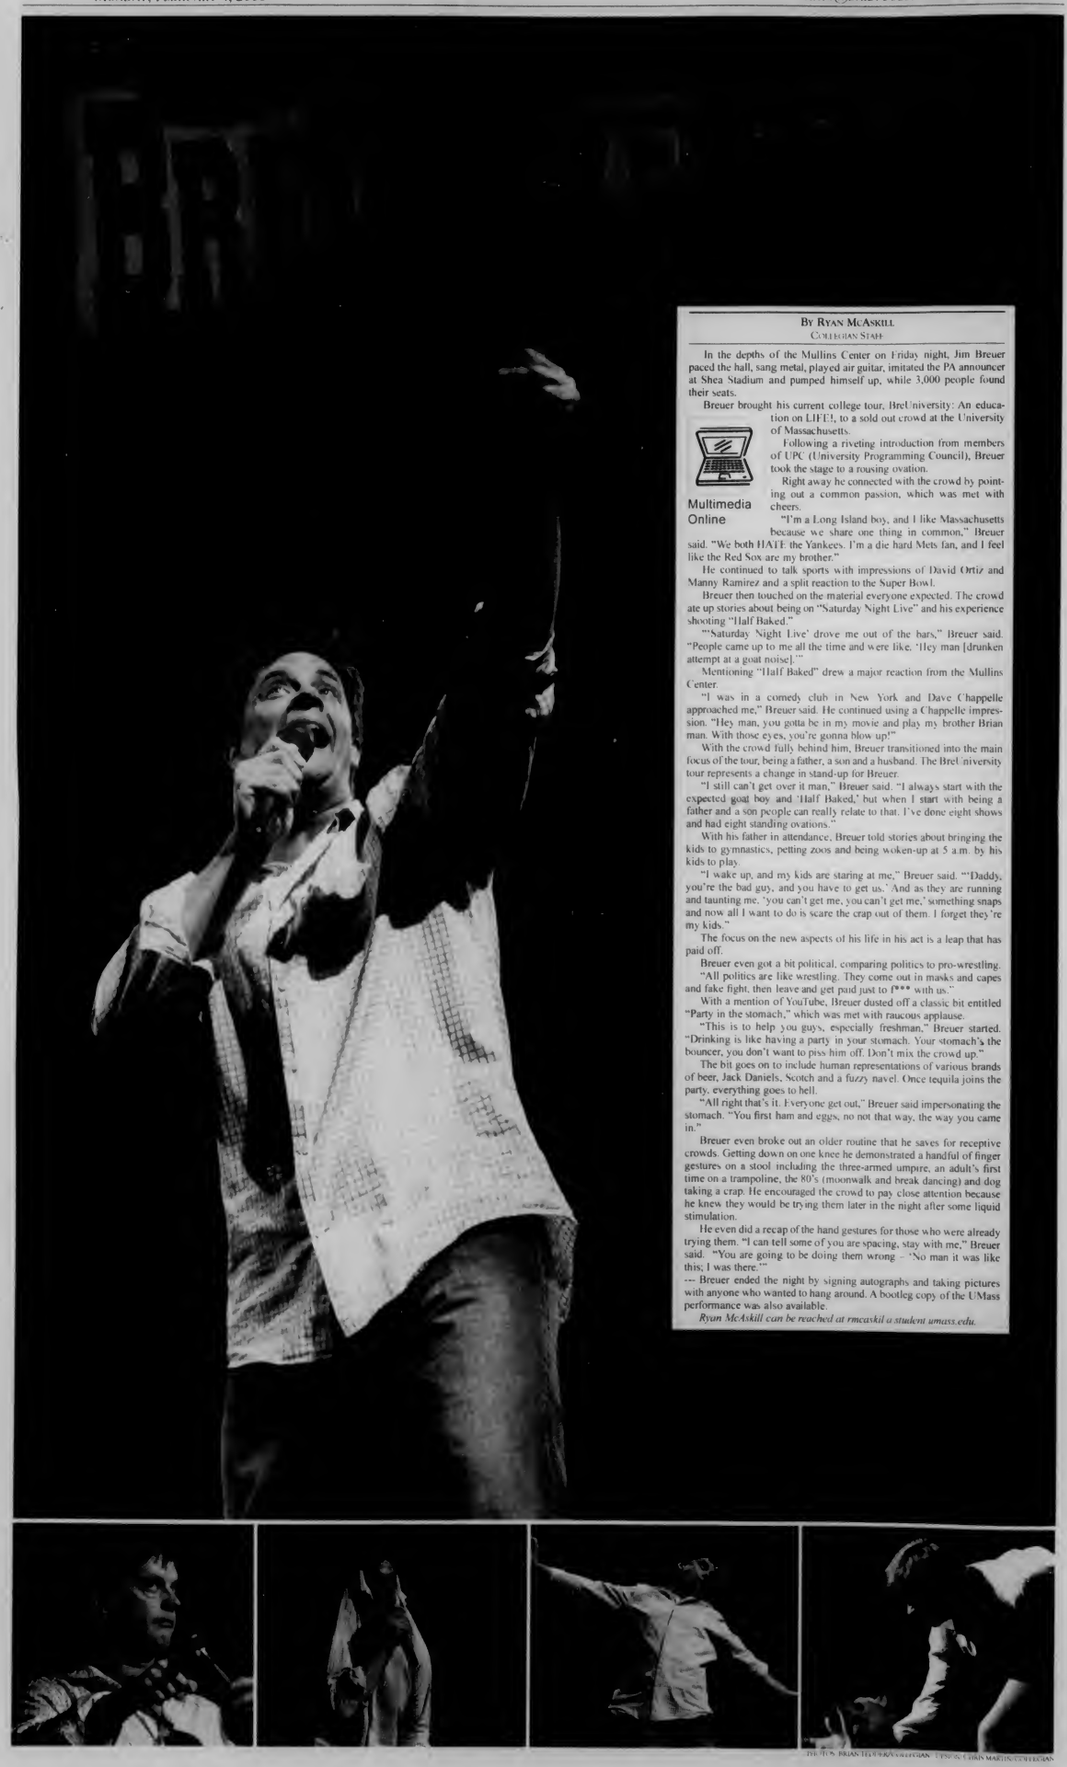
Tom Sitzer is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at tsitzer@student.umass.edu

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL

Will you be voting tomorrow?

☐ Of course I am.
☐ I'm too hip for voting.
☐ I live in a cave.

Cast your vote online at www.dailycollegian.com!



SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com
Fax: 413-545-3699
Mail: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

BRIAN TEUTSCH/COLLEGIAN

Breuer brings college tour to Mullins

BY RYAN MCASKILL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In the depths of the Mullins Center on Friday night, Jim Breuer paced the hall, sang metal, played air guitar, imitated the PA announcer at Shea Stadium and pumped himself up, while 3,000 people found their seats.

Breuer brought his current college tour, BreUniversity: An education on LIFE!, to a sold out crowd at the University of Massachusetts.

Multimedia Online

Following a riveting introduction from members of UPC (University Programming Council), Breuer took the stage to a rousing ovation.

Right away he connected with the crowd by pointing out a common passion, which was met with cheers.

"I'm a Long Island boy, and I like Massachusetts because we share one thing in common," Breuer said. "We both HATE the Yankees. I'm a die hard Mets fan, and I feel like the Red Sox are my brother."

He continued to talk sports with impressions of David Ortiz and Manny Ramirez and a split reaction to the Super Bowl.

Breuer then touched on the material everyone expected. The crowd ate up stories about being on "Saturday Night Live" and his experience shooting "Half Baked."

"'Saturday Night Live' drove me out of the bars," Breuer said. "People came up to me all the time and were like, 'Hey man [drunken attempt at a goat noise].'"

Mentioning "Half Baked" drew a major reaction from the Mullins Center.

"I was in a comedy club in New York and Dave Chappelle approached me," Breuer said. He continued using a Chappelle impression. "Hey man, you gotta be in my movie and play my brother Brian man. With those eyes, you're gonna blow up!"

With the crowd fully behind him, Breuer transitioned into the main focus of the tour, being a father, a son and a husband. The BreUniversity tour represents a change in stand-up for Breuer.

"I still can't get over it man," Breuer said. "I always start with the expected goat boy and 'Half Baked,' but when I start with being a father and a son people can really relate to that. I've done eight shows and had eight standing ovations."

With his father in attendance, Breuer told stories about bringing the kids to gymnastics, petting zoos and being woken-up at 5 a.m. by his kids to play.

"I wake up, and my kids are staring at me," Breuer said. "'Daddy, you're the bad guy, and you have to get us.' And as they are running and taunting me, 'you can't get me, you can't get me,' something snaps and now all I want to do is scare the crap out of them. I forget they're my kids."

The focus on the new aspects of his life in his act is a leap that has paid off.

Breuer even got a bit political, comparing politics to pro-wrestling.

"All politics are like wrestling. They come out in masks and capes and fake fight, then leave and get paid just to f with us."

With a mention of YouTube, Breuer dusted off a classic bit entitled "Party in the stomach," which was met with raucous applause.

"This is to help you guys, especially freshman," Breuer started. "Drinking is like having a party in your stomach. Your stomach's the bouncer, you don't want to piss him off. Don't mix the crowd up."

The bit goes on to include human representations of various brands of beer, Jack Daniels, Scotch and a fuzzy navel. Once tequila joins the party, everything goes to hell.

"All right that's it. Everyone get out," Breuer said impersonating the stomach. "You first ham and eggs, no not that way, the way you came in."

Breuer even broke out an older routine that he saves for receptive crowds. Getting down on one knee he demonstrated a handful of finger gestures on a stool including the three-armed umpire, an adult's first time on a trampoline, the 80's (moonwalk and break dancing) and dog taking a crap. He encouraged the crowd to pay close attention because he knew they would be trying them later in the night after some liquid stimulation.

He even did a recap of the hand gestures for those who were already trying them. "I can tell some of you are spacing, stay with me," Breuer said. "You are going to be doing them wrong – "No man it was like this; I was there.'"

--- Breuer ended the night by signing autographs and taking pictures with anyone who wanted to hang around. A bootleg copy of the UMass performance was also available.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil a student.umass.edu.

THE TCS: BRIAN TEUTSCH/COLLEGIAN · LYDIA MARTIN/COLLEGIAN

Junior guard Chris Lowe scored 14 points in the Minutemen's 71-59 loss to Saint Louis on Saturday. The Minutemen missed 19-of-21 shots from 3-point range and had zero assists in the second half after four in the first half.

Lowe nets 14 in loss

BASKETBALL from page 8

second stanza. But the Billikens used a 15-2 of their own to take command of the game and the Minutemen never got within seven points of SLU. (12-9, 3-4 A-10).

UMass had three players in double figures, but star shooting guard Ricky Harris wasn't one of them. The sophomore had his lowest-scoring game of the season, scoring six points on 2-of-14 shooting, including a 0-of-9 showing from the 3-point line. Gary Forbes scored his season average of 20 points; Chris Lowe scored 14 and Etienne Brower had 12 points off the bench but fouled out.

Saint Louis also had three players score in double figures, with guards Kevin Lisch and Tommie Liddell III leading the way with 16 points each. The Billikens took 11 fewer shots than UMass did but hit five more field goals.

Against the slow, drawn-out offense of coach Rick Majerus and the Billikens, the Minutemen were unable to set the pace to their liking. The game was played with less speed than usual for UMass, and the ball movement for the Minutemen was not so good as SLU's. Lowe led UMass with three assists – all in the first half – as the team had just four for the game and none in the second half.

Gaffney led all players with 10 rebounds but struggled from the field (1-of-6). Luke Bonner was also strong on the glass in his 19 minutes, (7 rebounds) but he hit just one of his seven shots.

UMass held the edge in points in the paint, 30-24 but lost the battle in points off turnovers by 10 (18-8). The Minutemen didn't hit a field goal in the final 4:38 of the game, missing their final 10 shots.

Coach Travis Ford and the Minutemen are back in action on Feb. 7 at the Mullins Center against Rhode Island (19-3, 5-2 A-10).

Eli Rosenwaike and Michael King can be reached at sports@dailycollegian.com

BRIAN TEUTSCH/COLLEGIAN

Junior center Cory Quirk scored UMass's fifth goal in Saturday's 5-3 win over Maine. Quirk assisted on two goals along with scoring one, and he posted a plus-4 rating on the night.

Quirk caps win in 100th-career game

HOCKEY from page 8

outshoot the Black Bears 22-3. But Maine only needed one shot to beat UMass freshman goaltender Paul Dainton. With his team's first shot of the game Travis Ramsey sent a one-timer through a screen and past Dainton.

"We've been in that situation a few times this year. Everyone just keeps saying 'keep battling.' We have to keep our heads right and do the small things, go to the net hard and get some goals," redshirt freshman Kevin Kessler said.

Injuries forced Kessler into action recently, and after five games without a goal, the big defenseman chipped in on the offensive side of the puck.

"It was a wraparound, so I started to pinch down. I grabbed the puck, no one saw me so I took it to the net. I just threw it at the net, and I believe it went off the inside of his skate," Kessler said.

Goals by Langeraap and P.J. Fenton gave UMass a 4-1 lead early in the third period, but the Black Bears fought back.

Twenty-four seconds after Maine allowed its fourth goal, senior Nolan Boike skated in on Dainton and lifted the puck past him.

The two teams traded chances in the 11 minutes before Maine freshman Keif Orsini cut the deficit to one. He took a pass from Rob Bellamy and skated in on Dainton. He faked a shot, dangled around Dainton and tucked it under his left pad.

UMass ended the game with a 54-23 advantage in shots on goal. Bishop made 49 saves in the loss. The Minutemen dominated play for most of the game, but Bishop did his best to keep his team in the game.

"We were in the box a lot, obviously if we weren't shorthanded we wouldn't have allowed so many shots," Maine coach Tim Whitehead said. "[Bishop] did everything he could to keep us there. We had no business being in that game at the end."

UMass didn't threaten nearly as much Friday night as it did against Maine on Saturday. Northeastern held UMass to 22 shots and killed off all six UMass power plays in the win. The Minutemen went 1-for-12 on the man advantage over the weekend.

With five minutes left in the third period, UMass had a 5-on-3 with two Huskies in the penalty box but did not score.

NU's (12-8-3, 8-7-2 Hockey East) Randy Guzior beat Dainton at 1:30 of the second period for the game's only goal.

Sophomore defenseman Martin Nolet suffered an injury and did not return to the lineup. The injury to John Wessbecker already shorthanded the UMass defensive core but Kessler, redshirt senior Patrick Dineen and freshman Doug Kublin have played well.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni a gmail.com

Redshirt freshman defenseman Kevin Kessler reacts after referees awarded him a goal in the second period. Officials didn't initially see the puck cross the goal line.

Fogerty, Horstmann excel

SWIMMING from page 8

Chalikis won the 50-yard freestyle, while Walsh won the 200-yard freestyle.

UMass was without senior captain Allison Volpe, so co-captains Sam Demity and Colleen McCann were left to lead the Minutewomen. Demty earned second-place in the 100-yard butterfly. Fordham's Caitlin Napoli narrowly edged out Demty for the victory.

McCann took sixth place in both the 200-yard freestyle and the 200-yard individual medley.

Freshman Jessica Starsoselec had an overall solid day, earning second-place finishes in the 100- and 200-yard breaststroke events.

The Minutewomen functioned well as a unit. In both the 200-yard medley and freestyle relays, the Maroon and White took second place.

Massachusetts women's coach Bob Newcomb didn't point out a particular reason for his team's loss but instead explained what the leaders of his team bring to the program.

"They all step-up in their own way," Newcomb said. "It was an emotional day, and emotion took its toll on some of [the seniors] today. Overall, I think this class was great [Saturday]."

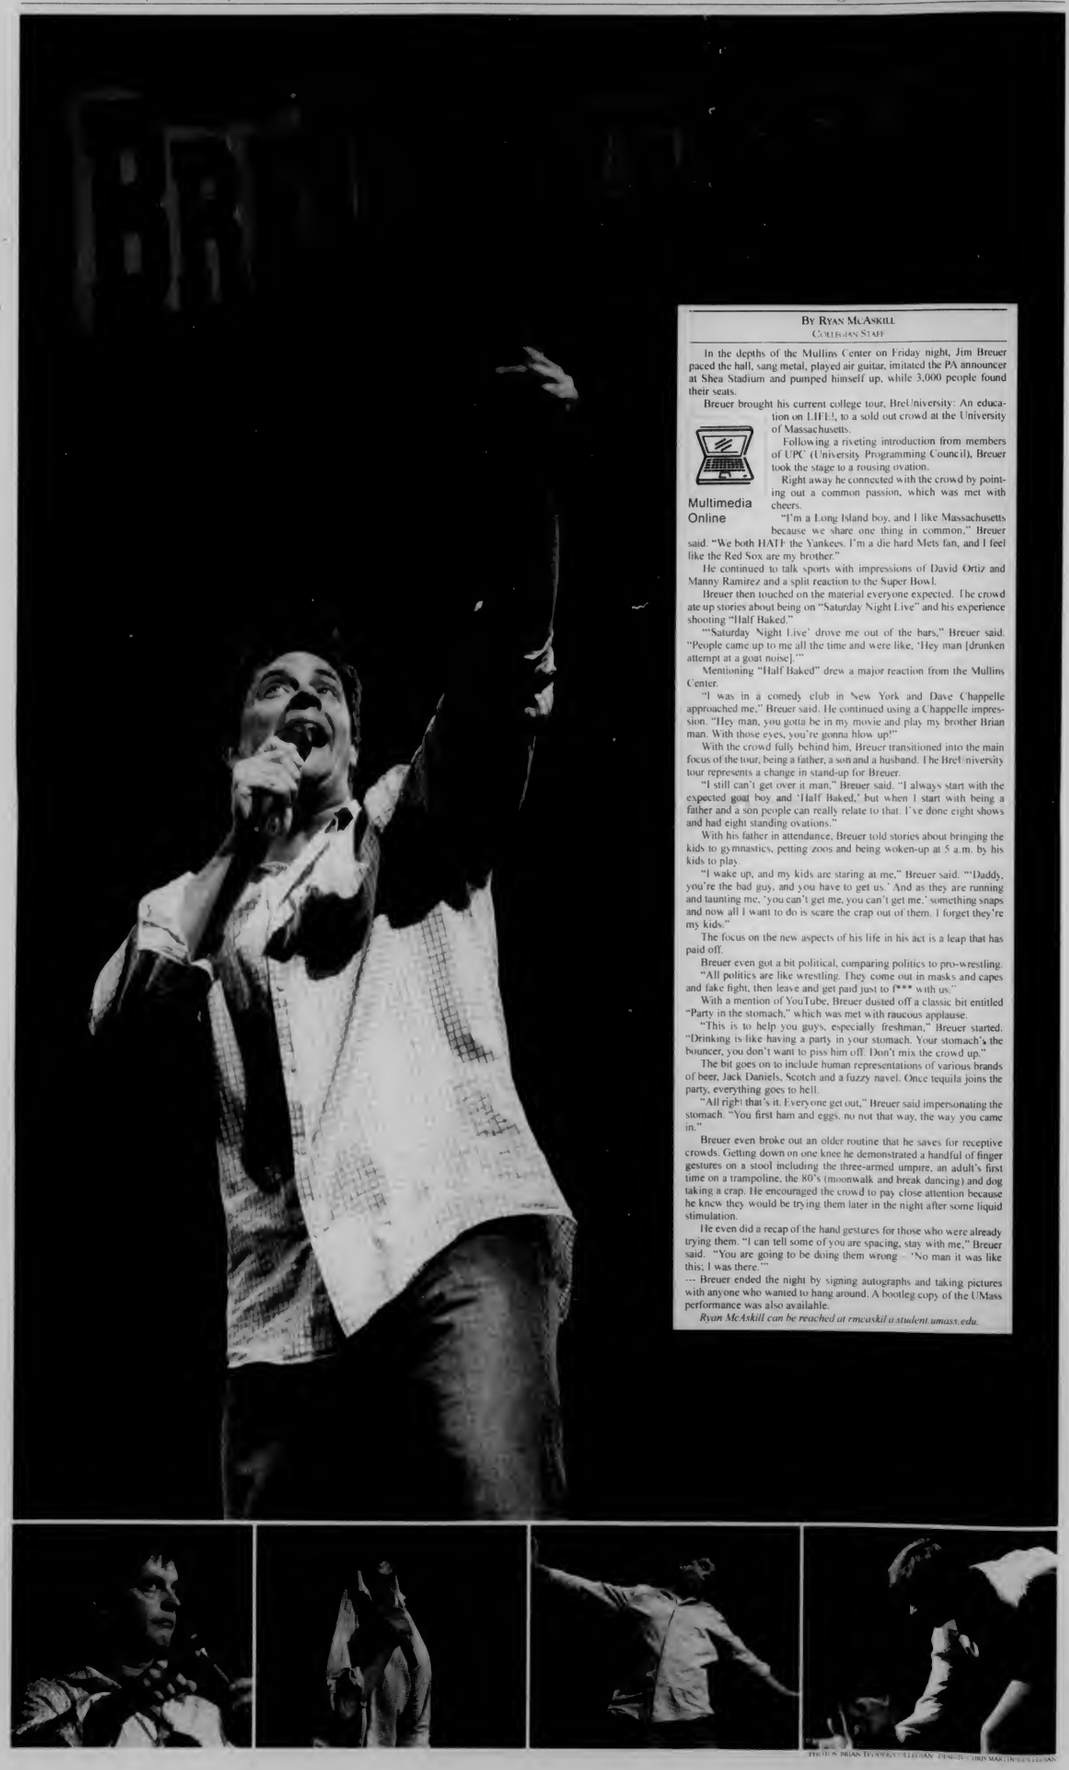
UMass used strong efforts from freshman Anne Fogerty and junior Sarah Horstmann for the bulk of the team's points.

Fogerty and Horstmann went one-two in both the 1-meter and 3-meter dives.

The Maroon and White will compete next at the New England Open on Saturday in Kingston, R.I.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei a student.umass.edu.

UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS



Senior R.J. Rappe won both the 1- and 3-meter diving events for the Minutemen on Saturday. The defending Atlantic 10 Champion in the 1-meter dive looks to repeat in the event later this month.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

PHOTOS BY BRIAN TEUTSCH/COLLEGIAN (TOP) AND JOHN MARTINEZ/COLLEGIAN

By Ryan McAskill
Collegian Staff

In the depths of the Mullins Center on Friday night, Jim Breuer paced the hall, sang metal, played air guitar, imitated the PA announcer at Shea Stadium and pumped himself up, while 3,000 people found their seats.

Breuer brought his current college tour, BreUniversity: An education on LIFE!, to a sold out crowd at the University of Massachusetts.

Multimedia Online

Following a riveting introduction from members of UPC (University Programming Council), Breuer took the stage to a rousing ovation.

Right away he connected with the crowd by pointing out a common passion, which was met with cheers.

"I'm a Long Island boy, and I like Massachusetts because we share one thing in common," Breuer said. "We both HATE the Yankees. I'm a die hard Mets fan, and I feel like the Red Sox are my brother."

He continued to talk sports with impressions of David Ortiz and Manny Ramirez and a split reaction to the Super Bowl.

Breuer then touched on the material everyone expected. The crowd ate up stories about being on "Saturday Night Live" and his experience shooting "Half Baked."

"'Saturday Night Live' drove me out of the bars," Breuer said. "People came up to me all the time and were like, 'Hey man [drunken attempt at a goat noise].'"

Mentioning "Half Baked" drew a major reaction from the Mullins Center.

"I was in a comedy club in New York and Dave Chappelle approached me," Breuer said. He continued using a Chappelle impression. "Hey man, you gotta be in my movie and play my brother Brian man. With those eyes, you're gonna blow up!"

With the crowd fully behind him, Breuer transitioned into the main focus of the tour, being a father, a son and a husband. The BreUniversity tour represents a change in stand-up for Breuer.

"I still can't get over it man," Breuer said. "I always start with the expected goat boy and 'Half Baked,' but when I start with being a father and a son people can really relate to that. I've done eight shows and had eight standing ovations."

With his father in attendance, Breuer told stories about bringing the kids to gymnastics, petting zoos and being woken-up at 5 a.m. by his kids to play.

"I wake up, and my kids are staring at me," Breuer said. "'Daddy, you're the bad guy, and you have to get us.' And as they are running and taunting me, 'you can't get me, you can't get me,' something snaps and now all I want to do is scare the crap out of them. I forget they're my kids."

The focus on the new aspects of his life in his act is a leap that has paid off.

Breuer even got a bit political, comparing politics to pro-wrestling.

"All politics are like wrestling. They come out in masks and capes and fake fight, then leave and get paid just to f with us."

With a mention of YouTube, Breuer dusted off a classic bit entitled "Party in the stomach," which was met with raucous applause.

"This is to help you guys, especially freshman," Breuer started. "Drinking is like having a party in your stomach. Your stomach's the bouncer, you don't want to piss him off. Don't mix the crowd up."

The bit goes on to include human representations of various brands of beer, Jack Daniels, Scotch and a fuzzy navel. Once tequila joins the party, everything goes to hell.

"All right that's it. Everyone get out," Breuer said impersonating the stomach. "You first ham and eggs, no not that way, the way you came in."

Breuer even broke out an older routine that he saves for receptive crowds. Getting down on one knee he demonstrated a handful of finger gestures on a stool including the three-armed umpire, an adult's first time on a trampoline, the 80's (moonwalk and break dancing) and dog taking a crap. He encouraged the crowd to pay close attention because he knew they would be trying them later in the night after some liquid stimulation.

He even did a recap of the hand gestures for those who were already trying them. "I can tell some of you are spacing, stay with me," Breuer said. "You are going to be doing them wrong – 'No man it was like this; I was there.'"

--- Breuer ended the night by signing autographs and taking pictures with anyone who wanted to hang around. A bootleg copy of the UMass performance was also available.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil@student.umass.edu.

Junior guard Chris Lowe scored 14 points in the Minutemen's 71-59 loss to Saint Louis on Saturday. The Minutemen missed 19-of-21 shots from 3-point range and had zero assists in the second half after four in the first half.

Lowe nets 14 in loss

BASKETBALL from page 8

second stanza. But the Billikens used a 15-2 of their own to take command of the game and the Minutemen never got within seven points of SLU. (12-9, 3-4 A-10).

UMass had three players in double figures, but star shooting guard Ricky Harris wasn't one of them. The sophomore had his lowest-scoring game of the season, scoring six points on 2-of-14 shooting, including a 0-of-9 showing from the 3-point line. Gary Forbes scored his season average of 20 points; Chris Lowe scored 14 and Etienne Brower had 12 points off the bench but fouled out.

Saint Louis also had three players score in double figures, with guards Kevin Lisch and Tommie Liddell III leading the way with 16 points each. The Billikens took 11 fewer shots than UMass did but hit five more field goals.

Against the slow, drawn-out offense of coach Rick Majerus and the Billikens, the Minutemen were unable to set the pace to their liking. The game was played with less speed than usual for UMass, and the ball movement for the Minutemen was not so good as SLU's. Lowe led UMass with three assists – all in the first half – as the team had just four for the game and none in the second half.

Gaffney led all players with 10 rebounds but struggled from the field (1-of-6). Luke Bonner was also strong on the glass in his 19 minutes, (7 rebounds) but he hit just one of his seven shots.

UMass held the edge in points in the paint, 30-24 but lost the battle in points off turnovers by 10 (18-8). The Minutemen didn't hit a field goal in the final 4:38 of the game, missing their final 10 shots.

Coach Travis Ford and the Minutemen are back in action on Feb. 7 at the Mullins Center against Rhode Island (19-3, 5-2 A-10).

Eli Rosenwinkle and Michael King can be reached at sports@dailycollegian.com

BRIAN TEUTSCH/COLLEGIAN

Junior center Cory Quirk scored UMass's fifth goal in Saturday's 5-3 win over Maine. Quirk assisted on two goals along with scoring one, and he posted a plus-4 rating on the night.

Quirk caps win in 100th-career game

HOCKEY from page 8

outshoot the Black Bears 22-3. But Maine only needed one shot to beat UMass freshman goaltender Paul Dainton. With his team's first shot of the game Travis Ramsey sent a one-timer through a screen and past Dainton.

"We've been in that situation a few times this year. Everyone just keeps saying 'keep battling.' We have to keep our heads right and do the small things, go to the net hard and get some goals," redshirt freshman Kevin Kessler said.

Injuries forced Kessler into action recently, and after five games without a goal, the big defenseman chipped in on the offensive side of the puck.

"It was a wraparound, so I started to pinch down. I grabbed the puck, no one saw me so I took it to the net. I just threw it at the net, and I believe it went off the inside of his skate," Kessler said.

Goals by Langeraap and P.J. Fenton gave UMass a 4-1 lead early in the third period, but the Black Bears fought back.

Twenty-four seconds after Maine allowed its fourth goal, senior Nolan Boike skated in on Dainton and lifted the puck past him.

The two teams traded chances in the 11 minutes before Maine freshman Keif Orsini cut the deficit to one. He took a pass from Rob Bellamy and skated in on Dainton. He faked a shot, dangled around Dainton and tucked it under his left pad.

UMass ended the game with a 54-23 advantage in shots on goal. Bishop made 49 saves in the loss. The Minutemen dominated play for most of the game, but Bishop did his best to keep his team in the game.

"We were in the box a lot, obviously if we weren't shorthanded we wouldn't have allowed so many shots," Maine coach Tim Whitehead said. "[Bishop] did everything he could to keep us there. We had no business being in that game at the end."

UMass didn't threaten nearly as much Friday night as it did against Maine on Saturday. Northeastern held UMass to 22 shots and killed off all six UMass power plays in the win. The Minutemen went 1-for-12 on the man advantage over the weekend.

With five minutes left in the third period, UMass had a 5-on-3 with two Huskies in the penalty box but did not score.

NU's (12-8-3, 8-7-2 Hockey East) Randy Guzior beat Dainton at 1:30 of the second period for the game's only goal.

Sophomore defenseman Martin Nolet suffered an injury and did not return to the lineup. The injury to John Wessbecker already shorthanded the UMass defensive core but Kessler, redshirt senior Patrick Dineen and freshman Doug Kuhlin have played well.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com

Redshirt freshman defenseman Kevin Kessler reacts after referees awarded him a goal in the second period. Officials didn't initially see the puck cross the goal line.

Fogerty, Horstmann excel

SWIMMING from page 8

Chalikis won the 50-yard freestyle, while Walsh won the 200-yard freestyle.

UMass was without senior captain Allison Volpe, so co-captains Sam Demty and Colleen McCann were left to lead the Minutewomen. Demty earned second-place in the 100-yard butterfly. Fordham's Caitlin Napoli narrowly edged out Demty for the victory.

McCann took sixth place in both the 200-yard freestyle and the 200-yard individual medley.

Freshman Jessica Starsosielec had an overall solid day, earning second-place finishes in the 100- and 200-yard breaststroke events.

The Minutewomen functioned well as a unit. In both the 200-yard medley and freestyle relays, the Maroon and White took second place.

Massachusetts women's coach Bob Newcomb didn't point out a particular reason for his team's loss but instead explained what the leaders of his team bring to the program.

"They all step-up in their own way," Newcomb said. "It was an emotional day, and emotion took its toll on some of [the seniors] today. Overall, I think this class was great [Saturday]."

UMass used strong efforts from freshman Anne Fogerty and junior Sarah Horstmann for the bulk of the team's points.

Fogerty and Horstmann went one-two in both the 1-meter and 3-meter dives.

The Maroon and White will compete next at the New England Open on Saturday in Kingston, R.I.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior R.J. Rappe won both the 1- and 3-meter diving events for the Minutemen on Saturday. The defending Atlantic 10 Champion in the 1-meter dive looks to repeat in the event later this month.

SJU capitalizes on turnovers

Maroon and White's 25 giveaways costly in A-10 loss

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With 14 turnovers in the first half, the Massachusetts women's basketball team set the tone in the second half by turning the ball over twice on its first three possessions.

"The story of our lives with turnovers. We had plus 20 again, and anytime we do we don't win the game. It was rough," senior forward Kate Mills said.

In a game where the Minutewomen shot well enough to win on any given night by shooting 52 percent from the field and 45 percent from three, they hurt themselves with 25 turnovers. The Minutewomen lost only their second game at home in a 72-66 loss to Saint Joseph's on Sunday. UMass coach Marnie Dacko had a long list of things she would like to see the team improve on.

"We turned the ball over too many times, too many unforced turnovers, too many second-chance points and I'm just disappointed," Dacko said.

Saint Joseph's scored 29 points off of UMass turnovers and scored 11 second-chance points. Saint Joseph's took 11 more shots than UMass and attempted 13 free throws.

The Minutewomen managed to keep a lead for most of the game by forcing 16 turnovers, but they were unable to get production from the other players. Mills finished the game with 27 points and 10 rebounds, and senior forward Pam Rosanio scored 19 points on 7-of-10 shooting.

"Pam and Kate can't do much more for us. I think they're giving us everything they got," Dacko said about her leaders. "We need some other kids to step up."

During the season, Mills and Rosanio lead the team in scoring with an average of 34 points, but they also combine for the team lead in turnovers with seven per contest. Although they are forwards, they are sometimes put in the position of point guard as they average a combined 6.4 assists per game and are expected to constantly handle the ball.

Dacko was forced to play both players the entire game even though Rosanio was playing with one bad leg, and Mills not only had to shoulder the scoring load, she also had to cover 6-foot-3 freshman Sarah Acker one-on-one. If the bench had provided more, Dacko said she would like to play Mills and Rosanio about 32 minutes per game.

"Pam's on one leg, and she's playing harder than a lot of my players," Dacko said. "That's inexcusable, what we take away from [the game] is we have to play better defense."

The rest of the team went 9-for-26 (34.6 percent) from the field. Rosanio and Mills went 7-of-8 from the foul line. The only other player to make it to the line was junior guard Sakera Young, who went 0-for-1. The bench managed eight points and gave the ball away seven times.

"I need to get more from the guards, more from [junior forward] Stefanie Gerardot, more from [freshman forward] Teya Wright, and everybody else has to step up," Dacko said.

For the season the Minutewomen are averaging 18 turnovers and 17 assists per contest. Going forward, the Minutewomen want to turn that ratio and the season into a positive.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

RICH LOMBARDI/COLLEGIAN

Alisha Tatham had four turnovers in yesterday's loss to Saint Joseph's. The Minutewomen turned the ball over 25 times in the game and allowed 15 offensive rebounds.

Minutewomen blow late lead against Hawks blocked four Hawk shots and has a team-high 41 blocks on the season.

W. BASKETBALL from page 8

"The last person down the court, we call them the safety, and they're usually open for a shot because teams kind of forget about them," Mills said of her 3-point shooting. "Marnie always wants me ready to shoot when I run down the court. It's been open a couple times."

As they have for the majority of the season, the Minutewomen struggled with turnovers. In the first half alone, they turned the ball over 14 times but still remained in the game. St. Joe's Brittany Ford turned the ball over twice in the final minute of the half, and UMass converted on layups by Alisha Tatham and Pam Rosanio.

UMass finished the game with 25 turnovers, which led to 29 St. Joe's points. The Hawks had 16 turnovers of their own but led to only 11 Minutewoman points.

Offensive rebounding has also been a problem for the Maroon and White this year, and yesterday was no different. Nearly half (15) of St. Joe's 33 rebounds came on the offensive boards, and combined with the turnovers, it explains why the Hawks attempted 11 more shots than UMass. The Minutewomen finished the game shooting 51.9 percent, which was nine percent better than St. Joe's.

Rosanio shot well (7-of-10), finishing the game with 19 points and a team-high five assists. Mills and Rosanio both played all 40 minutes, and the latter's leg was heavily wrapped. Dacko would like these two players' minutes to decrease but feels forced to leave them in the game due to a lack of offensive production from the rest of the team.

In addition to turnovers and offensive rebounding, bench production was another factor that favored the Hawks. Amy Gillespie contributed 12 points off the bench, and teammate Jenna Loschiavo accounted for six more.

These were the only players to score off the St. Joe's bench, but it was enough.

Sakera Young led the UMass bench effort with four points, and Wright and Tatham both had one basket each.

Whitney McDonald contributed six points, while Kim Benton and Stefanie Gerardot both had three.

Freshman Teya Wright gives the Minutewomen a rebounding presence off the bench, but her minutes were limited due to foul trouble. In 11 minutes, she had five rebounds but also committed four fouls. She was in the game during the final minutes, and along with Mills, is the team's best rebounder.

GAME NOTES

The game's attendance (556) was the second lowest of the year, possibly due to the game being played on Super Bowl Sunday ... Hawks point guard Mary Kate McDade had six assists while committing two turnovers ... St. Joe's went 6-of-14 from beyond the arc, while UMass was 5-of-11 from deep.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

Small brothers lead Minutemen in N.H.

BY DAVID BRINCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's ski team rebounded from a disappointing first day of the Plymouth State Carnival on Jan. 26th and 27th as sophomore Matt Small impressed for the Minutemen.

Small finished in fifth place with a combined time of 1 minute, 40.87 seconds, while sophomores Andrew Hawes and Ian Hohmeister finished fifth and eighth in the slalom respectively, on Friday.

Senior Jason Small struggled in the slalom but finished first in the giant slalom Saturday with a time of 2:13.55 seconds.

Overall, the team came back and had a great skiing day on Saturday, moving into second place in the Eastern Collegiate Ski Conference.

The Minutewomen moved into third place in the ECSC thanks in part to senior Eliza Hawkins, who placed third in the slalom event with a combined time of 1:35.46 seconds.

Freshman Jamie Taloumis took over the giant slalom event, coming in second by one one-hundredth of a second and finished fourth with a total time of 2:22.56 seconds.

Last weekend, the team traveled to New Hampshire to compete in the MIT Carnival.

The men's team finished third behind Boston College and Plymouth State, as Matt Small finished eighth in the slalom with a total time of 1:58.05 seconds, the only top-ten finish for the Minutemen in the event.

Sophomore Travis Hopkins finished 14th with a total time of 1:59.57 seconds, while classmate Adam Pogorzelski and junior Alex Zahoruiko finished out of the top 25, with 2:00.48 seconds and 2:02.59 seconds respectively.

The Minutewomen were impressive for a second consecutive week, finishing second behind Colby-Sawyer College at the Carnival.

Hawkins finished second in the slalom, while sophomore Ashley Hawes and Taloumis rounded out the top ten.

Sophomores Heidi Skinner and Lauren Levey were also successful in the slalom, finishing in 23rd and 31st place, respectively.

The women's team got some bad news when they found out that freshman Amy Gifford would be lost for the year with a torn ACL and meniscus.

The men's team continues to be in second place in the ECSC, while the women are still in third place behind Colby-Sawyer College and Boston College.

Next weekend, the team will travel to Vermont to compete in the Boston College Carnival.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

DiOrio captures 800-meters

Both UMass teams finish third at URI

BY RICKY EDDLESTON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts track and field teams traveled to Rhode Island this past Saturday for the URI Invitational. Both the men's and women's squads finished 3rd behind UNH and overall winner URI.

The men's strongest showing was in the 800-meter run with sophomore Ryan Diorio finishing first with a time of 1 minute, 58.3 seconds. Senior Ryan Durkin took third place for the Minutemen with a time of 1:59.80. Sophomore Mark Mariano and senior James Bentley finished 6th and 7th, respectively, rounding out the UMass runners in the event.

The Minutemen 4x400-meter relay team made up of senior Nathan Barksdale, freshman Matt Gulino and sophomores Samuel Laorenza and Andrew Odennel won the relay at the Invitational, finishing with a time of 3:24.27.

Junior Josh Boone finished second in the 1,000-meter run, posting a time of 2:28.61. Sophomores Andrew McCann and Jonathan Pierce also placed in the event, rounding out the top 10. Sophomore Brian Miller came in fourth place in the 55-meter dash with a time of 6.68. Miller also finished fourth in the high jump with a distance of 1.94 meters. Sophomore Ian Hackney came in third in the 200-meter dash, finishing in 22.61.

In the 3000-meter run, sophomore Nicolai Naranjo put up a time of 8:36.93, placing him second in the race. Junior Jesse Regnier finished two spots behind with a time of 8:48.51. In the 55-meter hurdles, sophomore Tyler Cotto finished in 7.77, placing him third in the event.

The Minutewomen had a few individual victories in their third-place performance at the Invitational. After finishing first in the preliminaries, senior sprinter Danielle Bolt finished first in the 55-meter dash with a time of 7.20, earning the Minutewomen 10 points for the event. Sophomore Holly Heinricher finished sixth in the event with a time of 7.60, earning three points.

The Minutewomen also had a strong outing by senior Christina DeRosa in the 1-mile run, winning the event by nearly seven seconds, finishing in 5:09.89. Freshman Liz Fisk finished third in the event, coming in with a time of 5:19.99.

Senior Kristen Bakanowski won the pole vault for the Minutewomen with a height of 3.70 meters. Freshman Janelle Denehy came in fourth and sophomore Molly Chaplin came in right after her. Freshman Lindsey Lfau and Michelle Finley finished 15th and 16th in the event, respectively

The Minutewomen won the distance medley putting up a time of 12: 48.75 with a team made up of Seniors Taryn Trapp and Britt Canfield and freshmen Gina Perno and Fisk.

Both the men's and women's teams are back in action this upcoming weekend when they compete in the Valentine Invitational in Boston on Feb. 8-9.

Ricky Eddleston can be reached at reddlest@student.umass.edu.

UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Ryan Durkin finished in third place in the 800-meters for the Minutemen.

Since we're making this 2 hours before the Super Bowl, all of us at the COLLEGIAN would like to say GO PATS!
WE REGRET DOING THIS IF THEY LOSE

AFRICAN BEADED ART
POWER AND ADORNMENT
On View February 1-June 15, 2008
Friday, February 8 4-9 pm
(snow date February 9)
Free Second FRIDAYS festivities featuring music by the Afro-beat band NOMO!
SCMA is pleased to present Second Fridays in conjunction with NORTHAMPTON
ART MENTOR FOUNDATION LUCERNE
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP
413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton MA

SEMESTER KICKOFF MEETING
Join the UMass Republican Club as we kick off another passion-filled semester. We encourage you to attend and not only hear about what we do as a student group - and it is NOT all politically based -
But also listen to the National Primary Day "Super Tuesday" election results as they roll in.
Tuesday, 5 February 7PM Campus Center 165-69
Refreshments will be provided to all attendees
COLLEGE REPUBLICANS THE ONLY PARTY THAT CARES
Office Phone Number: (413) 545-3317
Contact Phone Number: (857) 888-6434
Office Location: Room 423B Student Union
E-mail: President Brad DeFlumeri: bdeflume@student.umass.edu

DON'T FORGET TO CHECK OUT THE DAILYCOLLEGIAN ON WEB SITE MULTIMEDIA, BLOGS, AND COMMUNITY FEEDBACK

Erin McShenanigans: Masters Degree in not paying attention during lectures.

Thank you for being a contributing member of society.

								4
			1	8	5	2
		9			3	5	1
			2	8			3
7	1							2	5
			6			7	9
		4	1	3				9
			9	2	5	1
8

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Write hastily
7 Tool one's own horn
11 NYC arena
14 New member of the team
15 Gandhi's rival
18 Santa ___ winds
17 Ahead
18 Compensations
20 Hen product
22 Gives
23 Couples' perches
26 Frighten
29 Highest point
30 Express
32 Family greeting
33 Site of the Louvre
35 Ball attendee
37 Cuts slits
40 Supporting fans
44 Floozies
46 Show to be false
47 Chromosome unit
50 Fabler
53 Alleviate
54 Forewarnings
56 Molded
58 Cochise's tribesmen
60 TV guide abbr
61 Tool in a trunk
63 Fine speaker
68 Alore
69 Parking penalty
70 Unpigmented
71 Ballad ending?
72 Trial by fire
73 Business magnate

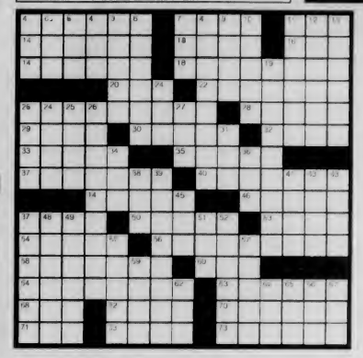
DOWN
1 No-seats-available letters
2 Pro's foe
3 Horizontal lineup
4 Rap-sheet initials
5 Performs an electrician's job
6 Mountain climbers' rests
7 Natl. TV network
8 Car with a rumble seat
9 Norway's capital
10 Stops sucking
11 Fruity cocktail
12 Exhibits scorn
13 Radon and neon
19 Loan shark, e.g.
21 Mobster's rod
23 Indy circuits
24 October stone
25 Aloe
28 Being
27 Diner's bill
31 "Telephone Line" rock grp
34 Na Na
36 High shot
38 Period
39 Some relatives by marriage
41 Zest
42 Float up
43 Plant starter
45 Retirement grp
47 Chin whiskers
48 Magritte's purview
49 More convenient
51 Giant great
52 Lt. Kennedy's vessel
55 Work stretch
57 Kind of bird?
59 HOMES part
62 Catch (fish)
64 Opening letters
65 Yucatan's uncle
66 Lennon's Yoko
67 Gadgeteer Pupkin

$ CASH FOR YOUR CLOTHES $
how does it work?
you bring us your awesome clothes... we sell them... you make money!
it's so easy!
No appointment necessary
Buy & Sell at the area's BIGGEST & BEST consignment store!
exclusive Drop & Shop Rewards
Urban Exchange
233 Main Street Northampton MA
413-585-8729
(walking distance from Smith College)

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Mugatu is so hot right now he could take a crap, wrap it in tinfoil, put a couple fish hooks on it and sell it to Queen Elizabeth as earrings."
–Jerry Stiller as "Maury Ballstein"

PAUL BY BILLY O'KEEFE



RETRO GEEK BY STEVE DICKENSON AND TODD CLARK

LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELLY

Continuing & Professional Education
Summer Session 2007
No Matter where you are...
Session I June 2 - July 6
Session II July 9 - August 17
Online Gen Ed's
Small Classes
Great Faculty
PLAN AHEAD!
UMassULearn.net

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
If you find yourself using your butt more for mooning than excreting, you are both insane and constipated.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You are a minor in possession of too much maturity. Take the stick out of your butt, regress a bit and have some fun.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Before you start sucking wildly at someone's throat, ask if they mind bearing a large shameful hickey for the next week.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
You are an awkward turtle.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
You need to (insert clue for 10 down) at a (insert clue for 21 down) and spread some of your (insert clue for 47 across)s.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
If your t-shirt costs more than $25... you are an ass.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
It is never to late break into someone's apartment and steal their cleaning supplies for use in your own putrid bathroom.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Regardless of the outcome of the Superbowl, the event felt empty without a wardrobe malfunction.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Don't be so fruity; try a legume.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Hopefully this weekend has taught you that the only things frat parties have to offer are half a cup of beer and dirty shoes.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Listen dude, your mouth will never be able to reach...stop trying.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
The conditions of Cancer's horoscope are null and void if you are under the influence of ether and/or the cashier is cute

SCRATCH AND SNIFF.

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT. FOR RENT

Center of Town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherst-lincolnrealty.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lake-front cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today toll free at 1-888-684-2267 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

RAFT GUIDES
Zoar Outdoor is seeking adventuresome people to be full and part-time summer raft guides. Learn how to guide a raft during our training program and spend the summer on the Deerfield River. Applicants should have customer service experience and a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independently. Application deadline: Feb. 15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

SERVICES

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab.linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

SERVICES

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

Spring Break from $199 Land price starting from $199 for 7 days. We also have an all inclusive hotel start from $799 per person. Give us a call today it's not to late to still get away 1-800-GET-SUN-1

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Back on Maine Street

BRIAN TRUSHEIM/COLLEGIAN

Senior winger P.J. Fenton celebrates his second period goal during Saturday night's 5-3 victory over Maine. The Minutemen snapped a seven-game winless streak with the victory after a 1-0 loss to Northeastern on Friday night extended it.

Winless streak ends at seven after 5-3 victory

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Junior Cory Quirk played in his 100th career game as a member of the Massachusetts hockey team Saturday night. Quirk capped the milestone off with an empty-net goal in No. 15 UMass's 5-3 win over Maine.

The win also ended UMass's winless streak at seven after a 1-0 loss at Northeastern the previous night.

UMass	5
Maine	3
NU	1
UMass	0

The goal was Quirk's third point of the game after he assisted on goals scored by P.J. Fenton and Chase Langeraap. Freshman James Marcou also accounted for three points including scoring UMass's (10-9-6, 5-8-5 Hockey East) first goal.

Maine (8-13-3, 4-10-3 Hockey East) freshman Jeff Dimmen went off on a roughing penalty at 16:40 of the first period. Langeraap and Maine defenseman Bret Tyler were called for matching penalties at 16:03 for hitting after the whistle. This gave the Minutemen a 4-on-3 for 1 minute, 15 seconds.

The Minutemen tested Maine goaltender Ben Bishop throughout the 4-on-3 but couldn't beat him. As the penalty expired, a shot came in from the point, and Marcou crashed the net. The rebound came to him, and he slipped it past Bishop to tie the game at 1-1.

"It was good to get our first goal after getting shutout [Friday night]," Marcou said. "From a team aspect, I think [the goal] was a big boost of confidence. Once we had that confidence, we went from there."

The goal came at the end of a period that saw UMass

See HOCKEY on page 5

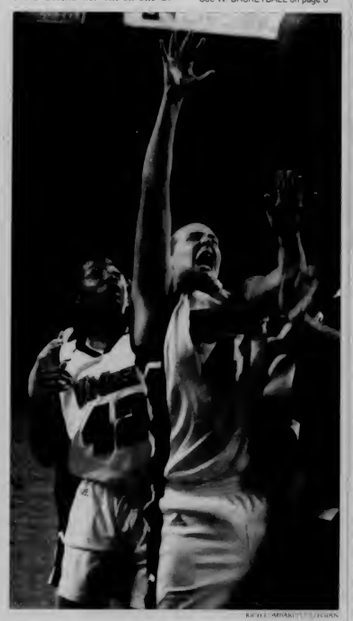
Maroon and White fall despite Mills's 27

Saint Joseph's Acker scores 24 points in comeback win

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts women's basketball coach Marnie Ducko thought her team could stop Saint Joseph's Sarah Acker by using one defender in the post and forcing her right – she was wrong.

SJU	72
UMass	66



The center scored 24 points on an efficient 10-of-14 shooting performance and also recorded 16 rebounds in her team's 72-66 road victory. When the ball was passed to her in the post, the Minutewomen (10-11, 2-4 Atlantic 10) had no answers.

Ducko hoped that Kate Mills could defend her one-on-one as other teams have done this year but the lefty established deep, inside position and used her height advantage to score baskets in the paint.

"We made their freshman post player look like an All-American," Ducko said following the game.

Although Mills had trouble defending Acker, the Hawks (11-10, 3-3 A-10) couldn't find anyone to stop Mills. The senior forward had a double-double with 27 points and 10 rebounds, including 2-of-4 from beyond the arc. She also

See W. BASKETBALL on page 6

RACHEL WEAKLY/COLLEGIAN

Kate Mills scored 27 points, grabbed 10 rebounds, blocked four shots and assisted on four scores in UMass's 72-66 loss yesterday.

SLU ties up Harris, UMass

Minutemen miss 19-of-21 3-pointers in loss to Billikens

BY ELI ROSENWAIKE AND MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

No matter what happens during its final nine regular season games, the Massachusetts men's basketball team will not be remembered for its consistency in 2007-08. The Minutemen lost to Saint Louis, 71-59, Saturday afternoon at the Scottrade Center.

The loss continued the team's pattern of following impressive victories with letdowns against lower quality opponents. The Minutemen have now lost three of their last four games and the team stands in seventh place in the Atlantic 10.

The Minutemen fell victim to a poor shooting performance against Saint Louis, making just 30.3 percent of their shots, including a 2-for-21 performance from beyond the arc. Their 59 points is a season low.

SLU	71
UMass	59

After losing two straight games, UMass (14-7, 3-4 Atlantic 10) appeared to have corrected things in an impressive victory over Duquesne, 84-70, on Thursday night in Pittsburgh, Pa. But the Minutemen had trouble adjusting to the vastly different pace of play against the Billikens – a team that prefers to slow the game down, unlike both UMass and Duquesne.

The Minutemen had trouble making shots from the start, as forward Tony Gaffney missed an open layup 20 seconds into the contest. With an 11-for-30 shooting performance in the first half, UMass trailed, 34-28, entering the break. The Minutemen trailed throughout the game, never once taking the lead.

The closest they came was within two points (at 34-32) early in the second half, following a 13-2 run spanning the final 3:21 in the first half and the first two minutes in the

See M. BASKETBALL on page 5

MICHAEL THELEN/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore shooting guard Ricky Harris struggled from the field Saturday night, hitting 2-of-14 shots in the 71-59 loss to Saint Louis. UMass has now lost three of its last four games in the Atlantic 10 and plays Rhode Island next on Thursday night at the Mullins Center.

FU spoils Senior Day for Minutewomen

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts swimming and diving teams earned a split this past Saturday against Fordham. It was Senior Day at Joseph L. Rogers Jr. Pool, and the upperclassmen did not disappoint a packed pool deck.

The Minutemen won 12 of the 16 events on the day. The Maroon and White saw strong performances from each of its four captains. Senior A.J. Vozella had tremendous success in all of his events.

Vozella finished the 200-yard freestyle event at a time of 1 minute, 41 seconds, a pool record. Vozella also won the 100-yard freestyle and swam lead for the winning line in the 200-yard freestyle relay. Vozella's lane began the race quickly, aiming for another pool record, the foursome finished three seconds slower than the record time.

A number of factors led to Vozella's success, specifically, the fact that this is the first season that the Weymouth, Mass. native is healthy at this time of year. Also, Vozella swam with a specialized suit that is longer than traditional swim trunks and is intended to reduce drag in the lower half of the body.

Vozella's co-captains had similar success in the water. Senior Zack Priest won the 200-yard butterfly event ahead of teammate sophomore Mike Berthaume. Sophomore Tim Smith's third-place finish completed the sweep for the Minutemen in that event. Priest also took second place in the 100-yard butterfly event, behind junior Nate Bromage.

Freshman Max Butler continues to blossom into a leader through his strong results in meets. Butler has placed in the top three on the team in every backstroke event this season. Butler took first place in both the 100 and 200-yard backstroke events.

Massachusetts men's coach Russ Yarworth observed the efforts of his swimmers and knew the fact that it was his senior's last home meet, played into the effort put forth by the team.

"It's an emotional day for [the seniors] because it's their last home meet," Yarworth said. "They've got this tradition of UMass swimming, and they're going to be walking away from it soon. So they came into the pool ready to swim."

In diving, senior R.J. Rappe swept both events, taking both the 1 and 3-meter dives.

"I [dove] last year, and I just got it back a couple of weeks ago," Rappe said. "So we're still working the kinks out of it."

However, Rappe's reverse two-and-a-half pike on the 3-meter board marked a stellar performance – he scored a seven from both judges.

"At the end of this season, Rappe will leave behind a talented group of raw divers. However, Massachusetts diving coach Mandy Hixon pinpointed sophomore Byron Johnson as the eventual leader of the group.

"I think Byron's going to step up, and he's doing a great job of continuing to do well," Hixon said.

The many second-place finishes were not enough to help the Minutewomen compete very effectively against the Rams because they were not coupled with nearly as many first-place finishes. The only first-place finishes for the Maroon and White were from sophomores Kathryne Chalikis and Elizabeth Walsh.

See SWIMMING on page 5

INSIDE: JONES LIBRARY HOSTS POETRY READING | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SHOWERS : HI: 47 LO: 41 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 2008

Police arrest eight after Super Bowl

About 300 gather in Southwest following Patriots' 'super' loss

BY DAVID HUMPHREYS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Eight individuals were arrested last night during a post-Super Bowl gathering in the University of Massachusetts Southwest Residential area.

The crowd – consisting of approximately 300 students, according to Ed Blaguszewski, director of the Office of News and Information at UMass – was "largely subdued and peaceful."

"Compared to other events, it was a pretty small crowd," he said.

Students gathered following the New York Giants' 17-14 win over the hometown Patriots at about 10:05 p.m. At approximately 10:40 p.m., University police read a dispersal order, which was followed by the majority of the crowd, said Blaguszewski.

Police officers from the State Police, Amherst Police, and University Police departments arrived on scene before the crowd formed.

At one point, Patriots fans surrounded and threw ice off the ground at a group of singled-out Giants fans. Fights broke out between fans of either teams.

One student was reportedly taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital for injuries sustained during a fight.

Police arrested all eight individuals and charged them with disorderly conduct. Police are also filing four charges of resisting arrest, one charge of assault and battery of a police officer, and one charge of interfering with a police horse.

There was no reported property damage.

UMPD was unavailable for comment.

Will McGuinness and Brian Tedder contributed to this report

David Humphreys can be reached at dhumphre@student.umass.edu.

State, local and University police were on hand Sunday night in Southwest after the New England Patriots lost Super Bowl XLII. Officers arrested eight, charging them with disorderly conduct after a crowd of around 300 gathered in the residence area.

Off-campus attack hospitalizes three

BY MICHAEL KING AND AMBER VAILLANCOURT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A beating involving lacrosse sticks and bottles left three college-aged males with non-life threatening injuries in an off-campus incident Friday morning in a North Pleasant Street apartment.

According to Amherst police, approximately 12 young men forcibly entered the apartment and struck several people. The three victims were treated at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton for injures, including contusions and lacerations. The names of the men have not been released.

Retaliation for a previous disagreement allegedly served as the motivation for the dozen assailants, according to the police investigation.

Amherst police have not pressed charges or made any arrests to date and are still trying to determine if the assailants are members of an athletic organization or University of Massachusetts students.

However, the Amherst police confirmed on Sunday that members of the UMass men's lacrosse team are suspects in the ongoing investigation.

The University announced on Saturday that eight members of the team are suspended indefinitely for an undisclosed violation of team rules. The release said that the suspensions stemmed from an off-campus incident on Friday.

UMass men's lacrosse sports information director Jason Yellin declined to comment on the nature of the suspensions. Coach Greg Canella also declined comment.

Among the suspended players is junior attackman Jim Connolly (North Andover, Mass.), the team's leading scorer last season.

The remaining suspended players include redshirt sophomore Jordan Hendry (Englewood, Colo.), junior Justin Kelleher (Brewster, N.Y.), sophomore Chris Haggerty (West Nyack, N.Y.) and freshmen Chris Casey (Duxbury, Mass.), Jay Lucas (Bedford Hills, N.Y.), Ryan Marcus (South Hadley, Mass.) and Alex Whitney (North Hampton, N.H.).

Michael King and Amber Vaillancourt can be reached at news@dailycollegian.com.

Toong serving up humble pie

Dining Services director sends Rutgers University Boston fare

BY JESSICA SACCO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Patriots' loss in the Super Bowl leaves University of Massachusetts Dining Services Director Ken Toong serving Rutgers students lobsters and clam chowder as part of his bet with his Rutgers University counterpart, Charles Sam.

The two schools had agreed to a friendly food wager on the fate of what would happen during Sunday's game. If the Patriots had won, Sam would have sent Toong a typical New Jersey menu that would include Jersey lobsters, steamers, Shore Pork Roll and baked goods. Sam would have sent his Rutgers executive chef to UMass to prepare a special meal for Toong and a few students as well.

With the Giants win, Toong will instead be sending Sam a basket of Boston treats, which will include lobsters, clam chowder, steamers, sushi and cranberry coffee cake.

A photo of UMass' executive chef Willie Sng wearing a New York Giants T-shirt and cap while cooking the meal will also be included.

Before this, Toong had won all three of the previous bets he had made. Even during the last seconds of the game, where the Giants led by three, he still believed the Patriots would be triumphant.

"Knowing our power and fans, I thought we could come back. I knew all we needed was a field goal. I still had hope until the last play. I believed in a miracle," he said.

Toong, who has worked at UMass for the past nine years, has been making bets ever since the Patriots began their Super Bowl run five years ago. He thought it was a good option to have a fun wager with peers from other schools, while promoting campus dining at the same time.

"It helps add to maximal excitement on campus," he said.

Rutgers University was Toong's third choice, as he had hoped to make the wager with either New York University or Columbia.

Both schools believed the Patriots would complete their season undefeated, and passed on the wager.

Toong, like many other New England residents, believed the Patriots would be victorious, but after Sunday's loss many are left shocked and disappointed.

Freshman David Magley said, "I didn't think that Bill Belichick would have allowed anything less than greatness in the game."

Even freshman Kara Scimecca – who had been rooting for the Giants the entire time – was shocked not to see the Patriots come out on top.

"I thought the Patriots would have won because they are so good. And now their whole season is down the drain," she said.

Toong has found a silver lining in the loss. With 15 different types of cuisine served at UMass, Toong plans to make the best out of the situation by showcasing some of UMass' specialties.

"I will turn it [the loss] into a positive experience. We should be blessed with the success that we had all season," said Toong.

The defeat has not discouraged Toong's wagering ways, either. He said that even though he is "eating a humble pie," he will continue to make wagers with different schools in the area in hopes of promoting campus dining and the chance to win more "goodies."

Jessica Sacco can be reached at jsacco@student.umass.edu

Students at Rutgers University are going to have a little taste of dining services after Ken Toong lost his bet with the New Jersey school.

Governor's budget funds Five Colleges

AMANDA LUNDIN/COLLEGIAN

Gov. Deval Patrick moved to increase funding for the Five Colleges Incorporated system by $20.7 million last week.

BY JENNIFER BERGEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Governor Deval Patrick proposed a $20.7 million increase towards the Five Colleges Incorporated system this past week. Patrick's 4.4 percent growth was a part of a plan to spend $1 billion on public higher education.

One of the many ideas that Patrick has brought to the attention of the state regarding public higher education involves proposing a $441,467 increase for the state's scholarship fund and ultimately raising the fund from $93.8 million to $94.3 million.

"As a UMass student, I appreciate the increase funding that the governor has provided for public higher education, but I am concerned about the amount of spending that he is pushing for the next fiscal year," said Jeff Ellis about the proposal.

Also, itemized on a separate line on the budget is a proposed $541,000 for the Edward Collins Jr. Center for Public Management located at the University of Massachusetts Boston.

Patrick's recommended budget was "shaped by current fiscal and economic realities," said Jack Wilson, the president of the UMass system.

Patrick's motives for spending do not take into account such additional line items as a $14.9 million appropriation for collective bargaining or the many new institutes and centers around the University leading to a $5.8 million overflow of current funding. In the spring the House and the Senate will make budget plans of their own, which will ultimately be sent to the governor in its final proposed state.

The governor's overall recommended state budget for fiscal 2009 stands at $28.2 billion. The new fiscal year will begin July 1.

Jennifer Bergen can be reached at jbergen@student.umass.edu.

Nanotechnology center of UM Lowell deal

TIM RIESZ/WWW.TIMRIESZ.COM

Researchers with the University of Massachusetts Lowell have partnered with Newton-based Pro Pharmeceuticals for the study of cancer.

BY MATT SHEEHAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts Lowell has allied with Pro Pharmaceuticals of Newton, Mass., in a research collaboration focused on target drug therapy in response to cancer.

The venture stems from the $1 billion Life Sciences Initiative proposed by Governor Deval Patrick last May. The legislation outlined an effort to join the state's private industry and institutions in the advancement of scientific innovation and strengthening of the economy.

"We are working to respond to the governor's $1.2 billion initiative and ensure that the UMass System takes full advantage of the funding distributed," said Dr. Robert Nicolosi, head of the Center for Health and Disease Research at Lowell.

The UMass system has made a concerted effort to establish itself as a formidable presence in the world of nano and microsystem technology. The New England Journal of Technology reported that part of the reason for the collaboration was UMass Lowell's expertise in nanotechnology. Nanotechnology deals with invention and innovation on a smaller scale.

"Collaborating with the University of Massachusetts Lowell represents an exciting opportunity to partner with a premier academic institution," said David Platt, Ph.D., Pro Pharmaceuticals chairman and chief execu-

See LOWELL on page 3

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

► Celebrity intern club.*

pwc.tv/ch1

Newbies now playing on www.pwc.tv/ch1

*connectedthinking

© 2008 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. "connectedthinking is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

Across the Nation News Wire Around the World

Judge rules taped admission admissable in Aruban court

By Margaret Wever
Associated Press

A hidden-camera interview with a Dutch student saying missing teenager Natalee Holloway was dead and that he had a friend dump her body at sea is admissible in court, the chief Aruban prosecutor said Monday.

The courts in Aruba will likely accept the tape as evidence because it was recorded by a private citizen without any influence by authorities, Chief Prosecutor Hans Mos told reporters.

"I take it very seriously," Mos said of the video.

The tape, which was first broadcast Sunday on Dutch television, has appeared to spur the investigation: Mos said authorities in the Netherlands searched two homes Monday where Joran Van der Sloot has lived while attending college there.

A judge in Aruba denied a prosecution arrest to detain Van der Sloot based on the new information. Mos said they will file an appeal Tuesday and expect a decision within a week.

The prosecutor declined to provide any details about the searches. Bert de Rooij, a lawyer for Van der Sloot in the Netherlands, said police took a hard drive and a laptop.

De Rooij, speaking on Dutch television Monday, said the college student would make himself available for questioning by authorities if necessary. "As far as Joran is concerned, that can happen soon," he told the news program "Nova."

In the secret recordings, Van der Sloot said Holloway, 18, was drunk and that she began shaking and slumped down on the beach as they were kissing in May 2005.

"Suddenly she started shaking and then she didn't say anything," Van der Sloot said in Dutch, adding that he did not kill her. "I would never murder a girl."

He said he panicked and tried but failed to revive her. He said that Holloway looked dead but that he could not be sure she was not still alive when a friend took her away.

Joran Van der Sloot was recorded during a hidden-camera interview saying he had a friend dump Natalee Holloway's (above) body in the sea.

Mos said prosecutors believe Van der Sloot was telling the truth in the video because he seemed to struggle as he told the story and repeated it several times.

"Now, whether that is the truth, that has to be seen ..." he said. "Finally the court will have to decide whether this is a declaration ... that we can use as evidence in this court of law."

In the interview, Van der Sloot speaks to Patrick van der Eem, a 34-year-old Dutch businessman who told ABC News that he befriended the younger man with the intention of prying a confession out of him.

Van der Eem said he spent about two months getting to know Van der Sloot, regularly smoking marijuana together and playing poker late into the night, the businessman approached Dutch television crime reporter Peter R. de Vries, who rigged up a new Range Rover with secret cameras to capture their conversations.

"Why did I want this? It's obvious. Everybody was looking for the truth for (Holloway's) mother," he told ABC News, which planned to broadcast the interview on its "20/20" program Monday night. "I'm a father. I have two children, a girl six years old and a boy two years old."

Van der Eem, who grew up in the Caribbean, said he was angry with Van der Sloot for damaging the reputation of Aruba and the Netherlands.

Joseph Tacopina, a lawyer for student Joran Van der Sloot, said his client was not responsible for the Alabama teenager's death and that the tapes do not amount to a confession.

"There was no confession, no admission of a crime by Joran on any of these tapes, which is very telling," Tacopina said on ABC's "Good Morning America."

Study finds health costs for obese low

By Maria Cheng
Associated Press

Preventing obesity and smoking can save lives, but it doesn't save money, researchers reported Monday. It costs more to care for healthy people who live years longer, according to a Dutch study that counters the common perception that preventing obesity would save governments millions of dollars.

"It was a small surprise," said Pieter van Baal, an economist at the Netherlands' National Institute for Public Health and the Environment, who led the study. "But it also makes sense. If you live longer, then you cost the health system more."

In a paper published online Monday in the Public Library of Science Medicine journal, Dutch researchers found that the health costs of thin and healthy people in adulthood are more expensive than those of either fat people or smokers.

Van Baal and colleagues created a model to simulate lifetime health costs for three groups of 1,000 people: the "healthy-living" group (thin and non-smoking), obese people and smokers. The model relied on "cost of illness" data and disease prevalence in the Netherlands in 2003.

The researchers found that from age 20 to 56, obese people racked up the most expensive health costs. But because both the smokers and the obese people died sooner than the healthy group, it cost less to treat them in the long run.

On average, healthy people lived 84 years. Smokers lived about 77 years, and obese people lived about 80 years. Smokers and obese people tended to have more heart disease than the healthy people.

Cancer incidence, except for lung cancer, was the same in all three groups. Obese people had the most diabetes, and healthy people had the most strokes. Ultimately, the thin and healthy group cost the most, about $417,000, from age 20 on.

The cost of care for obese people was $371,000, and for smokers, about $326,000.

The results counter the common perception that preventing obesity will save health systems worldwide millions of dollars.

"This throws a bucket of cold water onto the idea that obesity is going to cost trillions of dollars," said Patrick Basham, a professor of health politics at Johns Hopkins University who was unconnected to the study. He said that government projections about obesity costs are frequently based on guesswork, political agendas, and changing science.

"If we're going to worry about the future of obesity, we should stop worrying about its financial impact," he said.

Obesity experts said that fighting the epidemic is about more than just saving money.

"The benefits of obesity prevention may not be seen immediately in terms of cost savings in tomorrow's budget but there are long-term gains," said Neville Rigby, spokesman for the International Association for the Study of Obesity. "These are often immeasurable when it comes to people living longer and healthier lives."

Van Baal described the paper as "a book-keeping exercise," and said that governments should recognize that successful smoking and obesity prevention programs mean that people will have a higher chance of dying of something more expensive later in life.

"Lung cancer is a cheap disease to treat because people don't survive very long," Van Baal said. "But if they are old enough to get Alzheimer's one day, they may survive longer and cost more."

The study, paid for by the Dutch Ministry of Health, Welfare and Sports, did not take into account other potential costs of obesity and smoking, such as lost economic productivity or social costs.

UM student charged with assault after dorm stabbing

Three men were injured and one was arrested on Sunday morning following a fight involving a knife in the lobby of the Mackimmie residence hall, according to University of Massachusetts police.

The alleged attacker, Jason Vassell, 23, is a UMass student and a resident of Mackimmie. Charged with two counts of aggravated assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and two counts of armed assault with intent to rob or murder, Vassell himself received a facial injury in the fight and was treated at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton.

The two victims suffered stab wounds and were treated at Bay State Medical Center in Springfield. Police said they were in fair condition on Sunday afternoon.

Students were prohibited from entering a stairwell and from using the back door for half of the next day. At least two students filled out witness reports, but were asked by police not to talk about the incident to the press while the investigation is still underway.

—Frank Vitale, Collegian Staff

Democrats, Republican Club, SGA ferry voters to the polls

By Kristen Healy
Collegian Staff

Using rented vans, the University of Massachusetts Democrats, Republican Club and the Student Government Association will spend the day shuttling students to Amherst polling stations in the first election without an on-campus voting center.

"This is a totally non-partisan service and we hope that students of all political affiliations will get out and vote in this very important primary," said Matt Giancola, the president of the UMass Democrats. The Republican Club and UMass Democrats, registered student organizations on campus, with the help of the Student Government Association, have rented out vans today to bring students registered as voters in Amherst out to the polls to participate in the Massachusetts primary as part of "Super Tuesday."

"The UMass Republican Club and the UMass Democrats are working cooperatively and collaboratively in going to precincts in Amherst," said Brad DeFlumeri, president of the Republican Club.

The vans, providing a free ride for student voters, are departing from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and will be leaving from the Student Union and bringing students back to campus.

Since the SGA has dissolved the polling station in the Cape Cod Lounge, which served as the polling site for on-campus residents who are registered as Amherst citizens, students must now vote at precincts off campus.

"[We're] ensuring that college students have a say in the Massachusetts Primary," said DeFlumeri.

The UMass community is divided among three locations, the Immanuel Lutheran Church on North Pleasant Street, the Bangs Community Center on Boltwood Walk, and the Wildwood Elementary School on Strong Street.

Voters that are registered as independent may choose either a democratic or republican ballot.

"The UMass Democrats strongly encourage students to get involved in campus, regional and national politics," said Giancola. They are working to increase student participation in political processes by organizing events like today's polling station shuttles.

Tomorrow in the Cape Cod Lounge, a table will be set up with more information on where residents can vote and what van students should be on.

Kristen Healy can be reached at student.umass.edu.

Pro Pharmaceuticals teams up with UMass on cancer research tive officer, this past December.

LOWELL from page 1

The collaboration will further research Pro Pharmaceuticals and lead product DAVANAT in conjunction with the common chemotherapy drug, Fluorouracil (5-FU). Agents like 5-FU are very close in composition to substances found in the cells.

After Fluorouracil is administered to cancer patients, through injection or dermal ointment, it enters cells and thwarts the replication of DNA. Incorporating antimetabolites like 5-FU into malignancies leaves cancerous cells unable to divide, according to the Cleveland Clinic Cancer Center.

However, 5-FU cannot differentiate between tumor cells and normal cells, causing increased toxicity in the body and a weakened immune system.

Pro Pharmaceuticals hopes to decrease toxicity levels and optimize efficacy through target drug therapy. The compound DAVANAT shuttles agents Fluorouracil directly to the tumor. Nicolosi believes decreasing the size of the delivery system affords added benefit.

"A nano-delivery system makes the drug 10 to 20 times smaller than the traditional delivery system. It has increased solubility so fewer drugs are required and it can efficiently accumulate in the desired target," said Dr. Nicolosi.

According to Pro Pharmaceutical, the delivery system DAVANAT identifies cancerous masses due to an abundance of receptors, called galectins, on the masses. The company maintains that galectins are crucial in the survival and proliferation of cancer. Once the DAVANAT binds to galectins, 5-FU is released into the tumor. Because DAVANAT specifically binds to the tumor, there's no increased toxicity in normal cells.

Phase two of the research was released last week, preliminary results showed a mean improvement in the selected cohort. Twenty patients diagnosed with colorectal cancer were monitored in the study.

Matt Sheehan can be reached at mcsheeha@student.umass.edu

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
Issue 77

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Exter
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Arts & Living Editor Tim McCall
Arts & Living Editor Ryan McAskill
Comics Editor Adam Staigin
Editorial Editor S.P. Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Rice
Features Editor Dave Humphreys
Photo Editor Michael Phillis
Web Editor James Hale
Asst. Business Manager Eric Strzemiak
Assistant Advertising Marsea Whooten
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Stephanie McPherson
Asst. Arts & Living Skye McIntyre
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Michael King
Assistant News Kate Olesin
Assistant News Holly Seaburs
Assistant Sports Mike Connors
Assistant Sports Joe Meloni
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenwaike
Assistant photo Brian Tedder
Art/Web Editor Michelle Abbascianto
Editorial Web Editor Lyd Walcutt
New Web Editor Nick Bush
Sports Web Editor Steve Gaines

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Dine & Win!
Enter to win a trip for two with $500 spending money.
UMass Dining, Coca-Cola®, and American Airlines® want to fly you and a guest to any destination during Spring Break in North America including 48 states and Canada!
Enter between January 28 and February 12, 2008 at any UMass Dining Commons or retail location.

*Official rules
• No purchase necessary
• Must be 18 years old or older
• Open to UMass Dining customers
*For details: umass.edu/diningservices OR see entry blanks
Drawing will be held Wednesday, February 13 at 6 pm at Worcester Dining Commons
YCMP RESIDENTIAL Food Management's BEST CONCEPTS

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Readjusting to Egyptian life

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES

Greg Collins

Any of you who claim to have mastered the computer game "Frogger" should immediately pack your bags and come to Egypt to test out your skills in real life.

This game, in which players try to jump a frog across a highway without getting hit, remarkably resembles the conundrum I have encountered here in Cairo, Egypt this past week. Egyptian drivers literally do not have any conception of staying in lanes and stopping at stop signs, much less slowing down at crosswalks for pedestrians.

When I first arrived in Cairo on Jan. 26, the taxi ride from the airport to the international student residence, called Zamalek, was quite possibly the scariest car trip I have ever experienced.

Just a week into my semester-long stay at the American University in Cairo, where I will be studying political science and Arabic, I have noticed other conspicuous cultural differences between here and the states besides the vehicular madness.

Egyptians are extremely hospitable; my second night here, an Egyptian man walked up to my friends and I out of the blue, explained that he spoke some English, and subsequently gave us an impromptu tour of a section of Cairo. He later showed us a nice dinner place, where we ate and discussed soccer and American politics.

This man was one of the many locals we have met who have not hesitated to recommend places to eat, shop and sightsee, and who have even given us their phone numbers. Can you imagine a Bostonian or a New Yorker walking up to an Egyptian on the street in America, introducing himself, and showing him around a city? Neither can I.

The catch, of course, is where to draw the line between genuine hospitality and deceptive geniality. Whenever Americans walk down streets in Cairo, countless small business owners will introduce themselves, and then convince them to buy something in their stores.

Even when Americans make it clear that they don't want to buy anything, salesmen still insist that they come in and browse. Some may even put their hands on their shoulders to make them stay, which is what happened to me and a couple of friends when we visited a bazaar in Islamic Cairo. We eventually ended up giving him 15 pounds to stop bothering us.

Besides the driving and hospitality, there are plenty of other cultural differences.

This local entrepreneurship reveals a fundamental feature of Egyptian society, something not unique to their culture alone. Much debate has circulated in the post-9/11 world over whether Arab societies desire free markets similar to the Western-style capitalism evident in America.

In light of the constant barrage of hospitable, yet frequently manipulative, business owners, let it be known that Egyptians are as, if not more, passionate about earning money as Americans are. Capitalism does not thrive in Egypt, but this is not because local Egyptians do not desire it; rather, it is because government-imposed restrictions inhibit additional economic growth in the country.

Besides the driving and hospitality, there are plenty of other cultural differences. For instance, Egyptians don't like to sleep. The area around Zamalek, one of the more upscale residential places in Cairo, is hopping late into the night. This is great for college students who have nothing better to do than drink Stellas (a popular beer here) at 1 a.m., but it is a problem for adults who need a good night's rest and international students who actually need to study at times.

As a foreigner, I've also noticed that random noises occur at random times. Whether it is the incessant beeping of cars, public calls to prayer throughout the day, or the parties of Coptic Christian weddings, there are a multitude of different sounds you will hear daily, each which represents a unique feature of Egyptian culture.

The most pleasing characteristic of Egypt so far is that everything, from food to clothes to taxis, is incredibly cheap. The aforementioned Stellas cost less than $2 on the dollar, and falafel pitas are sold here literally for around 20 cents. Cab rides usually cost less than a dollar, while very fancy meals will tip the scales at approximately $10. These numbers are especially palatable when I hear study abroad students in Europe complain constantly about the expensive prices there.

And of course, there's the language barrier. At UMass, I studied modern standard Arabic for five semesters, a dialect that is used in the Quran, newspapers and official documents in the Arab world. However, Egypt, like many other Arabic-speaking countries, uses a simplified form of MSA.

Many students here, including myself, found this colloquial dialect to be completely foreign to us at first when we talked with the locals. They would laugh at us in a kindhearted manner when we tried to speak MSA to them, sort of like if an Egyptian spoke Shakespearean English to us in America.

For the past few days, I have attempted to speak the dialect to locals, with mixed results. In any event, it's time to put my life on the line. I need to take a taxi back to Zamalek.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

Seeking a champion

John Gruenenfelder

Zigzagging across the country on my way back to UMass, Arizona to Nevada to Tennessee to Connecticut, there was ample time to read the paper and watch airport television on Martin Luther King Jr. Day. The effect it had on both print and television media was something to revel in. There was generally positive news without having to resort to inane fluff pieces. Ah, to have more days like that.

The purpose of holidays such as this one is only partly remembrance. It is also a time to take stock of what has been accomplished and what still needs to be done.

Seeing the second Super Bowl played in Arizona brings to mind the shameful Super Bowl/MLK controversy in Arizona's recent past. Arizona is not known for having a large black population, yet latent racism seems to fester there, at least, far more so than my two and a half years in Massachusetts have seen.

There is no champion of gay/lesbian civil rights, no champion of the millions of hidden non-citizens in our country.

Growing up in the 1980s and '90s, a debate which should never have been started did due to Arizona being the second to last state to have an MLK holiday.

In 1987, Evan Mecham, the new governor, repealed the MLK holiday created by the previous governor causing some serious protests. Shortly thereafter, the state legislature passed a bill to create the holiday but opponents succeeded in making it a ballot proposition. In 1990, the voters rejected the proposition.

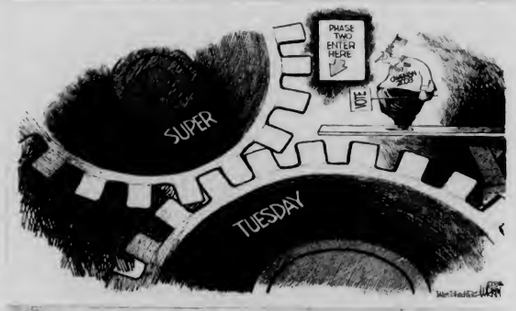
For having no MLK holiday, the NFL removed the forthcoming Super Bowl XXVII from Phoenix and instead awarded it to Pasadena, Calif. With economic sanctions and the nation laughing, voters passed a proposition in 1992, finally creating an MLK holiday despite the objections of then-governor Fife Symington III. Super Bowl XXX was then played in Tempe, Ariz., in 1996.

As a young kid, this all seemed entirely pointless. We had all learned about Dr. King, his accomplishments and his legacy. If anybody deserved a holiday, surely it was he. It may be some consolation that both of the objecting governors were impeached, though for felonies and corruption and not for their opposition to the holiday.

And where are we now? Massachusetts seems to be doing very well. If there's an abundance of racism here, it's hidden very well. The same cannot be said for the country as a whole, unfortunately. Recently, the Jena Six and Duke Lacrosse incidents have graced numerous newspapers. And, of course, the destruction and wholesale reorganization of New Orleans, La., following the hurricanes.

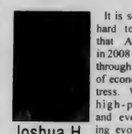
The problems are certainly not confined to African Americans either. The very real problem of illegal immigration has also brought forth the equally real problem of racism against Hispanic people of all origins, and another chance for my home in the Southwest to shine as a beacon of despair. After 9/11, the backlash against Muslims made that tragedy even worse.

Where are today's civil rights leaders? Large portions of the population are no longer faced with complete disenfranchisement, but it's certainly not all roses. Is it because there is no single overwhelming problem for people to rally behind, or because there is nobody strong enough to lead the people?



There is no champion of gay/lesbian civil rights, no champion of the millions of hidden non-citizens in our country. There are well-known leaders in the black community, such as Jesse Jackson and Rev. Al Sharpton, but neither has even a fraction of the support that Dr. King could command.

Are we then, perhaps, far enough along that we need no revolutions and can continue to make slow but steady progress? This was the same argument President Johnson made to Dr. King, but King stood his ground. Progress had been far too slow and nothing short of full equality would be accepted. Dr. King won Johnson's support and while King marched with the people, Johnson worked with Congress.



We could very much use another Dr. King today. Instead of browbeating voters with a Super Bowl economic stick, a well-organized campaign could have, hopefully, accomplished the goal faster. A true civil rights leader, as Dr. King was, realizes that these rights are for all, not just for particular groups.

It is a terrible shame that we are left wondering what further goals Dr. King might have accomplished had his life not been cut short. His focus was equal treatment for African Americans, but his message was equal treatment for all. And while history has shown us that he had faults, he was as close to a saint as any human could possibly come.

John Gruenenfelder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jgruenen a student umass edu

Fixing the economy

Joshua H. Wilder

It is sometimes hard to believe that Americans in 2008 are going through a period of economic distress. With the high-powered and ever-changing evolution of the Internet and our abundance of food and resources, one would think that we all have it made.

Despite America's status as the wealthiest and most powerful nation in the world, its economy has seen much better days. A massive subprime mortgage crisis has essentially frozen the housing market, oil prices have flirted with and exceeded $100 a barrel, and the stock market has been forced to take big hits. Turn on the television and political pundits speak of the possibility of a recession.

Just last month, the House of Representatives approved President Bush's $146 billion fiscal stimulus package in an attempt to jump-start our stalling economy. The plan focuses mostly on tax rebates and large business incentives that will hopefully encourage new spending.

The plan has been met with mixed reactions, as some believe that putting money into the hands of the middle classes will lead to quick spending and an economic resurgence. Others argue that such a plan is only a temporary solution to a deep-rooted and complex problem.

While there is no denying that our economy is in need of some serious help in order to get out of this skid, we have the wrong perspective when thinking about solutions. A "spend money quick" scheme may temporarily give Wall Street something nice to write home about, but the stock market is ultimately just one outlet to focus on.

Stocks can go up and down throughout the course of a year, which will put some pressure on or greatly benefit stockholders, but what effect does this have on the average American?

Just think about our economy in the most basic terms - people need money and in order to get it, they must be gainfully employed. Acquiring and holding down a well-paying job is key when it comes to an individual's own economic well-being. This is why job growth should be the focus of any stimulus plan.

Any major economic plan needs to take such issues into account.

Some major attention needs to be given to people living in what would be considered rural America; large, spread out and sparsely populated areas such as the back roads of places like New Salem and Orange.

While most politicians rightfully place their focus on reviving large cities with widespread crime and major unemployment issues, such as in Gary, Ind., or even locally in Springfield, rural communities are being ignored.

Some may read the above statement and ask themselves: why should we worry about what goes on in a little Podunk town? It may be hard to see how these areas fit into the bigger economic picture.

Despite what you might think, most of America is made up of such small towns. While we have major metropolitan cities like New York, Los Angeles and Chicago, most of this country consists of everyday, ordinary towns.

We need to focus on these towns because people living there are placed at a major disadvantage when compared to city dwellers. The average person living in a big city can go job hunting easily. They can explore a densely populated area with plenty of stores and opportunities either by foot or through public transportation.

Yet for someone living out in the boondocks, going out and looking for a job is not so easy without owning a car. The number of legitimate shops and employment options in a small town are limited, and they are usually spread out all over the town.

If the average person wants to work at the local Friendly's restaurant but lives 20 miles away, they definitely need a car to get there. But cars require money for gasoline, insurance and other fees. Without the job, there is no car, and vice versa. This is one example of the vicious cycle that people can fall into when living away from a major urban area.

Furthermore, one would be hard pressed to find a lot of high-paying jobs without venturing into a major city, so those who do work close to home in most small towns will likely make minimum wage or close to it. It would be nearly impossible to raise a family and send your kids to college when making $7 an hour, and in turn, the child would be given the same low-paying, dead-end options.

Such economic issues also plague major cities, but the problems are magnified in rural towns throughout the country. Any major economic plan needs to take such issues into account. Pumping some money into these areas and creating some new shops and opportunities, take a possible casino in Palmer, for example, would immediately benefit Americans and create some permanent economic growth.

There is no way to fix our economy overnight, but by investing in our towns and providing more options, we can see people improve their means and it will benefit everyone.

Josh Wilder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jhwilder@student.umass.edu

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 2008

ARTS/@ DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Food for Thought sponsors poetry event

Local poets read at Jones Library on Super Sunday

By Sophia Pastore
Collegian Correspondent

"An Afternoon of Poetry" was presented by Food for Thought Books, Perugia Press, Jones Library and the Everywoman's Center at the Jones Library in Amherst on Sunday, Feb. 3. Featured were six poets hailing from all corners of the United States, from as far as Texas to as close as Northampton. All are published and award-winning female poets.

Laurie Guerrero is currently an Ada Comstock Scholar at Smith College. She is a two-time winner of the Rosemary Tomas Poetry Prize and has been published in Palo Alto Review, the 2007 and 2008 Texas Poetry Calendars and Literary Mama. Her forthcoming chapbook was selected as the winner of the Panhandler Publishing competition.

Johnston works as a social worker and is a member of the Florence Poets Society. She has been published in Silkworm, Equinox, and the anthology, "Women. Period." She has a chapbook composed of sensual poetry titled "Struck Just So."

Kim Rogers, the winner of the 2007 Ruth Olin Corbin Prize for Poetry and Pulp City Magazine's Short Story Prize in 2000, has been published in American Writing.

Keli Stewart is the winner of the Douglas Turner Ward/Alice Childress Scriptwriting Award. Her chapbook is titled "Womanish."

Lynne Thompson is the Perugia Prize winner for this year and the author of "Beg No Pardon," the winner of the Great Lakes Colleges Association 2008 New Writers Award.

Nikky Finney is the 2007-08 Graze Hazard Conkling Writer-in-Residence at Smith College. Her poetry book, "Rice," has been awarded the P.E.N. American Book Award.

The topics covered were broad in range, the poets passionate in voice. Subjects varied from the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina to an Indian girl born with eight limbs and two torsos, from dump trucks to pornography, from double-dutch to Robert Johnson. All were covered with brilliant metaphor and laden with personal experience, often painful.

At one point Keli Stewart said that her son, who she used to hold at her hip during her readings when he was smaller, was to leave the room before she read a sexually graphic poem. She said that this was necessary because lately he had been repeating everything she said.

The down-to-earth nature of these poets along with their genuine joy and honor at being together and experiencing one another's work made for a warm, unintimidating atmosphere, which is not always the case at a poetry reading.

"Never, ever take this for granted," said Finney of the crowd gathered in the Jones Library on Sunday. "You make us weep," she said of the young poets and writers in the process of publishing their work. The contented murmur of the audience after nearly every poem seemed to echo these sentiments.

"The people had not poet and so the people died." Finney used this quote from a favorite author to describe her feeling for her work and the work of other poets. She expressed joy at the fact that people still come to readings in our fast-paced modern times.

In our vibrant community, we have the rare opportunity to experience the art of the written word at the many readings that occur not only in Amherst, but in the surrounding area as well. Food for Thought Books and the Everywoman's Center sponsor regular events during the academic year, a list of which can be found on their Web sites.

Sophia Pastore can be reached at spastore@student.umass.edu.

"An Afternoon of Poetry" featured Laurie Guerrero, Kim Rogers, Lynne Thompson and Nikky Finney. Each poet tackled a variety of topics such as pornography and Hurricane Katrina.

Singer Case shines in Noho performance

By Joe Stahl
Collegian Correspondent

Headliner Neko Case made her final stop on the far-to-short New England tour in Northampton this Saturday. Performing at the Calvin Theater, Case and her band arrested the audience with cohesion and surprising informalities.

Opening up for the unprecedented Neko Case was the simple, North Carolinian Eric Bachmann. In the first 15 minutes, Bachmann took some time to gain the attention of the rustling and anxious crowd. After the third song by the beanie-wearing Bachmann, he caught the eyes and ears of the audience not so much for his music, but for his storytelling.

The audience sat up a little higher when Bachmann pulled out some old favorites from Crooked Fingers, his former band. With his dulcet guitar and the occasional harmonica, Bachmann's country crooning melted the audience. In addition, the jokester managed to throw in comic relief with stories about his niece.

After Bachmann's commendable opening, Case and the rest of the band took their sweet time to make their way on stage. With prudence, the sextet got into place and instantly broke into "Widow's Toast," a short but powerful song that painstakingly lifted vocals to a level that most singers will never reach.

Going in and out of newer and older favorites, Case and her dynamic band effortlessly rocked the Calvin with restrained guitars and percussion. One member that was anything but subdued was back-up vocalist, Kelly Hogan. Wearing a white blouse and standing just to the left of Case, Hogan made a surprising impression on the crowd. She brought humor through frivolous antics like abandoning her microphone to go joke with Case in the middle of a song or banter about her shockingly docile dog that sat on stage during the entire show.

In between the set list, Hogan took the microphone to speak to the audience more than any of her bandmates, which was pretty unexpected given the demeanor of stereotypical back-up singers. Not only did her behavior captivate the audience, but also the contributions she made as Case's second voice. For example, in the dark and southern gothic tune "Dirty Knife," Hogan proved her importance through her strong

See NEKO on page 5

New book aids student health

'Dorm Room Diet' author releases sequel to bestseller

By Skye McIntyre
Collegian Staff

Daphne Oz, author of 2006's bestseller "The Dorm Room Diet," recently introduced a pocket-sized component to her first book. "The Dorm Room Diet Planner" is a reader-friendly guide to assist students in making informed and healthy choices regarding food and exercise during their college years.

Unlike other books on nutrition and dieting, "The Dorm Room Diet Planner" is interactive, first posing several pages of questions and supplying space for the reader to fill in the blanks regarding things such as when, where and with whom they typically dine, as well as what habits they possess that can be built upon or changed in order to lead a more healthy lifestyle.

The book then attempts to educate with cleverly-titled sections such as "all calories are not created equal," and "the skinny on fats," each just a few pages long with information given in list form, dispelling food myths and clarifying common points of confusion when it comes to what is considered "bad" and "good" in terms of a variation of foods.

After breaking down the truth about complex carbohydrates, the difference between lean and high-fat sources of protein and sources of high fiber, Oz gives a checklist of foods she categorizes into six groups and says how much of each we should be eating daily and weekly.

She then stresses the importance of exercise and how coeds can work equipment-free, easy-to-perform moves into their hectic schedules. The illustration-filled section comprises the bulk of the 157-page guide, and is arguably the most helpful, considering many students are short on cash to foot a monthly gym membership, and lack an actual space to work out in.

Parts of the book would be pertinent to anyone trying to maintain or lose weight through diet and exercise, yet Oz, a Princeton University undergraduate, targets college students by offering advice on how to combat what she calls "the five biggest danger zones in college."

Studying for tests and writing papers, tailgating and sports events, parties and other campus gatherings, watching television and late-night talks are the areas of college-life that Oz feels are most harmful when it comes to the battle of the bulge.

Though some of her tips are helpful, such as measuring ice-cream visually by eating it out of a bowl instead of a carton, others, such as keeping "a cup of water or a low-sugar beverage in

See DIET on page 5

"The Dorm Room Diet Planner," written by Daphne Oz [illegible] interactive book that provides readers everything they need to live a healthy lifestyle.

'Atonement' fails to live up to expectations

Two lovers separated by lies and jealousy in the 1920s

By Kevin Koczwara
Collegian Staff

For all of its upper-class glamour, "Atonement" isn't afraid to show a grittier side to life, love and war. The movie also isn't afraid to glamorize scenes of war with almost unbearably long tracking shots that are admirable for a few minutes, and only a few minutes. The lighting in the film gives a dreamlike appearance from the beginning and it never lets up, even as British soldiers and civilians die in the wake of war.

It may be the fault of the movie's direction by Joe Wright ("Pride and Prejudice"). The movie holds so well in a piece without the dream feel to war and the glamorization of scenes where soldiers are drunk, incoherent or dying of fatal wounds.

The movie starts off simple and yet is a great story of love, confusion and betrayal. It all begins with the aspiring writer and upper-class storyteller Briony Tallis, played by young actress Saoirse Ronan. She becomes interested in a squabble she sees from a window between her older sister, Cecilia Tallis, played by Keira Knightley ("Pride and Prejudice"), and the son of the housekeeper, Robbie Turner, played by James McAvoy ("The Last King of Scotland").

The argument between the two young lovers gets interesting when Robbie sends Cecilia an explicit apology note that was never meant to be seen. Briony's reading of the apology note leads her to make an assumption that will forever haunt her, her sister and Robbie for the rest of their lives.

After Briony witnesses her sister, Cecilia, and Robbie engaging intimately in their family's home, she assumes that Robbie has taken advantage of Cecilia, and later points fingers at Robbie for raping Briony's young cousin based on misleading events surrounding Robbie and Cecilia.

The movie takes an unexpected turn at this point as Robbie is arrested and imprisoned because of Briony's testimony against him. Cecilia then leaves for London to become a nurse, help with the war effort, and break the ties with her family.

After Robbie is released from jail, he joins the army and goes to war. Cecilia is a nurse searching for Robbie and writing him letters. Briony is nowhere to be seen and Cecilia has not talked to or heard from her family.

She meets Robbie in a small cafe to say goodbye to him as he ventures off to the front-lines of the war in France. It is their bond that has kept them together through all the hardships caused by some blinded eyes and an adolescent mind with an imagination for the ages.

The movie moves from war scene to homeland scenes in Britain, where Briony is searching for her sister to ask for her forgiveness and show her how she has grown. The war scenes are dim, but always in a dreamlike state where the fog seems to be greater than any other element that the weather systems can provide.

The movie ends up being a plea for forgiveness from Briony. The movie's name comes from the act of reconciliation known as atonement. It is Briony's act of reconciliation that shows how a beautiful story of love, family and most of friendship can be ruined by a few minutes that are misperceived so many years ago.

The script is written by Christopher Hampton and based on the Ian McEwan novel of same name. The story is strong, but uses quick jumps and dreamlike, unreal feel.

The ending feels like a classic copout, even if Vanessa Redgrave is great as the aging Briony. The movie makes the viewer feel that the ending was there all along and that the intended surprise element just doesn't work.

But the movie does show the development of actress Keira Knightley and director Joe Wright from their last project together, "Pride and Prejudice." It also brings to light a great young actress in Saoirse Ronan who shows great potential to be a blockbuster and award-winner in the near future.

It has the love story, the war story, the effect of war on a society, and the break-up of a family. The movie also has a date movie appeal to it. It has strong elements that both sexes and any movie lover can appreciate.

Kevin Koczwara can be reached at kkoczwar@student.umass.edu.

Atonement

Starring Keira Knightley

C-

Keira Knightley and director Joe Wright team up again for "Atonement." The two have previously worked together for the film "Pride and Prejudice." Knightley's performance lacks the passion to make the film a success.

Planner helps students find time and energy to eat right hand at all times so your hands feel like they're doing something," at a party are impractical. No one wants to feel out-of-place in a social setting, and Oz conveniently leaves out the topic of peer pressure and how to deal with it in terms of eating and drinking in moderation.

DIET from page 5

What Oz does do, however, is mention the imperativeness of both vitamins and minerals, and how one body weight does not suit all body types. She offers an aesthetically-pleasing chart of the amount of supplements college-age women should ingest daily, as well as the formula to calculate an individual's Basal Metabolic Rate, "the number of calories your body burns daily in order to perform the basic functions of life," according to the book.

Once readers calculate their BMR, they can discover how many calories they should intake per day, depending on their activity level. The same section also includes a chart with the range of healthy weights for women based on height and frame.

The book culminates with a journal in which readers are able to fill out 30 days worth of reflections under the headings "things I'm glad I ate," "things I'd like to forget I ate," "what I drank," "what I'd like to forget I drank," "my workout included," and "my overall mood/stress level today was..." Each page also starts with a "tip of the day," brief tricks to assist in avoiding day-to-day temptations.

If consulted and followed regularly, it is likely that the average college student would benefit from reading "The Dorm Room Diet Planner," yet the $12.95 purchase price of the small paperback could be spent elsewhere, seeing as how the majority of the information Oz provides is common-sense knowledge the bulk of us learned in high school health class. The journal pages of the book are convenient, yet easy to re-create at no cost with a pen and paper. Oz intends to "help create your own lifestyle plan and keep track of your progress," but the book's overall message is one that most of us know, yet simply choose to ignore.

Skye McIntyre can be reached at smcintyr@student.umass.edu

Case brings new material to set aptitude to blend with Cave, which resulted in a warm and textured sound.

NEKO from page 5

What was exciting about this six-stop tour was the opportunity to hear some new songs from a new record that is still in the making. When it came time to play the new stuff, Case confessed with nervousness, "Trying out some new stuff is terrifying and sometimes hilarious."

From the very few songs she played that were unknown to the audience, Case performed with caution and the songs were just nice. It lacked the starkness of past recordings, but the likeability of these pop-country songs could get the attention of major radio stations.

Preceding the safety zone the new songs put the crowd in, Neko Case excelled tremendously on the Spark cover song, "Never Turn Your Back on Mother Earth." The beautiful but simple song released an air of pureness from Case and the gang.

Case is a true professional on stage because she knows where to draw the line. It is obvious that Case is self-aware. The girl knows she has a voice on her, but she also has exuberant control when she is at the microphone. As smart as her lyrics, Case often restrains her tantalizing voice, which leaves little room for flaws.

What was so fascinating about the performance of the evening was the crispness and tightness of the instrumentals. They effortlessly overcame complex arrangements with modesty. At a Neko Case show, it is important that there is balance between singer and band. The band knew what the fans wanted to see and hear. They accommodated to the desires of the audience to have Case shine.

The highlights of the evening mainly were the songs from her 2006 release, "Fox Confessor Brings The Flood." The crowd went crazy for the piercing song, "Hold On, Hold On" and the envy laden "Margaret Vs. Pauline." She also played a number of old goodies like the despairing "I Wish I Was The Moon," "Favorite," and "Deep Red Bells."

As a more than satisfying performance, Case and the band remained steadfastly cohesive and honest to their classic country and folksy sound. Without much animation and razzle-dazzle, Case naturally stole the hearts of her Northampton fans.

Joe Stahl can be reached at jstahl@student.umass.edu.

Singer-songwriter Neko Case completed her short, six-city tour in Northampton on Saturday. The performer mixed old favorites with brand new songs from a still unfinished album.

AFRICAN BEADED ART
POWER AND ADORNMENT
On View February 1–June 15, 2008

Friday, February 8 4–9 pm
(snow date February 9)

Free Second FRIDAYS festivities featuring music by the Afro-beat band NOMO!

SCMA is pleased to present Second Fridays in conjunction with NORTHAMPTON

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP

413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

GW continues domination of A-10

Beck's 19 in second half too much for Little, Duquesne

By Sam Grossack
Collegian Correspondent

On Saturday, No. 13 George Washington, led by senior guard Kimberly Beck's 19 second-half points pulled away from Duquesne for a 73-65 win. Colonial coach Joe McKeown took home career win No. 500 for the victory. McKeown became the 34th coach of all time to achieve this milestone.

With the game tied at 6-6 early in the first half, the Colonials surged on a 13-2 run, but the Dukes kept it close as they rallied to stay in it with a 7-0 run immediately after. The Colonials proved why they should be considered among the elite teams in Division I basketball, responding with a 10-0 run, giving them a 14-point lead late in the first half.

Duquesne stayed in the game throughout the second half thanks to the stellar play of Kristy Little and her 16 points. The Dukes reduced the deficit down to four points on several occasions early in the half, but their 20 turnovers proved to be too costly in the end to overcome.

With only 31 seconds left, Beck, who had a poor shooting night (4-of-17), nailed two free throws to put the game out of reach for the Dukes, who now stand at 2-4 in conference play.

Huge runs pace Xavier

Xavier was out to prove a point in Rhode Island on Sunday that they belong at the top of the Atlantic 10, where they're currently tied with George Washington and Temple. The Musketeers cruised by the Rams behind a 20-point effort from sophomore Amber Harris.

With a five-point lead three minutes into the game, the Musketeers went on a 12-0 run that gave them a 17-point lead midway through the half and allowed them to cruise into a 14-point halftime lead. After the Rams cut the lead to nine, another 14-0 run in the second half put the Musketeers up 61-38 with nine minutes left to seal the game. They improved to 6-1 in conference play with the win.

A-10 W. Hoops

Senior Safi Mojidi led the Rams with 14 points while Sierra Cooper had seven rebounds in the losing effort. With this loss, the Rams dropped to 2-5 in the conference and will look to rebound at Fordham on Wednesday.

Temple survives late scare

The Temple Owls used a 36-18 rebounding advantage to barely pull out a win over LaSalle, which dropped to 1-6 in conference play. The Owls were led by junior forward Shenita Landry who posted a double-double with 12 points and 12 rebounds. Temple's near perfect free-throw shooting allowed them to leave LaSalle victorious.

With the win, Temple has now won 18 straight Big-Five games, as it clinched its fourth straight City Series crown, becoming the first team to accomplish that feat.

For the Explorers, senior forward Carlene Hightower led all scorers with 18 points as the team continues to struggle in the conference. The Explorers will be visited on Wednesday by Massachusetts as both teams look to bounce back after hard-fought losses.

Billikens knock off A-10 leader

On Saturday, the Saint Louis Billikens rallied against the Charlotte 49ers to knock them off the leader board in the conference with a 71-60 win in front of a home crowd. The Billikens were lifted by four players scoring in double figures, led by sophomore Katie Paganelli and her game-high 19 points.

The win snaps a 10-game losing streak for the Billikens against the 49ers. After the game, Billikens coach Shimmy Gray-Miller told reporters, "There is no doubt that this is the biggest win in my three seasons here."

The 49ers were led by Danielle Burgin's 15 points and Wendy Stywalt's 12 points and eight rebounds as the team drops to 5-2 in conference play, one in back of leaders George Washington, Xavier and Temple. They play the Owls in a key division game on Wednesday.

Weekly honors

UMass senior forward Kate Mills won her fourth A-10 Player of the Week honor this past week posting two double-doubles. Mills earned the honor by averaging 26.5 points, 11 rebounds, four assists and three steals per game in her two contests this week against Fordham and Saint Joseph's. Mills leads the Minutewomen averaging 17.9 points per game, good for second in the conference.

Ta'Shia Phillips of Xavier won the Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week honors for her [illegible] time this season thanks to [illegible] stellar performance this past week. Phillips averaged a double-double in her team's two wins as she set a career high for blocked shots with [illegible] Rhode Island.

Sam Grossack can be reached at sgrossac@student.umass.edu.

Kate Mills has been a dominant force for the Minutewomen this season. The senior is averaging 17.9 points and 7.2 rebounds and recently won her fourth A-10 Player of the Week award.

Brathwaite stops 50 shots

HOCKEY EAST from page 10

only mistake – scoring his third of the year and putting the River Hawks within one.

Whatever surge the River Hawks thought they had was soon taken away minutes after their lone goal of the period. Viktor Stolberg scored the game-winner, his fifth of the year at 12:34 in the second.

The River Hawks added one more goal halfway through the third from Kory Falite, his eleventh of the year, to put the River Hawks back within one. But with help from goaltender Joe Fallon, the Catamounts fought off the last minute with an extra attacker from the River Hawks to improve their record to 7-10-7 overall and 6-6-5 in Hockey East. UMass Lowell sunk to 12-9-4 and 7-7-4 in Hockey East.

Hockey players honored

The week's outstanding performers were honored with Hockey East's weekly awards.

Matt Taormina of Providence was awarded this week's CCM/RBK Player of the Week award. Taormina scored the game-winner in Providence's Friday contest with the Boston College Eagles with 4:27 left in the third. He also assisted on the single Providence goal against Merrimack on Saturday night.

James Marcou of Massachusetts earned the Pro Ambitions Rookie of the Week award. He matched his career-high with three points in Saturday night's win over Maine (one goal, two assists). He also helped in setting up the game-winning goal by Chase Langeraap.

Merrimack goaltender Andrew Brathwaite received the Defensive Player of the Week honor. Brathwaite stopped 50 shots against Providence in Saturday night's 1-1 tie. Over the two Merrimack games this weekend, Brathwaite amassed a total of 78 saves.

Quick notes

Maine goaltender Ben Bishop stopped a career-high 49 shots at UMass Saturday night. Bishop has 2,115 career saves, which places him in third on Maine's all-time career saves list ... Since Dec. 1, UNH goaltender Kevin Regan has been stellar. He sports a 7-0-0 record against Hockey East opponents and a 1.57 GAA that includes two shutouts ... Northeastern plays rival Harvard in the annual Beanpot Tournament semifinals on Monday. Harvard is winless in its last four semi-final games against the Huskies.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@student.umass.edu.

With three offensive linemen headed to the Pro Bowl, Patriots quarterback Tom Brady found himself in an unfamiliar position in Sunday's 17-14 loss to the Giants – on his back.

Free agency could hurt Pats

FREE AGENTS from page 10

cornerback a franchise player and signing him for one year after he held out for a long-term contract.

The offense set several single-season records: 50 touchdown passes by Brady, 23 scoring catches by Moss and 589 total points.

But the season began with off-field problems.

Harrison, the hard-hitting safety, was suspended for the first four games for violating the league's substance abuse policy.

After the season-opening 38-14 win over the New York Jets, the NFL fined Belichick $500,000 and the team $250,000 and took away a first-round draft choice as punishment for videotaping Jets' coaches on their sideline.

That only fired up the Patriots. They were accused of running up the score in some of their wins.

But the Patriots shrugged off the criticism and kept focusing on the next opponent. They won each of their first eight games by at least 17 points.

Then the powerhouse that pulled away from opponents began letting them hang around.

In their ninth game, they beat Indianapolis 24-20 on a touchdown with 3:15 left. In their 11th, they scored the go-ahead touchdown with 7:20 to go but needed two interceptions in the last four minutes to clinch the 31-28 win over Philadelphia.

The following week was the greatest of escapes.

They trailed 24-20 at Baltimore and failed twice on fourth down in the last two minutes. But the first play was nullified by a false start penalty against the Patriots and the second by a holding call against the Ravens. On the next play, Brady threw the winning 8-yard scoring pass to Jabar Gaffney with 44 seconds left.

And, in the last regular-season game, the defense struggled in a 38-35 win over the Giants.

But how long could their good fortune hold out?

Not long enough.

With 2:42 left in the Super Bowl, Brady's 6-yard touchdown pass to Moss gave the Patriots a 14-10 lead.

But the defense couldn't hold it. Eli Manning directed an 83-yard drive and hit Plaxico Burress for the decisive 13-yard scoring pass with 35 seconds remaining.

Perfection denied.

"It's not even worth talking about it now because it's over. It didn't happen," Bruschi said. "We can look back on this year with a positive attitude and some of the things we accomplished. But when you don't finish, I mean, that's all we're about."

Belichick didn't finish either.

After Brady's fourth-down desperation pass to Moss fell incomplete, Belichick went on the field for a handshake with Giants coach Tom Coughlin.

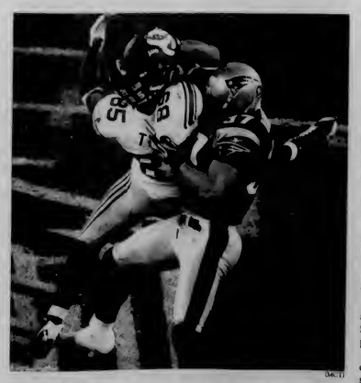
There was still 1 second left, but Belichick continued toward the locker room as Manning knelt down on the final play. Moss once left the field with 2 seconds remaining in a regular-season loss to Washington when he was with Minnesota and was criticized for it by his quarterback, Daunte Culpepper.

Belichick, at least, will be back.

Seau, 39, may not be.

"I haven't thought about the future. I am having too much fun," he said. Losing "will not affect my decision."

Harrison, 35, was beset by injuries in 2006 and 2007. Bruschi, 34, suffered a stroke after the Patriots last Super Bowl win but returned midway through the next season in 2005.



"I can't let that loss take away from everything that happened this season," Harrison said.

Moss, who took a pay cut for a shot at the Super Bowl, may not be back for another with the Patriots.

"I would love to be in a New England Patriots uniform," he said, "but, if not, the show must go on."

It will continue with Belichick and Brady, of course, partners in four Super Bowls – all decided by three points.

"We usually are on the better side of those three-point wins," Brady said. "We just have to regroup and come back and try to make it stronger next year."

Safety Rodney Harrison has been slowed by injuries but was still an integral part of New England's defensive success this season.

Brady left exposed in pocket

OFFENSIVE LINE from page 10

"He was an upset guy," Giants linebacker Antonio Pierce said of Brady. "He was yelling at his linemen. I think that worked in our favor."

The offensive line was also clearly rattled by the Giants, with Light being called for false starts on consecutive drives in the third quarter.

With 19 seconds left in the game and the Patriots facing a do-or-die scenario, Brady was sacked for the final time when Jay Alford pulled him down at New England's 16-yard line. Brady was left with nothing to do but try two straight desperation heaves to Moss to no avail.

"I think their intensity from the beginning snap to the end of the game was really higher than ours," Moss said. "We just couldn't meet that intensity."

The Giants came in with 56 sacks, including the playoffs, and showed in their Week 17 loss to the Patriots that they could be a force against New England's line. Brady was sacked just once and threw for 356 yards and two touchdowns in that one, but was hit repeatedly and forced to stray from the game plan.

It happened again in the Super Bowl, only worse.

With help from their linemen, the Patriots set NFL records for points scored and total touchdowns, while Brady broke the league mark for TD passes and Moss set the record for scoring receptions. That high-powered offense was held to a season-low 14 points in the Super Bowl – mostly because it couldn't get time.

"They played well defensively," coach Bill Belichick said. "They've been able to [illegible] led the league in sacks. [illegible] rushed all year. They [illegible] defensive football team. They played well."

While the Giants [illegible] celebrating their upset victory a half-hour after the game ended, the Patriots and their [illegible] linemen were headed to the [illegible] busses for a drive [illegible] back to the hotel.

The offensive line [illegible] great deal of attention [illegible] for their consistency [illegible] the hair on their [illegible]. All four of Brady's bunch had [illegible] facial hair going on [illegible] Neal's Fu Manchu [illegible] Mesa big, hushy Grizzly [illegible] beard.

It's safe to say [illegible] faced after their [illegible] performance against [illegible]

"We all could've [illegible] better tonight," Brady said.

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
Serving others since 1969 – and STILL making a difference
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored [illegible])

REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Spring Semester 2008 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Room 101 • Feb. 4 (Mon) • Feb. 5 (Tues) • Feb. 6 (Wed)
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Feb. 7th in Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must package the notification letter.
Volunteer, while earning credit!

Caption contest.

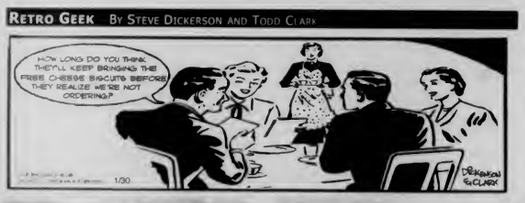
<DO IT>

www.dailycollegian.com/caption

You are very important.

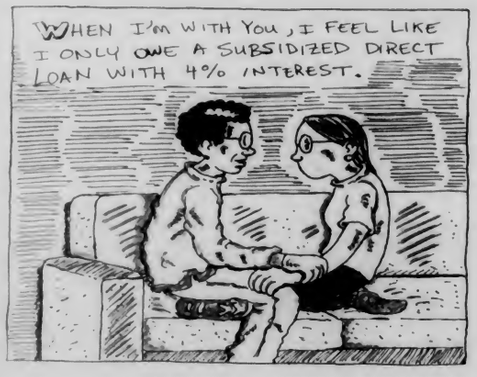
							4
			1	8	5	2
	9				3	5	1
		2	8			3
7	1						2	5
		6			7	9
	4	1	3				9
		9	2	5	1
8

Quote of the Day



"I love Mickey Mouse more than any woman I've ever known."

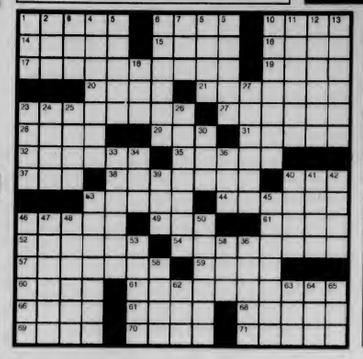
— Walt Disney



UMassic Park By Curtis Sarkin

Retro Geek By Steve Dickerson and Todd Clark

Labrat By Richard Maptelly



ACROSS
1 Ewes' offspring
6 Painter Holbein
10 Distort
14 Blazing
15 Toast topper
16 Object of devotion
17 Nickname for the tall and thin
19 Traveled on horseback
20 Shortly
21 Invigorated
23 Developing chamber
27 Quoting as an authority
28 Hautboy
29 College degs
31 Hindu social stratum
32 Harass
35 Assemblage
37 Golfer Ernie
38 Light satira
40 Charged particle
43 Biblical mount
44 Sticky situation
46 Rubber base
49 Collision gel
51 "Roots" author Haley
52 Educe
54 Least complicated
57 Entices
58 Billy or nanny
60 __-do-well
61 Dolo populace
66 Hideous beast
67 Writer Morrison
68 Concluded
69 Monster loch
70 Lone man
71 Marsh grasses

DOWN
1 Noias of scales
2 Toward the stern
3 Sov. space station
4 Beef cut
5 Madrid mistar
6 Associate familiarly
7 Shout raistiva
8 "Hud" co-star Patricia
9 Type of boom
10 Bug
11 Fine figura of a man
12 Hamster or gerbil
13 Word of honor
18 Sticky stuff
22 Llama relativa
23 Latest info
24 Can'e victim
25 Antarctic sea
26 Chatterers
33 Theater sign letters
33 Magic potion
34 Operated
36 Ash's counterpart
38 Deranged
40 Man or Capri
41 Bullring cheers
42 On deck
43 Makes sale
45 Thin, crisp cracker
46 Use for support
47 Maintain
48 Levers used to turn rudders
50 Pooh-Bah
53 Campers' shelters
55 One of a zany trio
56 Beeper
58 Santa's suit soiler
62 Cell substance letters
63 Fruity beverage
64 Beatty of films
65 Radicals of the 90s

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

$ CASH FOR YOUR CLOTHES $
how does it work?
You bring us your awesome clothes... we sell them... you make money!
(40% to be exact)
it's so easy!
No appointment necessary.
Buy & Sell at the area's BIGGEST & BEST consignment store!...
exclusive Drop & Shop Rewards
Urban Exchange
233 Main Street Northampton MA
413-585-8729

Submit your comics!

collegiatecomics@yahoo.com

Submit your classifieds!

(413) 545-3500

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You are a thick-skinned rhinocerous. This should not offend you.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
YOU'RE PREGNANT...just kidding, but you're probably quite frightened right now.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Hey buddy, don't get too excited about the upcoming election or you might find yourself with a presidential erection.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Think.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Get your act together. No, seriously, the ostriches are starving and your co-star is off canoodling with the animal wrangler.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Go to a movie and make out with your hand in the back of the theater all night. The amputees will be quite jealous.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Make some spending cash by selling autographed pictures of yourself. There is a demand, you must supply.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Don't waste your carrots; there are starving rabbits in New Hampshire.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
One jar of peanut butter + one little plastic bear filled with honey + one spoon = a mouthfilling delicious treat.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Why would you buy cocaine when your nose actively produces its own special kind of free candy?

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Bask in the glorious glow of Wednesday. For now, wait patiently.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Find someone sleeping in the Campus Center and SLAP them.

Unlike communism, Comics are good both in theory and reality.

comics@dailycollegian.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APT. FOR RENT

Hobart condos 3 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided 1-800-965-6520

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today toll free at 1-888-684-2267 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

RAFT GUIDES
Zoar Outdoor is seeking adventuresome people to be full and part-time summer raft guides. Learn how to guide a raft during our training program and spend the summer on the Deerfield River. Applicants should have customer service experience and a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independently. Application deadline: Feb. 15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

Put up Posters! Through summer, car, sell, commitment needed. Up to $12/hr w/bonus. 20 hrs between Mon-Wed, excellent communicator, fast-paced, punctual, resume and formal cover letter to postering@artspromo.org. Hiring ASAP.

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab.linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Marketing Intern As a Marketing Intern (paid position) you will assist in marketing efforts to grow sales of the leading economic policy analysis model. Responsibilities include developing presentations and other marketing material, writing for newsletters, website, and blog, and assisting with internet marketing, promotions, campaigns, and other marketing efforts. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. resumes@remi.com. REMI is an eoe and maintains a drug-free workplace.

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

Spring Break from $199 Land price starting from $199 for 7 days. We also have an all inclusive hotel start from $799 per person. Give us a call today it's not to late to still get away 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Spring Break 08 Hot Deals, Hot Destinations, Hot Parties. Ask about Group Deals and FREE TRIPS. 1-800-426-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com

U Mass students–
Start medical school this May!
Find out how at our Information Seminar
Sat., Feb. 9, 2pm, Le Méridien Cambridge (formerly Hotel@MIT)
For details visit RossU.edu or call 877-ROSS-EDU

forget about this.

At Ross University School of Medicine, you'll be too busy studying to enjoy our sun-drenched Caribbean island.

You'll get the most thorough medical training imaginable, with 16 months of basic sciences in Dominica and clinical rotations at our network of 70 top U.S. teaching hospitals. Ross University places more graduates in first year residency positions than any other medical school in the world.

1978 2008 Ross University Celebrating Thirty Years

ROSS UNIVERSITY

It's no day at the beach.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Patriots could look different in '08

The New England Patriots have a number of players that are eligibile for free agency, including Randy Moss (right), Asante Samuel, Rodney Harrison and linebackers Tedy Bruschi and Junior Seau. The Patriots fell short in their bid for perfection in Super Bowl XLII.

Moss, Samuel, others may not return to team next season

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FOXBOROUGH, Mass. (AP) — The only perfect thing about the Patriots was their record.

Now they don't even have that.

Dominant in the first half of the season, they survived some close calls afterward. But that finally caught up with them in the Super Bowl and left them facing an offseason of what-ifs and what-will-bes.

What if their offensive line studded with three Pro Bowl players had kept the team's most important player from being knocked down time after time in the most important game?

Will Randy Moss and Asante Samuel leave?

Will Rodney Harrison, Tedy Bruschi and Junior Seau, the three oldest defensive starters, retire?

And next time, will coach Bill Belichick hang around until the end of the game instead of heading for the locker room with a second left and a security escort Tom Brady would have envied?

The two-time Super Bowl MVP couldn't elude the steamrolling pass rush of the New York Giants the way he does the paparazzi who stalk him on the streets of the city where the new Super Bowl champions will be honored at a victory parade Tuesday.

Brady was sacked five times in Sunday's 17-14 loss, the most in his 92 games since the New York Jets did that in the third game of the 2003 season on Sept. 21, 2003.

So the Patriots finished 18-1 and disappointed, not 19-0 and historic. That left the 1972 Miami Dolphins, who were 17-0, as the only NFL team to go undefeated.

Brady was a near unanimous choice for the league's MVP and was brilliant in the first eight games of the season. He was not as good after that.

His five worst passer ratings came in his last eight games, including the postseason. In the AFC championship game against San Diego, he threw a season-high three interceptions. In the Super Bowl, he was uncharacteristically inaccurate on some passes even when he had time to throw.

"I'm sure we all could have done things better, but it's just part of competition," Brady said of the devastating defeat.

New England won three Super Bowls in four seasons before falling short the next three years – losing to Denver in a divisional playoff game, to Indianapolis in last year's AFC championship game and to New York in the latest disappointment.

After coming so close last season, the Patriots added receivers Moss, Wes Welker and Donte' Stallworth. They signed free agent Adalius Thomas for their aging group of linebackers. And they kept Samuel, designating the star

See FREE AGENTS on page 7

O-line struggles in SB

Brady sacked a season-high five times in loss to Giants

Dennis Waszak Jr.
Associated Press

GLENDALE, Ariz. (AP) — The New England Patriots' big, brawny and bearded guys were just plain bad.

The AFC champions' heralded offensive line allowed a season-high five sacks to the New York Giants in the Super Bowl on Sunday, failing to give Tom Brady the type of tight protection they had guarded him with all season.

"It's one of those things where they have a great front seven," center Dan Koppen said. "They have tremendous players up there and they just outplayed us."

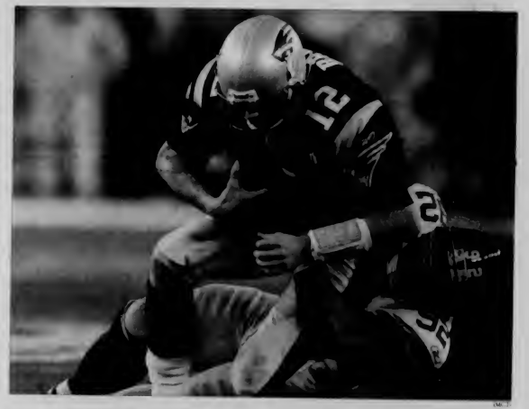
Their inability to protect Brady was a major reason the Patriots' quest for perfection ended with a disappointing, history-making 17-14 loss.

"They have some great pressure schemes, obviously some great pass rushers," Brady said. "Once we kind of got the idea of what we were doing, I thought we handled it much better, but we didn't get the ball in the end zone enough."

Coming in, Brady had been sacked a career-low 24 times this season playing behind a line that produced three Pro Bowlers in Koppen, left tackle Matt Light and left guard Logan Mankins. Throw in right guard Stephen Neal and right tackle Nick Kaczur, and Brady played most of his record-breaking season not having to worry much about getting hit by bloodthirsty defenders.

"I like when I don't get touched," Brady said earlier in the week.

Then, disaster struck in the form of an all-out, pressure-packed swarming defensive attack by the Giants – in the worst possible setting. It was the first time Brady had been sacked as many as five times since the New York Jets did it on Sept. 21, 2003.



New England had no answer for the Giants' bulldozing defense.

"If I could tell you, we'd have it fixed," running back Kevin Faulk said. "At the same time, they outplayed us."

They sure did, and left Brady wondering what hit him. Brady simply had no time to find Randy Moss and his other targets on a regular basis against the Giants. He should've known he was in for a long day when he was sacked by Kawika Mitchell and Justin Tuck on consecutive plays midway through the second quarter.

It didn't help that Neal left after Tuck's sack, and didn't return.

See OFFENSIVE LINE on page 7

Patriots quarterback Tom Brady had very little time in the pocket Sunday, as he was sacked a season-high five times and got hit on numerous other throws. The Giants got great pressure from the entire front four.

With win and tie, PC moves up HEA

Hockey East

By Ryan Fleming
Collegian Correspondent

Providence picked a great time to keep its impressive streak, earning an all-important three points on first-place New Hampshire (16-7-1, 12-4-1 Hockey East) and second-place Boston College, with a victory over the Eagles and a tie against Merrimack this past weekend.

Friday night, No. 13 Providence (12-9-3, 9-5-3 Hockey East) held on to beat No. 9 BC (12-6-7, 8-4-6 Hockey East) at the Conte Forum, 3-2. At 5:44 into the game, John Rheault of Providence beat Eagles goalie John Muse to put the Friars up 1-0.

The Friars continued to ride the momentum scoring again in a little over two minutes. Greg Collins, who also assisted on Providence's first goal, put his team in a seemingly comfortable position over the Eagles, 2-0.

The second period was another story. The Eagles came pouncing back, scoring in both ends of the period. Kyle Kucharski and Matt Greene of BC put them back into the game at 3:35 and 16:38, respectively.

With the game still tied with less than five minutes left, Matt Taormina put the Friars up for good, beating Muse with only 4:27 left in the third period.

At Saturday's game, the Friars were able to outshoot Merrimack 51-18 and get the lone goal they needed to salvage one crucial point. Kyle MacKinnon was the only Friar to beat Andrew Brathwaite, who stopped an impressive 50-shot barrage by the Friars. Francois Ouimet scored the single goal for the Warriors. It was his seventh of the season.

Catamounts pounce on River Hawks

Vermont goaltender Joe Fallon came up big when his team needed him the most. The Catamount goalie saved 31 shots including 14 in the second period and eight in the third. Fallon improved his record to 5-8-5.

Vermont got out to a 2-0 advantage five minutes into the second. Early in the first period, Reese Wisnowski scored his first of the year to give the Catamounts the early momentum. In the second period, the momentum was still with Vermont when Peter Lenes capitalized with his seventh goal of the year at 5:03 to put the Catamounts up, 2-0.

With his team on the power play and trailing, 2-0, Ben Holmstrom gave UMass Lowell a fighting chance. With 1:07 left in his team's power play, Holmstrom forced Fallon into his

See HOCKEY EAST on page 7

Xavier peaking in AP poll

A-10 M. Hoops

By Ricky Eddleston
Collegian Staff

With a 19-3 record, 5-2 in the Atlantic 10, the Rhode Island men's basketball team has exceeded all expectations for the 2007-2008 season. At their current mark, the Rams have equaled their best start after 22 games in program history. URI is currently second in the A-10. They are in a great position to make a strong run at the conference tournament and possibly the NCAA Tournament if they continue their strong play.

The Rams have been led by senior forward Will Daniels and junior guard Jimmy Baron Jr., son of coach Jim Baron. Daniels is currently averaging 18.1 points per game to go along with 6.6 rebounds, and an efficient .508 field goal percentage. Baron is averaging 16 points a game and is shooting .448 from 3-point range.

URI has played especially well at home, notching an 11-0 record at the Ryan Center. The Rams are also undefeated on neutral sites, going 5-0 on nonpartisan courts. URI will travel to the Mullins Center on Thursday to take on the UMass.

Dayton struggles

After starting 14-1, the Dayton has lost four out of their last five games, dropping their record to 15-5. The Flyers' struggles have come in the heart of A-10 conference play, posting a 3-4 record against fellow conference teams. Though Dayton has had key non-conference victories against Louisville (16-6) and No. 21 Pittsburgh (17-5), the Flyers have struggled to beat the top teams in the A-10, losing games to No. 13 Xavier (18-4) and, most recently, a 12-point loss to URI.

With upcoming games against Charlotte, Temple, and current A-10 leaders St. Joseph's and Xavier, the Flyers will need to improve their play if they want to salvage their season.

A-10 in the polls

The Atlantic 10 had one representative in this week's Associated Top 25 Poll, the Xavier Musketeers. Xavier continues to climb up the Top 25, coming in at 13th this week. Rhode Island, the next closest A-10 team, came up 36 votes short of making the ranks. Both Xavier and URI continue to prove themselves as the class of the A-10. Xavier is currently tied with St. Joseph's for first in the A-10 with a 6-1 conference record. URI is second with a 5-2 record.

Weekly Honors

Junior forward Rob Diggs of George Washington was named A-10 Player of the Week. Diggs had his fifth double-double of the season with 20 points and 10 rebounds on Jan. 30 in a loss against St. Joseph's.

Guard Kevin Anderson of Richmond and forward Matt Morgan of St. Bonaventure were named A-10 Co-Rookies of the Week. Anderson had a game-high 17 points in Richmond's 64-58 win at Charlotte, while Morgan averaged 11.5 points and seven rebounds in games against Duquesne and LaSalle.

Ricky Eddleston can be reached at sports@dailycollegian.com.

Junior C.J. Anderson has made an immediate impact at Xavier since transferring from Manhattan. He averages 11.2 points per game, good for third on the team.

INSIDE: MULTICULTURAL FILM FESTIVAL BEGINS TODAY | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

RAIN : HI: 44 LO: 39 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 2008

Impeachment attempt unsuccessful

Vice president's position safe after tied vote

Republican Club Vice President Derek Khanna remains in office after an attempt to impeach him resulted in a 7-7 vote.

By Derrick Perkins
Collegian Staff

A move to impeach the vice president of the University of Massachusetts Republican Club by President Brad DeFlumeri failed last night during an emergency meeting of the organization.

The vote split down the middle of members eligible to cast a ballot, with seven in favor of the motion and another seven against the impeachment. To remove vice president Derek Khanna from office, DeFlumeri would have needed a two-thirds majority vote.

"I obviously disagree with the way [the club] voted, but per our constitution we need a two-thirds majority to impeach a standing officer. The membership elected not to do that," said Brad DeFlumeri, president of the Republican Club.

"We'll continue on with the business of the republican club with me as the president and Derek Khanna as the vice president and all that matters now is what's in the best interest of the Republican Club."

DeFlumeri called for the motion to impeach Khanna after asking the vice president to step down in an e-mail following last week's move to secede from the Massachusetts Alliance of College Republicans.

"In light of recent events which reveal you to be operating on your own agenda and following assertions by members that your actions are 'borderline treasonous,' I strongly urge you to immediately resign your position as vice president of the Republican Club," DeFlumeri wrote. "Furthermore, given your backhanded efforts to undermine my leadership while covertly working with other organizations, I do not feel as though your assisting me as [vice president] is tenable any longer. You need to resign."

DeFlumeri called last night's special meeting in a second e-mail after Khanna refused to step down from his position.

According to DeFlumeri, Khanna had misused, neglected and abused his position as vice president of the organization, all impeachable offenses under the constitution of the Republican Club.

"It is my opinion, in light of substantial evidence, that Vice President Khanna has conspired with MACR to remove me as president without even consulting or notifying the membership of this club," DeFlumeri said, reading off of a prepared statement during the emergency session. "Over the course of the past week it has become abundantly clear that vice president Khanna has abused his position and his title in this club to surreptitiously seek my ouster."

The club president accused Khanna of making "overtly false" and "misleading" statements to the Massachusetts Daily Collegian concerning the reaction of leaders of the Massachusetts GOP to the secession of the club from MACR and lying about the allegations of sexual harassment surrounding DeFlumeri.

Khanna called the impeachment effort a "ridiculous waste of the club's time as a whole."

"I think that my position of impeaching Brad rather than secession was a personal opinion and it was an opinion that I expressed as vice president to the press, because I believed it furthered the interests of the club, but I hardly felt that that was grounds for impeachment," he said.

According to DeFlumeri, the members of the Republican Club had expressed their will and would not move to impeach Khanna again unless further evidence of neglect or abuse of position came to light.

Khanna "highly doubted" the issue of his impeachment would come up again within the club and stressed that the motion would not affect his working relationship with DeFlumeri.

"Me and him have had some intense discussions before and we separate that and we work on a professional level to accomplish the goals of this club," he said. "We still have areas of mutual interest."

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@dailycollegian.com

Primary advances

Former governor and republican candidate in the presidential race Mitt Romney secured the Massachusetts primary in a win over fierce rival John McCain on "Super Tuesday."

The Associated Press called the state for Romney early in the night, giving him a needed win against McCain's series of victories across northeast and Midwest states, including New York, Connecticut, Illinois and New Jersey.

On the other side of the aisle, Hillary Clinton won the majority of Massachusetts delegates over rival Democratic candidate for president, Barack Obama. Despite endorsements from Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick and U.S. Senator Edward Kennedy, Obama could not persuade enough voters to triumph over Clinton in the Commonwealth.

Romney overcame criticisms of using Massachusetts as a stepping stone on his way to a presidential bid and a late challenge by John McCain to take the largest portion of the Commonwealth's delegates, according to the Associated Press.

According to exit polls taken yesterday, almost half of voters in each party rated the economy as the most difficult challenge facing the nation. The War in Iraq placed second among Democratic voters; immigration was the number two concern for Republicans.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

— Derrick Perkins

Majority of UMass students prefer Obama, despite loss

By Cara Grannemann and Eden Univer
Collegian Staff

The student voices at the University of Massachusetts have been heard. On Super Tuesday students voted, and Senator Barack Obama seemed to be the preference across campus.

However, it was Senator Hillary Clinton and former Governor Mitt Romney who won the votes in Massachusetts yesterday.

Obama and Ron Paul were the only two candidates represented yesterday in the campus center concourse. Obama, however, was also represented in numerous signs and bumper stickers posted around campus.

UMass sophomore Shannon Fitzpatrick said she voted for Obama because she cares about "restoring the face of America."

She not only agrees with Obama's policies on most issues, but also thinks he would make the most intelligent decisions.

"He doesn't have as much experience, but [he has] the smarts to know who to hire and they can bring the experience," she said.

Neil Desai, also a sophomore, believes Obama will win the majority of the UMass student vote.

"He is a democrat and Massachusetts is mostly a democratic state," said Desai. "From what I hear, a lot of people don't like Hillary Clinton, but I'm not sure why."

Numerous students on campus seem to like Obama because they say he stands for a generation of younger voters.

"He will represent the youngest face available; I think he'll make the most drastic change," said Eliot Gill, sophomore Obama supporter.

Freshman Matt Grazewski voted for Obama via absentee ballot. Grazewski believes Obama is the clear choice for the majority of UMass students because "he appeals to a younger crowd."

Similarly, sophomore Amy Koenig voted for Obama and believes the majority of UMass students voted for him because "it seems like he was strongly backed by the youth."

Massachusetts residents, notoriously known for their liberal views, make up over 75 percent of the UMass student population and may be the cause for such enthusiastic support of Obama on campus.

For some students, mainly democratic or liberal views can come with an anti-republican sentiment.

Freshman Jeff McPherson said, "It scares me – [the idea] of having another republican in office."

"Obama has a lot of student support, and Lord knows we're not republicans," said Gill.

The Associated Press contributed to this story.

Eden Univer can be reached at euniver@student.umass.edu and Cara Grannemann at cgrannem@student.umass.edu

UMRC holds first meeting

By Emily Reynolds
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Republican Club had their kickoff meeting last night to recruit new members amid some recent bad publicity.

Events held by UMRC throughout the year often draw attention to the club because of controversy that surrounds them much of the time.

This semester there are already several events planned, including hosting Dinesh D'Souza, conservative debater from the Hoover Institute at Stanford, as well as the republican nomination convention for district delegates.

To introduce the club, DeFlumeri gave a short history of himself and the club, and then passed the podium to several other speakers, all wanting to recruit new members and create an interest in staying involved.

Joe Saracco, the UMRC membership director and longest-serving member of the club, gave a short but passionate speech.

"We all share one common interest: freedom," said Saracco at the start of his speech. "This club is fighting the good fight."

Saracco went on to talk about club members having common goals, and the importance of being involved, although he still stressed that to be a member, it was not necessary to be involved.

While DeFlumeri spends most of his time doing things for UMRC, he does not expect everyone to do the same.

"We just wanted to introduce people to the club," said DeFlumeri. "It was mostly for transfer students to get interest stimulated in the club."

DeFlumeri met his goal with transfer student Dmitriy Shapiro from Michigan. During his first meeting he went up to the podium to speak about his experiences at his previous university.

"It's really interesting coming here because Michigan is 50-50 with democrats and republicans," Shapiro said. He expected a campus with entirely liberal views.

Joe Yiznitski, the Five College Representative for the club, is an example of how members come for one reason, and then stay on as part of the executive board.

"I joined the club primarily to educate myself on political issues," Yiznitski said. "It provided me with an opportunity."

Several students involved in the club came because their views aligned more with republicans, although they all have different views.

"We have a wide range of conservatives in our club," said DeFlumeri.

Regardless of their views, the members are committed.

"The UMass Republican Club scares the daylights out of a lot of people because we actually believe in things," said Ed Cutting, a post-graduate student and member of the chancellor search committee.

While the members of this club may seem like they are radical in their views, it is more the enthusiasm that they have in their beliefs that put them over the top.

"We joke about extremism, but we really aren't that extreme," said Cutting.

After the meeting was over and most of the executive board had made speeches encouraging people to join, the group stayed to talk to each other and watch FOXNews.com for the latest results in the primary elections.

"In politics, you often have to get along with those whom you don't like," said Cutting.

PDA endorses Ed O'Reilly

Ed O'Reilly will be campaigning with a "grassroots effort."

By Mike Fox
Collegian Correspondent

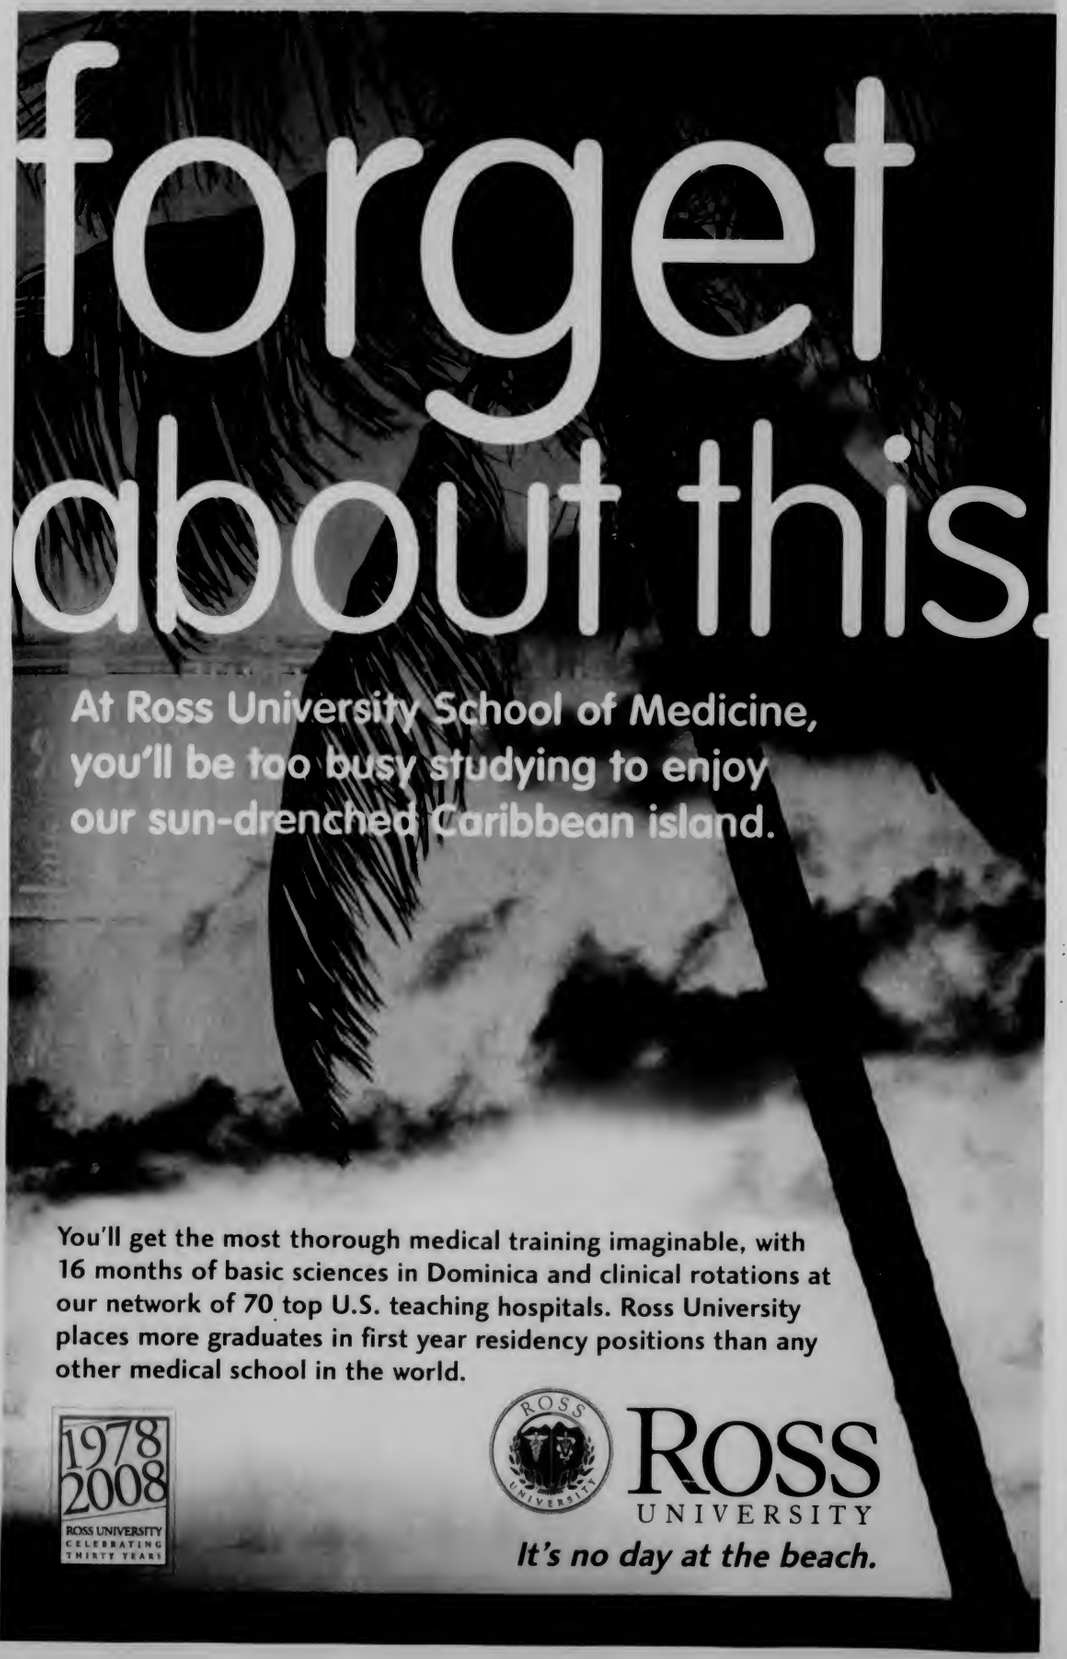
Amherst resident and democratic candidate for United States Senate Ed O'Reilly can now add a valuable endorsement to his campaign.

O'Reilly, who is mounting what his campaign describes as a "grassroots effort" against current Massachusetts senator and former presidential candidate John Kerry, recently received the endorsement of the national political organization Progressive Democrats of America.

PDA describes itself on its Web site as a group that seeks to "build a party and government controlled by citizens, not corporate elites – with policies that serve the broad public interest, not just private interests." Its members have included prominent anti-war activist Cindy Sheehan and Massachusetts Representative Jim McGovern, among several other members of congress.

The PDA states that the endorsement of its Massachusetts chapters is based on O'Reilly's endorsement of the progressive agenda, which is described by PDA Communications Coordinator Laura Bonham as "a platform that will serve Massachusetts families and communities well –single-payer healthcare for all, a swift, safe and orderly withdrawal of American troops from Iraq, a secure sustainable energy future and an economy that serves the interests of American workers."

O'Reilly's campaign manager, Peter Vickery, feels the endorsement will have a very helpful impact on the campaign.



"Local activists are essential for ensuring that a campaign such as ours will get on the ballot," he said. "Having PDA activists increasingly involved on the ground is very beneficial for a grassroots campaign like ours."

The endorsement came just before the Massachusetts state democratic caucuses yesterday. The democratic caucuses are when party members all over the state come together to elect delegates to the statewide convention in Lowell, which will be held this June. For O'Reilly's campaign to continue, he will need at least 15 percent of the votes at the June convention so he can get on the September primary ballot.

Brad DeFlumeri, president of the Republican Club, speaks at an ROTC support rally last March. He and the UMRC have planned several events for this semester.

U Mass students–
Start medical school this May!
Find out how at our Information Seminar
Sat., Feb. 9, 2pm, Le Méridien Cambridge (formerly Hotel@MIT)
For details visit RossU.edu or call 877-ROSS-EDU

McCain wins key votes in primaries

By David Espo
Associated Press

Senator and republican presidential candidate John McCain won more votes in the presidential primaries than other republican candidates, including Mike Huckabee and Mitt Romney.

Sen. John McCain swept a string of delegate-rich, East Coast primaries Tuesday night, reaching for command of the race for the Republican presidential nomination. Democrats Hillary Rodham Clinton and Barack Obama traded victories in an epic struggle from Connecticut to California.

The former first lady said, "I look forward to continuing our campaign and our debate about how to leave this country better off for the next generation."

McCain, the early Republican front-runner whose campaign nearly unraveled six months ago, won in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Delaware to gain all 198 delegates at stake there. He also put Illinois and Oklahoma in his column.

Former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee won a series of Bible Belt victories, in Alabama and Georgia as well as his own home state. He also triumphed at the Republican West Virginia convention, and told The Associated Press in an interview he would campaign on. "The one way you can't win a race is to quit it, and until somebody beats me, I'm going to answer the bell for every round of this fight," he said.

Romney, the former governor of Massachusetts, won a home state victory. He also took Utah, where fellow Mormons supported his candidacy. He, too, breathed defiance. "We're going to go all the way to the convention. We're going to win this thing," he told supporters in Boston.

Democrats played out a historic struggle between Clinton, seeking to become the first female president and Obama, hoping to become the first black to win the White House.

Clinton won at home in New York as well as in Massachusetts, New Jersey, Missouri, Oklahoma, Tennessee and Arkansas, where she was first lady for more than a decade. She also won the caucuses in American Samoa.

Obama won Connecticut, Georgia, Alabama, Delaware, Utah and his home state of Illinois. He also prevailed in North Dakota, Minnesota and Kansas, three caucus states.

After an early series of low-delegate, single-state contests, Super Tuesday was anything but small – its primaries and caucuses were spread across nearly half the country in the most wide-open presidential campaign in memory.

The result was a double-barreled set of races, Obama and Clinton fighting for delegates as well as bragging rights in individual states, the Republicans doing the same.

Polling place interviews with voters suggested subtle shifts in the political landscape, potentially significant as the races push on through the campaign calendar.

For the first time this year, McCain ran first in a few states among self-identified Republicans. As usual, he was running strongly among independents. Romney was getting the votes of about four in 10 people who described themselves as conservative. McCain was wining about one-third of that group, and Huckabee about one in five.

Overall, Clinton was winning only a slight edge among women and white voters, groups that she had won handily in earlier contests, according to preliminary results from interviews with voters in 16 states leaving polling places. Obama was collecting the overwhelming majority of votes cast by blacks.

Clinton was gaining the votes of roughly six in 10 Hispanics, and she hoped the edge would serve her well as the race turned west to Arizona, New Mexico and California, the biggest prize with 370 delegates.

The allocation of delegates lagged the vote count by hours. That was particularly true for the Democrats, who divided theirs roughly in proportion to the popular vote.

Nine of the Republican contests were winner take all, and that was where McCain piled up his lead.

The Arizona senator had 345 delegates to 129 for Romney and 115 for Huckabee. It takes 1,191 to clinch the presidential nomination at next summer's convention in St. Paul, Minn.

Overall, Clinton had 348 delegates to 282 for Obama, out of the 2,025 needed to secure victory at the party convention in Denver. Clinton's advantage is due to her lead among so-called superdelegates, members of Congress and other party leaders who are not selected in primaries and caucuses – and who are also free to change their minds.

Alabama and Georgia gave Obama three straight Southern triumphs. Like last month's win in South Carolina, they were powered by black voters.

Democrats and Republicans alike said the economy was their most important issue. Democrats said the war in Iraq ranked second and health care third. Republican primary voters said immigration was second most important after the economy, followed by the war in Iraq.

The survey was conducted in 16 states by Edison Media Research and Mitofsky International for The Associated Press and television networks.

McCain was the Republican front-runner, all but unchallenged in winner-take-all primaries in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut. He looked for a home-state win in Arizona, as well.

Democrats Obama and Clinton conceded in advance that neither was likely to emerge from the busiest day in primary history with anything more than a relatively narrow edge in convention delegates.

"Senator Clinton, I think, has to be the prohibitive favorite going in given her name recognition, but we've been steadily chipping away," said Obama, seeking to downplay expectations.

As she voted in Chappaqua, N.Y., the former first lady said, "The stakes are huge."

Already, both campaigns were looking ahead to Feb. 9 contests in Louisiana, Nebraska and Washington state and Feb. 12 primaries in Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia. And increasingly, it looked like the Democrats' historic race between a woman and a black man would go into early spring, possibly longer.

The de facto national primary was the culmination of a relentless campaign that moved into overdrive during Christmas week.

After a brief rest for the holiday, the candidates flew back to Iowa on Dec. 26 for a final stretch of campaigning before the state's caucuses offered the first test of the election year. New Hampshire's traditional first-in-the-nation primary followed a few days later, then a seemingly endless series of campaign days interspersed by debates and a handful of primaries and caucuses.

Along the way, the poorest performers dropped out. Democratic Sens. Joe Biden and Chris Dodd, New Mexico Gov. Bill Richardson and Rep. Dennis Kucinich of Ohio; and Republican Reps. Duncan Hunter and Tom Tancredo, and former Tennessee Sen. Fred Thompson.

Former Sen. John Edwards pulled out of the Democratic race last week, and former New York Mayor Rudy Giuliani left the Republican field.

Edwards offered no endorsement as he exited, instead leaving Obama and Clinton to vie for help from his fundraisers and supporters.

But Obama benefited from an endorsement by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, who made a series of campaign appearances in California as well as his home state of Massachusetts.

Giuliani quit the race and backed McCain in the same breath, clearing the way for the Westerner in New York and New Jersey.

Obama/Clinton race tight

By Jim Kuhnhenn
Associated Press

Hillary Rodham Clinton captured needed states Tuesday night even as Barack Obama ate into her traditional base of support on a topsy-turvy night where a ballot victory was not the only measure of success.

The grand spectacle of Super Tuesday's coast-to-coast nominating contests marked a turning point in the Democratic presidential contest from euphoric election night victories to painstaking delegate counting.

In early results, Hillary Rodham Clinton won primaries in Oklahoma, Arkansas, Tennessee, New Jersey, New York and Massachusetts. Barack Obama was the victor in Georgia, Delaware, Alabama and Illinois and the North Dakota caucus. Altogether, 22 states were in play but neither candidate was to emerge with enough delegates to secure the nomination.

Obama had secured 43 delegates in early voting Tuesday, while Clinton had 32, though that did not include all the states where outcomes had been declared.

Preliminary exit polls of voters in primary states showed Obama encroaching on Clinton's voting base. Clinton had only a slight edge among women and with whites, two areas where she has generally dominated Obama. Clinton was getting strong support from Hispanics, an increasingly important voting bloc. But Obama led among men – including white men, a group with whom he has struggled for votes in most previous contests.

Those results augured well for Obama in contests in coming weeks.

The campaigns, like sports teams that have clinched a playoff spot, already have been preparing for the matches ahead. Obama has been advertising in states with primaries and caucuses over the next seven days. Virginia, Maryland and the District of Columbia, all of which hold primaries on Feb. 12, play to Obama's strengths with black voters and upscale, educated voters.

Clinton strategists are looking over the horizon into March and April when Ohio, Texas and Pennsylvania hold primaries.

Time could work against Clinton, however. Obama raised $32 million to her $13.5 million in January – a financial edge that will help him organize and advertise in the upcoming battlegrounds. On Tuesday, her campaign called for four debates between now and March 4, a sign that she wants to supplement her financial disadvantage with free media.

After a month of early contests – from Iowa to New Hampshire to Nevada to South Carolina – the two candidates have essentially divided the electorate into two component parts. He gets young voters, educated voters, black voters. She gets women, working-class voters and Hispanics.

Both candidates have worked hard to win over supporters of John Edwards, who dropped out of the presidential race last Wednesday after a third-place finish in South Carolina. They've spent a combined $20 million on advertising in Super Tuesday states. And whoever cuts into the other's base will gain an advantage.

Obama seemed to benefit from Edwards' departure, expanding his support among white voters from one in four in the South Carolina primary to better than two out of five in Georgia. "She has ceiling issues, and the people who aren't for her we think are very available to us," Obama campaign manager David Plouffe told reporters Tuesday.

But Clinton had reason to cheer as well. She beat Obama in Massachusetts despite Obama's strength among highly educated voters and opponents of the war and high-profile endorsements from the state's political power troika – U.S. Sens. Edward Kennedy, John Kerry and Gov. Deval Patrick.

Correction

The article "Governor's budget funds Five Colleges," in yesterday's edition (2/5/08), incorrectly identified Five Colleges, Incorporated as a consortium that will benefit from Governor Deval Patrick's plan to increase funding. The Governor is moving to increase funding for the five campus system: Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke, Smith and the University of Massachusetts, and not Five Colleges, Incorporated – a distinctly separate non-profit consortium that does not receive state funding.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 8
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COPIES EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Synoweak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ART/ WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leil Wilcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS [illegible] SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS [illegible] OPERATING ON [illegible] FOUNDED IN 1890, [illegible] AS ALOE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIDING IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. IT PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

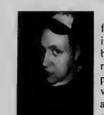
NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Huston

COPY EDITOR
Greg McCarthy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Stay updated on our news blog:
http://dailycollegian.blogspot.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN



EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself." - Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

George's Marvel-ous comeback plan

Dan Nicastro

As hard as it is for me to say this, it's hard not to feel bad for the president right now. In the past, George W. Bush was a uniter. He was able to rally most of America against the policies of his administration. He was able to polarize public opinion over the War in Iraq. He was even able to make us laugh by labeling himself the "decider" and asking if our children "is learning." As the election season heats up, however, the president has become just another lame duck trying desperately to remain relevant. The latest blow to his self esteem has come thanks to the D.C. District Court.

Last Friday, the D.C. District Court refused to review a series of cases involving what information can be presented at the "trials" of Guantanamo Bay detainees. In the past, these hearings only included evidence the military deemed "appropriate," meaning those labeled "enemy combatants" were largely unable to present a strong defense. Last July, the D.C. District Court of Appeals changed this standard and provided Guantanamo detainees with the opportunity to present whatever evidence they saw fit to argue their case.

The Bush administration – surprisingly – is saying the decision jeopardizes national security. The problem with this response is not that it shows little regard for basic civil liberties, or that it provides another example of how willing the Bush administration is to throw around the label "jeopardizes national security" when a decision doesn't go its way. It's not even the more abstract idea that the Bush administration feels as if trials of enemy combatants should be conducted with certain evidence.

No, the real problem with this response is that it's boring. It's clear that all this waiting for the end of his term has made Bush bored. Whether it was the NSA tapping our phone lines, Democrats refusing to blindly pass a huge war bill, or rational American citizens who continue to be against the war in Iraq, the Bush administration has played the "jeopardizing national security" card. The severity of the Bush administration's charge got lost in the endless repetition.

If the Justice League vouches for the president's plan, it stands to reason the rest of America won't be that far behind.

The question then becomes what's next for the administration? Without a trademark phrase to acquit them of wrongdoing, how will the Bush White House continue to function over the next eleven months?

I generally hate to give advice to Republicans – especially when the advice is this good – but I think that if I hear the phrase "jeopardizes national security" one more time, my head might explode.

The answer lies in the court case I discussed above. The president made the mistake of appealing to the "D.C." Court of Appeals, as it was pretty clear they were not going to agree to his proposed review. Instead, he should have gone to the paragon of justice itself: the "DC" Court of Appeals.

Many of you know them better as the "Justice League."

Just imagine the scene: Democrats in Congress are arguing the surge in Iraq only provided a temporary solution which is impossible to sustain. Just think of the consequences of this discussion if you're George W. Bush. If the Democrats are able to muster enough support, they might even reject further war spending aims which give the president total control over the conduct of the war. In a democratic nation such as ours, that lack of total control just can't stand. Enter the Justice League.

The president stares at a large screen with the images of Superman, Batman, Wonder Woman and others, discussing with them the details of their dangerous mission to curtail sectarian violence in Iraq.

We've all been looking for a way to end the war, and this may be just what we need. If the Justice League vouches for the president's plan, it stands to reason the rest of America won't be that far behind.

The bonus of this plan is that even if the Justice League retires to their Secret Sanctuary and decides that Bush's propositions are not, shall we say, the most noble, the administration could probably just coax Batman into "solving" our Middle East problems. He's already teetering on the edge of insanity so it wouldn't take much to convince him to go over there and "win one for America." The Caped Crusader's involvement could not only end the war in Iraq, but it could also fulfill Bush's promise to bring peace to the Middle East, securing Bush's legacy.

This plan accomplishes several goals. First, discussing policy with the Green Lantern would probably make the president feel much better about his lame duck status. Second, the White House wouldn't have to worry about using the phrase "jeopardizing national security," as the administration wouldn't have to defend itself from the constant barrage of complaints about unconstitutionality (at least, not any more than it already does). Finally, there would be an end to the war in sight.

As we approach the five-year anniversary of the war, it's become clear that the only way any of us can save face in Iraq and hope to erase the demons of Guantanamo Bay is if we call on the Justice League. Looks like a job for Superman.

Dan Nicastro is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dnicastr@student.umass.edu.

Free speech: think first

Nicholas O'Malley

My friend Sami has a tendency to refer to cute and adorable people or things as "muffins," I think. The truth is, I really don't know what she means – perhaps it's some obscure inside joke or reference. Rather than stressing the exact definition of what she is trying to say, I just play along. In reality, it could mean anything from bakery goods to a chair. If "muffin" were some sort of derogatory term, what she says could even be deemed offensive, which is why it is so important to understand that anything you say can be wrongly interpreted.

You could say that I'm just ignoring what she could really be saying; but in all honesty, there's no way I could understand exactly what she is thinking. The only way she, or anyone, can communicate her thoughts is through words. The only reason this is relevant is that, although she may say "muffin," I have to realize it's being used in an abstract way and not necessarily the way I might use it.

Now, talking about muffins and adorable kids on TV may not make you want to break out your pitchforks and torches, but there are plenty of ways to rub people the wrong way. This is especially common when the context of speaking comes to TV and other mass media. Saying just the wrong thing in an interview or press conference could land a celebrity on the front page of a tabloid in the blink of an eye.

Pitchforks and torches were images brought forth when Kelly Tilghman, an anchor on the Golf Channel, made an inappropriate comment concerning Tiger Woods, the highest ranked golfer in the world. In response to a co-anchor's inquiry on how younger players should challenge Woods' successes, Tilghman replied, "Lynch him in a back alley."

Among friends, you can drop f-bombs and make jokes about mothers, as long as it's accepted. People have the right to say what they believe.

Although the comment would be deemed inappropriate under normal circumstances, Tilghman's statement was downright offensive since Woods is multiracial, but is primarily considered to be black. While the anchor was merely attempting to entertain her audience through a joke, the message was not received in the lighthearted manner she had expected.

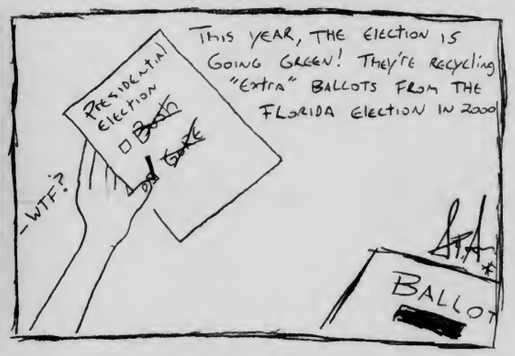
When Michael Richards, better known as Cosmo Kramer, went on a tirade over an African-American heckler, he was attempting to get shock laughs from his audience. His comments, however, contained many racist terms and caused his audience to walk out and his fame to dissolve when recordings became public.

The process of communication through language consists of the speaker encoding thoughts into words that are sent to the listener who in turn interprets what is said in his or her own way. Herein lies the chance for misinterpretation and an inability to say what you really want. In cases where what you say can be determined to be racially insensitive, like Tilghman's, it usually is.

Since we live in a society where discrimination and simply offensive comments are not out of the question, it's no fault of someone else's if he or she takes what you said the wrong way. Even if you have the best of intentions, you are responsible for what you say. You can control whatever happens to come out of your mouth; however, no one can control how they receive and react to it.

Free speech is a right – a well-deserved one at that – but the Bill of Rights does not justify everything you say. Racial insensitivity and outcry is only touched upon when people react, not when it is spoken. Among friends, you can drop f-bombs and make jokes about mothers, as long as it's accepted. People have the right to say what they believe. No one's going to stop that. It's when what they say conflicts with the rights and well-being of others that the speaker must be held accountable.

If you're clad in a gaudy Eli Manning jersey and find it necessary to remind everyone you see in the hall that their preferred football team lost an important game, you're not going to be a very popular person in that hall. Meanwhile, shouting derogatory terms about New York sports franchises in response is unlikely to resolve the issue. Unfortunately, when two parties such as these interact, there is very little chance that everyone's going to be happy.



Whether you're calling someone a "muffin" or going on a tirade, keep in mind that you're responsible for any reaction you may receive. So instead of reminding those that root for Foxboro-based football teams of the outcome of a game, it might be easier to just let it go. Don't worry, we didn't forget.

Nicholas O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

The ED/OP section is invading your television set!

The Daily Collegian and UVC-TV will be debuting the new editorial TV show "The Daily Collegian Mass Talk-Back"

STAY TUNED TO UVC AND THE EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE FOR DETAILS

If you don't vote, you will be ignored

Evan Powers

I made my way back to my hometown over the Coolidge Bridge yesterday afternoon to cast my vote. I had a long enough break to take an hour out of my time and take part in Super Tuesday, the long-awaited day when nearly two dozen states vote in the primary elections for the Democratic and Republican nominations for the 2008 presidency. I felt accomplished as I finished making my selection in the booth at the Northampton Civic Center because I was doing my part in voicing who I felt would be the best candidate to push the country in the best possible direction.

My vote counts and my vote matters. Did you do the same? If you did, hats off to you; you've given yourself and every other supporter of your favorite candidate, Democratic or Republican, a better chance at seeing the individual you want to run the country win. If you didn't, you've still got a chance over the next coming months to redeem yourself and do what every eligible college student should do: vote.

Why vote? What's the big deal if you, one single individual, stay home on the next voting Tuesday? Because the reality is that election after election, the percentage of eligible youth of the ages 18 to 29 who actually register and vote is much smaller when compared with other demographics. In 2004, only 52% of eligible youth voted in the Presidential election, compared to 70% of voters over the age of 30.

This doesn't mean the youth market isn't a force, but only that it isn't a main motivator in campaign platforms and pre-election advertising. Campaign managers target hotspots centered around the older generations of the country because older people show up at the polls at a larger rate than us college students. That's why social security is something politicians protect. Young people don't vote, so if they cut college funds and raise tuition, so what? Why cater to a group of people who don't vote?

Are you choosing not to vote because you don't like the choice of candidates? Are you worried that Hillary Clinton's centrism is just for public consumption? Is Barack Obama's political resume too thin in your eyes? Does Mitt Romney's Democratic past during his Massachusetts days concern you, and does John McCain's opposition to tax cuts turn you away?

If college students show up in larger numbers this year ... politicians will take young people's issues into consideration in elections to come.

Don't let the views and stances each candidate takes on each issue turn you away from voting. Don't pretend there's no way you can make a difference in deciding whether to bring a candidate who's committed to maintaining presence in the Middle East to office and bringing in a candidate who embraces troop withdrawal. Don't shut your eyes to the difference between pro-life and pro-choice and what it means or could potentially mean to you.

You are voting for your candidate and your issues – but you are also voting for your age group, your race and your gender. If college students show up in larger numbers this year than in 2004, then politicians will take young people's issues into consideration in elections to come.

What kind of difference will it make? Suppose a politician is thinking about passing a tax cut and funding it by cutting school loan programs. A larger turnout of youth voters may prevent that money from being given to an older generation and away from needy college students, simply because you showed up and voted. Just by turning out, you change the percentage of young voters and get politicians more interested in your ideas and opinions.

We've heard year after year that we don't like the way the current government is being run, that we need some change, that it's time for someone new. Do you feel the same way? Then get out to the polls in November and change it, because a government only works as well as the people who are active in it. If you don't vote, it's like saying you don't care how your country is run.

So if you're that apathetic to voting, where do you get the idea that you can complain when something happens that you don't like? Regardless of who you support, you have the right to vote; you have the right to go out and have a say in who you feel should run this country. So if you missed the polls yesterday, do the right thing and get involved starting now in preparation for November.

Evan Powers is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at epowers@student.umass.edu.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003

ED/OP!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Annual film festival begins

Two-month series to feature African American community

By Heather Waxman
Collegian Correspondent

It is that time of year again! The Interdepartmental Program in Film Studies at the University of Massachusetts is hosting the 15th annual Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival.

The MMFF was founded in 1993 by Professor Catherine Portuges, director of the Interdepartmental Program in Film Studies. The festival hones in on innovative cinematic works by filmmakers young and old, up-and-coming and reputable.

The festival selects a different theme each year, focusing on contemporary issues in both politics and art. Film scholars and filmmakers give an introduction before the showing of a film and take questions from the audience following the film's commencement.

The MMFF is thirteen free weeks of engaging cinema guaranteed to interest not only students but faculty and the wider community as well. This year's theme is titled, "Africanicities: Conflict and Community."

Running from Feb. 6 to April 23 throughout the five colleges, the festival focuses on the exploration of the various challenges undergone by African Americans on their quest for equal opportunity.

It begins with an exclusive ode to the beloved Ousmane Sembene, a prominent Senegalese filmmaker. Sembene recently passed away at the age of 84 in his home of Dakar, Senegal. His family announced his death this past Sunday. He had been struggling with an unknown illness since this past December.

Sembene is dubbed "the father of African cinema," having taken up filmmaking in the 1960s. He studied film at Gorky Studio in Moscow and held a firm belief that film could reach a more diverse African audience in comparison to literature. Two of his films are scheduled to be screened tonight at 7:30 p.m. at the Isenberg School of Management.

The remainder of the festival is infused with new cinema, in addition to various storytellings that emphasize the daily life of modern day African Americans.

Among these is the MMFF's very own mini-series titled "Landscapes of Violence." The short sequence of films features an array of disturbing occurrences, targeting war and terrorism in such nations as Bosnia, Darfur, Indonesia and the United States.

Perhaps the most intriguing portion of this mini-series will be the April 9 screening of a segment on the suffering nation of Darfur entitled "Darfur Now!" It is directed by critically-acclaimed director Ted Braun, once a student at Amherst College.

Beginning at 7:30 p.m. in Amherst College's Stirn Auditorium, the 92-minute documentary closely examines the evident devastation sweeping Darfur through the eyes of six individuals working to end the mass murders. Don Cheadle, a prominent celebrity activist, actor and author fighting for Darfur, makes a special appearance in the film, urging people everywhere to do everything in their power to work toward ending genocide.

Providing a release of tension and adding a great deal of humor is the ostentatious Keith Price, co-host of Sirius Radio's "OutQ in the Morning." Premiering on March 26 at 7:30 p.m. at the Isenberg School of Management is "Ebony Chunky Love: Bitch Can't Get a Date."

The humorous film puts the spotlight on the personal and professional difficulties of a homosexual African American comedian. It's directed by Lonnie Renteria, who uses various clips from Price's comedy routine as well as past interviews to address various issues pertaining to the African American gay community.

Wrapping up the Festival on April 30 is "Look Back and Wonder: The Rise of Black Studies at UMass Amherst."

The film looks into the history of the department it is co-sponsored by, the W.E.B Du Bois department of Afro-American Studies. It highlights the department's achievements and debates through its impressive footage and insightful interviews. The film also zones in on the department's impressive history of featured members, including Shirley Graham Du Bois, Chinua Achebe, James Baldwin and such world-class musicians and cultural icons as Archi Shepp and Max Roach.

Heather Waxman can be reached at hwaxman@student.umass.edu

15TH ANNUAL MASSACHUSETTS MULTICULTURAL FILM FESTIVAL

STARTS TODAY

ISENBERG SCHOOL OF MANAGMENT

7:30 P.M.

FREE

Day one of the 15th annual Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival is dedicated to Ousmane Sembene, the father of African film.

New volume looks at future economy

By Caitlin Quinn
Collegian Staff

A new book published by University of Massachusetts Press hits close to home for Massachusetts residents as it examines the state's changing economy and labor market.

The book, edited by professor of labor studies and director of the Labor Relations Research Center at UMass Amherst Tom Juravich, consists of original essays written by UMass faculty and graduate students as well as labor development specialists and economists.

In his introduction to "The Future of Work in Massachusetts," Juravich wrote, "We need this information not only to inform political and policy debates but to be able as citizens to make informed decisions about our jobs, our work, and our future – to help us have the right dreams."

"Our role is to publish first-rate works written by faculty," said Bruce Wilcox, director of UMass Press. "It seemed to us that this was an important topic which assembled an interesting group of contributors to cast light on this subject."

"The Future of Work in Massachusetts" gives an overview of the state economy and the composition of the workforce, as well as exploring the shortage of well-paid jobs and the fact that one in five women in Massachusetts is a low-wage worker. The book also addresses issues in the healthcare industry and the problems that arise from policies concerning work and family.

The book began in 2004 with a project on its topic. Research was conducted by the labor studies programs at UMass campuses state wide and funded by the state legislature.

"Juravich brought together economists, sociologists and political scientists who had been studying the Massachusetts economy and where it was likely to go," said Wilcox.

As Juravich wrote in his introduction, more than 40 research proposals were submitted for the project, which showed that, "clearly, we were not the only ones thinking about how work is changing here in the Commonwealth." The research findings were presented at a conference at UMass Boston in the spring of 2005, and went on to become the foundation for the book.

As a critical part of spreading these research findings, the Massachusetts state legislature provided funds for the distribution of copies of the book to every high school and public library in the state.

"We were fortunate thanks to the Labor Relation Research Center that funds were made available from the state to distribute it to schools that normally would not have bought it," said Wilcox. "It's a useful reference for students."

These copies, sent in November, were accompanied by letters from UMass Amherst Chancellor Thomas Cole that stated, "The distribution of this volume represents the partnership of the University and our state leaders and demonstrates our commitment to education in the Commonwealth."

The letters also said the writing style of the book "makes it accessible to high school students, college students, and general readers."

In his introduction, Juravich wrote, "To create a volume that was accessible to the broad public, we were most interested in papers that could both speak to major issues in the workplace and to do so without excessive jargon or technical language."

In addition to comprehensive essays on topics that address Massachusetts as a whole, "The Future of Work in Massachusetts" provides a case study of Springfield and the possible reason for the recent fiscal crisis the city has experienced. This collection of research enables Massachusetts residents to understand how the state can progress by explaining the facts about its current workforce and economy.

Caitlin Quinn can be reached at cquinn@student.umass.edu

Late night hosts throw down over Huckabee

Simple feud ends with vaudeville-inspired rumble

By Ryan McAskill
Collegian Staff

While the writers' strike has been problematic for Hollywood as a whole, it has led to a great and incredibly hilarious feud.

Late night talk show hosts Stephen Colbert, Jon Stewart and Conan O'Brien culminated a month long, on-air bout with a dramatic, three-show crossover special Monday night.

The feud began, strangely enough, over politics and Republican presidential candidate Mike Huckabee. Following Huckabee's surprise win in the Iowa caucus, both Colbert and O'Brien made separate claims that they were responsible for the rise in Huckabee's campaign.

Colbert stated that because of Huckabee's appearance on the "Colbert Report," Huckabee received the "Colbert bump," which, in turn, led to him being taken seriously as a presidential candidate. Huckabee even asserted that he would consider a Huckabee/Colbert ticket if he won the nomination.

O'Brien, on the other hand, claimed that his "Walker, Texas Ranger lever," which breathed life back into the career of Chuck Norris, was responsible for Huckabee's success. Norris is an outspoken Huckabee supporter and has joined Huckabee on the campaign trail. Norris can also be seen behind Huckabee in many of his public speeches. Thus O'Brien claimed, since he revived Norris and Norris revived Huckabee, O'Brien revived Huckabee.

While that logic may seem airtight, it did not sit well with Colbert. A few days later on his show, Colbert again stated he was responsible for Huckabee and issued a warning to O'Brien. "Back off of Mike Huckabee or I will kick your translucent white ass. You got that, Irish?"

Naturally, the threat did not go unanswered. "My a is not translucent. It's white with streaks of pink," O'Brien replied. He continued by agreeing with Colbert that the "Colbert bump" may have been responsible for Huckabee but that O'Brien, by merely mentioning Colbert's name on his "powerful network show," was responsible for the success of Colbert, who O'Brien said was the "temporary host of the 'Colbert Report.' They'll find someone soon." In a nut shell, Colbert made Huckabee, O'Brien made Colbert, and therefore O'Brien made Huckabee.

The feud seemed settled once and for all as Colbert had no retort to O'Brien's claim. He then received some unexpected help. While in the process of admitting defeat on "The Colbert Report," Colbert was interrupted by friend and fellow Comedy Central pundit Jon Stewart. Stewart asked the question: "Colbert made Huckabee and Conan made Colbert – who then, sir, made Conan O'Brien?"

With Colbert looking puzzled, Stewart produced a VHS tape and presented it to Colbert, who played it. The clip was of an episode of the "Jon Stewart Show" that was on MTV in the early '90s. In the episode, the guest was "the tallest talk show host in broadcasting," Conan O'Brien. Following the stream of logic started by O'Brien, Stewart concluded that "Colbert made Huckabee, O'Brien made Colbert, Jon Stewart made O'Brien, so Jon Stewart made Huckabee!"

O'Brien wasted little time in his response; last Friday, he produced a photograph that proved he was the doctor that delivered both Stewart and Colbert, and he was responsible for bringing them into this world and creating both of them.

He added a promise that if Colbert and Stewart didn't drop this whole feud he would be forced to come to their studio and "kick some Comedy Central a."

All of this led up to the three-show showdown on Monday night.

On "A Daily Show with Jon Stewart," Stewart opened the second segment with talk about the Super Bowl commercials. Before he could get through the introduction, Colbert appeared and started talking about Conan O'Brien. Colbert showed the photo O'Brien produced and talked about O'Brien's promise. During the talking, O'Brien appeared behind both of them and declared that the fight was now on and that it was "go time."

While Colbert and O'Brien were ready to throw down, Stewart hesitated because he was still in the process of taping his show. It was decided that Colbert and O'Brien would wait in the hall and the rumble would take place when Stewart was done "A Daily Show" ended with Stewart going to the hallway, only to find O'Brien by himself, because Colbert was off taping his show.

"The Colbert Report" opened with Colbert talking about the feud. Stewart and O'Brien then appeared and the battle was gearing up to happen right there. Colbert was then the one to hesitate because he was in the middle of taping his show. Stewart and O'Brien then returned to the hallway and waited. Colbert ended the show walking into the hallway only to find Stewart by himself because O'Brien had left to taping his show.

The action culminated on "Late Night with Conan O'Brien." After finishing his monologue, O'Brien recapped the feud and said he had heard trash talk from Stewart and Colbert for the last few hours and said "if I see either of them again I'm going to kick some Central Central a."

With that, Colbert and Stewart appeared and, imitating "West Side Story," complete with snapping, approached O'Brien's desk. O'Brien pulled out a baseball bat and the three of them made their way back stage to fight.

In a three-minute segment that can only be described as a resurgence of vaudeville-style comedy, the three exchanged blows with baseball bats, trash cans, a fire extinguisher, ice skates and, of course, fists. The battle ended with a dramatic reenactment of "Rocky III," as all three men landed punches as the screen froze, "Eye of the Tiger" played and the screen faded to an artist's rendering of the event.

The segment was then interrupted by a message from Mike Huckabee. Huckabee said none of them were responsible for Huckabee, but, "this great nation made me." He ended by saying "vote for me, God bless America and forget these three idiots."

While the ultimate victory of this battle between late night heavy weights is still undetermined, it is clear that fans everywhere win.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil@dailycollegian.com

Conan O'Brien, Jon Stewart and Stephen Colbert have been entangled in a month-long feud that started when both Colbert and O'Brien claimed responsibility for Republican presidential candidate Mike Huckabee's win in the Iowa caucus. It has since become very personal.

Minutemen gear for tough BC squad teams, so UMass fans should be out in full force. After BC's first visit to the Mullins Center, the Minutemen praised their fans for the support they've shown. Even with the team in the midst of a six-game unbeaten streak, more than 7,000 came out for White Out Night.

HOCKEY from page 8

A win for the Minutemen will not only help them in their quest for home ice in the Hockey East Tournament, but boost their resume for an at-large bid to the NCAA Tournament should they lose in the Hockey East Tournament. Meanwhile, a victory for the Eagles pulls them closer to first-place New Hampshire. However, the Eagles may not be in top form coming off another intense battle with BU in the first round of the Beanpot Tournament – BC defeated BU 4-3 on Monday and will play Harvard in the finals next Monday . Sophomore Martin Nolet missed Saturday's game after suffering an injury in a 1-0 loss to Northeastern the night before . The win over Maine makes UMass 41-1-1 in its last 43 games when scoring at least four goals . . . Quirk's plus-4 rating in Saturday's victory gives him a plus-9 for the season, second only to Mike Kostka's plus-11 . . . UMass's 54 shots on goal were the second most this season. The Minutemen had 55 on Nov. 25 in a 5-2 win over Union . . . The seven-game winless streak UMass snapped on Saturday was its longest since Feb. 7-March 6 of 2004 when the Minutemen ended the regular season 0-6-1 in its final seven games . . . Freshman Marc Concannon has played in five of the last six games after playing one in UMass's first 19 contests. In his six appearances this season, he has not recorded a point but has a plus-2 rating . . . UMass dropped to No. 18 in the USCHO/CSTV Men's College Hockey poll this week after a week at No. 15. The Minutemen were at No. 5, the highest in program history, after winning the Lightning College Hockey Classic in Tampa, Fla., at the end of December.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com

Don Cahoon is in his eighth season as the UMass hockey coach and looks to build upon his 2006-07 success.

Paul vs. Williams: Who's best?

Statistics favor Hornet as NBA's premier point guard

Eli Rosenswaike

Player A and player B are both point guards in the NBA. Player A is the better passer, scorer, penetrator, leader, defensive player, free throw shooter, rebounder and ball handler. Player B, meanwhile, is the superior outside shooter and has better size.

So who is the better player?

This seems so clear-cut that I shouldn't even have to ask.

But apparently, I do. Many of the so-called experts and other sorts seem to think that the choice is player B.

Player B is Deron Williams of the Utah Jazz. And to many, he is better than player A, Chris Paul of the New Orleans Hornets.

Somebody should strip these people of their media credentials, because that's a bit preposterous.

To figure this out, it's important to define what a point guard should be. Firstly, he's the floor general, so he needs to take care of the basketball and get his teammates involved. Being a good passer is a must, as is limiting turnovers and maximizing possessions. Also, if teammates are struggling on offense and aren't making shots, the point guard should be capable of taking on the scoring load.

The point guard should be an extension of the coach and a leader on the floor. He should control the tempo and take the opposing point guard out of rhythm with tough defense.

I would argue that Paul does all these things better than Williams. But don't just take my word for it, look at the statistics – they all agree with me.

Ever since Williams and Paul were taken back-to-back in the 2005 NBA Draft, they have been constantly linked and compared to each other. Utah selected Williams with the third pick, Paul with the fourth by New Orleans.

At the time, the Jazz received a fair amount of criticism for passing up Paul in favor of Williams. They argued that Williams was a better fit for their offense, which very well may be true – but that doesn't change the fact that Paul is the better basketball player.

Let's start the analysis with the statistics most important for a point guard – assists and turnovers, which pretty accurately gauges the effectiveness in how the player runs the offense.

Although the gap in assists per game has narrowed between the two, Paul had a decisive edge in his rookie season. At the age of 20, Paul averaged 7.8 per game, while Williams just 4.3. Currently, Paul ranks second in the NBA with 10.8 per game, with Williams fourth at 9.7.

Even more telling are the turnovers. Williams averages almost a full turnover more per game than Paul, as only four players in the entire league turn the ball over more frequently than Williams.

Despite constantly having the ball in his hands for the Hornets, 27 players – including several forwards – turn the ball over more than Paul.

Adding to that, Williams and the Jazz play slower on offense than the Hornets do, so their turnover rates should be the complete opposite.

Most importantly, Paul is miles ahead of Williams in assist-to-turnover ratio. Paul ranks 4th in the NBA with an impressive 4.02-to-1 ratio, while Williams ranks behind 20 players at 2.78-to-1, including several backup point guards like Jeff McInnis, Anthony Carter, Charlie Bell and Carlos Arroyo.

Paul supporters would, just weeks ago, mention that Williams has a better supporting cast (Carlos Boozer, Andrei Kirilenko and Mehmet Okur) than Paul has (David West, Tyson Chandler and Peja Stojakovic). They would argue that Paul has less to work with, making what he was doing even more impressive.

After a recent nine-game winning streak for the Hornets – giving them the best record in the Western Conference at the time – coupled with West being named to the All-Star team, some may disagree that Williams has superior talent surrounding him.

But the point is being missed here. West is a terrific player and so is Chandler, but it is no coincidence that both players took major leaps forward when Paul came to town from Wake Forest. This is particularly true for Chandler, who was essentially left for dead by the Chicago Bulls. A lot of the credit goes to Paul, who helped those two guys reach the next level.

Paul also deserved some praise for all the other things he does on the floor, such as rebounding and scoring.

Point guard Chris Paul is averaging 20.3 points and 10.8 assists per game. The Hornets are tied for the second-best record in the Western Conference.

The two arguments that I hear most often for Williams over Paul is shooting and size.

Yes, Williams shoots at a higher clip from the field for his career (46.1 percent to 44.5) and from the perimeter (37.2 to 32.2), but Paul is well above those averages this season. Forget that – Paul scores more points than Williams, consistently, despite also doing a better job distributing the ball to his teammates. And free throw shooting isn't even close (Paul 84.3 percent in career, Williams 76.2).

Paul currently averages a career-high 20.3 points per game, while Williams is averaging an even 19. In career average, Paul holds the edge by nearly three points per game (17.5 to 14.8).

What is even more ridiculous is the size comparison, like somehow the fact that Williams is three inches taller (6-foot-3 to 6-foot) makes him the better player. The incredible thing is that the height should aid Williams in two key areas – rebounding and defense, but Paul has the edge in both areas.

How come with a three-inch height advantage and 30 extra pounds, Williams has been outrebounded by Paul in every season of their careers? Paul has averaged 4.6 per game in his career, Williams just 2.9.

And even most experts agree that Williams doesn't use his physical presence well enough on defense. Paul plays tougher "D" and holds a monstrous edge in steals over Williams.

Paul led the NBA in steals last season and leads again this season. Williams has had problems averaging 1.1 per game, while Paul was on pace earlier this season to be the first player in NBA history to average at least 20 points, 10 assists and three steals per game.

So who's better?

Don't listen to those ESPN experts, just use common sense.

Eli Rosenswaike is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

Dacko prepares team to defend La Salle's Hightower given the opportunity, she rarely misses from inside.

W. BASKETBALL from page 8

"We've got to attack the post," Dacko said. "I don't think they've got anyone that can stay with Kate, Whitney [McDonald] or Teya [Wright] – we've got to attack on the inside."

Wright is a freshman who can overpower opponents. She's a good rebounder, but also raw on the offensive end and prone to foul trouble. When she avoids fouls, she's one of the most dominant players on the floor and can change a game.

UMass is in the middle of the conference in scoring offense, and they'll be tested against the number four scoring defense in the conference. The Explorers are holding opponents to under 60 points per game.

The Minutewomen have difficulty scoring when they're relying on Mills and Rosanio to handle virtually the entire scoring load. Rosanio averages 16 points per game and is the team's emotional leader, but after her, the scoring drops off.

If the team fails to score the points in the paint, they'll have to rely on the outside shooting of Stefanie Gerardot and Kim Benton. The former is third on the team in scoring at 8.7 points per game and shoots 34.2 percent from beyond the arc.

Benton made a name for herself last year by shooting 35 percent from 3-point range but has struggled this year. She's shooting 26.2 percent from three (22-of-84).

The Minutewomen have the highest field goal percentage in the conference, but when they miss shots, rebounding hasn't been one of the their strengths. La Salle has also struggled, being outrebounded by eight per game, and UMass could take advantage of this with the size of Mills, Wright and McDonald.

"[Offensive rebounds] are what we've been working on every day in practice and you would never know it by watching our games but it's outrageous," Dacko said. "We've got to get bodies on people."

She further went on to say that her team is capable of winning the battle on the offensive glass but the preparation hasn't transferred.

UMass is 10th in the conference with 10.62 offensive rebounds per game, while La Salle is last with 7.55 per contest.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

AFRICAN BEADED ART
POWER AND ADORNMENT
On View February 1–June 15, 2008
Friday, February 8 4–9 pm
(snow date February 9)
Free second FRIDAYS
festivities featuring music by the Afro-beat band NOMO!
SCMA is pleased to present Second Fridays in conjunction with NORTHAMPTON
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP
413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

where style happens
Citizens of Humanity jeans
Seven jeans
Mavi jeans
Free People
Hazel
Juno
Voxx
Miss Me
Madden Girl
Oh...Deer
Chinese Laundry
Yellow Box
Frye
Keds
Reef
Keen
Teva
Dansko
and ...lots of fun accessories!
ZANA downtown Amherst

EF BREAK You should go.
Travel the world with college students from all over the country. It's fun. It's easy. It's affordable. It's time to travel.
Make today the day you remember your first time abroad.
Save $150
February 15!
Grand Tour of Europe
Classic Italy
European Road Trip
Exotic Thailand
The Greek Isles
Ultimate Europe
Visit us at efcollegebreak.com/travel or call 800.766.2645

INFO SESSION:
Wednesday, February 6
Campus Center 917
7:30 PM
TEACHFORAMERICA
All academic majors. Full salary and benefits. www.teachforamerica.org

Seven O's
EVERY WEDNESDAY
KARAOKE
LIVE BAND
SAT. 2/9/08
NO NO'S BAND
LOOKING FOR EXPOSURE?
STUDENT BANDS WELCOME TO PLAY AT SEVEN O'S
LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO HAVE A PRIVATE EVENT/PARTY?
CALL 413-530-6996
ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-6788
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F 1PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN NEXT TO CLIFFSIDE APTS.

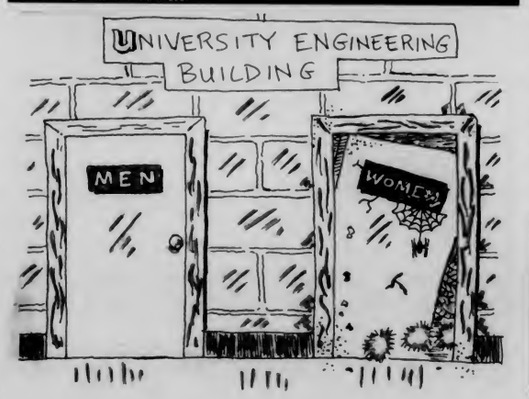
Why did you even bother waking up today?

			2		3	6	7
		4	1	6
						4	9
					5	8		4
3	6						2	7
8		5	6
	2	8
				2	1	7
	5	6	9		7

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Rock and roll to the beat of the funk fuzz
Wipe your feet really good on the rhythm rug
If you feel the urge to freak, do the jitterbug
Come and spread your arms if you really need a hug"

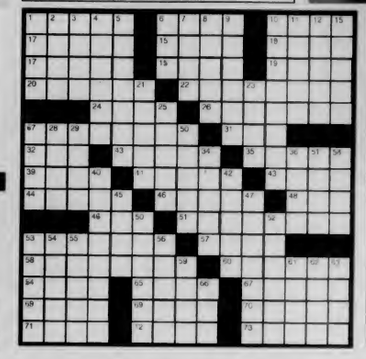
— A Tribe Called Quest



UMASSIC PARK By Curtis Sarkin

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

LABRAT By Richard Martelly



ACROSS
1 The Divine Bernhardt
6 Black, in poetry
10 Bundled package
14 French river
15 One Saarinen
16 Cameo stone
17 Structure starter?
18 Set the pace
19 Grimm beast
20 Impedes
22 More courageous
24 Sports rig
26 Last to finish
27 Spine piece
31 "The Name of the Rose" writer
32 Roman greeting
33 Requisites
35 Game site
39 Gen toppers
41 Respond
43 TV's talking horse
44 Flee to wed
46 Portugal's neighbor
48 Fill about
49 Exist
51 Turncoats
53 Express again
57 Germen wife
58 Transistor parts
60 Comes to terms
64 Lot measure
65 Corel's place
67 Low joint
68 Ogle
69 March Madness org.
70 Actress Witherspoon
71 Untidy condition
72 Sicilian volcano
73 Snake to count on?

DOWN
1 Lost traction
2 First-class
3 Great ___ Valley
4 Take into custody
5 Embolden
6 Snakelike fish
7 Signal sound
8 Dental exams?
9 Protuberance
10 Avid reader
11 Actress Dickinson
12 Harpike instruments
13 Strain
21 Scimitar's cousin
23 Comic Imogene
25 Shade providers
27 Valley coursed by a stream
28 Satan's realm
29 Make over
30 Alter to fit
34 Head wrap
36 Hence
37 Within range
38 Contributes
40 Bedaubs
42 Small crown
45 QED part
47 Fells for honeymooners
50 Forever, in poems
52 Revolved
53 Dome-in 54 Roast host
55 Fathers
56 Put up
59 Connery or Lennon
61 Supplemented
62 Otherwise
63 Tarot user
66 CAB's successor

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Submit your comics!
collegiatecomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20–FEB. 18
Whoever invented rain boots with a built-in heel is a genius. Whoever buys them...is a plague on society.

pisces FEB. 19–MAR. 20
Set up a folding chair in a library elevator and expose yourself to people as they come in.

aries MAR. 21–APR. 19
Valentine's Day is just around the corner. You'd best place your order at blowupdolls.com if you're expecting company.

taurus APR. 20–MAY 20
Upgrading your external hard drive will only get you so far. Upgrade your internal processing unit to achieve true success.

gemini MAY 21–JUN. 21
Take advantage of the acupuncture services offered by Health Services. Needles are fun!

cancer JUN. 22–JUL. 22
It's good that you get along with your boss. It's bad that you get it on with your boss.

leo JUL. 23–AUG. 22
Forget about the groundhog. When people see your shadow, they will remain aroused for at least six weeks.

virgo AUG. 23–SEPT. 22
Insects have exoskeletons to protect their organs. What's protecting your junk?

libra SEPT. 23–OCT. 22
Your Coach purse and its repeating pattern just gave someone an epileptic seizure. Way to go.

scorpio OCT. 23–NOV. 21
Walk into a random class, say something offensive, start a heated argument then leave. See Capricorn for ideas.

sagittarius NOV. 22–DEC. 21
Your bellybutton stash has shaped up nicely. Harvest and spread like ebola.

capricorn DEC. 22–JAN. 19
Girls can't be president!

Can comics kick it?
YES THEY CAN!
comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT. FOR RENT

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today toll free at 1-888-684-2267 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

RAFT GUIDES
Zoar Outdoor is seeking adventuresome people to be full and part-time summer raft guides. Learn how to guide a raft during our training program and spend the summer on the Deerfield River. Applicants should have customer service experience and a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independently. Application deadline: Feb. 15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

Put up Posters! Through summer, car, sell, commitment needed. Up to $12/hr w/bonus. 20 hrs between Mon-Wed, excellent communicator, fast-paced, punctual, resume and formal cover letter to postering@artspromo.org. Hiring ASAP.

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab.linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Marketing Intern As a Marketing Intern (paid position) you will assist in marketing efforts to grow sales of the leading economic policy analysis model. Responsibilities include developing presentations and other marketing material, writing for newsletters, website, and blog, and assisting with internet marketing, promotions, campaigns, and other marketing efforts. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. resumes@remi.com. REMI is an eoe and maintains a drug-free workplace.

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

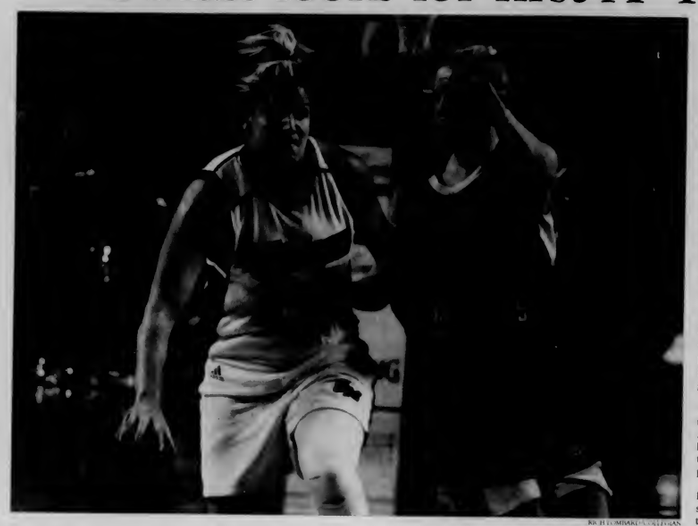
SERVICES

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing. STD screening & treatment. GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

Spring Break from $199 Land price starting from $199 for 7 days. We also have an all inclusive hotel start from $799 per person. Give us a call today it's not to late to still get away 1-800-GET-SUN-1

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN



SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass looks for first A-10 road win

Rosanio, Minutewomen take on La Salle in Philadelphia

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

KRISTEN MIRABELLA/COLLEGIAN

Pam Rosanio is second on the Minutewomen in scoring, averaging 16 points per game. The senior has started since arriving in Amherst her freshman year and will play a key role in the team's game against La Salle tonight.

The Massachusetts women's basketball team has struggled in both Atlantic 10 play and on the road this season, but it will have a chance to improve in both of these categories tonight when it faces La Salle in Philadelphia.

UMass (10-11, 2-4 A-10) had plenty of chances to even its conference record this past Sunday against Saint Joseph's, but turned the ball over 25 times and lost an 11-point lead midway through the second half in an eventual 72-66 home loss.

While the Minutewomen have protected their home court this season, they've struggled on the road. Their sole road win came against Wagner on Dec. 15, and they have lost their other nine road games, including both conference road games.

Conversely, the Explorers (9-13, 1-6 A-10) struggle at home and on the road. They are 4-6 in Tom Gola Arena, including 0-4 in conference home games. However, three of these four losses have come by six points or less.

Leading scorer Carlene Hightower was named to the preseason A-10 All-Conference first team, and has started since her sophomore year. She's averaging 16.3 points and 6.3 rebounds per game.

"[Hightower] moves extremely well without the ball," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "She doesn't stop moving and she's an inside-outside player. She'll spin, she'll get offensive rebounds, she can put back, she plays the perimeter and she plays inside – she's like a big Pam [Rosanio] that can post up."

Dacko praised Hightower, claiming that she's one of the hardest workers in the league as well as one of the most intense players. She plans to use Kate Mills on Hightower in the post, while using the Alisha Tatham and Pam Rosanio combination on the perimeter. Tatham is the team's quickest defender and could potentially give Hightower problems.

Despite being the best player on her team, Hightower has struggled with turnovers this season. In the team's 21 games, the senior has 43 assists and 80 turnovers.

Jamie Walsh is the other prominent member of La Salle Dacko hopes to contain. The sophomore guard is the second-leading scorer at 10.2 points per game and leads the team with 41 3-pointers.

Mills averages similar numbers to Hightower and leads the Minutewomen in scoring this year. She also gives them their most effective low-post presence, and while she can score outside when

See W. BASKETBALL on page 6

Hockey East honors freshman Marcou

Steady attendance at Mullins

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

BRIAN TEUTSCH/COLLEGIAN

Freshman winger James Marcou earned the Pro Ambitions Hockey East Rookie of the Week award after a three-point performance against conference rival Maine last Saturday. UMass won 5-3.

Freshman James Marcou of the Massachusetts hockey team grew accustomed to media attention during his time with the Waterloo (Iowa) Blackhawks of the United States Hockey League.

Twenty-five games into his collegiate career, Marcou is receiving the same attention from the media, but even more from those in charge of awards at Hockey East.

Marcou received this week's Pro Ambitions Hockey East freshman of the week award for his three-point performance – one goal, two assists – against Maine last Saturday. The Minutemen defeated the Black Bears, 5-3. Marcou scored UMass's first goal.

His second assist came on the game's deciding goal. After winning the puck behind the net, Marcou slid the puck into the slot without looking, and fellow rookie Chase Langeraap finished the play with a low wrister past Maine's Ben Bishop.

"I knew Chase or one of the guys would be in front of the net. It's something we always talk about, going to the net," Marcou said. "We need to score more goals, and we did that [Saturday]."

Marcou leads the Minutemen with 25 points on eight goals and 17 assists. His eight scores tie him with junior center Cory Quirk for the team lead while his 17 assists are first on the team.

UMass coach Don Cahoon paired Marcou with junior winger Alex Berry early in the season, but he has spent the last four games on a line with Quirk.

Freshmen Paul Dainton and Brian Keane are the other UMass freshman to win the award this season.

Marcou was also named a semi-finalist for the 56th annual Walter Brown award. The distinction awards the best American-born college hockey player. Boston University's Jon Curry won it last season.

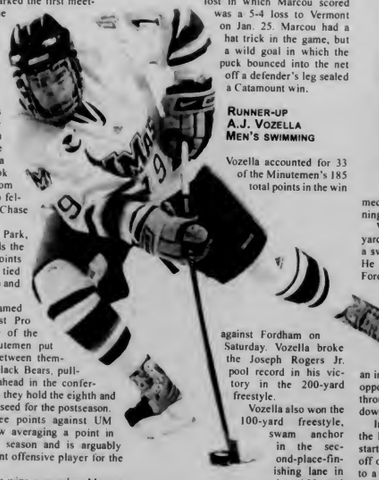
FILLING THE HOUSE

The attendance for Saturday's game was 7,722 – the highest at the Mullins center this season. The second-highest total was the 7,319 that saw the Minutemen tie Boston College, 1-1, on Nov. 16.

The UMass marketing department attempted to get 8,000 fans to the game with BC using a promotion called Operation 8K. The in-state rivals meet again this Friday at the Mullins Center, and the marketing department has dubbed the event Operation 8K Part II.

The matchup is key for both

See HOCKEY on page 6



BRIAN TEUTSCH/COLLEGIAN

Junior center Cory Quirk and the Minutemen take on Boston College at the Mullins Center this weekend.

COLLEGIAN SPORTS ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

JAMES MARCOU, FORWARD
HOCKEY

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO/LISA HELFERT

Marcou led the Massachusetts hockey team to its first win in its last eight games with a three-point night against Maine.

The game marked the first meeting between the teams since last year's NCAA quarterfinal in Rochester, N.Y.

Marcou scored the Minutemen's first goal of the night and then assisted on the game-winner, a beautiful no-look centering pass from behind the net to fellow freshman Chase Langeraap.

The Kings Park, N.Y., native leads the Minutemen in points (25), goals (8, tied with Cory Quirk) and assists (17).

He was also named the Hockey East Pro Ambition rookie of the week. The Minutemen put some distance between themselves and the Black Bears, pulling four points ahead in the conference standings as they hold the eighth and final tournament seed for the postseason.

Marcou's three points against UM means he is now averaging a point in every game this season and is arguably the most important offensive player for the Minutemen.

Simply, UMass wins more when Marcou is involved in the scoring. The Maroon and White are 9-3-2 when Marcou records at least one point, and 1-6-4 when he does not. When Marcou scores a goal, UMass is 4-1-2. When he doesn't UMass is 6-8-4.

The only game the Minutemen lost in which Marcou scored was a 5-4 loss to Vermont on Jan. 25. Marcou had a hat trick in the game, but a wild goal in which the puck bounced into the net off a defender's leg sealed a Catamount win.

RUNNER-UP
A.J. VOZELLA
MEN'S SWIMMING

Vozella accounted for 33 of the Minutemen's 185 total points in the win against Fordham on Saturday. Vozella broke the Joseph Rogers Jr. pool record in his victory in the 200-yard freestyle.

Vozella also won the 100-yard freestyle, swam anchor in the second-place-finishing lane in the 200-yard medley relay and swam lead in the winning lane in the 200-yard freestyle relay.

Vozella started the day with the 200-yard medley relay and was the latter part of a sweep of the top two spots in the event. He finished nearly half a second ahead of Fordham's Justin Coombs.

The Xaverian Brothers High School (Mass.) product swam with noticeable intensity in his last meet as a Minuteman. In his record-breaking swim in the 200- yard freestyle, Vozella never paced himself. He swam at an incredible rate of speed, compared to his opponents. He maintained a powerful stroke throughout the entire race, never slowing down.

In the final race of the day, Vozella swam the lead leg of the 200-freestyle relay and started things quickly, getting a good jump off of the block. Vozella's strong effort led to a nice transition into the next leg of the race; his lane won by over two seconds.

INSIDE: BOSTON BASED COMMEDIAN BIRBIGLIA COMES HOME | PAGE 6

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SNOW FLURRIES : HI: 34 LO: 22 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 2008

Northeast transformation

Johnson to replace Knowlton as all-female residence hall

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Johnson Hall in Northeast will replace Knowlton as UMass' all-female residence hall starting in the fall.

Male residents of Johnson dormitory must find another place to live next year as it will replace Knowlton as Northeast Residential Area's all-female dormitory at the end of this semester, the University of Massachusetts Housing Assignment Office announced.

Residents in affected dorms were notified via mail.

"This provides women an all-female residence hall since Knowlton is joining the rest of its cluster as a [First Year Experience] hall," said David Vaillancourt, Associate Director of Residence Life for Assignments and Administration.

Next year, nearly all incoming first-year students will be living in freshman housing.

With the change Northeast becomes the fourth residential area on campus to offer First Year Experience (FYE) housing, after Central, Southwest and Orchard Hill.

But this decision will require the male residents of Johnson to relocate next semester.

All students on campus will enter an online room selection that assigns them new places to live based on their priority, according to Vaillancourt. He said Johnson's male residents can choose from all available options.

But some are happy where they are.

"I was very upset [when I heard of the change]," Brian Kane, a senior Japanese major via e-mail. "I love living in Johnson. It's quiet, very clean, has a great community and is very close to the Lewis Wellness Center and the Worcester D.C."

He is staying at UMass another year to complete an additional major in economics.

Though disappointed about having to move, Kane, 21, says he has no problem with all-female or all-male dorms but thinks the idea of changing things around and creating more all-freshmen areas is a bad one.

"I think the whole process is terribly planned and is going to have a negative effect on the Northeast student community," he said. "Students had no say in this decision and many of us feel we have been cheated out of living in the best dorm on campus."

But it is not just Johnson men who criticize the change. Virginia Hsia, a sophomore marketing major, said when she heard of the notion she was "not very supportive of it."

Though she and many of her friends intend to live in North Apartments next year and admits it might make some females more comfortable to live in an all-female dorm she says it comes as a raw deal for some of her male friends.

"Honestly, I don't find it very fair to the males who like Johnson and have been living here for a long amount of time," said Hsia, 19. "It's kind of a tough situation."

But the administration is adamant about its decision.

"I also think that students will have a better understanding that we are committed to offering the FYE program in a variety of locations on campus," Vaillancourt said.

The change is part of a large-scale shake-up of Northeast as the Knowlton, Mary Lyon and Crabtree cluster becomes the FYE area of Northeast. Knowlton will now be co-ed.

Vaillancourt says the 2-in-20 Program – one floor of 40 students that acts as an ally to gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender students will also be relocated, but he did not know where.

All other dorms in Northeast will go unchanged.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

Issues remain

SGA continues negotiations with University

BY MIKE FOX
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Student leaders asked for support for a referendum on an agreement with the administration over the demands put forth during last semester's strike during last night's Student Government Association (SGA) meeting.

"We're still working out the details of the referendum but it will show how many students were involved with the strike. It will also demonstrate the relevance of the issues put forth by the strike with the general student body," SGA President Aaron Buford said.

"The administrations proposal is still missing a lot of points such as the issues put forth by the graduate student senate."

Buford continued to explain that the referendum will add a level of transparency to the current negotiations with the administration over mandatory student fees by bringing the administrations current proposal to the rest of the campus. He also mentioned that the SGA would have to further work on the state level to address the issue of mandatory student fees.

SGA leadership has had several meetings with the administration trying to make a compromise over the strike issues. The referendum put forth as a part of the March 5 and 6 SGA elections will be the result of a final proposal from the administration set to be made to the SGA on February 22.

Senate Speaker Carla Dominguez disagrees with the current status of the administrations.

"The administrations proposal is still missing a lot of points such as the issues put forth by the graduate student senate," Dominguez said. "Currently, there are no plans to fund graduate student diversity and we need to support the other groups involved with the strike."

Mike Fox can be reached at mgfox a student umass edu

Construction halts on recreation center

Campus group aims to save historic barn

BY BEN WILLIAMS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last semester, the University of Massachusetts broke ground for a multi-million dollar recreation center. Though construcution was not slated for completion until spring 2009 at the time, many students were intrigued by the prospect of a new athletic facility.

However, construction on the project has come to a virtual standstill, with little tangible progress since the November ground breaking. Last month, construction at the site at the intersection of Commonwealth Ave. and Hicks Way began with tearing down another building.

Yet this progress was imminently followed by an order to stop the construction effort, and now seven weeks later, the only progress being made is behind the scenes.

According to Joseph Larson, a former University of Massachusetts professor, last April UMass Facilities Planning released a "buildings condition report" included a number of buildings slated to be demolished in the new construction, left to deteriorate or on the state list of historic resources. At that point, he, along with 85 other faculty, staff, alumni and friends of the University, formed "Preserve UMass".

"Our positions at that point and remains today is that they did not use professional help in making that report," Larson said. "We're not saying we want to save this building or that building because not all old buildings can be saved, and not all of them should be. But if you start winging it, then there will be serious mistakes."

With that vision, Preserve UMass asked Preservation Massachusetts, the statewide non-profit historic preservation organization, to include the UMass Amherst campus on their list of Massachusetts' 10 Most Endangered Historic Resources of 2007, which it did on November 14th 2007. Preserve UMass has since been working with the Massachusetts Environmental Protection Act office and the Massachusetts Historical Commission.

When the University began taking down the old barn in January, Preserve UMass took action.

The Brooks stucco cow barn is on the state's inventory of historic resources and to demolish a building on the list, reports have to be filed with the State Historical Commission, the Massachusetts Executive Office of Energy and Environmental Affairs.

Larson added that the reports were never filed, and so work has been stopped. Talks are now taking place between the University, Preserve UMass and other parties to resolve the issue, and that a memorandum of agreement has been drafted and the various parties will have a final meeting in the coming weeks to negotiate the final terms, such certain stipulations for UMass and building authority.

Larson believes that the University now feels inclined to have professional historical review of the campus.

"Having to cease work is costing the University money, which is unfortunate, but that is the cost with not being compliant with state law from the

See HISTORIC on page 3

The campus' new recreation facility is designed to replace a historic barn in the location depicted in this drawing.

UMass launches TechCast program

BY ERIC SCHLICHTE
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Through the use of a recently launched podcast series, University of Massachusetts researchers now have the ability to broadcast inventions, discoveries and developments to online listeners near and far.

The podcast titled "TechCast at UMass" could be effective for attracting more investment in the University, according to director of the office of Commercial Ventures and Intellectual Property (CVIP), Nick DeCristofaro.

"We'd like to be able to attract more investment," DeCristofaro said. "If we have a technology, maybe that technology is mature enough so that one can morph it into a product and start a business. Maybe that technology is not mature enough; perhaps by telling the world of our capabilities, we can attract not necessarily a

See TECHCAST on page 3

UMass researchers recently presented their findings from a study of a Siberian crater lake that contains 3.6 million-year-old earth samples.

The discovery of the Q-microbe by a UMass researcher was the subject of the first "TechCast."

Scientists examine Siberian crater lake

BY BEN WILLIAMS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Earlier this week representatives from the University of Massachusetts traveled to Arlington, Va., to present their research of a Siberian crater lake (El'gygytgyn) that may hold 3.6 million-year-old secrets.

Geoscientists Julie Brigham-Grette and Robert Deconto hosted one of only 11 exhibits at the National Science Foundation Open House this past Monday.

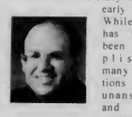
"This is one of the thousands of grants supported by the National Science Foundation, and the only geosciences and climate change exhibit chosen for the event" Brigham-Grette said.

The project involves drilling and studying cores, or slices of the earth from deep below the lake in Siberia. Brigham-Grette added this lake is the only place in the world that contains a continuous 3.6 million year old climate record of the arctic.

"This record is required to fully understand the Arctic's role in global climate dynamics," Brigham-Grette said. She aims to discover, "why and how the arctic

See CRATER LAKE on page 3

Study yields advance in electrical science



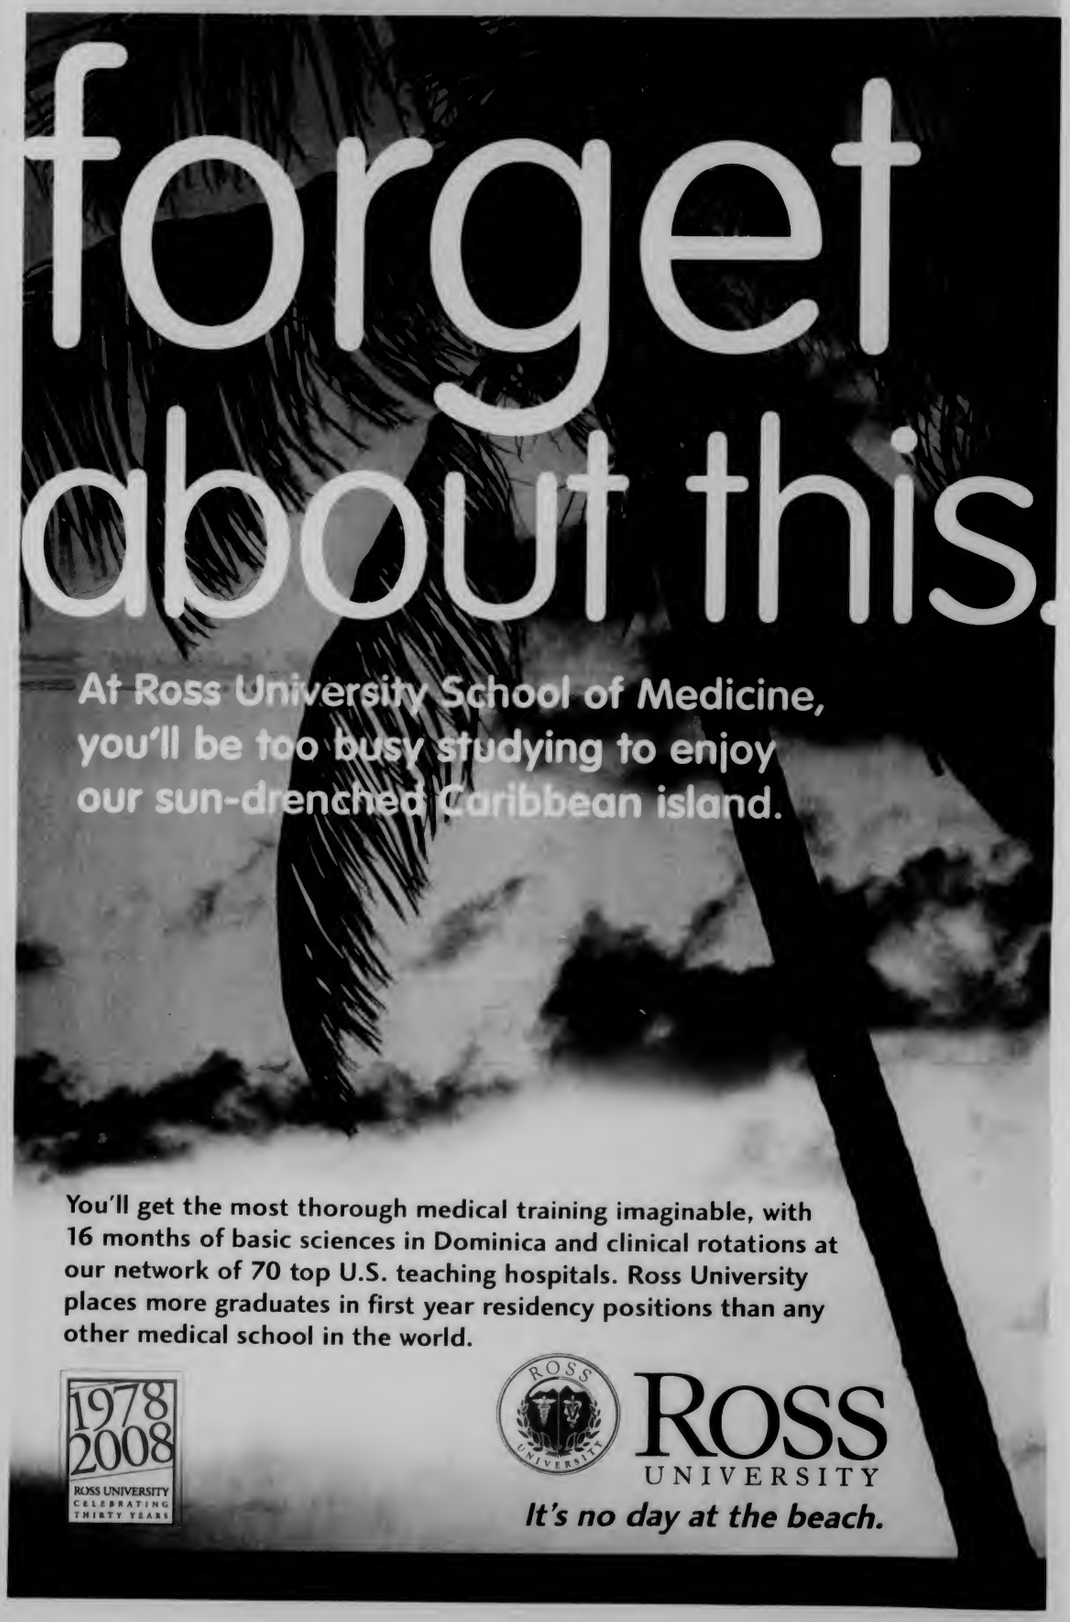
BY AMARA ANOSIKE
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

A study led by Dimitrios Maroudas, a professor of chemical engineering at University of Massachusetts resulted in profound discoveries regarding the stabilization of surface metals and other solids that conduct electricity.

The study found that the action of an electric field, properly applied while a material is under stress, can contain the surface or interface thus inhibiting the formation of cracks and reversing the state of cracks already started. This could mean great advances in the way aircrafts and other electronic devices are built in the future.

In metals and other crystalline solids that conduct electricity, stress is usually concentrated on the surface of the material. Build up of stress also takes place at interfaces where two types of material are combined, for instance an electronic circuit made of metal and plastic.

The research team that also includes doctoral student Vivek Tomar and research associate professor, M. Rauf Gungar worked on this study for approximately a year. However Maroudas does admit to having had this idea in his head, tracing back to a 1998 article he wrote on the subject.



"The most beautiful aspect of the study lies in the fact that one could combine multiple forces that would otherwise on their own be detrimental, but when applied together correctly can produce beneficial outcomes by preventing and reversing damaging," Maroudas said.

In terms of what this study will mean for the average person, well the answer to that according to Maroudas remains unknown. As for now the study is in its early stages. While much has already been accomplished, many questions remain unanswered and goals unattained. What is clear at this point is that more and more steps will be taken in order for much holder statements to be made.

This study has made ground in various chemical engineering circles, notably due to the study being published in the Jan. 25 edition of Physical Review Letters. One of the main ambitions as of now for the study is to have it progress from experiments that currently only consist of computer simulations to actual experiments in laboratories.

Amara Anosike can be reached at anosik@student.umass.edu

U Mass students–
Start medical school this May!
Find out how at our Information Seminar
Sat., Feb. 9, 2pm, Le Méridien Cambridge (formerly Hotel@MIT)
For details visit RossU.edu or call 877-ROSS-EDU

You'll get the most thorough medical training imaginable, with 16 months of basic sciences in Dominica and clinical rotations at our network of 70 top U.S. teaching hospitals. Ross University places more graduates in first year residency positions than any other medical school in the world.

1978 2008 ROSS UNIVERSITY CELEBRATING THIRTY YEARS

ROSS UNIVERSITY
It's no day at the beach.

College receives grade

Institute rates schools on sustainability level

BY ERIK TABER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Sustainable Endowments Institute (SEI) has ranked Amherst College in the top one-third among its peer institutions for the school's campus and endowment sustainability activities. Amherst College was awarded an overall grade of 'B', which is an improvement from last year's 'B-.'

The SEI's list, the College Sustainability Report Card, is the only independent sustainability evaluation of campus operations and endowment investments. It assesses in eight categories including administration, green building and transportation.

The SEI is a Cambridge-based nonprofit organization focused in research and education to advance sustainability in campus operations and endowment practices. Founded in 2005, the organization is a special project of Rockefeller Philanthropy Advisors. Two hundred public and private universities with the largest endowments – ranging from $230 million to nearly $35 billion – are assessed annually by the SEI.

Amherst College received 'A' grades in three of the SEI's categories: climate change and energy, food and recycling, and investment priorities. Amherst was recognized in the climate change and energy category for its commitment to reducing carbon emissions through a green computing program and the forthcoming start-up of an $8 million cogeneration plant.

In the food and recycling category Amherst was recognized for its effort to buy local food, its highly successful recycling programs, as well as its composting program that diverts over three tons of food waste to a local farm each year.

They earned high praise for their Zipcar initiative, one of the few that enrolls drivers 18 to 21. The program is a car-sharing system that allows students to rent one the vehicles for temporary use.

Amherst was also commended for its green building program, which lays out in the college's "high performance building design strategies" guidelines and includes computer automated temperature and lighting control.

In the final category Amherst was celebrated for optimizing investment return while investing in renewable energy funds.

"It's very gratifying that out efforts have been recognized by the SEI," Jim Brassord, Director of Facilities and AssociateTreasurer for campus services, said. Brassord oversees the college's sustainability initiatives.

"Global climate change is a defining issue for students today," he added. "We feel that it is critical for Amherst to lead by example. In doing so, we hope to install in our students a sense of responsibility for environmental stewardship that they will continue to embrace after they graduate from college."

Erik Taber can be reached at etaber@student.umass.edu.

TechCast makes campus debut

TECHCAST from page 1

licensee who wants to take our technology and commercialize it, but perhaps we can attract someone who is going to bring research money and investment to the University."

TechCast could attract grants or investments for the University, or help draw in top-notch researchers. Future projects broadcast by TechCast could lead to additional programs of study and student involvement in research.

A joint production between the Office of News and Information and CVIP, "TechCast at UMass" debuted last month. The inaugural episode of the podcast series focuses on the work of microbiologist Susan Leschine and a microbe which she discovered in the Quabbin Reservoir.

Named after its place of discovery, the Q-microbe is significant because it generates enzymes needed to break down cellulose into ethanol. Alternate methods used to produce ethanol today involve either fermentation processes that convert sugar to ethanol directly or work by breaking down cellulose through the use of commercial enzymes.

Professor Leschine is the first to develop a microbial process to convert cellulose into ethanol.

"This fits the long-term vision of ethanol as a potential liquid transportation fuel," said DeCristofaro. "If we had to rely on corn as the feedstock for the ethanol as opposed to the remainder of the biomass of the corn plant, our transportation fuel would be competing with the food source, and the price of both food and transportation would go up. Also, to grow corn requires a massive amount of fertilizer and water.

"When you consider the energy that goes into the fertilizer, ethanol that comes from corn may be only energy neutral; we may not be creating any new energy," DeCristofaro continued. "If we can avoid that, if we can instead now have a microbe to directly break down cellulose that comes from either the byproduct of corn or from biomass grown specifically for energy purposes, now we have an ethanol product which hopefully will be lower cost. It doesn't compete with food products, won't drive up the price of food and makes a lot more sense."

Professor Leschine is the lead scientist at SunEthanol, a company in Amherst based on campus research. With the funding of venture capital from three firms, the project's aim is for the microbial process to be realized sometime this year and put into practical applications.

TechCast's second production centers on the Pioneer Valley Life Sciences Institute.

This non-profit benefit organization, located in Springfield, is dedicated to biomedical research. Founded in 2002, the Pioneer Valley Life Science Institutes is a joint venture between UMass and Baystate Medical Center.

Made possible by strong life science programs at UMass and Baystate's clinical presence, the PVSLI represents an important UMass involvement in Springfield.

Paul Kostecki, Vice Provost for Research, is credited with coming up with the idea for TechCast about a year ago as a way to tell researchers' stories.

UMass alumnus and donor to the program, Lewis J. Geffen, wanted to find a way to show the world the advancements being made at UMass.

The podcast series is narrated by Francesca Rheannon, an acclaimed professional interviewer who has worked at National Public Radio.

Produced entirely at UMass, DeCristofaro is proud to have something "truly indigenous to our campus."

TechCast's producers intend to release a new podcast around the third week of every month.

All podcasts will be available streaming as well as to download. To listen to 'TechCast at UMass' visit www.umasstechcast.org.

Eric Schlichte can be reached at eschlich@student.umass.edu.

Amherst College improved its grade from the Sustainable Edowments Institute from last year with several environmental-friendly initiatives.

Barn slows progress

HISTORIC from page 1

beginning," Larson said. "Our hope is that after all of this dust settles the University will never get into this [situation] again."

Larson remarked while getting the professional review is the main objective of Preserve UMass, there are some buildings on campus that are particularly important.

"We're very interested in having the Old Chapel and the University Club by Franklin dining hall, which was built in 1728, before there was an Amherst," Larson said. "It was in Hadley when it was built, and was the boyhood home of Daniel Chester French, who sculpted Lincoln memorial."

Alyson Villard, a sophomore theater major at UMass, also doesn't want the old buildings destroyed.

"I think old buildings have a lot of character. Part of the reason I went here is because of the history," she said.

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@student.umass.edu.

Lake study presented

CRATER LAKE from page 1

climate system evolved from a warm, forested ecosystem to a cold permafrost ecosystem between two and three million years ago."

The presentation, called "The Drill to Drill in the Chill – Climate History of the Arctic from Meteorite Crater Lake El'gygytgyn" is presenting the current findings from research done in 1998, 2001 and 2003.

Scientists are also interested in studying the volcanic rocks at the base of the crater and how the crater lake may be similar to craters on Mars that were once filled with water.

Drilling at the lake will be completed during a four-month period in early 2009, hoping to recover four 400 meter-long cores.

"The climate record recovered will become a landmark in understanding how our climate system works and how sensitive it is to change," Brigham-Grette said.

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 79
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COPY'S EDITOR Adam Staggin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rue
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael Kang
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Halls Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Melore
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIATE SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BECAME KNOWN AS MASS LIFE, AND THE COLLEGIAN SIGNAL IN 1901. THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914, AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1947, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED THE PACEMAKER AWARD FOR EXCELLENCE THREE TIMES AND THE GENERAL EXCELLENCE AWARD FOUR TIMES. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 413-545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nicholas Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Amber Vallicourt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Mike Sarkes

AFRICAN BEADED ART
POWER AND ADORNMENT
On View February 1–June 15, 2008

Friday, February 8 4–9 pm
(snow date: February 9)
Free second FRIDAYS
festivities featuring music by the Afro-beat band NOMO!
SCMA is pleased to present Second Fridays in conjunction with NORTHAMPTON
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP
413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

AFRICAN BEADED ART
POWER AND ADORNMENT
On View February 1–June 15, 2008

Friday, February 8 4–9 pm
(snow date February 9)
Free second FRIDAYS
festivities featuring music by the Afro-beat band NOMO!
SCMA is pleased to present Second Fridays in conjunction with NORTHAMPTON
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP
413 585 2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

CELEBRATE
CHINESE NEW YEAR
恭贺新禧
THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 7
ALL DCS FROM 5-9 PM
LION DANCE - LUCKY MONEY
KONG HEE FATT CHOY MENU:
Hot & Sour Soup
Spring Rolls
Peking Duck
Suckling Pig
Steamed Pork Dumplings
Sticky Rice in Lotus Leaf
Sweet & Sour Pork
Steamed Cod with Black Bean Sauce
Stir-Fry Eight Flavor Bean Curd
Spicy Orange Chicken
Longevity Noodles
Shrimp with Cashew Nuts
Chinese Sticky Cake
Almond Cookies
Fortune Cookies
Mandarins
Green Tea
鼠
YEAR OF THE RAT
DINING SERVICES
2007 Grand Prize
Food Management's BEST CONCEPTS
www.umass.edu/diningservices

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
-Sir Salman Rushdie

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 2008

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Lift the veil

A week of violent occurrences on campus has eclipsed another story, one the University's not telling.

Eight University of Massachusetts lacrosse players have been suspended by the University, for what the administration is describing no more specifically than a violation of team rules.

Something tells us, though, that the University suspects them of more than pelting Giants fans after the Super Bowl. The University refuses to comment as to whether the suspension has to do with a fight that broke out at a N. Pleasant Street apartment at 2 a.m. Friday, in which lacrosse sticks were used as weapons.

Were this merely an unusual coincidence, the University would be quick in dispelling rumors. But the University press office and Amherst Police Department have repeatedly told The Collegian that no new information is available.

The Daily Collegian, as well as several large newspapers, including The Boston Herald and The Baltimore Sun, have picked up the story – little more than an account of Friday's altercation and the University's non-denial denial – and rumors are abounding. This shroud of ambiguity just makes the administration look worse without making the situation any better.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is not passing judgment as to the culpability of these eight men; if they are in fact suspended in relation to the altercation Friday, then they will go before a court of law. But the administration has a staked interest in being forthright about the allegations and the investigation process, so as to prevent spreading of misinformation through rumor and hearsay.

Because at present, nearly a week after the altercation, the issue is still unclear. This suggests either inaction on the administrations part, or, more likely, a lack of transparency in their actions. Neither looks good for the administration, or for the school.

None of us at the University of Massachusetts like to hear news of violent crimes, especially those committed by students against other students. But when the administration attempts to sweep something under the rug, it looks like we've got something to hide. We should be bringing perpetrators of these crimes under campus-wide scrutiny, to show that violent acts are anomalous and unacceptable.

Were the eight men suspended linked to a violent crime that happened this Friday? Only time will tell. In the meantime, the administration had better fess up as well.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Daily Collegian editorial board.

No longer a laugh riot

Although the post-Super Bowl gathering in South West on Sunday was calm compared to past celebrations, several fights broke out and eight arrests were made.

S.P. Sullivan

Let me go on the record saying I don't watch football.

I get it, though. I'm not like other weedy bookish types, who thumb their noses at ritualistic sports team worship.

I watched the Super-Bowl-that-shall-not-be-mentioned with my friends. We (they, mostly) yelled, cursed – Ted might've teared up a little at the end. I see nothing wrong with this. It's a healthy obsession, it's a religion without dogma.

You show up on Sunday – sometimes Monday and Thursday – and you pray. The services are grandiose, and sometimes there's a half-time show. Your God smiles on you, and your team wins, or, he doesn't; they lose. Was it your fault?

Maybe.

Maybe you should've helped that old lady across the street the other day. Perhaps you should've worn the same jersey you did when they won the playoffs. I guess you'll just have to convert to the Church of Basketball for a while. O, mighty Celtics.

I don't approve of zealotry, though.

Zealotry is staging an Inquisition, it's beheading an infidel; it's bludgeoning Giants fans with ice.

Eight UMass students were arrested Sunday night after the Super-Bowl-that-shall-not-be-mentioned, for fighting with cops and members of the Order of the Giants, though no property damage was reported. It's certainly not the worst of the post-sporting event celebrations hosted by South West, but that's not surprising considering University of Massachusetts Police officers over the past few years have had to put on riot gear almost as frequently as they gave speeding tickets.

This is where the healthy obsession becomes athletic-extremism. I get the face-painting thing, I dig smack talking for its literary value and I even get the yelling at the TV thing (I used to do that when I watched "Crossfire").

But I don't get rioting, which is itself a term that has come to imply any gathering on campus that consists of more than four homogenous team jerseys.

And that isn't entirely unfounded, either. We have a reputation for rioting. UMass students need not be reminded of the 2004 riot after the Red Sox won the World Series, and the more recent riot after UMass football lost the IAA championship to Appalachian State.

(On a side note: Unruly sports fans need to learn a better way to articulate their feelings. You can't tell the outcome of a sporting event by watching the riot afterward – everybody's just throwing stuff, win or lose.)

This year's Series and Super-Bowl-that-shall-not-be-mentioned saw improvements, but that's due in large part to the fact that the administration and UMPD were ready way ahead of time. And to the fact that UMass students had seen the administration and UMPD react strongly – some have said overzealously – in the wake of the riot after the Appalachian State game.

But for the administration, UMPD and for us students, this shouldn't be business as usual. Everyone jokes before big games about whether or not there's going to be a riot. I saw someone at the Berkshire dining commons wearing a T-shirt that said, "UMass: It's a Riot!" – which would've been hilarious if I wasn't paying out of state tuition. We don't want to be known as the school that habitually riots after the seventh inning stretch.

We used to be the Princeton Review's No. 7 party school, and then lost that title, but managed to keep our appetite for destruction. I think we lost out priorities somewhere along the way. At most large college campuses, one need be careful of drunk drivers on the weekend, a saddening-enough prospect.

UMass is the only place you have to be sure to park your car somewhere it won't get tipped by Red Sox Nation; make sure you have the right jersey on, too, lest you want to be crucified.

And to the Giants fans antagonizing the bereaved New Englanders this Sunday: I don't advocate violence of any type, waterboarding included, but you almost deserved being pelted. I'm from Northern New Jersey – that's the Giant's diocese – but we're guests here. Do not agitate the Pats fans.

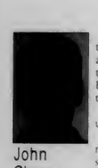
Kidding aside, we need to reexamine the consequences of our actions. We're faced with an administration that doesn't listen sincerely to our demands, evidenced by the controversial honorary degree given to Andy Card and several grievances leading up to the student strike. The strike showed them that we could put our uncanny ability to form angry mobs to good use.

But why should they take seriously our demands about, say, more control over student space, when we don't even respect each other's right to it?

Sunday's Super-Bowl-that-shall-not-be-mentioned was a step in the right direction; it proved less fervent than crusades past. But eight arrests, some assault and battery charges and a count of interfering with a police horse show that we still don't know how to celebrate a win, or a loss.

Eli Manning was not one of those in Giants jerseys you pelted; Tom Brady could not hear your drunken Pats elegy, and we still make headlines for all the wrong reasons.

S.P. Sullivan is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at spsulliv@dailycollegian.com



We used to be the Princeton Review's No. 7 party school, and then lost that title, but managed to keep our appetite for destruction.

Check out the new Collegian forums!

New this semester at dailycollegian.com, our forums allow you, the reader and UMass community member, to sound off on important campus-related issues, provide feedback and criticism of our coverage and suggest ideas for campus stories you'd like to see covered.

For more details check out the Forums page at dailycollegian.com.

The rundown: Who not to vote for and why

John Glaser

This election season, the candidates abound and all of them claim to have all the answers. But can we trust any of them with the office?

First: the Republicans.

Mitt Romney cannot be counted on to stand by the principles that he is campaigning on. He used to be a liberal who supported gun laws and advocated for the freedom of same-sex couples to marry. More recently, he's a new member of the National Rifle Association and aired a television advertisement during the Iowa caucuses trumpeting his support for a federal law banning same-sex marriage.

He used to support Roe v. Wade and a woman's right to choose, but in his bid for the Republican nomination he has promoted his views as strictly pro-life, emphasizing his belief that life begins at conception.

His ideological transformation seems genuine only to the most gullible of voters. He is a political opportunist who panders to whatever crowd matters at that particular moment. Who will matter to him once he is president?

John McCain is running for the Republican nomination, but I couldn't tell you why. He disagrees with right-wing conservatives on almost every count, teaming with liberal Ted Kennedy to draw up an amnesty bill for illegal aliens and cooperating with Democrat Russ Feingold to increase government regulation in campaign finance.

He has continually voted for higher taxes while in the Senate and of all people to endorse him, Democrat Joe Lieberman was the first. He is for a very big government, a view that separates him from low tax, free market Republicans.

McCain has also stated that our troops should remain in Iraq for 100 years "if necessary." McCain is in the forefront of trigger-happy, pro-war neoconservatives, a group which has thousands of brave men and women in uniform on their conscience in a war that never had to happen.

With a conservative base that is incessantly fed up with establishment Republicans and their badly managed war, McCain is not exactly a God-send.

None of the aforementioned candidates can deliver the change we so desperately need.

Not to mention he's a dinosaur.

Mike Huckabee is a Southern Baptist minister, which is curious considering he suffered five admonitions and $1,000 in fines by the ethics committee in Arkansas for failure to report campaign payments made to him during his re-election bid.

He is also soft on crime, delivering a record number of pardons and commutations, including Wayne DuMond, a convicted rapist and murderer. Nice job, Shmuckabee. Furthermore, to the detriment of his so-called true conservatism, he raised taxes and spending as governor of Arkansas. When questioned about this during one of the debates he countered with an excuse that what he really raised was hope. Yeah, hope for a bigger government and for the war (thus far refusing to admit that she shouldn't have).

In the debates she has admitted she would keep troops in Iraq until the end of her first term and danced around implications that troops would remain at the end of her second term (that's something like 2017). Domestically, Clinton wants to institute socialized healthcare, costing $110 billion and being paid for by hiking the taxes of incomes of $250,000 or more (note that even with the Bush tax cuts, in 2005 people earning $100,000 a year and over paid 82 percent of all income taxes).

Apparently Hillary hasn't been paying attention to the stunning failures and inefficiencies of the federal government that have been on display, not just for the past eight years, but for decades prior. Her blind faith in a government solution to every social ill should be troubling to anyone, liberal or conservative.

More than half of eligible voters between the ages of 18-24 don't vote. We're often encouraged to vote by our elders and made to feel ashamed for staying home on Election Day, not fulfilling our civic duty. Here's something new: don't vote. Change has been a big theme in this election.

None of the aforementioned candidates can deliver the change that we so desperately need. I'm asking you to stay home in protest against this pathetic guild of political panderers, of dogmatic dictators, of stark records and naïveté masquerading as experience and acumen. None of these candidates can offer an honest, objective analysis of how far astray the American government has gone from its basic principles – and none of them seem to care.

John Glaser is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jwglaser@student.umass.edu

There's more to Iran than Ahmadinejad

Sara Afzal

As we get inside an old taxicab, the smell of exhaust instantly hits me. The driver speeds down the crowded traffic of Tehran, Iran, without any recognition of street lanes. My cousin and I discuss my return flight to Boston, and suddenly the cab driver intervenes.

"Are you from America? Good. Get away from these Mullahs," he said.

I am hardly surprised by his disdain for the Iranian government, a theocracy known for its Islamic conservatism promoted by President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad and led by "Mullahs," or Islamic clerics. The majority of Iranians do not support the Islamic Republic of Iran and retaliate against government restrictions in the privacy of their own homes.

Whether it's watching MTV on satellite broadcast, or hacking into censored Internet sites like Facebook or Myspace, my cousins in Iran have found ways to access mainstream culture. With my family's home clad with the newest flat screen TV, it's hard to believe the world outside the home represents a revival of strict Islamic law.

During my three-week visit to Iran to see my family, my personal safety was never an issue. Islamic law is enforced by the Iranian Revolutionary Guard Corps and police, but did I ever interact with them? The answer is no.

The Iranian people are unfairly associated with a conservative government that the vast majority does not support.

Islamic law is strictest toward Iranian women, who are required by law to wear the hijab, or head and body covering. Lack of proper attire could result in arrest. However, that does not mean that all Iranian women comply with wearing the traditional black sheet-like hijab.

The majority of young women wear a full face of make-up, colorful headscarves with half of their hair exposed and very tight overcoats. Although the Iranian government has recently cracked down on this "un-Islamic dress," women continue to sport the newest fashions. Iranian women are risking being fined or arrested by the police, but that is a chance they are willing to take.

Also, many un-married couples risk arrest for being in public together. Couples must be able to prove their marital status if questioned by police.

I learned this from my cousin Crystal, a college student in Iran. Although Crystal has to worry about wearing a headscarf, I realize that we really aren't that different. We are both college students who want to get a good education and have fun with our friends.

Because my cousins have to subtly retaliate against dating restrictions, dress codes and censorship, I was surprised about how easily we relate to each other. I shouldn't be surprised, since they are my family. And yet, after four years of constantly hearing negative news about Ahmadinejad, I had a skewed perception of Iranian society.

I had forgotten the comfort of seeing my relatives, the warmth of speaking Farsi, the smell of kabaab, the sound of Middle-Eastern music and the beautiful sight of the Alborz Mountains peaked with snow. The Mountains are a striking background to the skyscrapers that house most of the seven million Iranians in Tehran.

Tehran looks comparable to any American city. There are Internet cafés, coffee shops, fast food restaurants and movie theatres. My cousin Mohammed has the newest Samsung cell phone, a model that has yet to reach the U.S. Tehran is currently developing a new metro system.

However modern the city is becoming, tradition still exists. Going to a bazaar, or open-air market, was my favorite experience. Bargaining technique is necessary. My cousin Neda has honed bargaining to the point that when she walks away from a price, the merchant will beg her to come back. Following her lead, I successfully bargained, and one merchant even said, "What town are you from that you are such a firm bargainer?" It was nice to be "in" on the bazaar culture.

Being part of Iranian and American culture is a duality I enjoy, but I would not say it is always a comfortable one. In America currently, being Iranian has a negative connotation – mostly because of the Iranian government. The Iranian people are unfairly associated with a conservative government that the vast majority does not support. In American democracy, we believe that government represents the people, but that is not the case in Iran.

I wish my relatives in Iran could enjoy the freedoms I do in America. Regardless, they are genuinely happy with their lives. They have found a way to cope with the restrictions of the Iranian government. However, my family wishes that Ahmadinejad would focus on domestic issues, such as the plummeting economy, instead of endorsing a nuclear program.

Ahmadinejad may be the face of Iran here, but this misconception hides the true Iran: a rich, family-oriented culture where everyday life is about more than just wearing a headscarf.

Sara Afzal is a UMass student.

Although Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad and Islamic Mullahs have enacted strict conservative laws, many Iranians brave the possibility of arrest by dressing as they please and showing public displays of affection.

Obama: The candidate for change

Jessica Kincman & Matt Giancola

With John Edwards' recent drop from the race for the White House, many registered voters are still split between which democratic candidate to vote for.

"It's time for me to step aside so that history can blaze its path. We do not know who will take the final steps to 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, but what we do know is that our Democratic Party will make history," said John Edwards as his campaign for president came to a close on Wednesday January 30, 2008.

Indeed, the results from Super Tuesday's primaries shows that the two remaining major candidates are still neck and neck.

As you ask people who they are planning to vote for they are passionate about their candidate – and rightly so. Each of the candidates has a lot to offer to the people of the United States.

Senator Barack Obama from Illinois is the best choice who not only has the most consistent voting record among the two democratic candidates, but is also the candidate who can best bring together a country torn apart by eight years of George W. Bush.

Obama's journey is a quintessentially American one – raised by a single mother and his grandparents and always on the move. His voice is one of reason that shares a story resembling many of our own dreams and struggles. Obama heart appears sincere, and his hopeful message is one of change; and different from the politics of cynicism that so often ends up in the White House.

His is an image of the future of the United States; his bi-racial background is one that is shared among millions living within the United States. As Howard Dean said the other night, simply look at the candidates of the Democratic Party. We have a Hispanic, African-American, and a woman. This is a party that is growing to incorporate the most prominent views of the people who they represent.

The growing support Obama has gained shows that the tables are turning in Washington.

The growing support Obama has gained shows that the tables are turning in Washington. People are tired of a political system that gets nothing done and focuses more on petty name-calling. Citizens are looking for a president who will end the war in Iraq, refocus national security on defeating terrorism and aiding returning veterans.

Workers across the nation are losing jobs to corporations who take advantage of tax loopholes that make it cheaper to produce goods in other countries. Senator Obama wants to close this damaging loophole. His economic stimulus plan will give a break to middle class workers.

Barack Obama has consistently supported a woman's right to choose and has an extremely supportive voting record with organizations such as NARAL: Pro-Choice America and Planned Parenthood. He is a fervent supporter of stem cell research and wants to give scientists the tools they need to end Alzheimer's, Parkinson's and other crippling diseases. As a State Senator in Illinois, he reformed the death penalty, forcing police to videotape all interrogations of suspects. Barack Obama also in support of partner benefits for same-sex couples.

In the United States Senate, he worked closely with Senator Kennedy on immigration reform – a plan that would have allowed illegal immigrants a path to legalization. His ethics reform plan was the most sweeping since Watergate. It put new constraints on lobbyists and put an end to the free meals and many gifts that would often influence a Senator or Congressperson's vote.

As you head to the polls this November, ask yourself what you want in a President. Robert Kennedy put it simply when he said, "In this difficult day, in this difficult time for the United States, it is perhaps well to ask what kind of a nation we are...and what direction we want to move in."

We can vote for the same old cynical do-nothing candidates or we can vote for our future, for a Senator who has a vision of better times for this country. It's what millions are yearning for. It's a vision we should heed. Our change is with Barack Obama.

Jessica Kincman and Matt Giancola are UMass students.

Many voters see presidential candidate Barack Obama as the answer to "politics as usual."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

PRIMARY CONCERNS

Dear editor:

Quite possibly the most important primary of our lifetimes took place on Super Tuesday. America is in peril, and voters from all walks of life and all political orientations across 22 states took to the polls to show their preference for the next leader of the free world.

Who can repair a damaged economy? Who can get us out and redeem us from an unpopular war? Who can find a suitable answer to the immigration issue?

Regardless of one's opinions on these pressing matters, I think everyone can agree on one thing: this stuff is important. Everyone except The Daily Collegian that is.

On Wednesday, the front page of The Daily Collegian had no pictures of Hillary Clinton or John McCain, no Barack Obama or Mitt Romney, no Mike Huckabee and certainly no Ron Paul. Oh no, that was relegated to the second page, behind two separate articles and pictures of two much more important and influential people: the President and Vice President of the UMass Republican Club.

Before I proceed, I must make it clear, that this is not an article knocking Republicans. You have just as much a right to exist and disseminate your views as much as the Communist Party, the KKK, the Democratic Party or anyone else for that matter.

Similarly, I have the right to say that I am sick of reading about you everyday in The Collegian. So to the editors, I ask why so many articles on the UMRC?

I know that The Collegian has been having some financial difficulties so I am willing to give you all the benefit of the doubt. However, I think it is time that you told the good students of UMass why you've been publishing such blatant smut recently, and if you can't do it, I'll have to do it for you.

OK everyone, brace yourself. Over winter break, The Collegian went bankrupt and was picked up by none other than Rupert Murdoch and now every issue of The Collegian must have at least two articles and pictures about the Republican Club.

That's the only way to explain the front page article entitled "Republican Club Holds First Meeting." Lots of clubs hold their first meetings. In fact, they have to hold their first meeting in order to hold a second one. Who cares? That's not news! And it certainly shouldn't be front page news under another article about the Republican Club on the day after Super-Tuesday.

I admit that the Republican Club scandal was juicy for one day. It had all sorts of sex, betrayal, and treason of values that the Republican Party on every level claims to be against, but inevitably succumbs to. But I for one, really don't care what happens to them now. I don't care if they quit the Massachusetts Republican group, I don't care about the sexcapades of some moron with a lousy haircut, and I don't care if some power-hungry opportunist with an inferiority complex wants to become President of a group that has as much influence as a glass of water on a forest fire.

What I do care about is that when I read your paper, I will be informed with stories that might affect me on some level whatsoever. If I want smut, I will read the Boston Herald or the National Enquirer while I watch FOX News butt-naked, wrapped in an American flag.

Unfortunately, I have to wear clothes when I come to college, so the least you can do for me is publish things worth reading. So thank you for all your articles and keep writing more. My house is cold and no matter what I think of your paper, my wood stove still thinks you're great.

Eric Greene
UMass student

LACK OF RIGHTS FOR GAYS IS WRONG

Dear editor:

Re: "Building his résumé," Amber Vaillancourt, News, Feb. 1, 2008

Staff writer Amber Vaillancourt states that Republican Club President Brad DeFlumeri believes presidential candidate Mitt Romney will be strong "oppos[ing] homosexual rights." Does this turn of phrase strike anybody else as odd?

We don't often hear of the issue of gay marriage in such stark terms. "It's a moral issue" is the description I most often hear from proponents of a national ban on homosexual unions. But at the most basic level, it isn't a moral issue.

Or, rather it is a moral issue in the same way that denying black people the right to sit at the same diner counter as whites is a moral issue. Or the same way that forcing all Jews to wear stars on their clothing is a moral issue. Regardless of the reasons justifying why we as a nation refuse homosexuals the ability to marry, what it comes down to is that we are denying a specific group of citizens the right to reap the benefits of governmental recognition of their marriage.

Is marriage a privilege or a right? In a nation where marriages are allowed to take place only to be terminated less than 48 hours later, I would not call it a privilege. In a nation where an individual is allowed to marry time after time after time, I would not call it a privilege. In a nation where spousal selection is turned into a reality show, I would argue that it is not a privilege.

This puts us in a unique position as the election draws near. Back in the 90s, when I was still in elementary school and learning about the great civil rights movement of the 1950s and 60s, LGBT rights were not as prominent a national issue as they are today. But now they are, and I find it hard to ignore the similarities – those that have the power wish to deny others a civil right because of what makes them different.

Selecting the right person to lead the nation through such a decision is crucial. The issue of LGBT rights will come up again during the next president's term, whether it be through a proposed amendment of the U.S. Constitution as has been attempted in the past, or in ways that are more subtle. At this point, selecting a leader who will lead us over this great moral hurdle is just as important as choosing a leader who will lead us out of economic recession or lead us to the proper decision in the wars we are engaged in.

Brandon Milardo
UMass student
Class of 2009

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 550 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com or submitted online at dailycollegian.com. We regret that, due to space constraints, not all letters will be printed.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Boston native to come home

Comic talks about career

By Andrew Sheridan
Collegian Correspondent

Since the start of the New Year, Comedy Central has been stepping up its support of the most basic of the comic arts, stand-up. Following the "Stand-Up Showdown" (a month-long competition in which viewers vote online for their favorite comedians), the network has begun a series of brand new comedy specials. This week, the featured comic is Massachusetts native Mike Birbiglia, a man who has been described as "a thousand times more endearing and funny than Dane Cook."

Birbiglia (don't worry, even he couldn't pronounce his name for a while) has his own brand of comedy akin to the animated observations of Jerry Seinfeld, but with a laid-back attitude reminiscent of Mitch Hedberg. He has also been known to break out the acoustic guitar for a self-deprecating ditty or big musical finish.

As he puts it, "I've always been a big Bill Cosby fan, and I wanted to do something along those lines. Not like 'look at me, I'm hilarious' like some comedians, but more subtle." While the jokes are low-key, his political views are often out in the open, as he compares president Bush to a wiffle ball fanatic and proclaims his love of the term "cracka"

Birbiglia's professional career began in 2002, when he became one of the youngest artists ever to appear on "The Late Show with David Letterman." In 2004, he released his first CD, entitled "Dog Years," and taped his first Comedy Central half-hour special. To date he has three albums, two half-hour specials, and multiple nationwide tours under his belt.

The Collegian recently had an opportunity to talk with Mike, and ask him a few questions.

DAILY COLLEGIAN: In your latest album you talk a lot about growing up around Boston. Living in New York, do you still have many Massachusetts ties?

MIKE BIRBIGLIA: My parents still live there, and I still root for the Red Sox and what not. This Fall I did Dennis Leary's "Comedy Come Home," along with other Boston benefits. In truth, my new special should have been shot in Boston, because that's where all the stories take place.

DC: Where did you get the idea of using a guitar for comedy?

MB: I didn't come up with the idea, it's age old. I started playing a few years ago as a hobby and I started writing funny songs to pass the time and thought "why don't I do this on stage?"

DC: In your previous Comedy Central special you talk quite a bit about wanting to rap. Have you ever followed up on that?

MB: Growing up in Shrewsbury, my only true rap moment was in [the childhood drug education program] DARE. I remember for DARE graduation I offered to do a rap song with my friends. I wrote a song based on Young MC's "Bust a Move" and called it "Bust Them Drugs" and we performed it in front of everyone. Yeah, that was pretty much the extent of my rap experience.

DC: Do you have any advice for aspiring stand-up comics?

MB: Listen to interviews with comedians that you respect. I've found them to be very instructive... But there is no substitute for writing and performing as much as you can.

Birbiglia is fresh off his most recent nationwide tour, titled "My Secret Public Journal (MSPJ)." The material is taken from his online journal of the same name, which he regularly reads on syndicated radio. Playing clubs, universities, and big city venues alike, "MSPJ" is the follow-up to his popular college-only tour, "Medium Man on Campus," and on April 2, he will be bringing it to the Comedy Connection in Boston.

His newest hour-long special, "What I Should Have Said Was Nothing," airs this Saturday at midnight. "It's all true stories" says Birbiglia. "I've been writing "My Secret Public Journal" for a few years now, reading it on the radio, and sending out thousands of e-mails. I've ended up ruminating on stories and thinking 'that would be fun to tell on stage.'"

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at asheri1@student.umass.edu

Comedy Central comic Mike Birbiglia is taking his "My Secret Public Journal" tour to his hometown of Boston on April 2. Birbiglia style of humor effectively uses music and low-key jokes.

Northampton hosts new music, great stories

Israeli group brings original sound to Pearl

By Josh Walovitch
Collegian Staff

Hadag Nahash, the award winning chart topping Israeli Hip Hop band is making its way to the states for its 10th time. They will be performing this upcoming Sunday 8:00 p.m. at the Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton.

Formed in Jerusalem in 1996 Hadag Nahash has released four albums, produced three number one hits and has achieved platinum status in Israel. By the end of 2004 they had won "Band of the Year" and "Song of the Year" awards from the Israeli version of the Grammys. At the same time, Hadag Nahash was being praised critically by almost every newspaper, internet site, radio station and television show.

Hadag Nahash is gaining popularity in the United States regardless of one large inconvenience. The bands lyrics are sung in Hebrew making it impossible for the American fan base to understand them. "The main difference about touring here in America is that our fans do not understand what we are saying," lead singer Sha'anan said. "When we play shows outside of Israel we try to put more emphasis on songs that are more musical."

Lyrically Hadag Nahash writes about living an "honest life" and because they grew up in Israel its music often talks about the struggles living there. Hadag Nahash has been known for making leftist political statements in its songs. "Everyone in politics is an asshole," Sha'anan said, joking around.

Musically Hadag Nahash incorporates elements of hip hop, funk, rock, jazz, ska and Middle Eastern music into its songs. In an Aaron Schachter interview Sha'anan spoke about Hadag Nahash's music, saying "It's more than two turntables and a microphone for us. You've got seven people in the band and every instrument you can imagine and maybe a few you won't even imagine and we try to, like, push Israeli pop culture forward in terms of lyrics and in terms of music to show that there's no limitations and that we can do whatever we want and whatever sounds good. We mix it all together and create a new sound."

Hadag Nahash is a unique Israeli group with an orginal sound, mixing everything from rock to hip hop to traditional Middle Eastern music.

In English, the band's name literally translates to "the fish-snake," but is in fact a non-sensical Hebrew phase. Hadag Nahash is an anagram for the Hebrew phrase "Nehag Chadash" which describes people who have recently received their licenses. The words "Nehag Chadash" are placed on the back of the car windows of new drivers.

Sha'anan has previously said that when an Israeli youth first starts driving, they enter a world of combat because of how dangerous the Israeli streets are. "There's all these cultures and they're all thrown into a country where busses explode and you can't finish the month with the salary you make. It's small, it's tense and it's multicultural. A lot of times I try to write a song that has the Israel truth, so to speak, the Israeli essence inside it."

One of Hadag Nahash's most popular songs "Shirat Hasticker" (in English called "The Sticker Song") was written by Israeli novelist David Grossman. The song is unique in that all the lyrics are comprised of Israeli bumper stickers that express an angry and ironic description of political life in Israel.

Sha'anan previously commented on the song saying "Our life consists of all these stickers at very high volume all the time every day. And that's the problem as I see it, you know. Of course I agree with some and hate others, but the real problem is that we're living at maximum capacity all the time."

The band has been on tour for three weeks so far this year. "All of us like being on the road; if we didn't like it, we would have stopped years ago. It's fun to meet new audiences but is even more fun when we come back to places where we have had successful shows in the past."

The atmosphere of a Hadag Nahash concert is known to be upbeat, positive and extremely fun. "It is all about peace and freedom; it will be fun and groovy. I think UMass students will definitely enjoy it," Sha'anan said enthusiastically "Hey, if we weren't any good we wouldn't have come back to tour the states several times."

Tickets are on sale at the UMass Hillel and the Northampton box office, $10 for students and $15 for the general public. Tickets will also be sold at the door.

Josh Walovitch can be reached at jwalovit@student.umass.edu

HADAG NAHASH
2/10/08
PEARL STREET
$10

Ra Ra Riot recovers, rebounds from tragic year

By Brian Wood
Collegian Staff

In the wake of sudden tragedy and hiatus, Syracuse's Ra Ra Riot has returned to bring their energetic presence and sound to the stage at the Iron Horse Music Hall Friday night.

During their relatively brief history, the sextet, fronted by vocalist and chief lyricist Wesley Miles, have garnered comparisons to such bands as The Arcade Fire and The Olivia Tremor Control for their ability to seamlessly integrate stringed instruments and composition into a more modern indie-rock landscape.

While their association with such company is warranted, what separates Ra Ra Riot from their contemporaries is the abundance of energy that resonates from every song.

Songs such as "A Manner to Act," off their self-titled LP, leap from the stereo with a sense of urgency and demand multiple plays. Where Arcade Fire's latest effort was dominated by drab and darker selections, Ra Ra Riot's debut is full of life and littered with bright and often playful hooks.

2007 proved to be a profoundly transitional year for the young band. The widespread release of their debut album, a six track self-titled EP, in both North America and Europe matched with their supporting roles on national tours with the likes of Indie heavyweights Art Brut and Tokyo Police Club saw the band rise from relative obscurity to earn considerable mainstream attention.

Perhaps the band's biggest break occurred when they performed at SXSW (South by Southwest Festival) in Austin, TX, and delivered a performance so engaging that it earned them festival wide top-10 marks from both NME and VH1.

Other notable publications were not far behind in their praise for the band, as they received favorable coverage from Rolling Stone, SPIN, and Nylon in the months to follow, with SPIN going as far as to claim, "You must know Syracuse's Ra Ra Riot. Like, right now."

Unfortunately, as successful as 2007 was musically for the band, it will always be remembered for the sudden and tragic death of their close friend and drummer John Pike. Disappearing following a house party a day after the band had performed in Providence, the discovery of his body in Buzzard's Bay in Fairhaven, MA shocked the band to their very core. Suddenly without their backbone and stricken with heavy hearts, an air of uncertainty surrounded the future of the band.

Following this period of loss and mourning, the New Year has served, in many ways, as a fresh start for Ra Ra Riot. A sold out benefit concert entitled "Friends of John" was held at the Middle East in Cambridge last month. Ra Ra Riot performed with their new lineup while the benefit also included performances by Tokyo Police Club and Vampire Weekend with all of the show's proceeds going directly to the newly founded John Ryan Pike Memorial Foundation.

Created by Pike's family following his death, the foundation aims to establish a lending library of musical instruments; this will allow and encourage underprivileged children to become active in music by allowing them to try instruments that they may have never tried or been able to access before.

The foundation plans to join forces with local high schools and colleges to bring these children together with students who are willing to volunteer music lessons, all in an effort to keep John's passion of playing and creating music alive and thriving in the hearts of many.

Despite their loss, Ra Ra Riot has returned to the studio and is in the midst of their first tour of the New Year. With their fallen friend and drummer as an undoubted inspiration, the band continues to create and perform in his memory while etching out new paths for themselves in the process. With their first full length album just completed and due for release sometime in the spring, an ongoing headlining tour, and a new sense of purpose and direction, big things lie ahead for the band.

Doors open at 10 p.m. and tickets for the show are $8 in advance and $10 at the door. The show is open to all ages. For tickets, directions, or a complete listing of shows please visit http://www.iheg.com.

Brian Wood can be reached at bjwood@student.umass.edu.

RA RA RIOT
2/8/08
IRON HORSE CAFE
$10

After a rough 2007 due to the death of their drummer and friend John Pike, the critically acclaimed Ra Ra Riot is touring again and will release their first full length album this spring.

Newcomers in net

Dainton, Muse fill goalie voids for UMass, BC

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

The last time Paul Dainton and John Muse stood directly across from each other at the Mullins Center, symmetry emerged as the games predominant theme.

Both players are freshman, both are goaltenders and both backstopped teams who, at the time, looked destined for a potential, more meaningful showdown at the TD Banknorth Garden about five weeks from now. Even the game's outcome – a 1-1 tie – and the two goals scored came off plays in similar circumstances.

But things have been the same for Dainton and Muse since their collegiate careers began.

Dainton (8-8-6, 2.45 goals-against average) came to the Massachusetts hockey team with the task of replacing all-American Jon Quick. And Muse (11-5-7, 2.28 goals-against average) became the man in Chestnut Hill once another all-American, Cory Schneider, decided the Vancouver Canucks farm system – and a fat singing bonus – were more appealing than another season at The Heights.

"It shows how our league is so competitive, and how they really do get the top players in the country to come here because [Muse and Dainton] are two great young hockey players. It works well in their favor that two of the top goalies in the country left, obviously with our team and Schneider at BC last year," UMass senior captain Mike Kostka said. "That's how things work out in our league; it's definitely nice to see to young guys taking the reigns."

There was no competition at BC for the starting job. After Schneider turned pro there was not a single goaltender in the program with any college hockey experience. Dainton, however, competed with sophomore Dan Meyers for playing time when practice began. He started the season opener – a 2-1 overtime loss at Clarkson. But not until a pulled groin muscle sidelined Meyers after a 3-1 win over Saint Lawrence in the season's second game did Dainton become the unquestioned starter.

After the tie in November, both UMass coach Don Cahoon and BC's Terry York lauded the play of their rookie net minders, and wondered what the future held for the pair. The following evening, UMass defeated BC 3-2 at Conte Forum in another great battle between the goaltenders. In the pair of games that weekend, Dainton made 64 and allowed three goals in the two games while Muse allowed four goals and stopped 63 shots.

Freshman goaltender Paul Dainton is 8–8–6 with a 2.45 goals against average this season, replacing last year's starter, Jon Quick.

"John and Paul are very similar mentally because they both stay very even keeled. After giving up a bad goal or having a bad game, they're ready to bounce right back," UMass goaltending coach Mike Buckley said.

The similarities end, however, when the two goalies hit the ice. Dainton relies heavily on his athleticism while Muse is a stand-up goalie who depends upon his positioning to keep pucks out of the net.

Buckley, who privately coached Muse for some time, knows both well.

"They're totally different," he said. "John is a bigger goalie. He's less reactive and relies more on blocking. Paul is a much better skater, and he can get into position quicker which he has to because of his size. Paul's more of a scrambler whereas John is a one-shot-at-a-time style goaltender, and that works well with the Boston College defense because they're able to clear them out."

Buckley's knowledge of Muse gave UMass a first-hand report of his tendencies and weaknesses. He went over some of the nuances in Muse's games, and the habits that the Minutemen can exploit.

"[Muse] moves laterally very quickly and he likes to come out of the net to force shooters to shoot into him," junior Cory Quirk said.

"He goes down a lot. So when we're in tight to him, we have to get the puck up and under the crossbar. We've focused on that in practice this week, just getting the puck high and burying it when we get the chance."

The Minutemen will also look to capitalize on Muse's weak puck skills. A majority of UMass's successful offensive rushes are born of passes sent into the offensive zone and wrapped around the net; a slip up from Muse could give the Minutemen a quality scoring opportunity.

"John is not as good playing the puck as Paul," Buckley said. "Paul is better than anyone in the country at making plays with the puck."

But Buckley also knows the weaknesses of Muse's counterpart, and didn't like some of the things he saw when UMass's descent in the Hockey East standings began. Dainton allowed too many rebounds and some soft goals that became even more troublesome once UMass's offense hit a lull – the Minutemen have scored two or less goals in four of their last six games.

A simple stick-positioning adjustment changed this for Dainton. Buckley noticed that he was holding blocker slightly lower than he should have in his stance. This pulled the blade of the stick slightly out of position, so rather than hitting his stick, shots slipped through and deflected off his skate back into the slot.

With nine games remaining on the schedule, the Minutemen know they cannot afford to lose any more ground. No one knows this more than Dainton, but the pressure isn't something that worries him anymore. Twenty-two games into his career at UMass, Dainton knows exactly what it takes to win hockey games at this level.

But that isn't going to make Friday any easier because John Muse has learned a thing or two in his first year too.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joemeloni@gmail.com

UMass hosts BC

HOCKEY from page 10

into the final month of the season. A win over the daunted Eagles would be a major move in that direction.

One of the keys for the Minutemen will be stopping the Eagles on the power play. BC currently holds a 24.5 percent success rate with the man advantage.

"We can solve a lot of our problems by making sure two things occur," Cahoon said. "We have to stay out of the [penalty] box and minimize that exposure, and when we do have to kill a penalty, we're real effective and real thorough."

UMass normally plays two games each weekend, but has this Saturday off, meaning the full focus of the team is concentrated on its Friday night meeting with BC.

"The fact that we've only got one game means we can put all of our focus into that game," captain Mike Kostka said. "It puts more emphasis on the fact that you don't have a chance that second night to redeem yourself if you don't play the way you want. You've got to take care of business on Friday night because it's your only chance for a win."

The single game also affords Cahoon more flexibility in his lineups, as he won't have to save a few players' legs for another game the next night.

"I'm going to try to construct a lineup that's prepared to play with an energy and a level of confidence and a thoroughness that will allow us to succeed," Cahoon said. "We'll put it all out there on Friday and move on from there."

The intensity is always high when two Hockey East teams square off, but in recent years, when BC comes to the Mullins Center, the crowds are bigger, the games are more intense and the Minutemen seem to play harder.

"They're always going to be one of the best teams in Hockey East and the country, so I think it just gives us that much more motivation to want to beat them and to redeem yourself if you don't play the way you want. You've got to take care of business on Friday night because it's your only chance for a win."

The single game also affords Cahoon more flexibility in his lineups, as he won't have to save a few players' legs for another game the next night.

"I'm going to try to construct a lineup that's prepared to play with an energy and a level of confidence and a thoroughness that will allow us to succeed," Cahoon said. "We'll put it all out there on Friday and move on from there."

The intensity is always high when two Hockey East teams square off, but in recent years, when BC comes to the Mullins Center, the crowds are bigger, the games are more intense and the Minutemen seem to play harder.

"They're always going to be one of the best teams in Hockey East and the country, so I think it just gives us that much more motivation to want to beat them and prove that we're one of those good teams," center Cory Quirk said.

The Minutemen have not only been successful against BC at home. They're 2-1 over the past two seasons on the ice at Kelley Rink at Conte Forum.

On Feb. 2 of last year, UMass jumped out to a 4-0 lead on the Eagles in the first period and cruised to a 5-3 win.

"They're always a great team, and you gun for the teams at the top," Kostka said. "We were shown that when we were one of the teams at the top (ranked No. 5 in early January), and we had a lot of teams gunning for us.

"They're an extremely proud team and a team that competes a lot. We just know we have to be ready and we have to play hard because if we don't, they're probably going to walk all over us."

Jeremi Rice can be reached at jeremir@student.umass.edu

HOCKEY EAST STANDINGS

	Hockey East				Overall
Team	W	L	T	Pts.	W	L	T
1 New Hampshire	12	4	1	25	16	7	1
2 Boston College	8	4	6	22	13	6	7
3 Providence	9	5	3	21	12	9	3
4 Northeastern	9	7	2	20	12	9	3
5 UMass Lowell	7	7	4	18	12	9	4
6 Vermont	6	6	5	17	7	10	7
Boston University	7	8	3	17	8	14	4
8 Massachusetts	5	8	5	15	10	9	6
9 Maine	4	10	3	11	8	13	3
10 Merrimack	4	12	2	10	10	12	3

Boston College's freshman netminder John Muse it 11-5-7 with a 2.28 goals against average. He replaces the departed Cory Schneider.

where style happens
Citizens of Humanity jeans
Seven jeans
Mavi jeans
Free People
Hazel
Juno
Voxx
Miss Me
Madden Girl
Oh...Deer
Chinese Laundry
Yellow Box
Frye
Keds
Reef
Keen
Teva
Dansko
and ...lots of fun accessories!
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

EF BREAK
You always remember your first time abroad.
Save $150
February 15!
Grand Tour of Europe
Classic Italy
European Road Trip
Exotic Thailand
The Greek Isles
Ultimate Europe
Visit us at efcollegebreak.com/travel or call 800.766.2645

Come Join
Chili's
for Fajita Rita
Mondays
Classic Fajitas for Two $12.99
Ask your Server about our... $4.99 Appetizer Specials Monday - Friday 3pm - 6pm & 9pm - Close (Bar Area Only)
Chilis Grill & Bar
426 Russell Street, Rte 9
Hadley, MA 01035
413-2534008

SKYPLEX
18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
3 Different Rooms/3 DJ's spinning the best in Top 40, Dance, House and Select Mashup
THE ULTIMATE HOT BODY CONTEST
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female
The Hottest 18 Plus
SATURDAY NIGHT
Dance Party
NOW HIRING!
Bartenders
Cashiers
Security Staff
Barback
Waitstaff
SATURDAYS
SkyPlex 10 Stearns Sq Downtown Springfield 413.827.9000 www.SkyPlex.us

UMass adds 16 on national signing day

National signing day in college football created massive hoopla yesterday. ESPN and ESPN.com provided hours of coverage of the event, ranking the players, the teams and the recruiting classes.

That kind of attention wasn't allocated to Football Championship Subdivision schools, such as Massachusetts, but coach Don Brown is excited about this year's signing class.

"We're very happy with the group that we've signed," Brown the UMass athletics Web site. "We used all recruiting streams at our disposal: 1-A transfers, the junior college group and the 11 guys that are coming to us from high school and prep schools."

UMass signed 16 players, focusing on bringing in players with size to play on the offensive and defensive lines and the linebacking corps.

Of the 16 players, 12 of them play at those positions. The other four players include two wide receivers, a tailback and a cornerback.

Although they didn't sign a safety, tight end, special teamer or quarterback, Brown pointed out that the recruiting process is far from over.

"We're very happy with everybody that signed, but we still have some work to do. I've always looked at signing day as the first day you can sign players, not the last," he said.

Some players of note are Boston College transfers Warren Wilson (wide receiver, runs a 4.4-second 40-yard dash) and defensive lineman Cory Eason. Brown referred to Eason as "probably the highlight guy," and a player with "tremendous potential."

Also of note is offensive lineman Quinton Sales, who is rated as one of the 15 best centers in the country to sign on with a school by Rivals.com.

Five players to sign went to high school in Massachusetts, including both Eason and Wilson. The Minutemen also brought in a transfer from a team within the Colonial Athletic Association (Delaware) Raymond Jones, a defensive lineman. He will have to sit out one year.

Eli Rosenswaike

2008 Football Recruiting Class

Player	Pos.	Yr.	Ht.	Wt.
Adedaji Adeoba	LB	Fr.	6-0	205
Chris Chamberlin	LB	Fr.	6-2	240
Julian Colarusso	WR	Fr.	6-4	200
Korrey Davis	TB	Fr.	5-10	185
Corey Eason	DL	RFr.	6-5	280
Terrance Farris	LB	Jr.	6-0	195
Kurt Filler	LB	Jr.	6-3	210
Tyler Holmes	LB	Fr.	6-0	195
Raymond Jones	DL	RSo.	6-4	275
Stephane Milhim	OL	Fr.	6-4	300
Sean O'Connor	OL	Fr.	6-6	275
Gilbert Parson	OL	Fr.	6-5	310
Quinton Sales	OL	Fr.	6-3	280
Darren Thellen	DB	Fr.	6-2	190
Charles Thompson	DL	Fr.	6-3	290
Warren Wilson	WR	RSo.	6-1	180

As Brower goes, so does UM

Redshirt senior's production catalyst for Minuteman wins

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

Both Ricky Harris and the Massachusetts men's basketball team have been struggling and both are certainly hearing about it.

The sophomore shooting guard has not reached double figures in scoring in two of his last three games – marking the only such times all season. It's no surprise that the Minutemen (14-7, 3-4 Atlantic 10) dropped those two games, one to Xavier (Harris scored seven) and two games later to Saint Louis (six points).

It appears to many that the struggles for Harris and the team are interlocked – if Harris does well, so do the Minutemen. If he doesn't, well, they don't either. But that doesn't totally appear to hold true.

Harris has reached the 25-point plateau five times this season. After narrowly beating Syracuse and Boston College in the first two occurrences, the Minutemen have lost all three games Harris has scored 25 or more. In fact, in each of their last four losses, Harris led the team in scoring.

The catalyst at the moment is Etienne Brower. His performance level in any given game is indicative of the outcome. In the last four wins for the Minutemen, Brower has averaged 16 points and eight rebounds per game, while shooting 57 percent from the field and even better from the 3-point line (58 percent on 11-of-19 shooting).

In the last three of those games, Brower is 11-of-15 from the perimeter (73.3 percent) and has done all of his damage off the bench – providing the spark in the second unit that coach Travis Ford is looking for.

"He's our x-factor; we need him to play well. When he plays well we usually win. We're going to need a big game from him," teammate Gary Forbes said, referring to tonight's game against Rhode Island.

Things have been quite different in the recent losses for UMass. Over the last five, Brower has really struggled from everywhere except the free-throw line. He played fairly well in the last two losses – although he did foul out against Saint Louis – but in the three previous losses he had the worst stretch of his career.

Michael Theilen/Collegian

Etienne Brower's production has tailed off of late, and so has the Minutemen's victories. However, when Brower is hot, so is UMass.

Brower hit just one of his 16 attempts from 3-point range and wasn't much better from inside the arc, connecting on 4-of-18 shots. He missed all eight field goals in the first loss to Saint Joseph's, fouling out before registering a single point. In loss No. 2 to the Hawks, Brower hit 3-of-11 from the field and missed all but one from the perimeter.

But his worst game came before that, in what could be considered UMass's best opportunity to make a statement to the NCAA Selection Committee.

On Jan. 5, the Minutemen traveled to Nashville, Tenn., to take on then-No. 15 and undefeated Vanderbilt (14-0). UMass hung tough throughout, even holding a 1-point lead heading into the half.

Brower finished just one point and one rebound shy of a double-double, but it was a misleading performance. The senior forward shot 2-of-15 from the floor, and missed all five of his 3-point attempts. Had he shot better, the outcome could have been different.

Currently, Brower is one of four UMass players averaging double figures at 11.8 points per game. He is second on the team in rebounding and is one of the team's best free throw shooters. Despite the rough stretch of 3-point shooting, Brower has hit a solid 38.1 percent of his 97 attempts.

That is mostly due to his red-hot shooting to the beginning of the season, which not coincidentally, was when UMass was playing at or near its best. The Minutemen were 6-2 after eight games to start the season, and Brower was a big reason why.

During that span, Brower averaged 13.5 points per game on superb shooting from the field (57.6 percent) and from the 3-point line (21-of-38 for 55.3 percent). When he hit multiple 3-point shots in a game during that period, UMass was 6-0 and 0-2 when he didn't. Brower was particularly deadly from long range in the first six games of the season, hitting at a 63.3 percent clip – the tops in the country at that time.

Brower has had his ups and downs this season, as have the Minutemen.

But as one goes, it seems, so does the other.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswa@dailycollegian.com

Ricky Harris is second on the team in scoring, averaging 19.3 points per game, though when he is called upon too much, UMass has struggled.

Rams in town for A-10 battle

M HOOPS from page 10

characterizes the conference's top teams. URI does most of its damage from beyond the 3-point line – an area of the game that has given the Minutemen trouble this season.

Junior shooting guard Jimmy Baron ranks second in the league in 3-pointers made, but even he will not be UMass' primary defensive responsibility.

Senior forward Will Daniels leads the Rams in scoring with 16 points per game. The 6-foot-8 swing man plays a style of basketball similar to UMass senior forward Gary Forbes, as both are dependable scorers and rebounders.

Their height also creates match-up problems for other teams.

"He's basically their go-to guy, so you have to take note of him," Forbes said.

Last season, the teams split their home-and-home series, with each school winning on their home court. But UMass qualified for the National Invitational Tournament in 2006-07, while the Rams' season ended in the finals of the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

If the Minutemen want to return to the postseason come March, they know that a win over Rhode Island will help to bolster their resume. With nine games remaining, time is running out for UMass to position itself among the A-10 contenders.

"We definitely need everyone to play well, it's all about wins right now," Forbes said. "We want to go 9-0 and finish out the season strong."

But tonight's task won't be simple. If the Minutemen can't limit URI's offensive attack from the beginning, the UMass offense will need to makes its shots to avoid falling too far behind. There's been a general correlation between the team's overall shooting performance and its ability to win games.

The Maroon and White made half of their shoots in its win over Duquesne, while shooting 30 percent at Saint Louis. And if the shots aren't falling from beyond the arc, it will be difficult for the Minutemen to go inside.

With bruising forward Joe Mbang and junior center Kahiem Seawright, the team's only non-returning scorer from last season, the Rams rank fourth in the Atlantic 10 in rebounding. UMass, on the other hand, is last in the league in rebounds surrendered, giving up an average of 41 per game.

Michael King can be reached at conference in assists per game but turnovers have plagued them. Last night, they turned it over 12 times, and received more scoring opportunities due to the low turnover output.

Minutewomen hold off La Salle

W HOOPS from page 10

The Explorers assisted on just 10 of their 21 baskets and also turned the ball over 13 times.

The first half belonged to Rosario but Mills took over the game in the second half. The preseason A-10 All-Conference second team selection was held to two points in the first half, but scored 15 in the second, including 11 in the final six minutes. She also had three assists and three blocks in the second.

Despite coming out with an important road victory, the Minutewomen still have to work on their perimeter defense. La Salle shot 9-of-18 from deep, which accounted for nearly half of their points.

UMass shared the Explorers success from the perimeter. It connected on 6-of-13 from beyond the arc. Stefanie Gerardot accounted for three of these, and also finished with seven rebounds.

Teya Wright finished directly behind Gerardot with six rebounds but was limited to nine minutes because of foul trouble. The freshman continues to prove she's an elite rebounder, and if she wasn't continually in foul trouble, she'd be amongst the league leaders in that category.

Game Notes

Kim Benton continued to struggle from the field. She was 1-of-7 from the field, all from three-point range … La Salle's Ashley Gale was 0-of-4 from 3-point range off the bench … UMass outrebounded the Explorers 40-32, including 15-10 on the offensive glass … The Minutewomen missed their first five shots … La Salle's Danielle Mickiewicz tied her career-high with five rebounds and also blocked three shots … Elderton's 32 points were a season-high for an A-10 player in conference play and was also set an Explorer record for most points in the Tom Gola Arena … The Explorers finished the game with seven blocks while the Minutewomen had six.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

ALANA
Career Fair
Co-op/Internship Opportunities
Networking
Summer/Permanent Employment
Wednesday, February 13, 2008
Campus Center Auditorium
5:00PM - 8:00PM
ALL STUDENTS ARE INVITED!
Proudly Sponsored By
Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP), Career Services,
Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEBMS),
Diversity in Management Education Services (DiMES), Native American Student Services (NASS)
United Asia Learning Resource Center (UALRC)

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N Pleasant St • 413-253-7679 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Providing the best off campus living experience
24 hour maintenance
Safe Apartments
Friendly Staff
Two Great locations:
Amherst Center and Hobart Lane
We start showing apartments
Feb. 6th from 11:30am – 4:30pm M-F

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

amherst cinema
Fri, Feb 8 - Thu, Feb 14
The SAVAGES 2:00 4:30 7:00 9:30
The KiteRunner 1:30 7:15
JUNO 1:45 4:00 6:45 9:00
Mr. Brooks 4:15 9:45
(413) 253-2547
www.amherstcinema.org
PLEASANT STREET THEATER
There Will Be Blood Daily 2:45 6:00 9:15
PLUS 10:00 am Wed. Feb 13
THE DIVING BELL AND THE BUTTERFLY Daily 2:00 4:30 7:00 9:30
PLUS 10:15 am Wed, Feb 13
(413) 584-5865

You're a bad banana with a greasy black peel.

		3				8	7
8		4	7	2
	5				1		2	6
	8			4	7
			3	6			1
4	9		8				7
				7	6	9		4
2		5				1

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Youth grp
4 Took seats
7 Consecrates
14 Capp and Capone
15 "The Sopranos" producer
16 Make like new
17 Roped
19 Singer Cash
20 4/15 payment for some
22 Fixed
23 Plus feature
24 Shamus
26 Fathers
30 Knight's title
31 Slaughter in Cooperstown
33 Gun maker
34 Polished
37 Bath's river
39 Yucatan uncle
40 Thumbes
42 Wearing away
44 Southern constellation
45 Easy marks
47 Wistful
48 Small fries
50 Parts of a byte
52 Lic. to pull teeth
53 Slammin' Sammy
55 Strike lightly
56 Racers on runners
59 Child's toy
61 Ump's request
63 Of a creative nature
67 Aircraft
68 Mariage
69 "Xanadu" band
70 JFK data
71 Provided the food for

DOWN
1 Light wood
2 Tail one's nickname
3 Murder for political motives
4 Wingtip holders
5 Shelter a fugitive
6 Until now
7 Yow, it's cold!
8 Tolstoy and Durocher
9 Double curves
10 Having no motion
11 Abel to Adam
12 European eagle
13 Visualize
18 Big mugs
21 TV's warrior princess
25 River refuge
27 Cookers with spits
28 "Silas Marner" author
29 Boulder
32 Ilk
34 Emulates Ella
35 Wading bird
36 Colorless
38 High-end retailer
41 Expectorate
43 Crabbie mover
46 Not-so-educated guess
49 Provocative comedy
51 Disunited
54 God of thunder
57 Pieces for two
58 Fail avoider of rhyme
60 Meat paste
62 Narrative story
63 Org.
64 Clean air grp
65 Ran into 66 Shown the way

$ CASH FOR YOUR CLOTHES $
how does it work?
You bring us your awesome clothes... we sell them... you make money!
40% to be exact!
it's so easy!
No appointment necessary
Buy & Sell at the area's BIGGEST & BEST consignment store!
Drop & Shop Rewards
Urban Exchange
233 Main Street Northampton MA
413-585-8729
(walking distance from Smith College)

Quote of the Day

"I'm ugly. My jaw hurts."

— Britney Spears

Wondermark By David Malki

UMassic Park By Curtis Sarkin

Under the Bed By Dan Lucey

Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Candied yams and honey hams are the savory snacks that sooth your soul.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You're the only one who can save the Spice Girls world tour. Stalk them until they agree to more shows or until you get arrested.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Puffer's Pond is named after the extinct species of Puffin that once populated its fertile shores.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Counteract today's dreariness by taking a bath filled with rubber duckies and prozac infuzed water.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Stop being a Decepticon and tell your friends the truth about your robot fetish.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Sexiness starts on the inside. Buy something lacey and black at Victoria's Secret and swallow it.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You need to shave very badly. It looks likes there is brown moss growing on your face.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
The secret to attracting women lies in purchasing an adorable Koala bear and letting him come to class with you.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You are a cross between a small primate and a prostitute. You are a marmosex.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
If you feel something inside you do not hold it in...otherwise you might find yourself with a painful bowel obstruction.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Take some advice from TLC and drop that scrub you've been boinking. He will never spatially expand your horizon.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Strike out on a quest to discover Victoria Beckham's mysterious and fatty piece of armpit sausage.

DO THE CAPTION CONTEST.
THE PICTURE IS SO SEXY.
IT WILL TURN YOU ON.

www.dailycollegian.com/caption

Winner will be in Friday's paper.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APT. FOR RENT

Hobart condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further.

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today toll free at 1-888-684-2267 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

RAFT GUIDES
Zoar Outdoor is seeking adventuresome people to be full and part-time summer raft guides. Learn how to guide a raft during our training program and spend the summer on the Deerfield River. Applicants should have customer service experience and a positive atttitude and be comfortable working as a team or independently. Application deadline: Feb. 15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

EMPLOYMENT

Put up Posters! Through summer, car, sell, commitment needed. Up to $12/hr w/bonus. 20 hrs between Mon-Wed, excellent communicator, fast-paced, punctual, resume and formal cover letter to postering@artspromo.org. Hiring ASAP.

THE GREATEST SUMMER OF YOUR LIFE CAMP PONTIAC is coming to UMASS! Located in NY State Camp Pontiac, a premier co-ed overnight camp in New York, is looking for fun, enthusiastic and mature individuals who can teach and assist in all areas of athletics, aquatics, the arts, or as a general bunk counselor. Interviews will be held on Thursday, Feb. 21st 9:00AM-11:30AM Campus Center/Student Union Complex-Room 901. Please email: stefanie@campmontiac.com or call Stefanie at 516-626-7668 to set up an interview

EMPLOYMENT

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab.linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Marketing Intern As a Marketing Intern (paid position) you will assist in marketing efforts to grow sales of the leading economic policy analysis model. Responsibilities include developing presentations and other marketing material, writing for newsletters, website, and blog, and assisting with internet marketing, promotions, campaigns, and other marketing efforts. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038 resumes@remi.com. REMI is an eoe and maintains a drug-free workplace.

EMPLOYMENT

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org

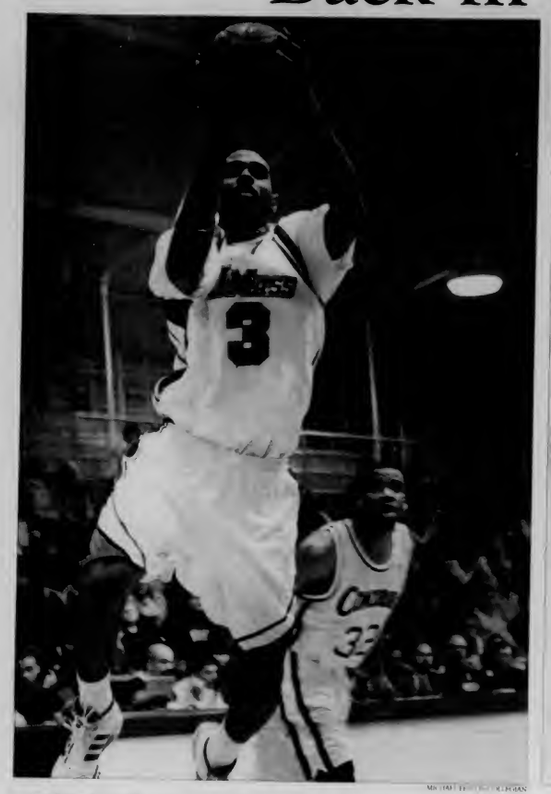
Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health

SERVICES

Services' Eating Disorders Clinic. 577-5101 TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

Spring Break from $199 Land price starting from $199 for 7 days. We also have an all inclusive hotel start from $799 per person Give us a call today it's not to late to still get away 1-800-GET-SUN-1



Spring Break 08 Hot Deals Hot Destinations Hot Parties Ask About Group Deals and Free Trips 1-800-426-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Back in business

Gary Forbes and the Minutemen look to climb back to .500 in the Atlantic 10 tonight against Rhode Island at the Mullins Center. Tonight is also Black Out Night, in which fans are encouraged to wear black t-shirts.

Junior forward Cory Quirk and the Minutemen host Boston College Friday night during Operation 8K. UMass is hoping for a capacity crowd at the Mullins Center for the key Hockey East matchup.

UM hosts URI in A-10 clash

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

For the Massachusetts men's basketball team, the importance of victory at the Mullins Center against one of the Atlantic 10's best cannot be understated. Competing against a conference and regional rival, coupled with the fact that the Minutemen are coming off one of their least impressive performances of the season, makes tonight's game approachable to a must-win.

UMass (14-7, 3-4 A-10) had its back against the wall last week and responded with a win at Duquesne. But the team followed that victory with a loss to Saint Louis on the road, 71-59. The Minutemen shot only 10 percent from beyond the arc, part of an all-around poor shooting performance in that game.

UMass struggled with the transition from facing a team that plays an up-tempo style in Duquesne to one that employs methodical offensive sets in the Billikens. Their dominant win over the Dukes followed by the loss to Saint Louis three days later underscores the importance of tonight's contest.

"It was two extremes, there's no question, when you have Duquesne who's going to run around and trap you a lot and try to make the game as fast as possible," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "We like that as well and then you go into it more. A half court defensive basketball team is really going to take away driving gains like that. It was definitely a change of pace for us."

Regardless of how UMass fared against two polar opposite offenses, Rhode Island poses its own problems. The Rams (19-3, 5-2 A-10) feature several potent scorers, yet have an offensive balance that

See M. HOOPS on page 8

Eagles come to Mullins Friday

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

If ever you were able to see a turning point coming, the Massachusetts hockey team's rematch with Boston College Friday night at the Mullins Center would seem too huge to fit inside the cavernous arena.

The Minutemen's seven-game winless streak came to a halt last Saturday with a 5-3 win over Maine, the first meeting between the team's since last year's NCAA quarterfinal.

With their three-week skid behind them and a tick in the wins column for 2008, the Minutemen (10-9-6, 5-8-5 Hockey East) turn their attention this week to one of the top college hockey programs in recent years.

The Eagles (13-6-7, 8-4-6 HEA) reached the last two National Championship games (they lost both), but have had trouble with their Western Mass. neighbors over that stretch.

Although they are just 9-36-3 all-time against BC, the Minutemen are 4-1-1 in their last six meetings, and the timing could not be more perfect for a team in dire need of a meaningful victory.

The Mass Attack won a home-and-home series back on Nov. 16 and 17, tying the first game, 1-1, in the Mullins Center before defeating the Eagles, 5-3, on their home ice. BC needs to win to force a split of the season series and are coming off 4-3 overtime win against Boston University in the first round of the Beanpot Tournament.

With a win behind them, UMass coach Don Cahoon is eager to build some momentum moving

See HOCKEY on page 7

Pam Rosanio led the Minutewomen with 19 points, adding six rebounds in the win over La Salle. Kate Mills was dominant late in the game, scoring 15 points in the second half, including the game-winning shot. She finished with 17 points and eight rebounds.

Rosanio, Mills lead UMass past La Salle

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

After LaSalle hit 3-pointers on four of its first five possessions to take a 12-0 lead, it appeared that the Massachusetts women's basketball team was on their way to another loss.

However, thanks in large part to 12 first-half points from Pam Rosanio, the Minutewomen (11-11, 3-4 Atlantic 10) cut the lead to four by halftime, and left Tom Gola Arena with a 66-63 road victory.

UMass will play another road game Saturday when they travel to Kingston, R.I., to take on Rhode Island at 2 p.m.

UMass	66
La Salle	63

With a 64-63 lead and less than a minute remaining in the game, the Minutewomen's Kate Mills blocked a Carlene Hightower shot. Point guard Sakera Young hit both of her free throws after being fouled, and the Explorers' Meghan Ale missed a 3-point shot as time expired.

Often this year, Mills and Rosanio have handled the scoring load for the Minutewomen, while the rest of the team struggled to put up enough points. Tonight, it was La Salle who had that problem.

Margaret Elderton entered the game averaging 8.6 points per contest but nearly scored enough points in the second half to win the game. After scoring 11 in the first half, Elderton scored 21 in the second to finish with a career-high 32 points. The junior guard shot 5-of-7 from beyond the arc and converted on 11-of-12 attempts from the free-throw line.

La Salle's best player, Hightower, scored 22 points, with 17 coming in the first half.

Besides Elderton and Hightower, the rest of the Explorers combined for nine points. Jamie Walsh scored seven points, while the two other La Salle starters combined for two points. The bench accounted for zero points.

UMass received significant bench production from backup point guard Sakera Young. Young scored eight points on 3-of-3 shooting and also assisted on a game-high seven baskets.

Young set the tone, but the Minutewomen distributed the ball well as a team. They handed out 22 assists in the game. UMass leads the

See W. HOOPS on page 8

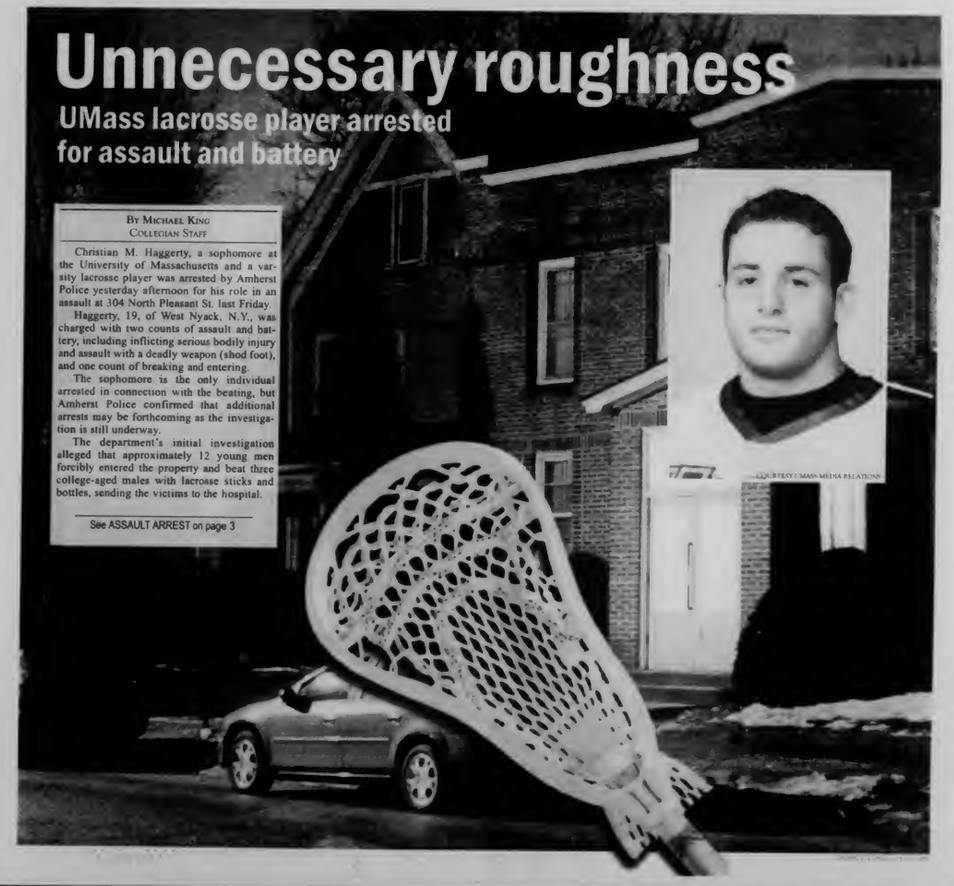
COLLEGIAN
WEEKEND EDITION

FRI H:37 | SAT H:41 | SUN H:36 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 2007

Unnecessary roughness

UMass lacrosse player arrested for assault and battery

By Michael King
Collegian Staff



Christian M. Haggerty, a sophomore at the University of Massachusetts and a varsity lacrosse player was arrested by Amherst Police yesterday afternoon for his role in an assault at 304 North Pleasant St. last Friday.

Haggerty, 19, of West Nyack, N.Y., was charged with two counts of assault and battery, including inflicting serious bodily injury and assault with a deadly weapon (shod foot), and one count of breaking and entering.

The sophomore is the only individual arrested in connection with the beating, but Amherst Police confirmed that additional arrests may be forthcoming as the investigation is still underway.

The department's initial investigation alleged that approximately 12 young men forcibly entered the property and beat three college-aged males with lacrosse sticks and bottles, sending the victims to the hospital.

See ASSAULT ARREST on page 3

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 80

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Ester
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staiger
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenzwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walrath
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL MEMBERS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. Sullivan

COPY EDITOR
Dominic Poli

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

Check the News blog! dailycollegian.blogspot.com

New programs added on-line

By Jennifer Heshion
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts-sponsored online program University Without Walls (UWW) has added three newly expanded study concentrations for the fall semester.

"These new program developments are a result of our ongoing commitment to remain in the forefront of innovative online offerings in step with extremely high-growth fields," said UMassOnline CEO David Gray.

According to Gray, the new programs were developed by UWW for adults seeking to complete their bachelor's degree in the fields of arts administration, journalism and health and human services.

The added concentration in arts administration is the first collaborative online undergraduate degree for working adults.

The program is offered in partnership with Arts Extension Service (AES), a leading provider of professional arts education. In addition to a bachelor's degree, applicants may also earn a nationally recognized certificate in arts management.

"Nonprofit arts and culture is a growth industry," said AES director Maren Brown. "There's currently a huge opportunity for people entering the field of arts administration."

Brown cited a recent study conducted by Americans for the Arts, which concluded that the nonprofit arts and culture industry grew 24 percent between 2000 and 2005 supporting 5.7 million full-time equivalent jobs.

The new areas of study concentration offer adults the chance to receive the best available online programs to further their education by taking advantage of modern technology, according to Gray.

"In addition to the requirement that the technology significantly enhance and enrich the learning experience, the program offerings themselves must remain contemporary, reflective of the real world, and ever-evolving to meet and exceed growing demands for leading professionals to have the contemporary knowledge demanded of the new career opportunities," said Gray.

The UWW has helped many returning students complete and design their Bachelor of Arts or Science degrees for the past 37 years.

According to the official Web site, www.umassonline.net, the program is designed for adults with credit from prior coursework and experience. Today UMassOnline offers 75 undergraduate and graduate degree development programs with over 1,500 courses available.

"I think that this is a great opportunity for those people who want to finish their degrees," said UMass sophomore and history major Kimberly Whitaker. "UMass should create more of these types of programs so that people have a better chance of getting hired in the competitive job market."

"In emerging disciplines where sweeping changes are happening rapidly and the demand for highly educated professionals continues to grow, the most rewarding career opportunities favor those with the most advanced knowledge and best contemporary understanding of the requirements for success," said Gray.

The concentrations in the journalism program are offered in partnership with UMass's certificate of journalism, which was recently named by the University Continuing Education Association as a "Program of Excellence." This recognition is considered the top award given in the field of distance learning.

According to Norman Sims, journalism professor and coordinator of the certificate of journalism, the new concentrations program was developed in response to rapid changes in the journalism field and an increased need for flexible learning environments for working adults.

"News has been moving online for 10 years," said Sims. "This revolution in the delivery of the news requires both a general understanding of the field as well as specialized online skills."

The human and health services concentration expanded from the current program's human services concentration, which has become a popular course of study. The new program will offer working adults the chance to earn their degree while preparing to join the highly trained fields of human services and health care.

"With the population growing and aging, these are extremely high-growth fields," said UWW faculty member Lee Manchester. "These new concentrations give students the latitude to cross over to a variety of jobs in both areas, and for those currently in the health care field to move into management and other roles that offer better paying, more fulfilling work."

The UWW is accepting applications for the new study concentrations for the fall of 2008 and currently offers individual courses.

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu.

UM, Genzyme create summer internship

By Matt Sheehan
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts and Genzyme Corporation, a biotechnology firm based in Cambridge, Mass., have unveiled a system-wide internship program commencing this summer.

The program was announced at the Life Science Talent Summit on the UMass-Boston campus and will provide a hands-on opportunity for up to 10 undergraduate students.

Upon completion, the rigorous program will award selected scholars a $5,000 grant for senior year tuition and fees.

"Prospective applicants must be incoming seniors who have amassed a 3.25 GPA or better," said Ellen Reifsneider, Vice President for University Relations and Diversity at Genzyme.

The program will seek students with backgrounds in the life sciences and applicable engineering who exhibit interest in the biotech field.

Proportional representation among the system's campuses will not be a factor in the selection process, although the company hopes to offer opportunities to undergraduates from Amherst, Boston, Dartmouth and Lowell.

"In addition to providing valuable learning opportunities for students, the UMass/Genzyme partnership will assist in the area of affordability by providing scholarship benefits to UMass students," said Robert Connolly, the Associate Vice President for University Relations.

Genzyme has expressed desire to aid interns in job placement upon successful completion of the program and graduation from the UMass system.

The corporation is confident awarded scholars will have gained the necessary experience to achieve in the biotech world.

Company officials hope the partnership will serve as a catalyst for similar collaborations in the future.

"It is critical for Genzyme and for others in the life science industry to strengthen our connection with UMass and with the other local academic institutions that have helped create a world-class culture of innovation in this region," said Henri A Termeer, chairman and CEO of Genzyme Corporation who began with the biotech company in 1983, said in a statement.

Although the UMass and Genzyme partnership lacks direct relation to Gov. Deval Patrick's $1 billion initiative proposed last May, Connolly believes it exemplifies the private sector-public institution collaboration the Governor believes will benefit the economy.

"State funding for such partnerships would lend stability and promote growth for the companies of the region, and could attract other companies in the industry to locate here, which would be good for Massachusetts and its citizens," said Connolly.

The collaboration addresses the importance of keeping and bringing the field's most progressive minds to the state, according to UMass President Jack M. Wilson.

"This is yet another example of the of the benefit of private-public partnerships—it provides great opportunities for our students, opportunities that can help them begin careers in the growing field of biotechnology and it also supports Genzyme's ability to train and recruit skilled workers in Massachusetts," Wilson said.

Joan C. Wood, Senior Vice President of Leadership and Organization Development at Genzyme, shares Wilson's sentiment on the importance of maintaining and compounding an innovative work force in Massachusetts.

"With this partnership and similar ones in the future, we hope to train and prepare the next generation of scientists," Wood said.

Genzyme was established in 1981 in Boston's CombatZone, atop a 15-story Garment building. With 21 employees and a revenue of just above $2 million, the company began an ascension defined by the development of innovative products and profitable acquisitions.

Today the corporation reports revenues of $3.8 billion and employs 10,000 people in 40 countries. Genzyme focuses on rare inherited disorders, kidney disease, orthopaedics, cancer, transplant and diagnostic testing. Last year, Genzyme was awarded the National Medal of Technology by President George W. Bush for technological innovation. The company was named one of the countries "100 Best Companies to Work for" by FORTUNE.

In 2005, a Wall Street Journal article highlighted surging biotech profits in conjunction with a seven-year monopoly guaranteed to biotech companies by Federal Law on Orphan drugs. These drugs treat orphan diseases, rare ailments that the science world was not treating for lack of incentive.

Genzyme's orphan drug, Cerezyme, is taken by individuals suffering from an enzyme deficiency known as Gaucher disease. Monopoly status guarantees Cerezyme will not have a generic brand competition until the market moratorium expires.

Cerezyme was reported in March to be one of the world's most expensive drugs; a year's supply can cost $200,000. The company profit margin is a reported 30 percent.

Matt Sheehan can be reached at msheehan@student.umass.edu.

Athlete arrested for assault

ASSAULT ARREST from page 1

Amherst Police Department declined further comment.

Haggerty lives at 308 North Pleasant St. in a red brick apartment complex on a parcel directly adjacent to the alleged scene of the crime.

Haggerty's Amherst residence is separated from 304 North Pleasant St., a two and one-half story structure with faded red clapboard siding, by the property's driveway.

The complex features several residences and its front porch was riddled with empty beer cans and plastic cups as of yesterday afternoon.

One neighbor of the complex described the scene around the house to be chaotic during the time immediately following the alleged incident. Though he did not witness the attack, the resident briefly stepped outside after hearing people scream and yell from the nearby property.

Yesterday's arrest is part of Amherst Police Department's ongoing investigation.

Last Saturday, eight members of the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse were suspended indefinitely, due to a violation of team rules stemming from an off-campus incident.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian confirmed that one of Haggerty's suspended teammates, junior Jim Connolly, a North Andover native, also resides at the address. It is unclear whether any of the other six suspended lacrosse players live at the place of the alleged incident..

As for the seven other suspended players, the suspensions only apply as athletes and their standing as students at UMass has not been affected.

That may change, however, when the Amherst Police completes its investigation.

If the police investigation revealed that the other seven were in violation of the University's Code of Student Conduct, the school may take disciplinary action. However, UMass is forbidden by privacy laws from releasing information about student violators of the code. This policy applies to all students, including non-student-athletes.

The athletic department was unable to confirm if Haggerty's suspension and arrest were related to the same incident.

Meanwhile, the lacrosse team continues to practice without the eight suspended athletes.

"On behalf of the athletic department, we have no comment at this time. [UMass men's lacrosse] coach Greg Cannella is not available for comment," UMass Sports Information Director Jason Yellin said

UMass spokesman Ed Blaguszewski also declined to comment on behalf of the University.

Haggerty will be arraigned today in Eastern Hampshire District Court in Hadley.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

Last Saturday, three colleged-aged males were sent to the hospital after an assault at 304 North Pleasant Street (left). The suspect's residence is at 308 North Pleasant Street (right).

Inventory system in place at UMass Mem. Hospital

By Lisa DeBenedictis and Sibbiti Sehgal
Collegian Staff

Furthering its scientific development and technological strides, the University of Massachusetts Memorial Medical Center, the principal teaching hospital in Worcester, implemented a new Radio Frequency Identification (RFID) system last year.

This automated device, a service from the company WaveMark, is used to count inventory at the hospital. Instead of physically counting each device, recording expiration dates, checking which items need to be restocked, and monitoring the number of items used in each lab, UMass Memorial uses its RFID system in several of its cardiac suites.

The system was put into use by Kathryn Green, senior director for Radiology Services at UMass Memorial, as a means to help reduce the hospital's inventory and maintenance costs.

"I was very actively involved … in terms of working on cost-saving initiatives," said Green. "There are seven lab departments with lots of inventory and we are always looking for ways to minimize inventory and keep track of inventory."

The multi-faceted system attaches an active RFID tag to each medical device when it is received by the inventory. The system then scans the tagged device by a Point of Service (POS) interrogator. The interrogator reads both the tag and a bar-coded label previously applied by the manufacturer. The tag and barcode serial numbers are combined to create a single product entry in the wave mark system. This process allows each device to be monitored at any time.

"It is almost like a ski pass," explained Raul Navarro, supply coordinator for the Cardiology Cath lab at UMass Memorial. "WaveMark registers the number, we scan each barcode into the computer, and when we wave the sticker, it merges the information into the barcode. An antenna looks for that label and every time it is scanned, it updates the system. Each device is scanned by an employee after they pull it off the shelf, through an automated reader in the room."

The automated RFID system even serves as a sort of tracking device for all its items.

"If the person doesn't pass it by the service reader, it will send an alert and give me the time and location of that item," said Navarro.

So far, the RFID system has saved the hospital thousands of dollars and hours of labor.

"There are 1,200 items we are tracking with the system, so I no longer have to do everything by hand, it updates the system," said Navarro. "Each item has a par level, so if [the medical device] gets used by the reader and it goes below par level, it goes into a folder, so we can order daily. If it is over par, it will not go into folder. It self checks."

"Additionally, all these items have expiration dates," continued Navarro. "[The RFID system] now sends me an alert when it has seven days before expiration. It also allows me to see into the future, which items will be expiring in six months. I no longer have to go room-to-room searching individually, in case I miss an item. It has taken a lot of time out of it. I can do reports, it lets me know the usage, the system records all that."

Many UMass students believe that this investment in leading technology is beneficial and economically efficient for hospitals – especially in their own university system.

"I believe that this investment is important, particularly, in the long run," said UMass freshman and chemical engineering major Charles Beyrouthy. "An efficient system like the RFID will prevent shortages and mistakes with supplies, and in some cases, that can be crucial to saving lives."

"The RFID is the tracking device of the future," said UMass senior and accounting major Jeffrey Pucko. "The RFID will in the future be a great asset to the UMass Medical Center, and it will help to make the cardiac department more efficient."

Lisa Benedictis can be reached at ldebened@student.umass.edu.

Shruti Sehgal can be reached at sseghal@student.umass.edu.

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 2/8/2008 thru Thurs. 2/14/2008
Purchase Tickets @cinemark.com

Fool's Gold (PG-13)*
1:35 4:40 7:25 10:05

Welcome Home Roscoe Jenkins (PG-13)*
1:25 4:20 7:10 9:50

Meet The Spartans (PG-13)
1:50 4:00 7:10 9:25

Rambo (R)
1:40 4:45 7:45 10:25

Over Her Dead Body (PG-13)*
1:20 4:05 7:00 9:35

27 Dresses (PG-13)
1:10 4:10 7:05 9:45

Strange Wilderness (R)*
1:55 4:55 7:15 9:30

Atonement (R)
1:30 4:25 7:20 10:10

The Eye (PG-13)*
1:15 4:35 7:30 10:20

Cloverfield (PG-13)
1:00 3:10 5:20 7:40 9:55

National Treasure: The Book Of Secrets (PG)
1:05 4:15 7:15 10:15

The Bucket List (PG-13)
1:45 4:30 7:35 10:00

NO PASSES NO SHIPTRSAVORS
TICKETS AND INFO AVAILABLE AT CINEMARK.COM

FEATURES

The down side of downloads

RIAA cracks down on colleges nationwide for illegally pirated music

By Leif Walcutt
Collegian Staff

It was about a month into Toni Paribello's second semester when the University of Massachusetts sophomore received a subpoena.

"It's one of those things you say that it will never happen to me," said Paribello, who was a freshman living in Thoreau Hall last year when the incident occurred. When she heard a song she liked, she would download it off of LimeWire.

"Everybody I knew had the program, and everyone I still know has it," said Paribello.

Like 1,400 other members of the UMass community in 2006-07, she received an e-mail from the Office of Information Technologies (OIT) saying that she committed copyright infringement. Her Internet access would be shut off, and she would have to go into OIT to sign a notice of copyright violation form.

This is standard UMass protocol because of its Internet "NetReg Conditions of Use," which requires that students use only "legal versions of copyrighted software in compliance with vendor license requirements."

"We don't actively look at students who share files," said OIT Technical Consultant Young Min Kim.

Kim explained that through Peer-to-Peer (P2P) programs such as LimeWire, Kazaa, and BitTorrent, files that a person shares become public.

A private group called the Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA) creates usernames for themselves to search for people who are sharing copyrighted files on these programs, explained Kim.

They then record the file sharer's IP address and issue a subpoena for illegal P2P sharing to that address. When this occurs, OIT is legally obligated to give the subpoena to the student.

OIT's new campaign aims at stopping illegal downloading on campus.

"There's nothing we can do when it's the legal situation," said John Dubach, special assistant to the chancellor and UMass chief information officer. "We have to respond to the subpoena."

In recent legislation, the RIAA has named UMass as one of the top 25 offenders, and would like to require the school to use filtering software for P2P sharing, Dubach said.

However, he believes this strategy wouldn't work for several reasons, including weak, easily bypassed software and freedom of speech issues.

Dubach also said that the RIAA is focusing their attention on on-campus students because of the high concentration of students.

The RIAA doesn't catch people one at a time; they issue subpoenas in large numbers that have the same ISP address.

The RIAA works with companies that own 90 percent of all sound recordings produced and sold in the United States. Their job is to protect the intellectual property rights of their members, to perform research about the music industry, and monitor relevant laws, regulations and policies.

Since the University of Massachusetts is the web provider for most on-campus students, they are subject to scrutiny in numbers.

"I went into OIT to sign the waiver, but they said that I was a special case," said Paribello.

OIT then gave her an envelope containing legal information about her subpoena from the RIAA and was told to go to the Student Legal Services Office (SLSO).

"I didn't get a warning, I just got an envelope," said Paribello. "I know that I was doing something wrong, but I feel I was cheated that I didn't get a warning."

Student Legal Services held an information session for 35 students, including Paribello, who were caught sharing music by the RIAA. The session was run by staff attorney Lisa Kent and directing attorney Charles DiMare.

"We do a complete factual investigation of all possible defenses," said Kent.

The SLSO helps students understand several aspects of the case, she said, including the lawsuit process, the University's role, and how a student can "quash" a subpoena, meaning to halt the subpoena process.

In addition, the SLSO monitors litigation across the country that is developing in this case law, and also looks into new defenses for students.

"Both before and after this meeting, I met with each student who sought our services individually, at least once," said Kent.

BRIAN TEDNOR/COLLEGIAN

During the last school year, 1,400 UMass students were charged with copyright infringement. Fines average $4,000 per student.

Shortly after the SLSO episode with Paribello, a student in the group of 35 said her uncle was a litigator in California, and knew a lawyer in New York City, Jordon Glass, who was taking on a class action lawsuit against the RIAA.

Glass said he needed at least seven people from UMass to take on the case.

"My dad met with the lawyer and said he was legitimate," said Paribello. "He got us all riled up, told us to get ready for wide media coverage with cameras and television."

But after two telephone sessions, he never called the group of students back.

"Nobody could get in touch with him," said Paribello.

Because she waited so long by relying on Glass to eradicate her settlement, she received another subpoena from the RIAA.

"The bill went from $3,000 to $5,000," said Paribello. "The current situation was that if we paid the $3,000, we still weren't safe. We were worse off."

If Paribello was caught again, the RIAA would not give her the option of paying $3,000. She would have to pay $750 a song, which would come to much more than the initial settlement.

To pay off the settlement, the RIAA gave Paribello a payment plan of $800 a month. She took on three summer jobs and has paid off about $3,200 of the $5,000.

"For a college student, that is a lot of money," said Paribello.

The money is one issue, but her other concern lies with the University.

"I firmly believe that UMass is doing nothing about this problem," said Paribello. She felt the school should do more to educate its students on this issue.

"Our job is to try to inform the public to make better decisions," said Kim.

OIT has created the "Don't be an iPirate" campaign to spread the message that downloading and sharing copyrighted music is illegal. Kim also said that OIT sends out emails to Resident Assistants each semester to request informational sessions about file sharing.

Paribello said that this strategy won't help students that much.

As a joke, she has an "iPirate" poster hanging in her room.

"UMass should make it well-known that this is what has happening to its students and also what is still going on," she said.

Another way that UMass is trying to stop illegal file sharing is through the Student Government Association's implementation of the free download program called Ruckus. Ruckus offers a database of over 2 million songs to download.

"The university is just the messenger and service provider," said Kent. "Since they tell their students 'this is illegal,' they are not liable for students downloading files illegally."

"The RIAA is trying to make an example of people, but nobody is finding out," said Paribello. "It's something that we shouldn't have to deal with."

Leif Walcutt can be reached at lwalcutt@student.umass.edu.

Options for addicts

NoHo service aims to prevent disease by giving drug users clean needles

By David Humphreys
Collegian Staff

Nestled in the middle of Northampton's downtown and mixed in with the eclectic shops and restaurants is a Mecca for heroin users and crack cocaine addicts – a clean needle exchange.

Daniel, an ex-addict who frequented the exchange, started going there after he became addicted to heroin at age 17.

"They were very kind but worried since I was such a young user," he said. "They gave me knowledge on safe use; it was a positive place to go for questions."

Run by Tapestry Health, the exchange offers drug users a place to get free clean supplies and drop off their dirty syringes.

A variety of supplies are offered to users, including sterile water and saline solutions to mix with drugs, cotton pellets to filter liquid drugs, Bacitracin to help heal puncture marks, little metal cups called "cookers" to replace a dirty spoon as a place to melt solid drugs into liquid, and vitamin C powder to help break down crack and brown heroin without using vinegar or lemon juice.

Judy Margo, the Assistant Director of Prevention Services at the clean needle exchange, said offering these tools doesn't encourage or promote drug use; rather, it helps users make their own decisions.

"I don't think the life of a heroin user is very fun," Margo said. "Our overall philosophy is harm reduction."

In order to reduce harm, Tapestry Health offers program participants workshops on safe injection techniques and overdose prevention as well as HIV, Hepatitis C and sexually-transmitted disease prevention.

Along with these workshops, there is a free anonymous HIV testing program and the staff can refer people to a detoxification facility, although it isn't a requirement for a needle exchange.

"It's a place where people can come in and know they aren't judged," Margo said.

"I think it is positive thing to have in a community filled with this kind of intravenous drug use," Daniel said. "They help people practice safe techniques and how to clean rigs and spoons, how to swab the right way and how to cut down the chance of getting a disease. I really needed them at that point in my life."

The program, which has been open for over 10 years, sees between 600 and 650 individuals a year.

It is one of four clean needle exchanges in the state. The others are in Boston, Cambridge and Provincetown, according to Margo.

"It's really good to have it here. It would be really, really good to have it in [Springfield and Holyoke]," she said, noting that many of the participants travel from these cities to visit the exchange.

Although these non-local drug users often live a long way from the exchange, many return home.

Other users, especially the homeless, may use shelters such as the seasonal Interfaith Cot Shelter, located almost directly across the street from the exchange, Margo said.

Having a shelter so close is convenient for drug users. In 2005, 62 percent of participants in the exchange program reported that they were unemployed and 17 percent reported homelessness.

Wanda Rolon, the director of ServiceNet, Inc.'s Hampshire County Programs Shelter and Housing Division, said there's been a definite increase in the amount of people using Interfaith Cot Shelter, but doesn't think it's directly related to the needle exchange program.

The number of people occupying the seasonal shelter has fluctuated throughout the years, but has risen from 185 in 1997 to 225 in 2006, with the 10-year high reaching 236 in 2004, according to ServiceNet statistics.

Since 2004, between 55 percent and 60 percent of the guests at the seasonal shelter reported chronic substance abuse problems, ServiceNet Research and Evaluation Analyst Andrea Miller said. Alcohol was the most prevalent.

The exchange, which Margo said has support from both the mayor and police department, doesn't seem to have a significant impact on drug-related arrests.

Judging from police and Tapestry Health statistics, drug arrests fluctuate even more from year to year than the number of drug users enrolling at the exchange. For instance, in 2004 there were 112 drug arrests compared to 1090 exchanges. In 2005, there were 139 arrests with 1208 exchanges, and in 2006, there were 197 arrests for only 1022 exchanges.

Although the clinic may not have a direct effect on drug-related arrests, Daniel thinks it does encourage more addicts to come to the area and continue to use.

"[The clinic] in some ways does promote more use among people and will make users flock to this area because they are giving people a clean alternative to dirty use," he said. "Do you understand how much more disease would be around if this place was not in operation?"

In 2003, former Massachusetts governor Mitt Romney said that more than half of admissions to drug treatment programs in the state were for heroin addiction, three times the national average, according to a Boston Globe article. He also said that since 2000, heroin deaths in Massachusetts had increased 76 percent.

According to the same article, "extremely pure and cheap Colombian heroin, imported directly to Boston, has fueled the regional epidemic, which Romney and Boston Mayor Thomas M. Menino described as a destabilizing public health and social crisis ... 'At $4 a bag, heroin is cheaper than cigarettes,' Menino said."

As for Daniel, he quit cold turkey after years of using.

"I st my pants for about four days straight while getting clean [and] my stomach also allowed me to eat nothing," he said. "It was horrible. I stopped because I died in Harco Rooms [low income housing] right in front of my buddy four times in a row using."

Daniel, who is now 24, has a child of his own and still lives in the Pioneer Valley area.

David Humphreys can be reached at dhumphre@dailycollegian.com.

MICHAEL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

Judy Margo, an assistant director at Tapestry's needle echaange, restocks a variety of syringes. Safety is one of the main concerns of all the staff at the exchange.

An unnamed heroin addict ties off and shoots up.

EDITORIAL OPINION

Tell me a story

Brad Leibowitz

I want to tell you a story. A simple story, one to which you might be able to relate. It's as ordinary as any other story, yet for that reason, this story is special. This story is mine. This story could be yours. For that fact, we are one in the same. I am talking to you. You are listening to me. It could be the other way around.

I come from a big city, but that doesn't matter. I, like you, had a group of friends growing up. We shared laughs, tough spots, moments of tenderness. We grew up together. We became one another yet stayed wholly separate.

In my group I was the floater. I was the one kid in my group who could go from my own group to another and be perfectly accepted on both sides. None of my friends had this ability. You probably knew someone like me growing up and, in all certainty, still do.

I am not a special kid, just social with a dash of introspectiveness; it's the latter quality that keeps me writing and you reading. This is my own personal journal, but it's not personal. However, I did at one time keep and maintain a journal. From time to time, like most people, I take it out and look at it.

Remember, this could in all probability be your story lifted from your own personal journal.

This story, which I am about to impart, is lifted from one of my journals pages. The date on the page reads Feb. 8, 2005. The time is 4 a.m. The place, like where I am from, doesn't matter. Consider it your town, your streets, your home. Remember, this could in all probability be your story lifted from your own personal journal:

"She stood there tonight looking pretty. Looking like herself. At the time, none of us had any idea what was about to unfold. I suppose you never really know what's coming. Take it as it comes. He walked in, they left. Pretty normal. She was his girlfriend. That's odd. Was. Funny how quickly life can change.

At around 11 the phone rang. Tom picked it up, listened and dropped the phone to the floor. We knew immediately. Too much too quickly. He did smell like whiskey. We should have known.

We all got into the car. Drove to the hospital. We waited, then waited some more. It's never like in the movies where family and friends see them right away. We waited. People magazine is pointless. While we waited, Paul and I shared some silent words. Mandy looked on. Paul used to always make fun of Mandy for her silly sounding name, but not tonight. We all just sat there in an uneasy tension.

Then it happened just like in the movies and on TV. Some somber looking doctor, I think her name was Joan, or maybe Pam, came out and broke the news. We could tell by the look in her face. He was fine, merely banged up – a broken knee. She, well, yeah. Joan said by the time they had gotten to the hospital she had lost too much blood to make it through the night.

That's what happens when a pole goes through your upper right arm pit angled down toward your stomach; in one side, out the other piercing everything and anything on the journey through. She was pronounced dead at 12:45 a.m. on Feb. 8, 2005. Just a few hours ago she told me her New Year's resolution was to learn to play the guitar so she could sing about Bob Marley and smoking joints.

She looked so pretty tonight. She looked like herself. I haven't cried yet, but I am sure it's on its way. Funny how quickly life can turn around. If I had only told her maybe things would have turned out differently."

This story has been locked away in my diary and my memory since that night. A close friend of mine, a girl who I should have told I was mad about, passed away due to a bad decision. She passed away because he drank too much and we didn't have enough brawn to make him stay and put his keys down. He drank too much, we didn't say enough and now she is gone.

I am writing this, not to make you sad, or indulge in my own past. I am writing this because three years ago to the date, a close friend of mine passed away and I never got the chance to tell her what I needed to. I often wonder if things would have turned out differently if I had told her that night how I felt about her. But I will never know.

I am writing this to tell you the old adage; life is too short, so say what you need to say. It's much better that you say too much then to never say anything at all.

This could be your story. You could have a story just like this which you can recall and now you will never truly know the answer to. It's seven days from that yearly romantic holiday, say what you need to say. Don't be afraid. Let the other person know, they might just let you in. They might just tell you a story.

Brad Leibowitz is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bleibowi@student.umass.edu.

Presidential exploits

Hannah Nelson

On Feb. 2, French President Nicolas Sarkozy tied the knot. Other than the fact that he is a 53-year-old with two failed marriages under his belt, this particular marriage is causing quite a bit of stir, because the woman on the other half of it is a 40-year-old singer and former model, Carla Bruni.

Now, transfer this situation into an American context. At first glance, it would seem like something of this nature would be outrageously scandalized here. But after all, in this election process there was Rudy Giuliani, who has been married three times, though he too faced a certain amount of scrutiny.

And unless you've been living in a cave, you know the story of Bill Clinton's tryst with intern, Monica Lewinsky. Not to mention that Ronald Reagan is the only president the United States has had that has been divorced.

To go back further, Andrew Jackson killed a man in a dual for slanders against Jackson's wife. And Thomas Jefferson's past is highly debated among historians on whether or not he had children by his slave, Sally Hemmings. Now that may seem out of context, but are they really? From what is known about both time periods those were both widely accepted, though morally debatable practices.

Is it a matter of what is socially acceptable, or what is socially comfortable?

Not to degrade the marriages of our presidents, but is the message here that society is more accepting of a silently unhappy marriage than an ended marriage resulting in two presumably content single people? Is America any more trusting of a philandering president than of a twice divorced, thrice married president?

Is it a matter of what is socially acceptable, or what is socially comfortable? Today, in most modern societies, it is acceptable to be a divorcee. On the flip side of that however, Sarkozy (and Giuliani) would be the extremes.

The more I think about it, the less realistic it seems that the United States would be OK with a president with a similar marital history. That is, of course, until the daintier details of Sarkozy's track record are examined. Sarkozy sounds like he has been living in a real-life soap opera.

In 1982, Sarkozy married his first wife, Marie Dominique Culioli and they had two sons. Maybe the romance was doomed from the start – after all the witness was Charles Pasqua who would be a future political adversary. The divorce was made final in 1996.

In the same year that he divorced Culioli, he married model turned public relations administrator, Cecilia Ciganer-Albeniz. Sarkozy was the officiator of the wedding of her first marriage, which ended a year later in 1988 to start their affair. They had one son together, and were a public couple until 2005, when each had their side affairs publicized. His was with a journalist and hers with an events organizer. They made their separation final in October 2007 with a divorce.

Are you still with me? Good. Now enter Carla Bruni. Just two months after the second divorce, Sarkozy was seen out and about on holiday with the Italian ex-model now singer. Allegedly they met after the divorce in November, but Sarkozy really doesn't have much in his past going for him on the credibility of that claim.

Bruni, though, is quite the match for Sarkozy when it comes to their pasts. Her exes include Mick Jagger, Eric Clapton and Kevin Costner. Bruni also has a son from a previous relationship with a French philosopher. You really can't make this stuff up.

I was thinking that having a president with the same personal record in the United States as Sarkozy wouldn't shake things up much and that it would have its 15 minutes and then we would be back to Britney's rehab.

But Sarkozy's national approval has been plummeting in the past months because of his publicized relationship with Bruni. France is accustomed to having presidents keep their love lives behind the scenes, and many are simply annoyed with the amount of media attention that the president's personal is getting.

Is the message to be learned from Sarkozy that society should revert to the days of silent acceptance? That, of course, is not going to happen. He has a bad track record, I'll admit it. But in the current presidential race we're in, ceilings are being broken left and, well, left.

The questions seen everywhere are about whether we can we have a woman president or a black president. Are we ready? Similarly, would we elect an atheist? And then there is the question of whether or not a president should be judged solely by political objectives, or if private lives should be considered. Unfortunately, only time will reveal the ultimate answers, until then, let the speculation continue.

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu.

Surviving the application process

Katherine Marr

Every one of us has undergone the absolutely thrilling college application experience, and many of us will get another taste of it when applying for graduate school. Oh, what a fun process.

Agonize over the essay. Study for the board exams. Collect recommendation letters. Fill out applications. Photoshop university sweatshirts into your baby pictures and construct a life-sized mannequin of yourself to send to the admissions office.

What, that last one doesn't ring a bell? Then you can count yourself out of the group of the more creative applicants that colleges cross paths with every year.

If you still don't have a clear picture of the sort of person to whom I'm referring, think "Legally Blonde." Overly-eager applicant Elle Woods sends Harvard Law School a professionally produced admissions video. The tape features her running a sorority meeting in an evening gown and boasting her knowledge of soap operas in a swimming pool, among other absurdities.

Laugh accordingly, but such behavior is not as ludicrous as most would presume. At least Elle refrained from shipping Harvard a mannequin of herself, which cannot be said of another young female applicant in years past.

Each year, college admissions officers are bombarded with an array of "gifts" from prospective students. To offer a sampling, Smith College was sent a Scrabble board that spelled out – literally – the applicant's qualities, whereas Harvard received a chocolate mold of its Veritas shield. Several other schools have opened their mailboxes to find mock Time magazine covers featuring applicants' faces.

Personally, I'm pondering a new career choice in light of the above.

So what's the verdict on the impact of these creative showcases? Admissions officers say they rarely bear any weight on acceptance, and may even spotlight candidates negatively if they got a little too creative for their own good.

Yet I find myself wondering: can you really blame these overzealous applicants? Think about it. Your bedroom is crammed with enough of the college's paraphernalia to open as a mini-school store. You're bursting with more knowledge about the college than all of its tour guides combined. When you're that passionate about a school, isn't it understandable that you want to stand out among the thousands of other applicants?

Then of course you need to noticeably differentiate yourself from the other contenders, who share nowhere near your level of enthusiasm. So many of us get sucked into the hype of applying to a handful of schools toward which we feel largely indifferent. If a school has the slightest bit of potential, we add it to the list, wanting options rather than to be left out in the cold in the end.

I applied to 11 schools. Eleven schools, three of whose campuses I never once visited; one school in Chicago despite my extreme disinclination toward flying; one for an all-intents-and-purposes women's college (enough said); one that I couldn't possibly afford; and one backup safety school, in addition to my initial safety school.

That leaves how many schools in which I harbored actual interest? There was only a grand total of three. But come March, there I was, receiving acceptances to schools in which I had zero interest, while other die-hard applicants were being deferred or rejected.

Unfortunately, courtesy of the Internet and the widely accepted Common Application, it is now too simple to dash off application after application with the click of a mouse. When my cousin recently applied to the University of Vermont on a whim, I asked her why. She responded, "Why not? They take the Common Application and there's no application fee." Compare her to another student who would send the admissions committee a jug of Vermont maple syrup.

While some students are letting their creative juices flow freely, others are becomingly increasingly petrified of not abiding by application procedures. They fear that writing one word over the limit on their essays, let alone any extraneous submissions of edible college seals, will be their downfall. They closely align their submissions to the norm; perchance standing out as unique might actually bump them from the competition.

Now, following the rules is all fine and good, but considering that we are only talking about college applications here, the countless "dare to be different" bumper stickers, bookmarks and posters I've seen over the years have been pounded into my head.

Students are merely trying to find a way to express their devotion to a particular college, but it is part of a tricky balance that is universal in life. Show imagination, but not enough to overdo it. Be creative in a way that is appealing, and not simply gives others an amusing anecdote to tell in a column like this.

Stand out, but not too drastically from everybody else. And if you can produce precisely the right balance, you will emerge from the masses as a success. Or at least you'll be accepted to your top-choice school.

Personally, I'm pondering a new career choice in light of the above. Perhaps I will become an admissions officer of course, at UMass. On my visits to high school guidance departments, I'll distribute pamphlets, field questions and casually mention to the overzealous applicants that I love chocolate. And if all goes according to plan, the chocolate minutemen will soon be floating my way.

Katherine Marr is a Collegian columnist. She can reached at kmarr@student.umass.edu

One more vote for Ron Paul

Matthew M. Robare

Hope when it seems all hope is lost is one of the great paradoxes of human behavior and I have never seen this to be truer than during the presidential primaries this year. I have witnessed something this year that I never would have even thought about previously – the Big Media essentially choosing who is a viable candidate and who is not.

At all the debates the candidates who, to paraphrase Joe Biden, use sentences that consist of three things: a noun, a verb, and "change" get all the air time. While candidates that have something to say, whether it be wise and sagacious Ron Paul, blunt and stupid Duncan Hunter and Tom Tancredo, or somewhere in between Dennis Kucinich, get practically no air time and in the case of Congressman Paul get consistently cut off when addressing the issues.

But where the others have since dropped out of the race Ron Paul remains and the "Paultards" (I am proud to say I'm one them) remain hopeful despite the media's decision that he cannot win. Why do we still have hope when things are going wrong and we've gotten all the bad breaks (like practically no media coverage since before the Iowa caucus)?

The short answer is that we believe in freedom: the freedom to live our lives as we see fit and to not be bossed around by bureaucrats; to be safe from a reinstituted draft; to keep all the money we earn and not have it taken by the government and given to special interests.

A Ron Paul presidency would be the greatest triumph for freedom in this country.

Other reasons I have found to support Ron Paul are:

One: He has promised to end the IRS and the income tax. This means a huge reduction in federal revenue. Most importantly, he has also proposed reducing government spending to go with it.

Two: No more empire: Paul proposes bringing troops home not only from Iraq, but from Germany, Korea and all the other 130 countries American forces are stationed in. American intervention has usually done more harm than good. We say, "freedom and democracy," but we mean "tyranny and despotism."

American foreign policy has never promoted democracy except in Europe and Japan. We supported Syngman Rhee in Korea (and the CIA allowed him to escape justice) and we propped up another dictator, Ngo Dinh Diem, in South Vietnam until it became clear that he was a failure and the CIA backed a coup. More famous is the overthrow of the democratically elected Salvador Allende in Chile and the countercoup that restored the Shah of Iran to power.

Three: Dr. Paul has promised to end foreign aid. Many people view this as being uncompassionate and selfish, but it's not because foreign aid from the federal government goes to foreign governments and the dictators in control of those governments.

I'd wager that the country is poor because the dictator and his cronies are stealing everything from the people. The most egregious example is of the Ajaojuta steel mill in Nigeria, a project that began in 1979. After 29 years and $5 billion in aid, the mill has yet to produce a single bar of steel.

Four: The Patriot Act. The 21st century's version of the infamous Alien and Sedition Acts of John Adams' presidency, Abraham Lincoln's suspension of habeas corpus in places where there was neither rebellion nor invasion and Woodrow Wilson's policies during the First World War. Ron Paul has sworn to repeal it if elected president. The beloved Barack Obama voted in favor of the unconstitutional law, as did John McCain and Hilary Clinton.

Five: Congressman Paul's environmental policy is, in my view, the greenest that has ever been articulated. As a supporter of the free market, Dr. Paul believes in the absolute right to private property. What this means to the environment is that a factory can dump toxic waste into a river as much as they want – as long as they make arrangements with the people who own property that would be affected. If you don't like the smog coming across your property you can sue the polluter. An organization like Riverkeepers would figuratively and literally clean up if Ron Paul was president.

A Ron Paul presidency would be the greatest triumph for freedom in this country since Thomas Jefferson was elected in 1800. This November, I implore you to not be blind to the machinating would-be despots fighting for power and vote for the one man who can restore freedom and democracy to our way ward republic.

Matthew M Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu

PHOTO COURTESY MTV. DESIGN CHRIS MARTIN

MTV casting at UMass Tuesday

BY LUCAS CORREIA
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts will host a casting call for Season 21 of MTV's "The Real World" Tuesday, Feb. 12. The show documents the events that unfold when seven strangers live and work together over the course of five months. The program is MTV's longest-running series.

MTV last visited the Pioneer Valley about four years ago. Casting manager Damon Furberg said he likes the "particular style and personality" that Massachusetts has to offer.

"We look for characters from real life; people with strong personalities who are unafraid to speak their minds," Executive Producer Jonathan Murray told the press.

Furberg said ideal applicants are "unique from the rest of the world," and have interesting backgrounds. He added that for this season, the show is hoping to return to the more refined personalities featured in earlier seasons.

"We want the show to be less 'party central'," said Furberg.

Particularly, MTV is looking for candidates that consider themselves "activists" that stand for social, political or environmental causes. As Furberg put it, "we want people who are passionate outside of their own wants and needs." He compared this description to Pedro Zamora, the HIV/AIDS educator from "The Real World: San Francisco," which aired in 1994.

Roommate Parisa Montazaran from "The Real World: Sydney," which aired in 2007, said her ability to speak her mind on global issues was what made her stand out in the casting process.

"I was able to answer a lot of questions about Afghanistan and Iraq [asked to a group]... and I kept getting callbacks," said Montazaran.

Montazaran also commented that being as genuine as possible can make an audition a lot more promising. "People who can show that they have a lot of layers are much more captivating," she said.

Furberg also commented on the kind of auditions that won't make it onto "The Real World." He highly discourages applicants that "think there is a formula to getting on the show." Those who claim to be just like previous cast members also don't make the cut. Fakeness in general is an immediate turn-off to casting directors.

The show is also seeking veterans from the Armed Forces. In 2005, "The Real World: Austin" featured Rachel Moyal, who served in Iraq as a combat medic.

Furberg said attitudes toward Iraq have shifted since 2005, and the topic is one that many Americans can identify with either directly or indirectly. All participants who present a valid military ID will be given a VIP pass and the option of going directly to the group audition.

MTV asks that all applicants be between ages 18 and 24. Auditions will take place in the Student Union Ballroom from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. More information on the application process can be found at www.bunim-murray.com.

Lucas Correia can be reached at ljcorrei@student.umass.edu.

Harpoon hits target, offering smooth alternative

BY DERRICK PERKINS AND TIM MCCALL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Nestled between a fish factory and the Bank of America Pavilion, the Harpoon Brewery lies on Boston's shorefront in an industrial section of the city a bus ride away from South Station.

"This is the main brewery," said Liz Osaki, director of Harpoon's visitors center, a small beer tasting bar and gift shop with a birds-eye-view of the brewing process. "These are all of our main tanks, grist mill, and boilers."

About 60 percent of the beer brewed under Harpoon's label passes through the Boston brewery. A second brewery owned by the company operates in Windsor, Vt., handling mostly the bottling aspect of the business.

On a gray Saturday in January, nearly 50 people milled around the brewery's visitor center waiting for the 4 p.m. beer tasting session to start – the third of the day. On tap, Osaki had the original Harpoon Ale, the India Pale Ale, Munich Dark, the regular and the raspberry UnFiltered Offerings, a hard cider and this year's 100 Barrel series beer, a Weizenbock.

"It's a brewery," said Alex Shea – guest Beer Dude and a University of Massachusetts Dartmouth student – upon entering. "I thought it was a tour."

Harpoon's "tour" revolves around a buffet-style sampling session led by Osaki with the assistance of Brian Goedde. Normally managing Harpoon's warehouse – located at the rear of the facility – Goedde lends Osaki a hand during the normally busy Saturday tastings.

"It's a mixed crowd," Goedde said, describing the small throng of tasters talking over Osaki's lecture on the finer points of the brewing process. "The older people tend to listen more."

A native of Indiana, Goedde said he had been a Guinness drinker until he first tasted the Munich Dark.

"It's full bodied and nice and malty. It's not carbonated with nitro and doesn't have any milk," he said. "It goes great with a nice 16 oz. steak. With two Guinness you're done for the night. With Munich Dark you can eat that much more."

Munich Dark is one of the least known of all the Harpoon beers. Its dark body might scare away the average drinker, but Harpoon isn't really for the average beer fan anyway. As dark beers go Munich is not as filling as the stereotypical "dark" beer. Brown ale in origin, Munich Dark harkens back to an English pub tradition predating heavy porters and stouts.

The Dark isn't the only unusual beer Osaki and Goedde served out during the tasting. Found not in liquor stores or in bars, but only in their brewery, the original Harpoon Ale is only served at the Boston location on tap as a reminder of the company's roots. As American Ales go, this beer is no different. It has a smooth taste that doesn't linger on after a swallow. A hoppier Pabst Blue Ribbon is Harpoon American Ale.

Comparing the original Harpoon Ale to the featured 100 Barrel Series Weizenbock Goedde and Osaki so graciously served out, is like comparing the Hanger's Wings to Kentucky Fried Chicken. Leaving a warm, almost fuzzy feeling in your mouth, it's hard to believe the well-filtered golden-brown beer has an alcohol content of 7.8 percent.

With the sampling session lasting the better part of an hour before Osaki and Goedde close off the taps for the weekend, there is plenty of time to have your fill.

Refusing to take notes, guest Beer Dude Shea sipped his sample and mingled with the crowd of college students, married couples, and all-around beer fanatics.

"I'm not good with words," he said.

Luckily, at the Harpoon tasting session, you don't have to be.

Alex Shea contributed to this report.

The Beer Dudes can be reached at Arts@dailycollegian.com.

The Harpoon Brewery in Boston offers a buffet-style sampling session instead of a long tour, with options ranging from the original Harpoon Ale to the lesser known Munich Dark.

Submit your beer related questions to art@dailycollegian.com, so the Beer Dudes can answer your brew related query in the new Beer Dude podcast

The Source

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of Western Mass.

Friday, February 8

STUDENT UNION SHUTDOWN

The University Programming Council is sponsoring a "Student Union shutdown." From 8-1, head over to catch showings of "Old School" and "Animal House," participate in carnival games and videoke, grab a cup of coffee and soak in acoustic acts, or play a game of pool with fellow students. Pizza and beverages will be provided. All activities are free of charge.

MUSIC

Syracuse rock band Ra Ra Riot performs at the Iron Horse Music Hall with Boston band Whistle Jacket. The show starts at 10. Tickets are $8 in advance and $10 at the door.

THEATER

"Sleeping with Strangers," a play about the relationship between Chinese and American cultures, will be performed in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. The play, which incorporates various dramatic techniques like multimedia, poetry, slapstick comedy, Chinese opera and Western-style theater, will start at 8 p.m. Tickets are $20 for the general public, $12 for youth and $10 or $7 for Five College Students.

Saturday, February 9

CIRQUE SUBLIME

Cirque Sublime, a performing arts troop from Canada incorporating intricate acrobatics, music and lights brings their thrilling show to the Mullins Center at 7. Tickets range from $35-50 and can be purchased at the Mullins Center box office. Bring your UMass ID for $5 off. Doors open at 6 p.m.

PLAY

A production of "The Vagina Monologues" will take place in John M. Greene Hall at Smith College. The show, which marks V-Days' 10-year anniversary, will start at 8 and tickets are $9.

EXHIBITION

An exhibition of Valentine's Day cards will be on display in the Dwight Hall Lobby of Mount Holyoke from 1-5. The collection, "Valentine Greetings: Shifting from Howland to Hallmark," is intended to honor 1847 Holyoke graduate Esther Howland. The event is free and open to the public.

Sunday, February 10

POETRY

A poetry swap is scheduled for 3 p.m. at the Jones Library at 3. Featured poets Dorothea Lasky and Laura Solomon will read from their works and answer questions. The event will take place in the Trustees Room and is free and open to the public.

MUSIC

Israeli hip-hop band Hadag Nachash will be performing at Pearl Street Night Club in Northampton. The price is $10 for students and $15 for the general public. The show starts at 8.

EXHIBIT

Smith College Museum of Art presents "African Beaded Art: Power and Adornment," a diverse collection of over 100 pieces of art from across the content. Items featured in the exhibit include jewelry, sculptures and textiles. The exhibit runs through June 15, 10-4 p.m. Tuesdays through Saturdays, and 12-4 p.m. on Sundays. It is $5 for adults, but free passes are available at the Jones library with a valid library card.

Running through March 15, the University Gallery is featuring a collection of works that encourages introspection on the part of the viewer in taking a deeper look at the connection they develop with the object at hand. The works of several notable artists can be observed between 2 and 5 p.m. The exhibit is free and open to the public.

Compiled by Allie Roth and Skye McIntyre, Collegian Staff

STSTRAVEL.COM
Spring Break Sale!
SPRINGBREAK 2008
Cancun, Acapulco & Jamaica up to $500 off per room!
Bahamas, South Padre and Florida also available.
Limited Time Offer!
STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
1-800-648-4849 / www.ststravel.com

Comedy and tragedy

Israeli one-man show endearing

By Gisel Saillant
Collegian Staff

Carrying a blue suitcase in his hand, Yossi Vassa walked on stage Tuesday night at the University of Massachusetts Student Union Ball Room and unpacked his journey from Ethiopia to Israel in his one-man show, "It's Better in Amharic." With humor and realism, Vassa retells his experiences of growing up in essentially two cultures are linked with his Judaic faith.

In the show, Vassa retraces his childhood, his journey to Israel, and his pride for both cultures as a Jewish Ethiopian.

"A 3-year-old kid who doesn't work [in Ethiopia] is unemployed," Vassa said, as he explained the responsibilities he had as a child in the village of Uzava in the northern part of Ethiopia. "We have two weeks of childhood. When I was seven, I was already a shepherd."

Vassa explained how, in Ethiopia, the elders in the village receive respect from everyone. Every year counts, according to Vassa. If a 5-year-old child eating a banana bumps into an 8-year-old child, he automatically has to share it with the older child. "Your father [is] master; your grandmother [is] god," Vassa said is the inherent respect your family must receive.

With the help of background music and sound effects, Vassa smoothly transitioned from his childhood into his journey to Israel – a decision made on his grandmother's wish to reach Jerusalem.

This migration occurred in the 1980s which involved walking 400-miles to Sudan, where they would be airlifted to Israel. This operation was called "Homeward Bound" and resulted in the transport of 150,000 Ethiopians to Israel.

"[It took] three months to walk to Sudan. There was not much to eat, and during the day we hid from robbers," he said,of his family's solo nighttime migration to Sudan.

They were then forced to spend nine months in a transit camp before being rescued by the Israelis. "The city inside the desert [was] one big grave yard," Vassa said. His grandmother and younger siblings died.

They reached Israel and made the city of Netanya their home.

"When I first went to Israel I saw so many white people it freaked me out," Vassa said.

Upon arriving in Israel he received a Hebrew name, Yossi Vassa.

Not all of the show focused on eastern culture. Vassa admited that there are some advantages of living in a western country.

"A man can make money by looking good, strange ways people work extroverted. I'm getting paid to talk," he said.

He just arrived in the United States last week for this American tour, which started in San Diego. Vassa has performed this act in Israel many times, with a few performances in English.

When asked about his impression of the UMass campus, Vassa said, "The weather, the people made me feel very comfortable."

"Amharic" was co-sponsored by the Student Alliance for Israel (SAFI) and the Black Student Union.

"[We] brought this performance to show the campus that Israel is not the country you see on the news," said Matt Hoffman, president of the SAFI. "Instead, Israel is a vibrant and tolerant country that is home to Jews from all over the world as well as home to many Muslims and Christians.

Vassa is planning another show called "Andarge" which translates to "one of a kind." This act will consist of several actors and be performed soon on Broadway.

"I'm so happy and excited," Vassa said. "No Israeli performance has had a chance to come to Broadway."

Giselle Saillant can be reached at gsaillant@student.umass.edu.

Comedian Yossi Vassa heavily incorporates stories about his upbringing in both Ethiopia and Israel into his act. UMass is just one stop on a nation-wide tour.

UMass upsets URI at home

Gary Forbes scored a game-high 26 points and added 13 rebounds.

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

It would have been an energetic rebound attempt earlier in the game, but for the Massachusetts men's basketball team and senior forward Gary Forbes, it was all that was needed. Forbes fell to the floor with the ball in what looked like equal parts foul and exhaustion.

The sequence was the captain's final contribution to a 78-76 win over Rhode Island last night at the Mullins Center. Forbes finished with a game-high 26 points and 13 rebounds in 38 minutes of basketball.

The victory evens the Minutemen's conference record and places the team back into Atlantic 10 contention. UMass (15-7, 4-4 A-10) travels to Philadelphia to face Temple Sunday and will reprise its match against Rhode Island (19-4, 5-3 A-10) in two weeks.

UMass	78
URI	76

"We've got eight games left and we're trying to do some special things with this program," Forbes said. "We just wanted to please the fans and get a big win for this team."

UMass coach Travis Ford believes his players understood the significance of the game coming in having lost three of their last four.

"The challenge of this team is to get the kids to play this hard every night," Ford said. "I can't say we played the best game tonight as far as execution, but the energy, the sense of urgency and the understanding of what they had to do was at the highest level we've had."

In recent losses to Saint Louis and Xavier, the Minutemen put themselves in large holes where late-comeback attempts failed. Against Rhode Island, UMass kept control, but the outcome of the game was not certain until the final buzzer.

In the middle of the second half, it seemed like the Minutemen were about to put themselves in one of those holes.

URI forward Joe Mbang collected an easy offensive rebound and laid the ball into the hoop, putting Rhode Island within one. Then, while trying to keep pace with his teammates, Milligan rushed a cross-court inbounds attempt in the direction of Chris Lowe on the right side.

Guard Lamonte Ulmer stole the ball and earned two free throws, putting the Rams a 55-54 lead.

However, URI only held that lead for eight seconds – its only advantage of the game.

The Minutemen showed their resilience and quickly regained the lead, much to the pleasure of the 6,782 in attendance.

"I think a couple of times in the last few games we've been down at that point in the game," senior forward Etienne Brower said. "When we're down by one or it's tied, it's not a big deal to us since we know we're going to get on a run. We have that fire to come back all the time."

The team executed a 17-7 run through the 15-minute mark of the half and played its best stretch of basketball. Forbes took control of the game on the offensive end with nine points during those six minutes with four rebounds.

Even Rhode Island coach Jim Baron entreated his players to emulate the fifth-year senior's play.

"He's very aggressive and athletic on the wing," Baron said. "He was taking it to the hole very strongly. I was telling our guys that we want them to do that."

Rhode Island's intended foil for Forbes, senior forward Will Daniels, failed to keep the 6-foot-7 swing man in check, and also struggled on offense during the first 15 minutes. However, the forward made his presence known in the paint with 14 rebounds and scored seven points over the last three minutes.

The victory also proved that the Minutemen could overcome a poor 3-point shooting performance and defeat a good basketball team in the process. A player like Brower, who missed all four of his 3-pointers, contributed a UMass season-high 17 rebounds, including seven on the offensive end.

In the first half, the Minutemen jumped out to an early lead and hardly looked back. UMass built a nine-point advantage by the 12-minute mark, but let URI come back to within one point during a four minute UMass scoring drought.

Despite early foul trouble from its centers, the Minutemen kept URI from dominating the paint in the first 20 minutes. When the Rams penetrated into the frontcourt from the perimeter, UMass' best defense was to put the Rams on the line. URI made only one field goal in the first nine minutes, but kept the game close with strong free throw shooting.

Michael King can be reached at mking@

Power in paint drives Minutemen

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team did what winning teams do last night.

They got the ball inside. Basketball games are often decided in the low post, much like football games are won in the trenches.

The Minutemen had a difficult shooting night from the outside, but defeated Rhode Island anyway, 78-76, due to aggressive drives to the basket and a massive amount of offensive rebounds.

UMass (15-7, 4-4 Atlantic 10) undoubtedly boosted its postseason credentials with the victory last night at the Mullins Center, against a Rams team that was just three spots away from re-cracking the Top 25 in the most recent Associated Press poll.

But for the Minutemen to reach the NCAA Tournament come March – and to be a factor – they have to continue to get that inside production.

But at some point, that production needs to come from the guys that reside in the low blocks – namely Dante Milligan, Luke Bonner and Tony Gaffney.

Against URI (19-4, 5-3 A-10), it wasn't the aforementioned trio that did the work inside, but rather Gary Forbes, Etienne Brower and even point guard Chris Lowe.

The Minutemen had a season-high 54 rebounds, including 22 on the offensive end. Milligan and Bonner combined for just four of them. Brower was exceptional, pulling down 17 rebounds – the most for any UMass player since Stephane Lasme last season against Xavier. Gary Forbes chipped in with 13 of his own.

The abundance of rebounds is the most noticeable stat in the box score, but the dominance inside wasn't highlighted by the 54 rebounds, but rather the 46 points in the paint.

Although UMass took 27 3-point shots, Lowe and Forbes consistently drove the ball to the basket, getting good looks. And when the shots didn't go in, someone was typically there to clean it up.

"When C-Lowe shoots up bricks, someone's gotta go in there [to get rebounds,]" Brower joked in the press conference, seconds after Lowe took a jab at Brower, saying he was surprised he got so many rebounds because "he goofy."

Jokes aside, the Minutemen need Milligan and Bonner to produce more in the paint – something they've been unable to do because of constant foul trouble.

Milligan fouled out for the ninth time this season in 22 games, committing five fouls in just 10 minutes of action. Bonner didn't foul out – although he committed four in 11 minutes – but Gaffney did in 19 minutes on the floor.

Against URI, the Minutemen got away with it, thanks to 27 second-chance points and the 46 points in the paint. But games like this are not common for UMass, which is a team that typically struggles with rebounding and with inside scoring.

The Minutemen weren't the only team last night that killed on the glass. The Rams had 51 of their own, and even outrebounded UMass on the offensive end, 23-22. Not having the big bodies (Milligan and Bonner) in the low post to box out hurt UMass.

The difference was that the Rams didn't capitalize as often when they got the offensive rebounds (20 second-chance points to UMass's 27).

Rhode Island coach Jim Baron was frustrated after the game about the rebounding situation, knowing it possibly cost his team the game.

"We had said that before the game, you know, you got to block out, even long shots, long rebounds," he said.

In the games to come, UMass needs some of those rebounds to find the hands of Milligan and Bonner. In 15 starts this season, Bonner is sixth on the team in rebounds per game (2.7), even ranking behind Lowe. Milligan is fourth (4.9), behind Forbes, Brower and Gaffney.

On the scoring side, Milligan and Bonner combine for 11.7 points per game (Milligan 7.4, Bonner 4.2). The Minutemen get plenty of scoring from guys like Forbes, Ricky Harris and Brower, the guys in the middle just need to make bigger contributions down low.

They just need to find a way to stay on the court to do it.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

Etienne Brower grabs one of his seven offensive boards. He finished with 17 total rebounds.

Minutewomen go for sweep of Rams

Rosanio will start despite knee injury

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

A tired and weary Massachusetts women's basketball team will be looking for a refreshing victory Saturday at Rhode Island, in a rematch of the teams' Jan. 12 meeting – a 91-53 UMass victory.

The Minutewomen (11-11, 3-4 Atlantic 10) are coming off a close road win over La Salle, 66-63. They scored on their last seven possessions and took the lead with a jumper from senior forward Kate Mills with 38 seconds left.

Pam Rosanio injured her knee in the game against La Salle. She was taken to the emergency room and was out of the hospital at 6 a.m. yesterday morning. One of the coaches stayed with Rosanio and returned to Amherst yesterday. The senior forward has never missed a game in her four years at UMass and Saturday will not be any different.

"She's going to play," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "It's a gut check to see where your team is at this point and after last night they played team basketball the bench was really in it. I was really happy."

In the first meeting between the teams this season, the Minutewomen took a 42-19 lead into the locker room. UMass converted 19-of-20 attempts from the free-throw line and also hit 3-of-5 shots from behind the arc.

Rosanio led all scorers with 23 points on an efficient 7-of-8 from the floor, while Mills contributed 19 points.

The Minutewomen met URI (10-12, 3-4 A-10) twice last season, and much like this year, had success at home, recording a 79-49 win. However, they dropped a 71-69 overtime game in Kingston earlier in the season.

"What bothers me a little bit is we beat them so easily here and when that happens you don't want to rest on your heels," Dacko said. "We have to go there and we know how tough it is to play on the road, we haven't been a great road team."

UMass is 2-8 on the road this season and looks to win two straight road games for the first time this year. This will be the Minutewomen's 61st matchup against the Rams. They are 32-28 all time against them and are 15-12 at URI.

Both teams have identical records in the A-10 at 3-4, standing in ninth place.

"We have to hate losing more than we like winning," Dacko said. "It was a hard-fought battle [against La Salle], and getting in at 3:30 in the morning, we have to turn around and make this road trip happen."

Dacko is pleased with the recent play of the team, but when assessing them she pointed out a lot of things they could do better. While they shoot the ball well at 44 percent – which leads all A-10 teams – they do not get enough shots off because they commit too many turnovers. They rank near the bottom of the conference in turnovers with 18.6 but are ranked No. 1 in assists, with 17.45 per game.

"I'm happy we cut down our turnovers (12 turnovers against La Salle) and I'm happy with the defensive intensity in the second half (held La Salle to 34 percent shooting)," Dacko said.

URI features senior forward Safi Mojidi, averaging 13.9 points per contest and shooting 42 percent from the perimeter.

"She's hot and cold, if she gets her head she is just very confident and if we can just disrupt her tempo and disrupt her flow she's going to be easy to play," Dacko said about Mojidi. "If she gets her head and [freshman Megan] Shoniker gets her head then they have the green light to score."

Shoniker, who along with Mojidi was limited to eight points in the teams' prior game against the Minutewomen, is another talented outside shooter, as she is hitting close to 36 percent of her 3-pointers.

Against these outside shooting threats Dacko may be tentative to move to a zone defense, however, she is not 100 percent comfortable with the man-to-man defense either. She is more comfortable mixing and match defenses to confuse URI and make them adjust constantly throughout the game.

"I think they are going to be prepared for us to play in a 3-2 zone because that's how we played them last in our last outing, were going to have to mix it up to keep them on their heels," Dacko said.

The team is battling some injuries and the turnaround from Philadelphia back home and then on to Rhode Island doesn't give them much time to heal. Dacko would like another day, but she is not using that as an excuse going into the Rhode Island game.

According to Dacko, the keys for the Minutewomen to win will be to dictate the tempo, limit turnovers and do better rebounding the ball.

"It doesn't take skill to rebound, it takes heart, it takes effort, it takes determination," Dacko said. "Those things we have control of like dive on loose balls, really crashing offensively, defensive box-outs [and] limiting turnovers."

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

Rachel Marilyn Kelligan

Stephanie Gerardot averages 8.7 points per game and leads the team in 3-pointers with 26.

Take out a classifieds ad

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
now offers free online classifieds for students at
WWW.UMASSLIST.COM

- More complete, local and relevant category listings than any and all competitor web sites combined
- Users can setup daily e-mail updates for relevant listings. No more searching for apartments, now they come to you.
- Post unlimited online listings
- Little to no spam

By listing on this site you are supporting your local college newspaper,
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

UM in Fla. for FAU Classic

The Massachusetts softball team opens its 2008 season this weekend in Boca Raton, Fla., for the Florida Atlantic Kick-off Classic.

The three-day tournament marks the first of four early-season tournaments the Minutewomen will play in warmer climates.

UMass opens the tournament against 12th-ranked Michigan today at 9 a.m. and continues at 1 p.m. against Maryland.

The tourney continues on Saturday against North Florida at 9 a.m. and then South Carolina at 11 a.m. The championship round will take place Sunday.

Last year at the FAU Kick-off Classic, UMass lost a pair of two-run games to UC Santa Barbara and No. 6 Oregon, but rebounded with a 1-0 win over No. 10 California and a 16-1 beating of San Diego State.

The Minutewomen's final game against Kanasa was rained out, ending in a 1-1 tie.

UMass returns seven starters from last year's squad, including junior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter (29-10, 1.39 ERA, 269 strikeouts in 2007) and senior second baseman Stacy Cullington (.313 BA, 15 home runs, 54 RBIs).

The only positions seeing new faces are centerfield and first base, where Candice Molinari and Amanda Morin were lost to graduation.

—Jeremy Rice

UMass at N.E. Open

Maroon and White sends eight to meet

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts swimming and diving teams will send a shortened lineup to the New England Open in Kingston, R.I., tomorrow. This will be the first time that the Maroon and White take part in this meet.

This weekend's squad will consist of swimmers not attending Atlantic 10 Championships. The idea of participating in this meet was thought of while the teams were at the Rhode Island Invitational. It will give less experienced members of the team a chance to participate in a meet with a championship atmosphere.

Women's coach Bob Newcomb knows his swimmers are disappointed they did not qualify for the conference championships, but knows how hard they have worked this season and wants them to be rewarded for their efforts.

"They've all put the work in and I want to see them be able to get some results out of it," Newcomb said. "They're going down there with the expectations that they are going to swim fast."

The lesser-known athletes are getting their chance to move up on the depth chart in their events for next season. However, by no means will the competition be easy to defeat. The meet is an open competition, so different schools are going for different reasons.

The toughest competition may come from teams using this meet as a "last chance meet," as Newcomb calls it. This means some teams use this meet in a final attempt to qualify for an event in their respective conferences.

Other, more competitive schools will go to determine their best swimmers and, thus, who will go to their conference meet.

The swimmers lanes will be decided by qualifying times they earned in previous meets.

UMass will send the maximum eight swimmers, all for individual events.

Men's coach Russ Yarworth anticipates an intense atmosphere as many teams will see each other for the final time this season.

Yarworth wants the swimmers going to this meet to be upbeat and excited to participate in their last meet of the season. There is also an expectation that the swimmers will be excited for their teammates that are going to the conference championships.

The Minutemen are sending three swimmers to the New England Open.

"These three won't [be a negative influence on their teammates]," Yarworth said. "They're very positive kids, and also the kids going into A-10s will be as supportive of them as they will be for the A-10 squad."

According to sophomore Brendan Jones, setting expectations of one's self can be a negative thing, especially in a meet of this magnitude. Yet Jones still knows it is a major opportunity to prove himself not only to Yarworth but to his teammates.

Jones and his teammates will treat this meet as if it were the conference championship. Jones worked at lengthening his stroke for this meet to reduce the number of strokes per lap. He also prepared mentally, recognizing that pressure is the biggest problem for far too many athletes.

"I don't want to put too much pressure on myself," Jones said. "It really just comes down to letting your body do what it knows how to do."

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Greg Braun is one of eight UMass swimmers heading to the New England Open this weekend. The meet is being used for swimmers who aren't going to the A-10 Championships later in the season.

Skiers in Vt. for BC Carnival

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

The season is quickly coming to a close for the Massachusetts ski teams, as it travels to Brownsville, Vt., to compete in the Boston College Carnival this weekend.

It has been a fairly successful season for both the men's and women's teams.

Going into the final race of the regular season, the Minutemen are in second and the Minutewomen are in third in the Eastern Collegiate Ski Conference.

Both teams are in a close race with Boston College with a chance at clinching second place in the conference.

Entering this weekend's carnival, UMass coach Skip Fox feels confident about his team's chances in the slalom races.

"Our slalom has been pretty good this season. Eliza Hawkins just came back last week with a second-place finish, and our skiers have been doing well," Fox said. "We're feeling pretty good about this weekend. I think we can win if all the stars line up right."

A first-place finish in the conference is impossible for either the men or the women. Plymouth State has gone undefeated on the men's side, and Colby-Sawyer holds a commanding lead in the women's division. The primary goal for UMass in this carnival will be to beat out BC for second place in the conference. The men hold a slim one-point lead and the women are five points back.

"My goal for the weekend is to stay ahead of BC in the men's, and pull ahead of BC in the women's division," said Fox.

Senior captain James Green, sophomore Andrew Hawes and senior Jason Small are expected to lead the Minutemen this weekend. Small's performance will be critical to the team's success. Jason has failed to finish four races this season. In two of those races, he had equipment problems, including one race where his ski just fell right off. But he might just be the best pure slalom skier on the men's side and is the most experienced racer on the team.

"For the guys, Jason Small is absolutely incredible at slalom, if he puts down a good run, he can finish seconds ahead of everyone else," said Green.

Captain Emily Shilletto has been a leader for the Minutewomen all season long and she expects the women's team to do well this weekend.

"We have a couple girls who can definitely step it up and a few girls who are really slalom specialists," said Shilletto. "Ashley Hawes is a great slalom skier and Jamie Taloumis is just phenomenal this season, and Eliza is amazing."

"And Emily is amazing as well," added Green.

Freshman Jamie Taloumis has been a standout all season long, scoring several top-five finishes. If she can make it down the hill without a hitch, the team stands a great chance of pulling ahead of BC and finishing on a high note.

"I don't want to jinx us or anything, but I think both teams are going to do very well," said Green.

Scott Feldman can be reached at Sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

AFRICAN BEADED ART
POWER AND ADORNMENT
On View February 1–June 15, 2008

Friday, February 8 4–9 pm
(snow date February 9)

Free Second FRIDAYS
festivities featuring music by the Afro-beat band NOMO!

SCMA is pleased to present Second Fridays in conjunction with NORTHAMPTON

Top: NOMO Photograph courtesy of Beauty Rue with Bottom: Head African Necklace c. 20th century Cape Mouth, Antlers Animal – Be Part of Ambassador Sponsors – and John Bratton Drawn. Photograph by Frances Mowry

ART BENTON FOUNDATION, LUCERNE

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP

413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

Comixxx

JOURNALISM AT ITS FINEST

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APT. FOR RENT

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free Ride to Church & back in Dwight Chapel Van. Be at Haigis Mall @ 10:00am or Converse Hall @ 10:20am Sundays www.dwightchapel.org See you there!

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided 1-800-965-6520

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact phonetics lab phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

RAFT GUIDES

Zoar Outdoor is seeking adventuresome people to be full and part-time summer raft guides. Learn how to guide a raft during our training program and spend the summer on the Deerfield River. Applicants should have customer service experience and a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independently. Application deadline Feb. 15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application

CAMP TAKAJO, Naples, Maine. Noted for picturesque lakefront location, exceptional facilities. Mid-June thru mid-August. Counselor positions in tennis, baseball, basketball, soccer, lacrosse, golf, flag football, roller hockey, field hockey, swimming, sailing, water skiing, gymnastics, dance, horseback riding, archery, weight training, newspaper, photography, video, woodworking, ceramics/pottery, crafts, fine arts, silver jewelry, copper enamel, nature study, radio/electronics, theater, costumer, piano accompanist, music instrumentalist, backpacking, rock climbing, canoeing/kayaking, ropes course, secretarial, nanny. Call Takajo at (866) 356-2267. Submit application online at takajo.com. Will be in the Campus Center Job Fair tomorrow

Put up Posters! Through summer, car, sell, commitment needed. Up to $12/hr w/bonus. 20 hrs between Mon-Wed, excellent communicator, fast-paced, punctual, resume and formal cover letter to postering@art-spromo.org. Hiring ASAP

THE GREATEST SUMMER OF YOUR LIFE. CAMP PONTIAC is coming to UMASS! Located in NY State. Camp Pontiac, a premier co-ed overnight camp in New York, is looking for fun, enthusiastic and mature individuals who can teach and assist in all areas of athletics, aquatics, the arts, or as a general bunk counselor. Interviews will be held on Thursday, Feb. 21st 9:00AM-11:30AM Campus Center/Student Union Complex-Room 901. Please email stefanie@camppontiac.com or call Stefanie at 516-626-7668 to set up an interview

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr. English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Marketing Intern As a Marketing Intern (paid position) you will assist in marketing efforts to grow sales of the leading economic policy analysis model. Responsibilities include developing presentations and other marketing material, writing for newsletters, website, and blog, and assisting with internet marketing, promotions, campaigns, and other marketing efforts. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002 fax 413-549-1036 resumes@remi.com. REMI is an eoe and maintains a drug-free workplace.

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906. 1-800-550-4900 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

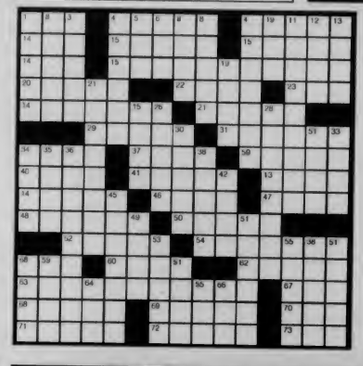
Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

SERVICES

Spring Break from $199. Land price starting from $199 for 7 days. We also have an all inclusive hotel start from $799 per person. Give us a call today it's not to late to still get away. 1-800-GET-SUN-1

APT. FOR RENT



EMPLOYMENT

Crossword

ACROSS		DOWN
1 Long, leathery scarf	67 Feedbag morsel	1 Honored poets	36 Declaration of intentions
4 All thumbs	68 Palm fruits	2 Geometric paintings genre	38 Leave in the lurch
9 Fancy tie	69 Ill-gotten gains	3 Doing battle	42 Far East
14 Inclined	70 Lyric poem	4 Large tropical lizard	45 Ocean fog
15 Small ravine	71 Brown ermine	5 Holy woman	49 Breadth
16 Back tooth	72 Prepare to propose	6 Little helper	51 Pouring aid
17 Crude	73 For each	7 Secret plan	53 Pursue stealthily
18 Not lucky		8 Apprentices	55 Scouting group
20 Theater offering		9 Funny	56 Steer clear of
22 Playthings		10 Male offspring	57 Impede
23 That ... bows!		11 Teacher's purview	58 Tacks on
24 Orchestra section		12 Pledge of Allegiance	59 Like some '60s poets
27 Hippety-hops		13 Family chart	61 Knock for a loop
29 New Orleans player		19 Little nipper	64 Green drink
31 Set up		21 Be eliminated from the bee?	65 Rink flooring
34 Weaponry		25 Coated with gold	66 Mineral in the raw
37 Reve about		26 Escargot
39 Gander's mate		28 Food poisoning
40 Bound		30 Hollow cylinders
41 Leg bone		32 Now!
43 Castle defense		33 Cats and dogs, e.g.
44 Flowing tresses		34 Chantry
46 Permits to		35 500 sheets
47 Elec. units
48 Grins
50 Imaginative literary genre
52 Wing movements
54 Like spooky houses
58 Burritos or Fortas
60 Exercise rugs
62 Chutzpah
63 End of the road

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

amherst cinema
Fri, Feb 8 - Thu, Feb 14

The SAVAGES 2:00 4:30 7:00 9:30
KiteRunner 1:30 7:15
JUNO 1:45 4:00 6:45 9:00
[illegible] 4:15 9:45
(413) 253-2547
www.amherstcinema.org

PLEASANT STREET THEATER
There Will Be Blood Daily 2:45 6:00 9:15
PLUS 10:00 am Wed, Feb 13
THE DIVING BELL AND THE BUTTERFLY Daily 2:00 4:30 7:00 9:30
PLUS 10:15 am Wed, Feb 13
17 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantsttheater.org (413) 584-5643

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 2008
No Matter where you are...
Session I: June 2 - July 10
Session II: July 14 - Aug 20
Online Gen Ed's
Small Classes
Great Faculty
PLAN AHEAD!
UMassULearn.net

WONDERMARK By David Malki!

This is the doodle box.

No you idiot, it's for drawing pictures not...well it's not for what you tried to put in here. Sicko.

Try something new!

	3	9			8	5
		8	3	4	6
6	4					3	1
		4	2	3
			8
		1	5	6
8	6					9	3
		7	9	8	4
	9	4			1	7

Quote of the Weekend

"The sea was angry that day my friends, like an old man trying to return soup in a deli."
— Jason Alexander as "George Costanza"

Caption Contest

Winning Caption Submitted by: William Korniotes

Next week's contest will start on Monday. See the picture and submit captions at www.dailycollegian.com/caption

Fred has discovered that coating honey on the inside of his helmet is a great snacking alternative; however, it may impair his vision.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
This weekend is your chance to show off your sloppy monkfish. Take that as you will.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
There is a large deposit of crude oil underneath the chancellor's flower garden. Get a shovel and start digging.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
It's not too late to drop all your classes and sign up for scuba diving and equine studies.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You will not impress your date by tipping the waitress in coins no matter how shiny they may appear.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Hire a private investigator to analyze the inner workings of the tortellini found in Franklin DC.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Your spikey tarantula legs will undoubtedly cause injury to any mates you may acquire. Shave for safety's sake.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Go to the Collegian graphics department in the Campus Center basement and serenade that saucy, saucy comics guy.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Host a Magic the Gathering tournament over the weekend. Tap the mana and start the party. BLACK LOTUS 4 Lyfe.

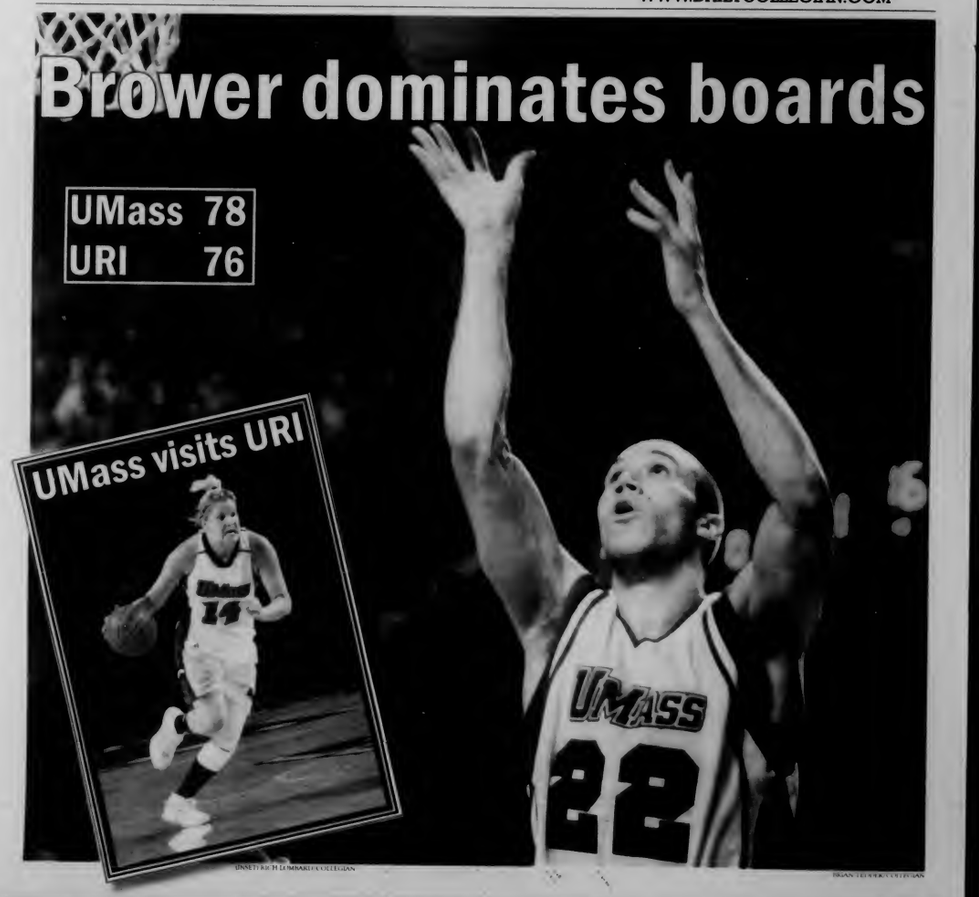
libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Anytime your actions (or odors) are best explained by citing your recent ingestion of a taco salad, you are in trouble.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
The only reason your friends hang out with you is because they think your madre is muy caliente!

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Apparently Craig's list now peddles flesh. Look in to that.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You will find a small collection of precious stones in your roommate's jewelry box.

Retro Geek By Steven Dickenson and Todd Clark



What a Lady Wants By Dan Lucey

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 2008 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Brower dominates boards

JINSETTI RICH LEMMARD/COLLEGIAN

MINUTEMEN FALL TO EAGLES | PAGE 12

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

WINDY : HI: 29 LO: 12 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 2008

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Second LAX athlete arrested

Violence on North Pleasant leads to more arrests by police

Amherst police made a second arrest in connection to the off-campus brawl that left three people hospitalized last week, charging Ryan Marcus, 18, of 131 Mosier St. South Hadley, with two felonies earlier this afternoon.

Marcus – the second member of the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team police have taken into custody last week – has been charged with breaking and entering at night and assault and battery resulting in serious bodily injury.

According to police reports, Marcus' arrest came after a week-long investigation of the incident at 304 North Pleasant St. Marcus, a freshman, and seven other members of the men's lacrosse team were suspended indefinitely last week for violating team rules during an off-campus incident.

Police placed teammate Christian Haggerty under arrest Thursday, charging the sophomore UMass student with one count breaking and entering and two counts assault and battery.

Haggerty plead not guilty in the Eastern Hampshire District court Friday morning.

Marcus – arrested in the Thoreau dormitory at 3:30 p.m. on Friday afternoon – is being held in lieu of a $1,000 bail.

He is expected to be arraigned in the Eastern Hampshire District Court on Feb. 11.

Derrick Perkins

Hancock resident charged

John Bowes, 20, of Hancock, N.H., has been charged with disorderly conduct, assault and battery to intimidate with bodily injury and civil rights violations for his alleged involvement in last Sunday's altercation in MacKimmie residence hall that left three men injured and one in custody.

According to the police report and anonymous accounts, Bowes, a white man, instigated a verbal confrontation with African-American University of Massachusetts student Jason Vassell, 23, by yelling racial slurs. The confrontation allegedly turned physical, with Vassell suffering a broken nose and Bowes and Jonathan Bosse, 19, of Milton, receiving several stab wounds. The fight took place in the MacKimmie lobby at about 5 a.m. Sunday morning.

According to Massachusetts law, "whoever commits an assault or a battery upon a person... because of such person's race, color... shall be punished by a fine of not more than five thousand dollars or by imprisonment... for not more that two and one-half years."

Vassell himself was charged with two counts of aggravated assault and battery with a dangerous weapon (a knife) and two counts of armed assault with intent to murder.

As of Thursday, Vassell and Bosse have been treated and released from local hospitals, while Bowes remains in fair condition at Baystate Medical Center in Springfield.

The investigation of the case is still underway, and the UMass Amherst Police Department encourages anyone with information relevant to the case to contact them at 413-545-2121.

Frank Vitale

Conflict arises with new UM renovations

BY KATRINA CESSNA
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Recent renovations to the Student Union have become the newest source of conflict between the Student Government Association (SGA) and the University of Massachusetts administration, said Carla Dominguez, speaker of the Student Senate.

The updates, which included new drapes, carpeting and furniture for the Cape Cod Lounge and Suffolk Room, new floor tiling and bulletin boards throughout the building and a fresh coat of paint for the walls and bathrooms, cost approximately $600,000 according to Meredith Schmidt, director of the Campus Center and Student Union Complex.

Funding for the project was made available toward the end of last semester by Joyce Hatch, Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance. The pinkish color scheme was designed by Marty Smith, assistant director of A&E Design Services, in coordination with the Auxiliary Services office.

The renovations were completed during the winter recess by Facilities Planning on Campus and the Physical Plant, Schmidt explained.

The problem, according to Dominguez, is that the administration executed the project without soliciting permission or guidance from the student-directed Campus Center and Student Union Commission (CCSUC), an act which violates the Board of Trustees policy on University Governance, also known as the Wellman Document.

Dominguez specifically cited Section H, Article 4 of the Wellman, which states, "Students will have primary responsibility for services and activities which are designed primarily to serve students or those which are financed primarily by students."

Originally passed in 1973, this language is the portion of Trustee Policy from which the SGA and its sub-organizations such as CCSUC derive their power.

Schmidt explained that CCSUC was not consulted because of time constraints.

"When we got the go-ahead, it was right when school was ending" she said. "It was a huge project with a small window."

Schmidt claimed it "made it impossible to get everyone together."

Schmidt also explained the renovations had to be done over winter break because of noise, traffic and air quality concerns which would have made the project both difficult and dangerous to attempt during the University's regular session.

Dominguez, however, explained that while the money may not have been formally appropriated until later, talk

See STUDENT UNION on page 3

The walls of the Student Union were repainted a light, pink color over winter break.

Drive and chat may disappear

BY ADAM COULTER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Driving with the wind blowing through your hair and cell phone glued to your ear may soon be a thing of the past in Massachusetts.

The lower house passed legislation last month that would require drivers to use hands-free technology while making voice calls, and texting while operating a vehicle would be banned.

The bill was approved on a 107 to 47 vote and would authorize police to pull over drivers that are in violation, costing first-time adult offenders $100, according to The Associated Press.

Drivers have plenty of options available when it omes to hands-free technology. Millions of phones have jacks for a headset, and wired headsets can be found for $10 or fewer. Bluetooth, a short-range radio networking technology, is featured on millions of phones as well. These phones work with headsets ranging from $25 and up.

Bluetooth technology allows a phone to communicate with hands-free systems installed in the car. Almost every car made by Ford Motor Co. can be purchased with Sync, a $400 option that allows drivers to control their Bluetooth phones by voice commands.

Some people feel existing laws are good enough, and the proposed legislature banning handheld cellular phones may infringe on citizens' rights.

"There is the subject of the driver's freedom of liberty verses public safety and also what can really be enforced by the police," said Jane Fountain, director of the Center for Public Policy and Professor of Political Science.

However, people recognize that the danger of chatting on the phone and driving exists.

"The fact remains, using a cell phone while driving is terribly distracting and can cause fatalities," said Fountain.

Victor Szeto, a junior at the University of Massachusetts, said he would feel more comfortable using Bluetooth and knowing other drivers do the same.

"It would be one less distraction on the road," said Szeto.

For drivers with older model vehicles, there are numerous aftermarket accessories that can add Bluetooth hands-free features to their cars. This is where the hands-free bill will begin to cost people some money.

Older car owners can buy Bluetooth speaker phones that can clip to the sun visor for roughly $140. There also are devices on the market such as the TomTom GO 720 – that double as both a portable global positioning system and Bluetooth hands-free sets. The average Tom-Tom costs $450.

The hands-free bill may not survive the gauntlet through the Massachusetts Senate. It faces opposition from key legislators and does not have unanimous support among Massachusetts residents.

If the bill were to be enacted, it would make Massachusetts the sixth state to mandate the use of hands-free phones while driving. There are many statistical studies that argue that the use of the hands-free devices prevents accidents, and just as many claim evidence to the contrary. Drivers are slower to react to red lights when using devices such as Bluetooth, the studies reported.

Testing heard across campus

BY ERIC SCHLICHTE
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Testing at the new central heating plant, which has been the source of loud noise around campus lately, is expected to continue for the next couple weeks as well as in March, according to project officials.

Currently four boilers and the combustion turbine generator are being tested. In addition to tuning the equipment, boiling and blowing the steam through the pipes also serves to clean them out, where rust or mill scale (a loose coating of ferric oxide that can form on certain metals when heated) could have formed.

"While we're doing this we have to blow the steam into the atmosphere because if we sent it up to campus, then the load of steam force, which changes too frequently, would cause a system imbalance," said John Mathews, assistant director for campus projects.

After the most recent series of testing is done, it will need to be repeated in March.

Right now the boilers are being tuned on natural gas, but once the plant receives its first delivery of fuel oil next month, the process will need to be repeated.

As for the frequency of testing, the steam load (and subsequent noise level) varies up and down throughout the day, but testing is halted around 7 p.m. each night.

In addition, the plant is working to coordinate their test times with spring sports such as baseball and tennis, so as not to disturb them during practice times. Mathews also noted that the plant is using a silencer to help soften the noise during steam releases.

The plant, which was originally slated to go online in March, now looks as if it will be fully operational around April.

"The actual construction is very close to being on

See CENTRAL PLANT on page 3

MICHAEL PHELAN/COLLEGIAN

The new central heating plant is testing its four boilers and its combustion generator, which not only blows a lot of steam but makes loud noise.

Survey finds youths' favorite candidates

BY JOSH WALOVITCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This month has influenced youth voters to favor Barack Obama and John McCain, a recent college survey confirmed.

The first survey, taken between Dec. 30 and Jan. 2, was labeled "pre-primary" results; the latter was taken days before Super Tuesday.

The two-part survey indicates Barack Obama is favored by college students with a 59 percent approval rating while competitor Hillary Clinton has an 18 percent approval rating. Obama's approval rating increased 17 percent since the start of the primaries while Hillary's approval rating has increased one percent.

University of Massachusetts students were highly opinionated on the candidates.

"I think lots of college students voted for Obama because he is black or for Hillary because she is a woman," said UMass sophomore Kristeen Petit-Frere. "Students shouldn't vote for this reason. It would make more sense if they researched their policies and what they stood for and then made a decision. Personally, I think it showed Hillary showed weakness when she cried during the New Hampshire primary."

UMass freshman Priti Patel said, "If you look back in history, black people were given the right to vote before women were along with other rights, so I figure that America will be more willing to vote for a black man before they are willing to vote for a woman."

Super Tuesday passed, and Hillary led with 823 delegate votes while Obama amassed 741.

"Hillary is too polarizing. She claims to a Democrat, but she takes a lot of conservative stances," said UMass freshman Josh Delaney. "She is anti-video games and anti-atheism. Also, I don't feel that she could abide by separation of [church and] state."

Many college students heavily favor Obama, but their votes were not enough for Obama to come out on top after Tuesday's primaries.

See COLLEGE SURVEY on page 3

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

► Celebrity intern club.*

pwc.tv/ch1

Newbies now playing on www.pwc.tv/ch1

*connectedthinking

© 2008 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP, a Delaware limited liability partnership or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. "connectedthinking is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

College voters favor Obama, McCain

COLLEGE SURVEY from page 1

For the Republicans, Rudy Giuliani was favored at 22 percent before the primaries began, and McCain wasn't far behind with 17 percent.

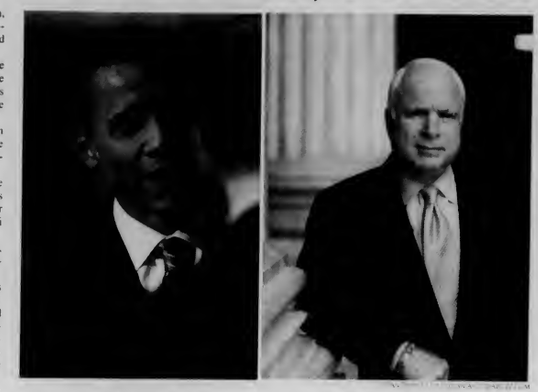
In addition, Sen. Ron Paul had 13 percent of the vote, Sen. Mike Huckabee had 10 percent, Mitt Romney had 5 percent, Fred Thompson had 3 percent and Duncan Hunter came out with zero percent.

A month later, right before Super Tuesday, Giuliani, Thompson, and Hunter had dropped out of the race, while McCain was favored with a 34 percent approval rating followed by Huckabee with 16 percent, Paul with 14 percent and Romney with 9 percent.

"The least liked Republican candidate at this campus would probably be McCain because he is pro-life," UMass junior Evan Burns said. "The UMass student body would most likely disagree with this because of how liberal they are."

"I don't like Huckabee because he was a minister of a church, he is anti-evolution and supports creationism in schools" said Delaney.

"I am not in favor of any of the Republican candidates because they will probably continue Bush's foreign policies," said graduate student Krishna Melnattur.



Since Super Tuesday, McCain holds the majority of the delegate votes with 714 while Romney followed with 286.

Huckabee had 181 delegate votes, and Paul had 16. There has been a doubling in support for John McCain since Rudy Giuliani dropped out of the race.

Between Dec. 30 and Jan. 3, 1,254 online interviews were conducted for the pre-primary wave.

An addition 1,000 interviews were conducted between Jan. 31 and Feb. 3. Results were weighted to reflect the demographic composition of college students nationwide, according to statistics published by the National Center for Educational Statistics.

Joshua Walovitch can be reached at jwalovit@student.umass.edu.

Although Sen Barack Obama (left) did not win the primary in Massachusetts, he and John McCain (right) currently hold popularity among college students.

Some students have experienced the loud, industrial noise coming from the new central heating plant, which is slated to be completed in April.

Noisy plant to keep testing

CENTRAL PLANT from page 1

schedule," said Mathews. "So it depends on the environmental agencies, the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) and the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), and how long it takes them to issue our operating permits. It's a lengthy permitting process."

Upon its completion, the new central heating plant will replace the old plant which runs on coal.

The new plant will be much more environmentally friendly, emitting five to seven times less greenhouse gases depending on the kind of greenhouse gas and the type of fuel burned.

A unique feature of the plant is that it will treat and use effluent from the Amherst Wastewater treatment facility in its steam production, thereby saving around 180,000 gallons of fresh water per day.

Efficiency in terms of energy production will also be vastly improved.

"It will have about twice the efficiency of a large, centrafized power plant, because it uses advanced technologies for combustion, for pollution control, and for controls," said Matthews. "And because it's a combined heat and power plant, it produces electricity and steam at the same time, resulting in nearly twice as much energy per pound of fuel."

The final cost of the project, which was budgeted at $118.7 million prior to the beginning of construction, is estimated to total $127 million.

SGA displeased with the new Student Union renovations of renovation had been going on since the beginning of last semester, and the CCSUC was "prepared for discussion" when the project budget was approved. The choice of the administration to go ahead with the project without such discussion "infringes on student autonomy" and is "incredibly disrespectful," according to Dominguez.

STUDENT UNION from page 1

Also at issue is student opinion about the color scheme of the project.

Schmidt said Smith's selections are modern and match this spring's new designs.

"We did an assessment and gathered feedback from the various users," she said. "And we have heard nothing but good things."

Dominguez doubted the accuracy of Schmidt's claims, explaining that many students have expressed dissatisfaction with the outcome of the project, and that none of the Registered Student Organizations (RSOs) were aware of the project until after it happened.

"I'm shocked to hear them say that we weren't displeased," Dominguez said.

She went on to explain that she and others had expressly stated their displeasure in a meeting about the project which Smith and Schmidt held with CCSUC in mid-January only after the project was completed.

Schmidt's claim "we're all about students here" sounds hollow to Dominguez and other student employees.

"It's our Student Union," she said. "None of them work here; they don't have to look out at this every day from nine to five."

If the SGA does not reach an agreement with the administration by Feb. 22, a vote about whether to escalate bargaining tactics will be put to the students as a referenda question on the ballots during the March 5 and 6 elections.

"The principle of student control over student space is our fourth demand," Dominguez explained, referring to ongoing negotiations with the University. "We understand it was a time crunch, but things like this happen all of the time, and it shows that they don't take us seriously."

Katina Cessna can be reached at kcessna@student.umass.edu

The Student Government Association is not happy with the renovations done to the Student Union, one member said that the project "infringes on student autonomy."

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 81

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Hunton
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COMICS EDITOR Adam Scaggin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Race
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Gaines

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1958. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Will McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Nichole Amaral

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

Dine & Win!
Enter to win a trip for two with $500 spending money.

UMass Dining, Coca-Cola®, and American Airlines® want to fly you and a guest to any destination during Spring Break in North America including 48 states and Canada!

Enter between January 28 and February 12, 2008 at any UMass Dining Commons or retail location.

*Official Rules
• No purchase necessary
• Must be 18 years old or older
• Open to UMass Dining customers

Drawing will be held Wednesday, February 13 at 6 pm at Worcester Dining Commons

*For details, umass.edu/diningservices OR see entry boxes

YCMP RESIDENTIAL Food Fragrant's BEST CONCEPTS

President's Public Service awards announced

M. Idali Torres, an associate professor of public health, received a Public Service Award from the UMass President.

By Kristen Healy
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts President Jack M. Wilson announced the names of the latest winners of the President's Public Service Award on Feb. 6.

The awards are presented annually to faculty members from all five campuses of the university's system – Amherst, Boston, Lowell, Dartmouth and Worcester. Chancellors of each respective campus nominate faculty based on their contributions to the community and their outreach of public service in the Commonwealth.

"This is the 10th anniversary of the university's President's Public Service Awards, and this year's winners continue in the impressive tradition of the earlier recipients," said UMass President Jack M. Wilson in a statement.

This year the there were six recipients of the award who were named at a reception at the University of Massachusetts Club. One recipient, an associate professor of public health, M. Idali Torres, of UMass-Amherst, was acknowledged for her dedication for furthering public health issues in Western Massachusetts.

Professor, Founder and Director of the Center for Social Development and Education Gary N. Siperstein of UMass Boston, was acknowledged for improving the social development of children with learning and behavioral issues.

Associate Professor of Art History Memory A. Holloway of UMass Dartmouth received the award for her continuing efforts in making public service to the community an essential part of the university's education, including feeding impoverished areas in the South Coast.

Professor in the department of music Kay G. Roberts of UMass Lowell, was acknowledged for connecting different cultures through music and making music education a more important part in the education system.

Assistant Professor in the department of computer science Fred Martin of UMass Lowell, was acknowledged for using robotics to transform science education and promote more scientific investigation for teachers and students.

Professor of molecular medicine, biochemistry and molecular pharmacology and cell biology, Stephen J. Doxsey of the UMass Medical School also received an award for helping to found the "UMass Laboratories for Worcester Area High Schools" which gives high school students the ability to come to the campus and receive hands-on experience in the science labs.

"These six professors are outstanding examples of public service. They have a passion for their professional fields and a commitment to their students and colleagues, but also an exemplary commitment to community engagement and service," said Wilson in a statement.

"Their achievements are a credit to all of the dedicated, talented and hard-working faculty members who teach at our campuses and also contribute so much to our communities, locally, state-wide, nationally and globally."

The President's Public Service Awards first started in 1998, and so far a total of 59 UMass professors have been acknowledged with awards. The Massachusetts State House is hosting an exhibit in Doric Hall from Feb. 19 through Feb. 29, which will display photographs and more information about this year's winners.

"With these awards, we acknowledge the importance of their public service and the value we place on their contributions to the University of Massachusetts," added Wilson.

Kristen Healy can be reached at kkhealy@student.umass.edu.

Obama takes Maine in primary

By Glenn Adams
Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Maine – Barack Obama defeated Hillary Rodham Clinton in Maine presidential caucuses Sunday, grabbing a majority of delegates as the state's Democrats overlooked the snowy weather and turned out in heavy numbers for municipal gatherings.

Democrats in 420 Maine towns and cities were deciding how the state's 24 delegates will be allotted at the party's national convention in August.

Despite the weather, turnout was "incredible," party executive director Arden Manning said.

With 99 percent of the participating precincts reporting, Obama led in state delegates elected over Clinton, 2,079 to 1,396, with 18 uncommitted.

Obama exulted in his recent victories in Maine and elsewhere, telling a crowd of 18,000 Sunday evening in Virginia Beach, Va., that "we have won on the Atlantic Coast, we have won on the Gulf Coast, we have won on the Pacific Coast" and places in between.

Obama won 15 of Maine's delegates to the national convention and Clinton won nine. In the overall race for the nomination, Clinton leads with 1,136, including separately chosen party and elected officials known as superdelegates. Obama has 1,108.

The voting came a day after Obama and Clinton made personal appeals here, and after Obama picked up wins in Louisiana, Nebraska and Washington.

Organizers had expected heavy participation at the caucuses, but snow was falling and gusting winds hit as many of the gatherings were scheduled.

The weather didn't appear to have hurt turnout. Caucuses started late in Bangor and several other locations across the state because so many people showed up that they were lined up outside the doors.

In Maine's largest city, Democrats carrying "Obama" and "Hillary" signs waited to get into the citywide caucus at Portland High School in separate lines that snaked nearly three city blocks in opposite directions.

Colin Johnson, an Obama supporter in Portland, said the Illinois senator is not a typical politician. "I'm convinced he's a once-in-a-generation leader," he said.

"He's young and energetic and Washington and the White House could benefit from some fresh air," said Joe Lewis, another Obama supporter.

But Tony Donovan said Obama can use some more seasoning. Donovan was supporting Clinton because she, like him, was a baby boomer who shared similar values and because she has the experience and the team to lead in Washington.

"Obama's a great guy. He'll be great in eight years," Donovan said. "He doesn't have the experience in the Senate. He doesn't have the experience in Washington. He's not ready."

A line waited to get into Augusta's caucus as Gov. John Baldacci, a Clinton supporter, addressed the crowd of a couple hundred at the city's Cony High School.

Asked why he decided to wait in line to participate, John Brandt said, "Getting rid of Republicans, once and for all."

Though Maine's national delegate count is small, Clinton and Obama, along with surrogates, came to the state Saturday as their campaigns drew tighter after Super Tuesday.

Thousands of people packed the Bangor Auditorium to hear Obama on Saturday and hundreds more who weren't allowed inside greeted him as he arrived.

People also were stopped at the door as Clinton held a town hall-style gathering nearby at the University of Maine at Orono. She later stopped in Lewiston.

Clinton's daughter, Chelsea, and husband, Bill, also visited, while Obama supporter Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts campaigned in two cities in the days before the vote.

Both campaigns hit Maine heavily with radio and TV advertising, and voters' homes were being called with pre-taped messages in support of both candidates.

On Sunday, Massachusetts Gov. Deval Patrick, Rep. Patrick Kennedy of Rhode Island and Sen. John Kerry of Massachusetts, the 2004 Democratic presidential candidate, visited Maine caucuses on Obama's behalf.

On Clinton's side, Baldacci, Massachusetts Rep. Jim McGovern and New York Rep. Gregory Meeks campaigned.

The high level of excitement across the state contrasted with earlier expectations that the post-Super Tuesday timing of the caucuses would dampen voter interest.

A competitive GOP race a week earlier also helped to enliven interest in the Maine Republicans' nonbinding caucuses, which were won by Mitt Romney.

He dropped out of the race last week, making it likely that Arizona Sen. John McCain would become the GOP nominee.

Current Illinois senator Barack Obama took Maine, which held its state primary on Sunday.

Teach For America Meet & Greet

ABC Brewing Company
All Seniors Welcome
Monday, February 11th
6pm-8pm
Top Floor of the ABC

FREE APPETIZERS

TEACHFORAMERICA

All academic majors. Full salary and benefits.
www.teachforamerica.org

Programs offered year-round in world cultural centers

New York University

experience abroad

Monday morning.
- Have coffee.
- Fill out NYU study abroad application.
- Submit and go to class.

6 months from Monday.
- Wave goodbye to family.
- Board plane.
- Be there.

apply now and be there for fall 2008

NYU StudyAbroad. Be there.

www.nyu.edu/abroad/amherst

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
MONDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 2008
"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself." – Sir Salman Rushdie
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The all-freshmen housing fiasco

Eli Gottlieb

Next year, the University administration plans to expand its controversial "First Year Experience" program, ensuring (if not forcing) that nearly all freshmen from Fall 2008 onwards live in all-freshmen dormitories. Crabtree, Mary Lyon, Knowlton, Cance and John Adams will be made freshmen-only dorms, in addition to half of Orchard Hill, Kennedy, Van Meter and Butterfield.

Now, I live in an all-freshman hall in Orchard Hill, so I think I know how the First Year Experience actually works. While it may do the trick for some people, I honestly think freshmen need the choice to live in mixed-age housing. Besides, we've already heard the real reasons for this move: once again the administration makes a rather bone-headed move to isolate poor, innocent children from the evils of alcohol, sex and anything that might interrupt our vital improvement of the school's U.S. News ranking.

So rather than berate the administration, I'm going to try and make a positive point about why freshmen should have the opportunity to live with upperclassmen. For example, if we lived in a mixed-age dorm, someone would probably bother to tell the guys across the hall from me to, at some point, stop playing Assassin's Creed and go to sleep.

Someone would have explained to me how to read a PVTA schedule. We freshmen could socialize with upperclassmen and learn how to act more maturely. Instead, we've gotten an RA and peer mentors whose official position keeps us from becoming too close to them. Heck, I've only ever seen one of my peer mentors a couple of times in a whole semester.

I, for one, don't want to live with upperclassmen who I have to look up at because the school has put them on a pedestal. I want to meet upperclassmen with whom I can actually spend time, and I don't see why I should have to seek them out at parties or in a fraternity.

Go on UMass. Expand the RAP and TAP programs until every conceivable major or academic interest has its own housing hall for its own freshman geeks.

So go on UMass, expand the RAP and TAP programs until every conceivable major or academic interest has its own housing hall for its own freshmen geeks. Turn entire buildings previously known for their alcoholic exploits into freshman-only buildings where students pay slightly more for alcohol than they did before and have nobody to tell them how much is too much.

Actually, instead of expanding just freshman housing, why not allow Commonwealth College learning communities and similar programs to include upperclassmen who might actually want quiet hours enforced? Several of my friends and I would be glad for a place where we could study without disturbance, especially as we go into the later years of our science and engineering majors. Why should only freshman receive the privilege of quiet time for sleep and study especially when they need it the least?

And for those who want the "real college experience" of living with upperclassmen who actually know their way around campus and occasionally drink, let them elect to live in mixed-residence halls. Sure, they will learn to drink and party and do all those other "college-kid" things. Earth to the administration: they will learn that anyway. I have. You don't have to learn those things from people with whom you live.

I've got a whole alternate set of friends with whom I party and who've taught me how to handle myself responsibly in such situations (among other things). This natural passing of knowledge from upperclassman to freshman allows them to slowly become upperclassmen and, in turn, pass the essential knowledge to a new generation of freshman. I'll never receive that kind of folk wisdom (for example, about which dining commons serve the best food) from my parents or professors. I receive it from more experienced students.

How about instead of just trying to suppress students' fun, the administration does something nice for us for once and simply expands the housing options available to everyone? Students in tough majors would appreciate housing that facilitates studying, and they could probably even create options for students who share extracurricular interests like band, writing or athletics. Such programs would really allow freshmen to make friends they would keep for their entire college career, rather than simply meet other students taking the same major. I found out last semester that RAP and TAP classes aren't usually in your building when your building only has two classrooms, anyway.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu

Conspicuously absent ballots

Lauren Rockoff

Why is it so hard to vote? The day I turned 18, before I even considered buying a lottery ticket or purchasing tobacco products, I went to my town hall to register to vote. Registered and raring to go, I left the clerk's office on that July day anxiously anticipating the February 5th primary and my initiation into the voting world. So why then was my vote not among those counted up last Tuesday? Well it's a two part problem – and one that many college students share. There's the absentee part, and then the ballot. I applied for one, but why did it never come?

They may call us lazy. They may call us indifferent, but I find it easier to believe that most new voters are more likely poorly informed when it comes to absentee ballots and the voting process in general.

First of all, in order to apply for a ballot to be mailed to your residence at the time of an election – in our case, probably somewhere on the UMass campus or in the Amherst area – you need to be registered to vote in your state, which you can do at your city or town hall.

Next, you need to fill out another form specifically for your absentee ballot. This form confirms your primary residence or the one where you initially registered and asks for the address to which you would like your absentee ballot sent. And you need to do this for every election you wish to vote in. It will not be automatically sent to you for the general election if you applied for a primary ballot.

A variety of things can go wrong. For one thing, if you have not yet registered three weeks prior to the election, you can forget it. Next, if you are like me – and make the mistake of trying to keep your options open – and register as "unenrolled" (or independent), you can forget it even more. There is a great deal of confusion surrounding whether or not registering for a party on your absentee ballot officially enrolls you in the party, or if you have to re-register as part of a party when you fill out your absentee ballot request form.

On a side note, make sure you have stocked up on stamps ahead of time. That way you can send the ballot back so that it reaches your polling place by 8 p.m. on the day of the election.

Upon my prodding, the form itself was located, and several days before the primary, I was finally officially registered.

It may be helpful to check back with your town or city hall several days prior to when you are expecting to receive your ballot in the mail. In this way, you may be able to preclude an "Absentee Ballot Rejection Notice," a form which makes all other voting forms seem absolutely pointless. Chances are, you'll end up with your rejection notice five days before the election (when the absentee ballot itself is supposed to have arrived), meaning you will probably have to iron out the problems from Amherst, over the phone, and as quickly as possible, if you have any hope of voting.

I bring this up because I was the unlucky recipient of such a notice, with the rejection reason cited as "not registered to vote." Hmm. Okay, I can give you the exact date, tell you what the woman in the clerk's office was wearing at the time when I registered and promise you that I most certainly did register to vote.

Out of your control completely – and these are the factors that really make leaving the country sound appealing – are the filing and mail delivery errors that can make fulfilling your civic duty feel like finding a summer job in July. In my case, the registration form was just never entered into the computer system. Upon my prodding, the form itself was located, and several days before the primary, I was finally officially registered.

So you ask, if my absentee ballot never shows, can I just vote in Amherst? To that I am saddened to inform you the answer is a resounding "no." But if it helps you at all to know that this election wasn't "the biggie," I offer such condolences. But really, with a democratic voting system that already places so much emphasis on delegates and electoral colleges, doesn't every bit of influence you have count "big time?"

My advice to you for the November election is that you choose your candidate early, and investigate about filling out a ballot for your preferred candidate in advance, at the town/city hall, as opposed to having them mail it to you.

After all, you don't want to be at the mercy of the weather or a national emergency that might halt the postal service, a roommate with thieving tendencies, or a "filing error" of any kind. Just remember that what you believe counts, and to fight for it by asking questions and demanding answers – not to mention engaging in that overrated practice of voting.

Lauren Rockoff is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lrockoff@student.umass.edu.

Victimized by vegansexuality

Matt Janko

"You know red meat contains hundreds of carcinogens, and this chicken was raised in a cage the size of your glove-box, right?"

I peer up from my choices in-hand for my afternoon barbecue to see a sassy lass standing next to me against the cold display of Grocery X, staring intently and gesturing at (or, more innocently, I mod. Temporarily distracted by my counterpart's rabid eyes and framed by the reflection off her "Animal Liberation" button I decide to play along as I drop my cart back onto the rack.

"Try this." She responds with delight as she slips a soy meat into my carriage, and her phone number into my hand.

"Okayyy." I agree hesitantly, more out of intrigue than appreciation. I purchase the product and on the ride home I realize it too late I've become the latest victim of vegansexuality.

According to research conducted by Annie Potts of the University of Canterbury, there's a new wave for vegan vegetarians to flaunt their health and eco-consciousness. While some vegans choose only to engage other vegans, others are using their sexuality as a powerful tool to convert naive meat-eaters (like your truly). In a NY Times exposé on the world of vegansexuality, Ingrid Newkirk of PETA claims that an effective method of attracting omnivores is through nascent, non-traditional vegan wiles.

Therefore, be advised: afflicted individuals' "vegansexuality" symptoms may include the half-lidded gaze of vitamin-deprivation that could be easily mistaken for arousal. And remember, roaming with a vegan is hardly cruelty-free living. With every dyspeptic discourse on meat-consumption and organic obstinacy, vegans paradoxically subject their mates to a torture similar to that which they adamantly oppose for lower species.

Admirably, 21st century American vegans adulate acumen and action for their austere allegiance to an alternative accord.

Stir fry: they will use it to seduce you.

While most palates instinctively recoil at the thought of a veggie burger, we must consider what fuels the fire and whets the appetite of our vegan cousins. A closer look into dietary restriction reveals some surprising potential. Michael Pollan's "Omnivore's Dilemma" describes the anxiety and dangers of engaging in food fads and omnivorous excess. Another 1990 report on diet, life-style and mortality in China presents the reduced heart disease and non-existent obesity in hundreds of homo sapiens herbivores.

From the environmental perspective, at least 30 percent of all methane (a potent greenhouse gas) in the atmosphere is a direct result of the livestock industrial complex according to UC Berkeley's Dr. Chris Somerville. Farmed and wild fish are increasingly contaminated with pollution due to overcrowding and/or toxic endocrine-disrupting chemicals such as PCBs, PBDEs, dioxins and mercury.

Though most American vegans stop short of Newkirkesque rejection of all things animal (including keeping pets and wearing leather), they are making a strategy of health, sustainability and expansion. Admirably, 21st century American vegans adulate acumen and action for their austere allegiance to an alternative accord.

After considering the facts, I offer to you a challenge: trip the soy fantastic, tangle with a tofurkey, get down with the gluten. Attempt a vegan/vegetarian lifestyle. But lest the vegan-superiority-complex annex your uninhibited face-vacuum at the DC, I recommend a timetable of seven days. Try it, it could change your life! But do it for yourself, not because you think I'm cute.

Matt Janko can be reached at mjanko@student.umass.edu

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003

"THE DAILY COLLEGIAN UMASS YAK-BACK!"
AIRING DAILY ON UVC-TV 19
1 P.M. AND 5 P.M.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Local festival a chocolate lover's paradise

Old Deerfield residents, visitors celebrate the sweet side of life

BY MELISSA GARBER AND KATE OLESIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Today, a chocolate bar costs you fifty cents from a vending machine – but residents of colonial Deerfield had a much more labor intensive process to be able to munch on that sweet reward.

The fifth annual chocolate celebration this past Saturday in historic Deerfield relived the colonists' experience producing the sweet dessert for over 200 years.

This year's festival marks the first time Mars, Inc., developers of American Heritage Chocolate, has sponsored the event. American Heritage Chocolate uses traditional colonial recipes to recreate the kind of chocolate Deerfield residents in the eighteenth century would have consumed. It is sold in only seven historical sites, including Historic Deerfield.

On Feb. 9, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. visitors to Historic Deerfield's American Heritage Chocolate Celebration were greeted with plenty of opportunities to celebrate their love of chocolate. Admission to the festival was $14 for adults, $5 for youth (6-21) and kids under six were free.

Admission included events ranging from demonstrations on how colonists roasted and grinded their cacao (pronounced "cah-cow") nibs into chocolate, to lectures on the history of chocolate in Latin America.

And of course, there were samples.

American Heritage Chocolate provided chocolate sticks and hot spiced chocolate drinks for guests to try.

Amanda Lange's speech, "The Natural History of Cacao: Botany and Processing," introduced the audience to the world of chocolate production and six different single origin chocolate samples. Lange, curator of historic interiors in Historic Deerfield, dissected the process of turning the cacao fruit into its solid chocolate form before the sampling could begin.

Lange's audience learned that the cacao tree originated in either the Amazon or the foothills of the Andes mountains in Venezuela. There are 20 different species of cacao trees, but only three are used for consumption. The trees can live for 100 years but are only economically productive for about 60 of those years.

The cacao tree thrives in rainforests and in other densely shaded regions. Midges, which are tiny, fly-like insects, exclusively pollinate the cacao flower. Only three out of every 1000 flowers grow into a fruit, and it takes five to eight months for the flower to blossom. Once ripe, the fruit needs to be cut from the tree, usually by machete. The inside of a cacao fruit consists of 50-60 seeds surrounded by a sugary, slimy substance called "baba," the Spanish word for slime.

The seeds are fermented for two to 10 days and then sun-dried for a week. The seeds need to be raked several times a day while they are being dried. After drying, the seeds still need to be shelled and ground into chocolate.

After the presentation, six different single origin chocolates were sampled by the audience gathered in the recreated church. The chocolate pieces ranged from 60 percent to 84 percent cacao, the other ingredients typically being lecithin (an emulsifier), cocoa butter and vanilla.

Professional chocolate tasting, or "terroir," French for sense of place, involves testing the chocolate "like a good wine or a good scotch," according to Lange.

The chocolate was provided by Cooks Shop Here, a gourmet food store in Northampton. The brands of chocolate came from all over the world, including Paris, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador and Seattle.

The official tasting by the audience started with the lowest cacao percentage and then slowly

See CHOCOLATE on page 8

COURTESY KATE OLESIN/COLLEGIAN

Chocolate truffles were just one of the many items available to sample at the fifth annual chocolate celebration this past Saturday in Deerfield. Guests at the festival encountered a variety of tempting choices.

More than just a watering hole

Renovated grad lounge adds TV, pool table and atmosphere

BY RYAN MCASKILL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

There are many places around the University of Massachusetts campus to get a beer. From partying to holding office hours, the art of drinking is an important aspect of college life. On Friday the Graduate Student Lounge, the only place on campus to sit down and get a beer, officially re-opened following a winter of change.

Over winter break, the Graduate Lounge, which is open to all persons of legal drinking age, underwent renovations to create a more welcoming atmosphere and to bring more people in. The changes include a flat-screen, High Definition television above the bar, a pool table, newly-painted walls and a new sound system.

"Those are the main ones," said Paul MacGregor, manager of the Grad Lounge and 2000 Umass alumni. "The ceiling is obviously new, the lighting, sound system, TV, paint job, pool table. We also took some furniture from Union Billiards and moved it over here."

The renovations are part of an overall plan to change the way people look at the Grad Lounge.

"We just wanted to create more of an atmosphere here," said MacGregor. "Last year it was just plain colored walls, no TV, no real energy in here. We just wanted to make this a place where grad students and really anybody, could enjoy."

While the major renovations are done, the Grad Lounge is far from being complete.

"We're still looking to put some things up on the wall," said MacGregor. "They're very bare right now. We're also looking to get some feedback from grad students and other people I work with and see what they think and what we can add."

One thing that has yet to be finalized is the hours-of-operations. Posted as Monday through Friday, 11 a.m. to 9 p.m., closing time will be determined by late night patron traffic.

"Last semester we didn't get much business later at night," said MacGregor. "We feel now that with the TV, people are more likely to stay later, and we are open to changing hours and staying open later if that's what needs to be done. There is nothing stopping us from staying open late. I don't see us being open until 1 a.m. like the bars downtown, but pushing it back to 10 p.m. or 11 p.m. is certainly an option."

All the changes to the Grad Lounge were done with a focus on grad students, though completing the project was met with some resistance.

"I wouldn't call it opposition," MacGregor said. "There has always been a struggle as to what to do with this space. This space is open to everyone, but it was originally designated a long time ago as grad student space. Our first priority is to run a space to keep the grad students happy. That's why we want feedback from the GSO and the GSS and grad students that walk in."

With the Grad Lounge's focus on the graduate community, MacGregor is hoping to eventually open a second bar on campus that will be geared toward undergrads and faculty.

"I'd love to open a separate other location somewhere geared more towards undergrads and faculty on campus," said MacGregor. "It's not in the plans right now. We are going to see how this place does first. There are obviously problems with drinking on campus in the dorms, and we just don't feel that the political atmosphere is ready for another bar to be opened on campus just yet."

There are events planned for the future to help promote the renovations, but for now the focus is on opening up and getting patrons served.

"We're going to be doing some free pool nights and karaoke nights down the road. Right now we just wanted to reopen, get people in and get their suggestions. The work on the ceiling and lights and the paint job took a long time, and we are going to work on the decorations as we go along."

In terms of selection, the beverage options have not changed. Items on tap include Pabst Blue Ribbon, BBC Steel Rail, Sam Adams Seasonal, Magic Hat Circus Boy and Guinness ranging from $2 to $4 per pint, or $7 to $12 per pitcher. The bottled beer cooler includes all the common brews ranging from $2.75 to $3.50.

For wine, they offer a small selection of Red and White including White Zinfandel, Pinot Grigio and Merlot.

There have been additions to the nonalcoholic beverage and food selections. Coffee and some breakfast items like pastries are making their first appearance; and water, soda, the chip rack and pizza still remain.

On opening day, the Daily Collegian beer dudes were some of the first patrons to the new Grad Lounge and with empty cups in front of them, give the place two thumbs up.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil@student.umass.edu.

KEITH TOFFLING/COLLEGIAN

The grad lounge, located in the UMass Campus Center, re-opened on Friday following a winter break filled with changes. Aside from the obvious of a new television, pool table, sound system and a paint job, the menu expanded adding coffee and breakfast pasteries.

New York-based quartet plays free show at William's

COURTESY JESSICA SLOANE

Lesser-known Vampire Weekend played to the delight of a packed house this past weekend in support of their latest and first release on XL Records.

BY IAN NELSON
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Proper young poppers Vampire Weekend bopped through 12 quick tunes Friday night in Williams College's Greylock Dining Commons to the delight of all in attendance. The result of a venue change due to an increase in the amount of expected concert-goers, the area was packed with students drawn to the prospect of a free show.

Before Vampire Weekend plugged in, opener Sambuck Rosen entertained, coif and all. The New York City three-piece has toured with Vampire Weekend on and off for the past year due to previous acquaintance with the band. Rosen's pop/rock templates, supplemented by cheesy, guitar-damning banter, were met by an excited, positively responsive crowd. The trio crunched through approximately 30 minutes worth of jagged material which, unfortunately, was constantly about a bear away from discovering a semblance of groove.

Vampire Weekend then took the floor (not the stage, for it was non-existent). They conformed to the preppy label often given to the band by critics, as they graced the stage decked out in collared shirts on top of performing at one of the nation's most prestigious academic centers. The group chimed through each song from its recently-released debut record, adding one new name-less California-themed tune and the rollicking non-album track "Boston."

Highlights included island-tinged "Cape Cod Kwassa Kwassa," the energetic "Boston," Victorian-sounding "M79," and a very full "The Kids Don't Stand A Chance." Fans of the fledgling band were treated to all their favorites, while those new to their sound found haven in bountiful sing-alongs and the audience call-back of "One (Blake's Got A New Face)." Certain choruses induced the large turnout into a sweaty, jumping mass, which had to be constantly ordered to push back and give the band space.

Despite playing on the floor instead of a stage, which limited a portion of the crowd's view, the group's songs came across very similar to the album's clean sound. Several issues with volume plagued the first few songs, in which the guitar was barely noticeable. However, alterations were made, and the end result was crisp and clear.

Vampire Weekend's tour comes on the heels of their critically-acclaimed, self-titled debut record, released under XL Recordings. Their shows stretch from New York City dates at the end of January up through April 1 in Denver. They are also scheduled to play perennial festivals Coachella and Bonnaroo.

More complete production and added string arrangements exponentially add to the album from their self-released "Blue CD-R" recordings, which surfaced last year. The hand is young and still attempting to gain prominence, yet their current tour is an excellent avenue for getting their name out to the masses. This is not to say that the music doesn't speak for itself, but free shows at colleges can't hurt.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu

Ra Ra Riot prevails

New and old tracks mix at the Iron Horse

BY BRIAN WOOD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In their first performance in Northampton, Syracuse's Ra Ra Riot wowed fans with an explosion of anxious beats, lavish string arrangements and passionately delivered vocals. Following a 45-minute set by Massachusetts locals Whistle Jack, Ra Ra Riot took the stage to an enthusiastic and vocal crowd. Within moments after their sound check, the first cat calls for "Freebird" came, and acting like any self respecting band would, they were promptly ignored.

Kick-starting the evening was "A Matter to Act" off of their self-titled EP, a song that ordinarily possesses great enthusiasm, but witnessed live takes on a life of its own. Vocalist Wesley Miles softly transitioned on stage from keyboards to his microphone stand, striking delicate keynotes while belting out insatiably catchy melodies. Warm waves of sound generated by cellist Alexandra Lawn and violinist Rebecca Zeller combined with Cameron Wisch's drumming propelled the song to new heights.

Quickly transitioning into their second selection, the up tempo "Each Year," proved to be a perfect companion to their opening song. With every passing and progressing note, the at-capacity crowd swayed and danced along with arguably the catchiest song in the band's repertoire. Both guitarist Milo Bonacci and bassist Mathieu Santos proved to be quite the showmen with their animated stage movements, while Wisch was a whirlwind of flailing limbs, sticks and hair

Following two of the band's established hits, the first taste of new material was presented. Miles removed his microphone from its perch and explored the limited confines of the stage, playing off of Santos and butting heads with one another, stirring up the crowd into a frenzy. In an age where excess is commonplace in stage mannerisms, Miles is understated yet passionate with the microphone, feeding off his band members and elevating the performance to new levels in the process.

The slower "Can You Tell" proved to be a highlight of the evening, with Miles shining in his transition to the roll of crooner and Wisch continuing to show that he is a valuable addition to the band's lineup. Wisch joined the band following the tragic death of their drummer John Pike last summer. Driving the song with a tom drum and a heavy arrangement of anxious rhythm, Wisch managed to put his own unique twist on the established track. Throughout the song, Santos continued to show flashes of brilliance with his highly animated stage movements and knack for catchy and structurally-gifted bass lines.

Delving into some more fresh material, the band showed an affinity towards their signature stringed backdrop while incorporating tambourine and more dance inspiring bass lines. Also introduced were the vocal contributions of Lawn, who serves as a quiet and sultry counter to Miles vocal stylings. One new song, the night's slowest and mellowest piece, illustrated the obvious talents of Lawn and Zeller. Their use of cello and violin gorgeously carried the intimate song.

The unquestionable highlight of the evening was "Ghost Under Rocks," a song that exemplifies the bands strengths. Filled with vocal interplay between the urgent Miles and the delicate Lawn, wonderfully layered cello and violin and a thunderous backbone rhythm, these elements all combine to create a truly breathtaking experience.

The entire band, amplified or otherwise, yelled in unison along with lyrics about "soaking wet dreams" this, more so than at any instance in the night, demonstrated not only the bands musical prowess but also the kinship amongst the group. Having survived tragedy, Ra Ra Riot exude confidence and are a unified and dedicated unit, bursting with potential and passion, while proving that great bands can thrive in the face of adversity.

Closing the night out was a spirited performance of "Dying is Fine," bringing the crowd to its most frantic point during the set. Swaying and clapping along with the band as they fired through the song, the last note was greeted with overwhelming applause. Following many thanks, Miles promised that they would return as soon as possible.

Quite simply, Ra Ra Riot combines one of the most engaging live performances with wonderfully constructed, multi-faceted songs. In addition to this, Friday's show also demonstrated their ability to strike a balance between playing new and established material to satisfy any fan's palate. Their songs are overflowing with liveliness, and the camaraderie amongst the members is a sight to behold. Their performance is not to be missed.

Brian Wood can be reached at bjwood@student.umass.edu

KEVIN KOZBARA/COLLEGIAN

Ra Ra Riot took the stage in Northampton this past Saturday for the first time in the band's history.

Singer Wesley Miles and cellist Alexandra Lawn performed to a zealous crowd at the Iron Horse this past weekend. The band's energy was high despite the recent, tragic death of their friend and drummer.

BUY MORE, SAVE MORE

SALE

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 11 - FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 15

Shop the UMASS Bookstore, and when you buy more, save more!

With any apparel or gift purchase, get
10% off when you spend $50 or more
15% off when you spend $75 or more
20% off when you spend $125 or more

*Valid on regular price and clearance apparel and gift purchases. Excludes diploma frames. In store only. See store for details.

UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413 545 2619

efollett.com ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.

0790CB010708A

New disc satisfies fans

By Joe Stahl
Collegian Staff

After American Music Club resurfaced from a ten-year hiatus with the 2004 release of "Love Songs for Patriots," the band has been occupied with an intense European tour and the making of a new, highly-anticipated record.

American Music Club launched their career in San Francisco in 1982. During the last 15 years, the Bay-area boys have released eight adored records and made a bold re-location to sunny Los Angeles to record their newest effort, "The Golden Age." The disc is a collection of 13 smoky, slow-tempo songs strongly reminiscent of Wilco's newest record, "Sky Blue Sky."

As a part of AMC's relocation, mainstays Vudi and Mark Eitzel recruited two new band mates, Sean Hoffman (bass guitar) and Steve Didelo (drums). The two L.A. members make a valiant effort by creating a tight yet restrained sound. On the other hand, backbones Eitzel and Vudi deliver something more familiar to their die-hard fans. As lead vocalist, Eitzel naturally evokes his emotions to move listeners to despair or joy, while Vudi strums his beloved guitar.

In the past, AMC constantly struggled to define its sound. However after recent years of musical success, AMC continues to steer clear of categorizing its music into one genre. Utilizing musical freedom, AMC managed to effectively produce a record with two new band mates in a short amount of time.

Remarkable as this may seem, "The Golden Age" was recorded in only two months.

"We recorded as live as we could do without thousands of overdubs. There was a month of rehearsal and then a month of mixing," said Litzel when asked about the recording process.

In contrast to the quartet's speed during recording, Eitzel began writing most of the lyrics two years ago. "Sleeping Beauty," one of the tracks on "Golden Age," may sound familiar to ardent AMC fans because it was released on Eitzel's 2005 solo album, "Candy Ass."

"Golden Age" is AMC's most honest record to date. The band sticks to what it knows, producing uncomplicated pop-rock tunes about their hometown ("The Grand Dutchess Of San Francisco," "All The Lost Souls Welcome You To San Francisco"). "Golden Age" is definitely a lover's album in the best way possible. Standout tracks include "All My Love" and "The Decibels and The Little Pills."

Though the record strays from having any form of a theme, it's an easy listen that captivates from the first to the last track. It remains steadfast when delivering fragility and gorgeous melodies. "The Golden Age" somewhat parallels a Nickel Creek record but without the excessive bluegrass instrumentals.

It is tough to deny the new and vamped-up AMC record of its splendor. AMC hardly shows any signs of instability with this alluring pop record. It sounds just as solid (if not more) with the two new band members. The record's scheduled release date is February 19. Meanwhile, catch AMC on their nation-wide tour this spring.

Joe Stahl can be reached at jstahl@student.umass.edu

Though American Music Club's lineup has recently changed, the band continues to produce a solid and sincere sound.

Something for every palate

CHOCOLATE from page 6

increased with each new sample. The lower end of the cacao spectrum tasted like a good, specialty dark chocolate. The higher the cacao content, the more earthy, bitter and exotic it tasted.

In the Hall Tavern, visitors watched Susan McLellan Plaisted's traditional colonial presentation on open-hearth cacao roasting. Plaisted, director of Foodways at Pennsbury Manor, roasted the cacao nibs over an open hearth before grinding them on a metate, a stone slab used in colonial cooking – a process that takes two hours to complete.

In Ancient Aztec culture, where chocolate was first cultivated, Plaisted explained to her audience, chocolate was not only a drink, but also a form of currency. The Aztecs liked chocolate so much, they ended up drinking their money.

In colonial Deerfield, chocolate was an expensive delicacy purchased from importers in Boston. It was so revered in fact, that colonists crafted silver pots exclusively used for chocolate. At Saturday's celebration, silversmith Steve Smithers demonstrated how to make a silver chocolate pot.

Next door to the Silver Shop was the History Workshop, where guests could make an assortment of crafts. At one table there was decorative paper, stickers and ribbons provided for creating Valentine's Day cards. On another, guests combined cocoa, dark brown sugar, and vanilla powder along with a variety of spices like nutmeg, cinnamon, cloves and chili powder to take home and make traditional colonial hot chocolate.

In addition to the chocolate festivities, guests could also take a horse drawn wagon ride around town or tour the historic houses and museums. The Ashley House, Williams House, Silver Shop, Frary House and Wells-Thorn House were open for guided house tours. Visitors could also explore the Flynt Center for New England Life, the Sheldon House and the Stebbins House independently.

At the Terrace Café in the Deerfield Inn, visitors could purchase an assortment of chocolate entrees, drinks and desserts. Some items included chocolate chili, chocolate cheesecake, truffles, and chocolate martinis.

The chocolate dipped, dried fruit skewers were just as tasty as they were presented. The chocolate was slightly dark and paired nicely with the pineapple.

On the other hand, the chocolate dipped cheesecake provided a primarily vanilla taste – but had a melt-in-your-mouth chocolate flavor that fit well with the chocolate theme.

In Latin, cacao means, "food of the gods," a fact that should come as no surprise to those who celebrated its importance at the fifth annual Historic Deerfield American Heritage Chocolate Celebration.

Melissa Garber can be reached at mhgarber@student.umass.edu.

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin@dailycollegian.com.

Not only did patrons at the American Heritage Chocolate Celebration get to savor a range of delicious offerings, but they also had the opportunity to see how cacao beans were roasted and ground over 300 years ago.

Perno leads UMass

Runners qualify for N.E. Championships

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts track teams qualified several runners for the Feb. 29 to March 1 New England Championships over the weekend with their performance at the Boston University Valentine Invitational.

UMass freshman Gina Perno led the Minutewomen team, clawing her way to a second-place finish out of 51 runners in the 1,000-meter run with a time of 2:56.88. She separated herself with the remaining runners in the top five by a second.

Senior Christina DeRosa also had a top 10 finish, continuing her strong season in the 3,000-meter run. She finished ninth with a time of 9:49.36. DeRosa's time is the third fastest at UMass.

DeRosa and Perno also qualified for the ECAC Championships from March 8 to March 9.

Senior Taryn Trapp finished 18th in the 1,000-meter run with a time of 3 minutes, 2:45.

Redshirt senior Danielle Bolt took eighth place in the 55-meter dash with 7.26 seconds and 20th in the 200-meter dash with 25.54 seconds.

She also competed in the 4x400-meter relay with sophomore Holly Heinricher, sophomore Ros Murphy and redshirt junior Kristen Bakanowski. The relay team finished 20th in 4:00.66.

In the field events, Bakanowski took fifth in the pole vault competition with a height of 11 feet, 9.75 inches.

On the men's side, sophomore Nicolai Naranjo placed 24th in the 3,000-meter run with a time of 8 minutes, 28.51. Junior Josh Boone placed seventeenth in the mile run in 4 minutes, 12.73.

Boone and Naranjo qualified for the IC4A Championship, which is the same weekend as the women's ECAC Championship.

Freshman Darius Velez placed sixth in the 55-meter dash preliminaries with 6.5 seconds. Sophomore Tyler Cotto placed 10th in the 55-meter hurdles in 7.7 seconds.

For the field events, Brian Miller placed sixth in the high jump at six feet, six inches.

Next week starts four straight weeks of the indoor postseason with both teams competing in the Atlantic 10 Championships next Saturday before the start of the outdoor season at UMass on March 29.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill@student.umass.edu.

UMass sophomore sprinter Holly Heinricher and her 4x400-relay team of herself, Ros Murphy, Kristen Bakanowski and Danielle Bolt took 20th place in the BU Valentine Invitational over the weekend.

Gerbe baffles Davis, Watson in BC win

GERBE from page 12

footed," Cahoon said. "And on the third goal, he put so much pressure on the puck-side defenseman that the weak-side defenseman doesn't take care of his responsibility because he thinks he has to help him out."

On that third goal, Gerbe took it upon himself to close out two Hockey East points for the BC, taking the puck from his own zone and scorching up the left boards past Davis, who is indeed one of the fastest skaters in the conference.

Gerbe got by Davis cleanly before reaching the UMass blue line then drew both defensemen to his side. A soft pass through traffic to Ben Smith, who followed the play the length of the ice, made for an easy goal behind Paul Dainton.

Kostka acknowledged Gerbe's ability but despite a goal and three assists, felt there was more to the Eagles' victory than one player.

"He's a solid player; he's quick," Kostka said. "I don't think he was the difference in the game. Obviously, great players on every team are labeled as their difference-makers, and he's one of the top players in the country. But I think the rest of the team kind of plays in the shadows behind him because of the type of numbers he puts up."

That may have been so, but there's no denying the Minutemen were in more danger of falling behind BC when Gerbe was on the ice.

"He was forceful, and he was strong," BC coach Jerry York said of Gerbe. "He's having an incredible season. He reminds me more of Brian Gionta [232 points at BC, second all-time] as the season progresses."

The Minutemen were just a step behind Gerbe throughout the third period, and it cost them two points in the conference standings as well as lot of momentum heading into the final month of the season.

UMass has two games each left against Northeastern, Maine, Boston University and Merrimack, with plenty of room to climb back into the middle of the Hockey East pack.

They won't have to face Gerbe and the Eagles again this regular season, but as the standings are now (UMass is in eighth place, BC in second), there's a strong chance the two will see each other again in the Hockey East Tournament.

"[Gerbe]'s one of the true gems of college hockey, no question," Cahoon said. "I thought we did a decent job of playing him, but we didn't solve him."

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

Forward Chris Davis had the task of covering Nathan Gerbe in UMass's loss to the Eagles on Saturday night.

Eagles shine in third-period rally

HOCKEY from page 12

Nolet that BC net minder John Muse brushed away.

Cahoon wasn't pleased with the power play after the game but commented that a few minor adjustments were all the Minutemen needed to change the outcome of the game in all phases.

"We have to be a lot more thorough in the way play," he said. "[BC]'s first goal was just a breakdown on a situation. The speed of the athlete put you in that situation, but we had him we just didn't make the play. The second goal was the power-play situation. Stay out of the box, and don't take the penalty. The guy that allowed that goal just made an error, but he made at least 10 saves that maybe should have been goals."

Gerbe struck again with fewer than five minutes remaining in the game on another play where the Minutemen failed to complete their assignments. The puck slid outside of the BC zone and Gerbe picked it up and quickly raced down the ice.

The line of Concannon, sophomore Brett Watson and junior Chris Davis drew the task of shutting down BC's top line, but there was not much UMass could do to silence Hockey East's leading scorer. Gerbe blew past Davis and gained the UMass zone without stopping. Sophomore defenseman Justin Braun was next in his path. Gerbe took the puck wide on Braun, and senior David Leaderer pinched over from his spot parallel to Braun for support. The three players converged on Gerbe and took him out of the play. But he tapped the puck into the slot where sophomore Ben Smith charged forward and lifted it past Dainton to give the Eagles some breathing room.

UMass freshman Michael Lecomte's goal at 2:47 of the second period came at a time when the Minutemen were going shot for shot with Eagles, with the goaltenders keeping their teams in the game. Dainton made 30 saves for the Eagles while Muse turned away 26 UMass shots.

Game Notes

Freshman winger Chase Langeraap left the game in the second period after suffering an undisclosed injury. Sophomore defenseman Matt Nolet played after missing last Saturday's game against Maine.

Before Bertram's goal on the third period, UMass has killed off 11-of-12 power plays dating back five games. Lecomte's goal was his first in his last six games.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com

UMass goaltender Paul Dainton made 30 saves and allowed three goals in UMass's 4-1 loss to Boston College.

Remaining UMass Hockey Games

02/15/08 at Northeastern Boston, Mass. 7:00 p.m. ET 02/16/08 vs. Northeastern Amherst, Mass. 7:00 p.m. ET
02/23/08 at Maine Orono, Maine 7:00 p.m. ET
02/24/08 at Maine Orono, Maine 4:00 p.m. ET
02/29/08 at Boston University Boston, Mass. 7:00 p.m. ET 03/01/08 vs. Boston University Amherst, Mass. 7:00 p.m. ET 03/07/08 vs. Merrimack Amherst, Mass. 7:00 p.m. ET 03/08/08 at Merrimack North Andover, Mass. 7:00 p.m. ET

BC junior forward Nathan Gerbe led the Eagle offense with four points on one goal and three assists in a win over UMass.

Campus to Career
Etiquette Dinner
Wednesday, February 20 • 5:30 p.m.
Amherst Room, 10th Floor
Campus Center
This dinner will lead students through the potential pitfalls of a business dinner with various "dangerous" foods. Learn proper meal etiquette and how to navigate a formal dinner place setting, as our etiquette professional answers all your questions.
Space is limited and this event will sell out. Register by Monday, February 18, 2008.
$10.00 per person
Register online at UMassAlumni.com/students
Sponsored by the UMass Amherst Alumni Association and Macy's.
Brought to you by the Student Alumni Association & the UMass Marketing Club.
Student Alumni Association · Alumni Association · macy's · Marketing Club

EF Break
Travel the world with college students from all over the country. It's fun. It's easy. It's affordable. It's time to travel.
You'll always remember your first time abroad.
Save $150
February 15!
Grand Tour of Europe
Classic Italy
European Road Trip
Exotic Thailand
The Greek Isles
Ultimate Europe
Visit us at efcollegebreak.com/travel or call 800.766.2645

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
Potter's Auto & Truck Rental
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
Collision Repair & Gloss Replacement
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass on bus route)

Gotem
of Japan Steak House
Famous for Captivating Cuisine Prepared at Your Table!
Valentine's Day
Thursday
5-10pm
Hours of Operation
Monday Closed
Tues.-Fri. 5-9 PM
Saturday 12-10 PM
Sunday 4-9 PM
104 Old Amherst Rd., Sunderland off Rt. 116
413.665.3628
www.gotenofjapan.com

Point guard Chris Lowe struggled in the Minutemen's road loss to Temple. The junior shot 4-of-12 from the floor but collected eight rebounds.

Lowe struggles from field in overtime loss things in regulation after Brower missed a 3-pointer with 38 seconds left, calling a timeout with 24.7 seconds remaining in a 64-64 tie. The Owls had two looks at the basket but Tyndale's lay-up attempt didn't fall and Brower blocked away Clark's jump shot as time ran out.

BASKETBALL page 12

Temple wasted little time in the extra period, gaining possession on the tip and converting two free throws after a Brower shooting foul. Brower hit a jumper to tie the game at 66 and tied things again with a lay-up after a basket by Christmas.

A 3-pointer by Ryan Brooks gave the Owls a three-point edge, a lead they would never relinquish. The Minutemen struggled from the floor in the overtime, missing all four 3-point attempts and finishing 2-of-11 from the field.

"Everyone wants to get the ball to Gary Forbes," Ford said. "I was disappointed in our shot selection. We got shots off, but the shots just didn't go in. We needed to try to go ahead and score. [Temple] just made plays when it counted."

Temple scored 11 of its 16 points in the extra session from the free-throw line, scoring more points there in five minutes than UMass did all game (8-of-14).

Ford pointed to that differential after the game as one of the reasons for the loss.

"Gary Forbes needs to be physical. He didn't go to the foul line, and their [small forward], Mark Tyndale, went 10-for-10 from the foul line," he said.

Ricky Harris was the only UMass player that made multiple free throws (4-for-4), but his shooting struggles from the perimeter continued. Harris finished 2-of-10 from beyond the arc and 4-of-13 overall. The sophomore guard scored 14 points, marking the fourth time in the last five games he scored below his season average of 18.8 points per game.

Game notes

Forbes committed six turnovers in the game, the same total the Owls had ... Temple finished 22-of-24 from the foul line ... Forbes led all players with 12 rebounds and seven assists ... UMass hit 12-of-32 of its 3-point attempts, while the Owls hit 6-of-22 ... Tony Gaffney fouled out in 31 minutes of action, scoring four points and grabbing five rebounds ... Both teams made two field goals in the overtime, but UMass attempted seven more shots.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

Loss frustrates Dacko, team

W BASKETBALL from page 12

47-34, but the Minutewomen went on a 12-2 run to cut the lead to three at 49-46 with 12:18 left. That was the closest UMass would get, as missed lay-ups and turnovers allowed URI to go on a run of its own.

After free throws from Gerardot put UMass within three, URI hit consecutive jumpers from Bellinger and McGrew. The Ram defense held UMass scoreless for four minutes and held them without a field goal for more than seven minutes. During that span of being held without a field goal, the Minutewomen went 4-for-4 from the free-throw line.

"I thought we were more than prepared with the game plan. We knew every play they were going to run," Dacko said.

After the game, a disappointed Dacko did not have much to say to the team. She left it up to them to change the way the season has gone.

"I said [to the team], 'I don't have words for you right now,' and I kind of remained silent," Dacko said. "I have given them everything, and the coaching staff is trying to prepare them as well as they can.

"I just remained silent for the first time in my life," Dacko said.

Games Notes

URI scored 19 fast-break points and scored 25 points off turnovers...UMass shot 17-of-20 from the free throw line but only hit on 1-of-8 from three... Mills and Rosanio compiled 11 of the team's 20 turnovers... Rosanio scored nine points, the team's second highest scorer for the Minutewomen...UMass had 10 steals, with Young getting a team high of three

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu

Freshman Teya Wright was 2-of-6 from the floor with four points and five rebounds in the Minutewomen's 75-64 loss to Rhode Island. The team will return to action Wednesday night at home against No. 14 George Washington.

University Health Services

Support and Therapy Group Meetings • Spring, 2008

STRESSBUSTERS
Thursdays, 3/13, 3/27, 4/3 and 4/10, 3:30 – 5 p.m.
Learn how to relax, reduce worry, manage your time and sleep better in this four-part series. Space is limited, so register early!

LIVING WITH LOSS
Tuesdays, 4 – 5:30 p.m.
A support group for undergraduate and graduate students dealing with the loss of someone close to them.

CONNECTING ON CAMPUS
Wednesdays, 2:30 – 4 p.m.
An undergraduate therapy group focusing on school adjustments, relationships, anxiety, depression and more.

MINDFULNESS-BASED STRESS REDUCTION (MBSR)
Mondays, 4 – 5:30 p.m. or Wednesdays, 5 – 6:30 p.m.
Mindfulness is a way of paying attention with intention, in the moment and without judgment. With regular practice, MBSR has the potential to lower stress, anxiety and depression, promote relaxation, improve concentration, raise self-awareness and enhance the immune system.

Pre-registration is required for all groups. Call 545-2337 or come to Mental Health Services, 127 Hills North, Monday – Friday, 8 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Liesel™

Meet your new study partner.

This is Liesel™.

She can help you create audio notes of your study material in an easy to use format— then transfer them to your MP3 player.

Take them with you. Share them with others. Whenever you want. It's that simple.

7 DAY FREE TRIAL JUST REGISTER studywithliesel.com

Study and note-taking software from LISTEN STUDY LEARN The sound of study

© Copyright 2008 ListenStudyLearn, LLC

New WORLD Theater

UMass FINE ARTS CENTER

Scratch & Burn

by D-Projects Inc Written & Directed by Teo Castellanos

February 14 & 15, 2008
8 pm • Bowker Auditorium • UMass Amherst

COMING NEXT APRIL 4-6 INTERSECTION V creative uprising(s)

Visit our website for updates www.newworldtheater.org Phone 413-545-1972

SEND IN PICTURES, THE DIRTIER THE BETTER.

comics@dailycollegian.com

Put on your party hats, Sudoku strikes again.

8		3	7		5
								6
						8	1	7
		2	9	1		6
		8	2		3	9
		1		4	8	2
7	3	9
1
			4		1	3		5

Quote of the Day

"Curves the words, spins the verbs Lovers it curves so freak what you heard..."

—Blackstreet ft. Dr. Dre

Wondermark By David Malki

Corny on the Cob By John Costello and Amanda Grafstein

Bliss By Harry Bliss

"When you say 'let's not and say we did,' do you mean let's say we can, or ... wait – I'm confused."

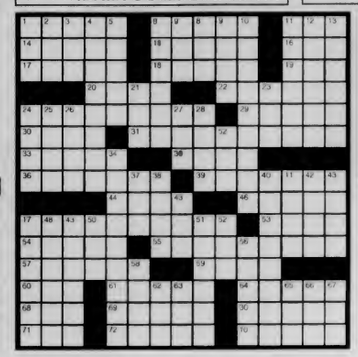
ACROSS
1 Mineral cathartics
6 Carpenter, often
11 2 on the phone
14 Sprite in "The Tempest"
15 Bleep out
16 "Agnus ___"
17 Paris subway
18 Begin's peace partner
19 Insane
20 Track gathering
22 Bearlike
24 Handrails
29 Up and about
30 Tons and tons
31 Flights
33 Roamed
35 Horse's pace
36 City near Fort Ord
39 Adler and Benson
44 Painful
46 Drench
47 Of a foot bone
53 Broad smile
54 City on the Mohawk
55 Most powerful
57 DeLuise film
59 Fencing sword
60 Lend a hand to
61 Explorer Sebastian
64 Clay brick
68 Fort Worth sch
69 Archie's wife
70 Spring worm catcher
71 Mind-reading letters
72 ___ Cruz, CA
73 Nose

DOWN
1 Waterston or Donaldson
2 Exist
3 Came to rest
4 Wood-eating pests
5 Blackthorns
6 Last part of a sonnet
7 Coach Parseghian
8 Roll of bills
9 Genesis twin
10 Disavowed
11 Lets in
12 Collectible baby?
13 Apple drinks
21 Aliens, briefly
23 Retirement grp
24 Saloons
25 ___ vera
26 Classic Chevy
27 Snitch
28 British knights
32 Decay
34 Intervening spaces
37 Morgue letters
38 Flubs it
40 Entered the net?
41 Fisherman's decoy
42 Label on some sale items
43 Mailed
45 Approx
47 Undergo genetic change
48 Morals
49 Kept occupied
50 Marksman
51 First name in soul
52 Chop off
56 Gets closer
58 Arg's ant
62 Storage receptacle
63 Legendary Giant
65 Seller's $$ equivocation
66 Brief life?
67 Way in, in brief

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach



Summer Session 2008

No Matter where you are...

Session I: June 2 - July 10
Session II: July 14 - Aug 20

Online Gen Ed's
Small Classes
Great Faculty

PLAN AHEAD!
UMassULearn.net

Submit your comics!

comics@dailycollegian.com

Submit your classifieds!

(413) 545-3500

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Don't tell your friends that you glue pictures of them to your toilet paper. They will be horrified.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
That group of people that has been stalking you all weekend is a bit odd. Trust your gut and don't drink the Kool-aid.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You slam dunk harder than Aaron Carter.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Buy a hot tub, and place it on top of the library. Host secret sexy aquatic book readings from your jet-infused perch.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Saying yes when your computer asks you if you are willing to leave a secure internet connection doesn't make you adventurous.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
The fact that your muscles are making the same sounds as Rice Crispies is a sure sign that you are overexercising.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You make people want to dance as if the Venga Boys were performing a concert in their brain.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
If you plan to be a celebrity or a politician, it's probably a bad idea to heed the advice found on the top left corner of this page.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You really freaked out a lot of people this weekend. Nonetheless, count this weekend was a victory for your Id.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Use eenee meenee miney mo to select your valentine for the year. Your faith will be handsomely rewarded.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Grandma's drunk again.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Right now you are asleep, so you will never read this, but you are snoring and everyone is looking at you.

Feeling like a freak on a leash? Comics can fix that.

comics@dailycollegian.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Apt. for rent

Hobart condos 3 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today toll free at 1-888-684-2267 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

RAFT GUIDES
Zoar Outdoor is seeking adventuresome people to be full and part-time summer raft guides. Learn how to guide a raft during our training program and spend the summer on the Deerfield River. Applicants should have customer service experience and a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independently. Application deadline: Feb. 15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

Put up Posters! Through summer, car, sell, commitment needed. Up to $12/hr w/bonus. 20 hrs between Mon-Wed, excellent communicator, fast-paced, punctual, resume and formal cover letter to postering@artspromo.org. Hiring ASAP.

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab.linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Marketing Intern As a Marketing Intern (paid position) you will assist in marketing efforts to grow sales of the leading economic policy analysis model. Responsibilities include developing presentations and other marketing material, writing for newsletters, website, and blog, and assisting with internet marketing, promotions, campaigns, and other marketing efforts. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. resumes@remi.com. REMI is an eoe and maintains a drug-free workplace.

Services

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment GYN & breast exams Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

Travel

Spring Break from $199 Land price starting from $199 for 7 days. We also have an all inclusive hotel start from $799 per person. Give us a call today it's not to late to still get away 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Spring Break 08 Hot Deals, Hot Destinations, Hot Parties. Ask about Group Deals and FREE TRIPS. 1-800-426-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 2008

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Eagles outlast Mass Attack

Minutemen struggle in conference showdown

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

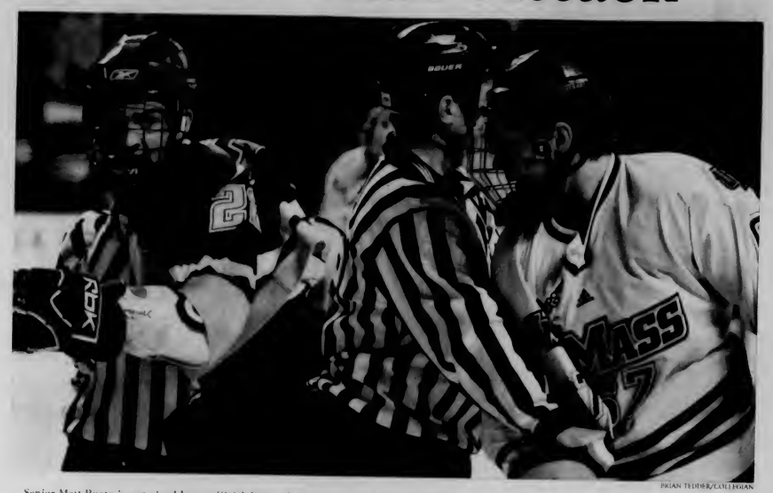
Nathan Gerbe scored his only goal of Boston College's 4-1 win over the Massachusetts hockey team with less than a minute left in the game. But that is not to say that the 59 minutes before that did not belong to the 5-foot-5 winger.

Gerbe assisted on BC's three other goals as the Eagles defeated UMass for the first time this season. The Minutemen are now 1-7-1 in their last nine games while the Eagles are 6-1-2 in that same span.

BC	4
UMass	1

As the third period began with the score tied, 1-1, the Minutemen killed off the final 17 seconds of a cross-checking penalty to freshman Marc Concannon. But at the 5-minute mark, redshirt senior defenseman Patrick Dineen went off for high-sticking.

"I didn't see it, but I was told he was just batting a puck out of the air and made some contact with the head," said UMass coach Don Cahoon. "It was unlike some of the penalties in the past and was untimely if anything. We did a good job killing penalties against them; but if you keep giving them whacks at it, they're going to get you."



Entering the game, the BC power play converted at 24.6 percent, the highest in Hockey East. The Minutemen killed off the two penalties they committed prior, but the Eagles didn't hesitate in converting on their third chance.

Freshman Joe Whitney found Gerbe who quickly found a seam in the UMass defense and fired across ice to Dan Bertram. UMass freshman goaltender Paul Dainton struggled to see pass through the screen set in front of him. Bertram one-timed the shot, which quickly beat Dainton to give the Eagles a 2-1 lead.

UMass had chances to tie the game after BC took the lead but failed to consistently create dangerous scoring chances. BC's Anthony Aiello gave UMass its best chance when officials whistled him for a boarding call at 12:26 of the final period.

BC's penalty kill stifled the UMass power play; however, the Minutemen's lone shot during the two minutes was a slap-shot from Martin

See HOCKEY on page 9

BRIAN TELDER/COLLEGIAN

Senior Matt Burto is restrained by an official during the Minutemen's 4-1 home loss Saturday against Boston College. The Eagles scored three third-period goals to defeat the Minutemen for the first time this season.

Davis, Watson baffled by Gerbe in defeat

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts hockey team did all they could to contain Nathan Gerbe and the talented Boston College offense until the third period.

The Minutemen took a 1-1 tie into the third with confidence that they could once again upset the vaunted Eagles (they were 4-1-1 in their last six against BC), but the wheels came off for UMass as Gerbe kicked it up a notch and burned the Minutemen up and down the ice, finishing with a four-point night.

UMass coach Don Cahoon created a defensive line to combat Gerbe and Co., and it worked for 40 minutes. But that was all.

Sophomore Brett Watson, the Minutemen's best defensive forward, was the pivot between freshman Marc Concannon and junior speedster Chris Davis. The trio was aggressive against the scoring line of center Brian Gibbons between wingers Gerbe and Ben Smith.

The Eagles' scoring line struck early in the first but was held to that single goal until five minutes into the third as Watson's crew was aggressive in its own zone and gave very few clear looks at the net to Gerbe, Gibbons and Smith.

"I think Watson's line stayed with Gerbe's line most of the night," Cahoon said. "Watson's our most responsible defensive forward, and Chris Davis is arguably the fastest skater we have. He lined up opposite Gerbe, and at times through the middle of the rink, he slowed him down and stayed with him."

Cahoon and Captain Mike Kostka spoke after the game, saying they felt they were not so far off from the Eagles' level as a 4-1 score may indicate, and it's true, the only difference may have been the step or two Gerbe had on everyone else on the ice.

"On the first goal, [Gerbe] burns a guy because he's not fluid in a pivot and catches him flat-

See GERBE on page 9

OT rally sinks UMass at TU

Owls win 11th straight at home against Maroon and White

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In a game with 20 lead changes and 10 ties, it was only fitting that 40 minutes of basketball settled nothing.

The back-and-forth between Temple and the Massachusetts men's basketball team ended once the overtime period began, as the Owls outscored the Minutemen by 10 points, winning a key Atlantic 10 matchup, 80-70, Sunday afternoon in Philadelphia.

Temple	80
UMass	70

With the victory, the Owls (12-10, 5-3 A-10) continued their dominance over the Minutemen (15-8, 4-5 A-10) at the Liacouras Center, where they've won all but one of 11 all-time meetings.

"It has nothing to do with the past," UMass coach Travis Ford said after the game. "It is disappointing that we didn't come out with the win. This is a very tough place to play, but when players don't make plays, it's hard to win."

The Minutemen now stand in a four-way tie for eighth in the conference, along with Dayton, La Salle and Saint Louis.

Both teams had four players score in double figures, with UMass's Etienne Brower leading all scorers with 21 points.

Conference-leading scorer Gary Forbes added 12 points, 12 rebounds and seven assists for the Minutemen, but it was the 20 points from both Lavoy Allen and Mark Tyndale – along with a combined 14-of-14 from the foul line – that was the difference.

Temple's Dionte Christmas – the second-leading scorer in the A-10 – scored 16 points but struggled from the field, hitting 5-of-16 shots including 2-of-10 from the perimeter.

After a low scoring and relatively uneventful first half (Temple led 29-27), both teams came out running in the second half – constantly trading baskets in a highly-contested game. In a span of just over three minutes, late in the second half, the lead-changed eight times and was tied another.

UMass had a three-point lead at 64-61 with under two minutes remaining after a Forbes 3-pointer, but Temple quickly tied the game with a matching outside shot by Chris Clark.

Temple had a chance to end

See BASKETBALL on page 10

MICHAEL VINCENT/COLLEGIAN

Etienne Brower led all scorers with 21 points in Temple's 80-70 overtime defeat of UMass in Philadelphia.

Dacko and co. drop A-10 game in R.I.

Minutewomen turn ball over 20 times in loss to Rams

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Senior Kate Mills led the Massachusetts women's basketball team with 24 points, but it wasn't enough. Twenty turnovers cost the Minutewomen an attempt to go above .500, losing, 75-64, to Rhode Island.

UMass (11-12, 3-5 Atlantic 10) failed to win consecutive road games for the first time this season. With junior point guard Kim Benton out with an injury, UMass coach Marnie Dacko only had the use of one point guard, junior Sakera Young. Young got in early foul trouble and Dacko was forced to use a combination of junior forward Stefanie Gerardot and senior forward Pam Rosanio. Rosanio struggled facilitating the ball, as she turned it over seven times.

URI	75
UMass	64

"Every one of our turnovers turned into two points for them, they scored 20 points off turnovers," Dacko said. "It was one of the poorest rebounding efforts of the season."

Mills was the only player who scored in double figures. She shot 9-of-16 from the field and grabbed five rebounds. To give the Minutewomen the best chance to win, Dacko played Mills and Rosanio the entire game. The Minutewomen led by as many as five midway through the first half, but URI used an 11-3 run to close the half.

The Minutewomen had trouble figuring out the defensive pressure from Rhode Island, who played a stifling 1-3-1 half-court press. UMass had 12 turnovers in the first half, and Dacko was disappointed that the point guards kept finding themselves in bad places on the court.

"There were openings all over, [but] we never found them. We dribbled in the trap," Dacko said. "A 1-3-1 you should kill – we would dribble over half-court on the sideline and get trapped."

Young not only struggled to find the open players, but she struggled to stay on the floor. She played 21 minutes before fouling out with 8:06 remaining in the second half. With Benton out, Dacko would have liked to have played Young around 30 minutes.

Rhode Island (11-12, 4-4 A-10) was led by a trio of scoring guards who combined for 52 points. URI shot a season-high 55 percent; senior Safi Mojidi scored 18, junior Amanda McGrew scored 17 – including 3-of-4 from three – and junior Crystal Bellinger also had 17.

"Where we got burned was on transition points. The majority of threes they hit were on transition," Dacko said. "It was one missed defensive assignment after another, and it's really a gut check for our kids."

Early in the second half URI had its largest lead of the game,

See W. BASKETBALL on page 10

Balschmiter sharp in losses

The Massachusetts softball team went 1-3 in its action this weekend, defeating South Carolina, 2-0, on the strength of a complete game shutout by junior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter.

The Minutewomen dropped two games Friday, losing a pair of one-run games to Michigan, 1-0, and Maryland, 2-1.

UMass dropped a third close game, this time a 3-2 decision to North Florida Saturday morning before the win over South Carolina.

The Minutewomen play again two weeks from now in the Palm Springs Classic in Cathedral City, Calif. Their first game of the tournament takes place Feb. 22 against UCLA. UMass will also play Arizona, Fresno State, Baylor and Michigan State at the classic.

Sophomore Sarah Reeves had a strong start to her season, going 4-for-10 on the weekend with one walk. Samantha Salato also did well, going 4-for-12 with a double, triple, two runs and one RBI.

Balschmiter picked up where she left off last season, giving up one run in two starts, but managed just one win. She struck out 15, gave up seven hits and did not walk a batter.

Sophomore Bailey Sanders also pitched well, but did not have the offensive support to pick up a victory, starting two games and finishing the weekend with a 1.17 ERA while striking out eight and walking four.

The Minutewomen open the Atlantic 10 portion of their schedule March 20 at Fordham. Their home opener comes March 26 with a double-header against Dartmouth.

UMASS TENNIS FALLS

The Massachusetts tennis team split their first weekend of games this spring, defeating Fordham, 5-2, Saturday before losing to Columbia by the same score Sunday.

UMass knocked off Fordham, despite a rare loss by Masha Pozar in the top singles position, falling 6-1, 6-3 to Dominique Liguori. The Minutewomen swept the doubles portion of the meet and doubled up the Rams in singles play, winning four of six matches.

The Minutewomen fell at Columbia, 5-2, Sunday, uncharacteristically struggling in the doubles part of competition.

The usually reliable doubles team of Pozar and Candynce Boney fell, 8-5 to the pairing of Nina Suda and Natasha Makarova. It was the first time this season UMass has not earned the doubles point in a dual meet.

Pozar defeated Suda in singles play, but Boney lost again in her singles match to Stephanie Zilberman.

Laura Murillo was the only Minutewoman other than Pozar to record a victory for UMass, defeating Natalia Christenson 6-4, 6-3 in match play in the sixth position. The Minutewomen next play Binghamton and Cornell in Ithaca, N.Y., Feb. 15 and 16.

Jeremy Rice

INSIDE: "THRILLER" RE-RELEASED FOR 25TH ANNIVERSARY | PAGE 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

❄ FLURRIES : HI: 29 LO: 24 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 2008

Campus adopts cell phone alerts

UMass turns to text messaging during campus emergencies

BY JESSICA SACCO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

To text or not to text? That is the question.

The Massachusetts Board of Higher Education has set up a plan for Bay State public colleges and universities to put in place an emergency text messaging system.

The program was put in motion after the tragedy at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University.

Between the 29 schools – 15 community colleges, and the nine state-funded colleges and universities – this system is targeted to reach, the Board of Higher Education is distributing $250,000 to assist in funding the plan.

According to Chief Information Officer and Vice President David Gray and Director of IT Policy and Risk Management Bradford Ridley, the five campuses that make up the University of Massachusetts are collaborating with each other to set up a system that uses emergency text messaging.

In the end though, it is up to each campus alone on which systems will be used at their school.

UMass is working with an emergency text messaging software program created by Dialogic Communications Corporation (DCC) and is in the process of finalizing tests and evaluations with the hope of having it up and running by this spring.

"This is a complex program and we need to make sure we have a certain level of confidence that it will do what we hope and expect it to," said director of news and information Ed Blaguszewski.

Blaguszewski, Gray and Ridley all agree that alert text messaging

See TEXT on page 2

Public colleges and universities in the commonwealth received $250,000 to impliment a text message based campus emergency alert system.

Candidates for chancellor under review

BY ASHLEIGH BENNETT
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The search for a new University of Massachusetts chancellor is "gathering strong momentum," according to Jennifer C. Braceras, after the University of Massachusetts Chancellor Search Committee wrapped up its fifth meeting.

The current candidate pool is being reviewed in hopes of selecting a finalist for the position.

"Everyone left the room very happy about the quality of people who are interested in the Amherst chancellorship," said spokesman Robert Connolly at the conclusion of the committee's last meeting on Feb. 4. The committee met to discuss candidates for the job of chancellor. The candidates were nominated, recruited by the professional recruiting firm Isaacson, Miller or applied for the job.

The committee will not specify the exact number of candidates applying, but they hope to have picked at least three finalists from the existing pool by the end of the spring.

The candidates in the pool are now being evaluated on their qualities and abilities. There is no one specific characteristic the committee is looking for when selecting finalists, but rather a culmination of several skills.

"A full range of managerial and leadership skills and a clear demonstrated ability to inspire, mobilize and lead are potential important characteristics … it's a pretty daunting job when you stop and think of all its responsibilities," said Connolly.

Four areas of focus facing the new chancellor are the ability to maintain affordability at the University, relationships with faculty and students, continuing to build facilities on campus and research capability.

Once finalists who meet the criteria are chosen, they will each come to campus for a full-day visit. According to Connolly, the visit will be "filled with meetings with students, faculty, community members and alumni, intended to give the candidate a better sense of the campus."

At the culmination of the visits, the Board of Trustees will make a recommendation to UMass president Jack M. Wilson for the position.

The committee will meet again on Feb. 25 to try to narrow the pool down and come up with a list of candidates, with whom they will then have a series of interviews. If the search keeps continuing in a timely manner like it is has been, the new chancellor will be selected by the end of the spring semester and will be in place by the beginning of the fall 2008 academic year.

Wilson announces UM award winners

RECIPIENTS OF THIS YEAR'S PRESIDENT'S PUBLIC SERVICE AWARD

UMASS

M. Idali Torres	Associate Professor of Public Health	UMass Amherst
Gary N. Siperstein	Director of the Center for Social Development	UMass Boston
Memory A. Holloway	Associate Professor of Art History	UMass Dartmouth
Kay G. Roberts	Music Professor of Art History	UMass Lowell
Fred Martin	Assistant Professor in Computer Science	UMass Lowell
Stephen J. Doxsey	Professor of Molecular Medicine, Biochemistry and Molecular Pharmocology and Cell Biology	UMass Medical School

BY KRISTEN HEALY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University of Massachusetts president Jack M. Wilson announced on Feb. 6, 2008 the faculty winners of this year's President's Public Service Award.

The awards are presented annually to faculty members from all five campuses of the University system – Amherst, Boston, Lowell, Dartmouth and Worcester. Chancellors of each respective campus nominate faculty based on their contributions to the community and their outreach of public service in the Commonwealth.

"This is the 10th anniversary of the University's President's Public Service Awards and this year's winners continue in the impressive tradition of the earlier recipients," said Wilson in a statement.

The six recipients of the award were named at a reception at the University of Massachusetts Club.

One recipient, associate professor of public health M. Idali Torres of UMass Amherst was acknowledged for her dedication in furthering public health issues in Western Massachusetts.

Professor and founder and director of the Center for Social Development and Education Gary N. Siperstein of UMass Boston was acknowledged for improving the social development of children with learning and behavioral issues.

Associate professor of art history Memory A. Holloway of UMass Dartmouth received the award for her continuing efforts in making public service to the community an essential part of the UMass Dartmouth education, including feeding impoverished areas on the South Coast.

Music professor Kay G. Roberts of UMass Lowell was acknowledged for connecting different cultures through music and making music education a more important part in the education system.

Assistant professor in the department of computer science Fred Martin of UMass Lowell received praise for using robotics to transform science education and promote more scientific investigation for teachers and students.

Professor of molecular medicine, biochemistry and molecular pharmacology and cell biology Stephen J. Doxsey of the UMass Medical School also received an award for helping found the "UMass Laboratories for Worcester Area High Schools," which gives high school students the ability to come to the campus and receive hands-on experience in the science labs.

"These six professors are outstanding examples of public service; they have a passion for their professional fields and a commitment to their students and colleagues, but also an exemplary commitment to community engagement and service," said Wilson. "Their achievements are a credit to all of the dedicated, talented and hard-working faculty members who teach at our campuses and also contribute so much to our communities, locally, state-wide, nationally and globally."

The President's Public Service Awards first started in 1998, and so far a total of 59 UMass professors have been acknowledged with awards. The Massachusetts State House is hosting an exhibit in Doric Hall from Feb. 19 through Feb. 29, which will display photographs and more information about this year's six recipients.

"With these awards, we acknowledge the importance of their public service and the value we place on their contributions to the University of Massachusetts," said Wilson.

Kristen Healy can be reached at kkhealy@student.umass.edu.

Students to skip beaches for N.O. during break

BY KATHERINE NEUBERT
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

For most students, spring break means an entire week tanning on a beach far from New England, but for a group of medical students, spring break will consist of giving back to those in need.

Seven University of Massachusetts medical school students will travel to New Orleans during their one-week spring break in March to help a family rebuild a home they lost during Hurricane Katrina.

Bonnie Vallie, the trip's organizer and a first-year medical school student here, has been to

See KATRINA on page 2

Seven UMass medical students are spending spring break 2008 rebuilding a home devestated by Katrina.

Smith College to honor faculty member

BY ELIZABETH HAWLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Eric Reeves will receive an honorary degree from Smith College on March 6, in recognition of the work he's done to alleviate the suffering from the conflict in the Sudan.

"This is a particularly special moment for Smith," said media relations director Kristen Cole.

It is the first time a sitting faculty member has received an honorary degree from Smith College.

Reeves was chosen for the award by a committee, who opted to give him the degree because of his dedication to the people of Sudan. Reeves has been involved since 1999, and has worked as a consultant to several human rights organizations in the Sudan. He has testified before Congress and wrote several essays and a book on the crisis.

"I feel in some ways … that Sudan has saved my life," Reeves said in a video on the Smith College Web site.

In January 2003, he felt sick on a plane ride home from the Sudan, and thinking he had caught a bug while there, he got a check-up when he got home. Doctor's first discovered his leukemia during that visit to the physician's office.

"I know that I face another really tough battle," Reeves said. "I'm not really in remission."

Reeves will be facing a difficult round of chemotherapy later in the year. Because of his weakened immune system, he will likely never travel to the Sudan again.

In 1999, Reeves remembers speaking to a representative of Doctors Without Borders about the conflict in the Sudan. The representative mentioned something about Darfur needing a champion.

"I'm absolutely sure she was not thinking of me," Reeves said. "But I said words to the effect of 'I'll see what I can do … what I mean' turns out to have been that my life became consumed by the overwhelming human suffering and destruction that defined Sudan then and defines it now."

According to Reeves, about 500,000 people have died in the

See SUDAN on page 2

For his work in Sudan, professor Eric Reeves will become the only sitting faculty member of Smith to receive an honorary degree from the college.

UMass Lowell student in fair condition

BY ERIK TABER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A University of Massachusetts Lowell student who was left seriously injured after a truck struck her on campus has had her condition upgraded to fair.

Rachael Carnes, a 21-year-old senior from Haverhill, was sitting on a bench waiting for a bus on University Avenue when a delivery truck jumped a curb, hit two lamp posts, and then ran into her.

The truck rolled up over a stone wall before finally coming to a stop.

She was rushed to Boston Medical Center in critical condition. Since then, she has been upgraded to fair, according to the Lowell Police Department.

The driver, Jeffrey Hoban, 25, of Dracut, told police he did not know what happened. He was conscious after the crash.

A campus police officer reported seeing Hoban slumped on the driver's side of the truck moments before the crash.

Investigators are still trying to determine if there were any medical conditions that might have caused the crash. They say alcohol was not a factor.

Hoban was treated at a local hospital and released.

No charges have been filed at this point.

"The reaction around campus was shock, especially to those that know her and those who witnessed the incident," said Larry Siegel, dean of students at UMass Lowell. "She has a great group of friends who have been wonderful in supporting her and her family."

According to Dean Siegel, he and others, including Chancellor Meehan, "have been in touch with her family regularly to get updates and assure them of our support and concern."

According to University officials, they "are going to address her academic and financial issues for this semester, including retroactive withdrawals and refunds, if necessary, and make plans for her return and continued academic progress and success."

Erik Taber can be reached at etaber@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 82

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staggin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Maraea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenowaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Gaines

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, 1892 AND THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Across the Nation Around the World
News Wire

Beagle takes top prize for first time

BY BEN WALKER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Uno barked at his handler, bayed at the crowd, tried to grab his leash and took a flying leap at a piece of pork loin. Oh, and he gnawed away at a newly printed sign.

Now that's one great beagle.

His white-tipped tail in perpetual motion, Uno turned the green carpet of Madison Square Garden into his own personal backyard Monday. He also took his first winning steps at the Westminster Kennel Club show, easily earning best of breed at America's No. 1 dog event.

"Snoopy would be proud," handler Aaron Wilkerson said. "He was being his merry little hound self."

While best in show will be presented Tuesday night, the precocious package of personality certainly deserved one early title: noisiest in show.

"Ah-rooo!" his howls echoed all over the arena. It didn't take much to get Uno going, either. A click of a spectator's pen, a wave of the judge's hand, any effort by Wilkerson to hush him. "Ah-rooo!"

A perfectly trimmed toy poodle, a top Sealyham terrier and a prized Akita were among the 2,627 entries at this year's show. The dogs came in 169 breeds and varieties, and there were four newly sanctioned types – the Tibetan mastiff, Beauceron, Swedish vallhund and Plott.

Also roaming around the rings: a niece of Vivi, the award-winning whippet who ran away at John F. Kennedy International Airport two years ago, and the daughter of Rufus, the colored bull terrier that won the 2006 Westminster with a football-sized noggin.

Tri-colored and nearly 3, Uno moved into Monday night's judging in the hound group. While the movie "Underdog" was a big winner last year, a beagle is always a long shot at the Garden.

Westminster has presented best in show 100 times and a beagle has never won. In fact, no beagle has even won the hound group since 1939 – that drought is 483 years, in dog years.

Uno the beagle has become the first of his breed to win the Westminster Kennel Club's dog show.

UM students favor text alerts

TEXT from page 1

is another good option to have on campus.

However, Gray cautioned the idea that text messaging would prove an infallible system of notifying an entire campus of an emergency.

"This isn't a silver bullet," Gray said. "Text messaging is one of several different means in communicating with the campus in a time of emergency. With all the different kinds of emergency alerts, texting can be a good compliment to the others."

Once the program has been cleared by OIT, the project will still face a series of hurdles before becoming fully implemented at UMass.

Students will be required to register through SPIRE, and although the enrollment will be free, it will depend of the cell phone plan each student has on whether the text message itself will be free.

"At 10 cents a message, it's an affordable way to be notified if there's an emergency," said Blaguszewski.

Bridgewater State College is leading the way for the rest of the state, having already implemented a program into their campus.

It's an "important tool for communication in rapidly changing events," said Vice President and Chief Information Officer Bill Davis.

Developed by Verolii, and distributed by Honeywell, BSC has had their system running for a year and a half. Administrators are still in the process of retrieving numbers. Although it has not yet been put into effect, the school has tested the program and it worked great, according to BSC officials.

Despite the overall support alert text messaging appears to be receiving from colleges and universities, Fitchburg State College has opted out of the use of text messaging because the school felt that texting is "too limited" as a form of communication because of the 164 character limit, according to Interim Chief Information Officer Jamie Roger.

Instead, with the Connect-Ed program, which has been running at Fitchburg for almost two years, administrators have the ability to send verbal messages as well as e-mails at the same time.

At the time of an emergency, the phone numbers compiled in the system's database are automatically dialed with a message recorded by either Roger or the school president which can be accessed with a quick answer of the phone.

The campus-wide e-mail provides a written text, as well as a wave link where students can listen to the same voice recording that is distributed across phone lines.

Roger feels this is "one of many good ways to communicate," and Fitchburg is also working on other programs to notify student and faculty in the classroom.

However, one of the major advantages of alert texting is that "this option is mobile," said Blaguszewski.

"You don't have to be at a computer. Your cell phone goes with you. It's a great way to reach a mobile population," he said.

Sophomore Jackie Mathews said, "I always liked it. I had it in high school. It would just wake you up and then you could go back to sleep."

Agreeing with Mathews, sophomore Josalyn Williams, is also in favor of alert texting.

"I think it's a good idea. It's not going to be a guarantee to reach everyone, but it's another way," she said.

Medical students travel south to help rebuild after Katrina

KATRINA from page 1

New Orleans four times to help out Katrina victims, her first trip being in December 2005.

"Since then, I have been going on my own about every six to eight months with various organizations that are rebuilding," said Vallie.

Her trip in December 2005 lasted about six weeks, a lot longer than the latest scheduled venture to Louisiana. Vallie originally thought up the idea to go back down to New Orleans during UMass students' one-week break and told a number of her classmates about the idea.

Anne Gilroy, a UMass professor of cell biology and anatomy, asked to join Vallie and her peers during their trip. The seven medical school students include Thomas and Lacey Peteet, Emily Davie, Naomi Lawrence-Reid, Claudio Debarros and Genieve Berrasavo.

"I've been working with a friend, Kristen Seeley, who I met during my first trip to New Orleans to organize this trip. Kristen works with the non-profit organization Building Better Communities New Orleans (BBC NOLA)," said Vallie.

BBC NOLA doesn't just work with families who might need aid and support rebuilding there homes, but also their lives.

The students traveling with Vallie will be helping to gut, dry-wall and paint the house of a family they won't know until they arrive.

"Each time that I have gone, I've been amazed at the number of volunteers who are continuing to provide their time, effort and compassion for this region," added Vallie.

During her last trip in June 2007, Vallie learned that it will take up to 20 years to restore the city to what it once was. Tourist areas such as the French Quarter and the Garden District have been some of the first to be restored completely.

Professor battles leukemia raising awareness for Sudan conflict in the Sudan, and over two and a half million have been displaced.

SUDAN from page 1

"One of the things I think that's not been sufficiently highlighted in the news is the success of Darfur advocacy," said Reeves, who believes the loss of human life would be even more catastrophic if it weren't for the activists who pushed for a humanitarian presence in the region.

"The honorary degree really feels as though it's a moment for me to say to Smith … I miss you," said Reeves. "This is a place that's meant an enormous amount to me."

Reeves is a professor of English language and literature at Smith, currently on medical leave.

Elizabeth Hawley can be reached at ehawley@student.umass.edu

Manage Millions

ultimate responsibility at the start of your career.

Your day begins with a multi-million dollar business in your hands. The operations of an entire district awaiting your direction. And a chance to make your mark on a global organization. Some professionals strive their entire career for an opportunity like this. ALDI District Managers welcome it from day one.

The responsibility. The success. And the rewards. Welcome to More.

Discover more

Visit the Aldi booth at the Campus-Wide Career Fair on February 13, 2008

Visit the Aldi booth at the Co-op and Internship Opportunities 2008 Career Fair on February 14, 2008

Visit the Aldi booth at the ALANA Career Fair on February 13, 2008 or visit

ALDI.us/careers

ALDI
Welcome to More.

ALDI is an Equal Opportunity Employer.

I do not take a single newspaper, nor read one a month, and I feel myself infinitely the happier for it.
–Thomas Jefferson

Who are you going to trust, us or him?

www.dailycollegian.blogspot.com

University Health Services

Support and Therapy Group Meetings • Spring, 2008

STRESSBUSTERS
Thursdays, 3/13, 3/27, 4/3 and 4/10, 3:30 – 5 p.m.
Learn how to relax, reduce worry, manage your time and sleep better in this four-part series. Space is limited, so register early!

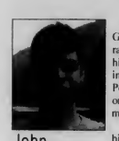
LIVING WITH LOSS
Tuesdays, 4 – 5:30 p.m.
A support group for undergraduate and graduate students dealing with the loss of someone close to them.

CONNECTING ON CAMPUS
Wednesdays, 2:30 – 4 p.m.
An undergraduate therapy group focusing on school adjustments, relationships, anxiety, depression and more.

MINDFULNESS-BASED STRESS REDUCTION (MBSR)
Mondays, 4 – 5:30 p.m. or Wednesdays, 5 – 6:30 p.m.
Mindfulness is a way of paying attention with intention, in the moment and without judgment. With regular practice, MBSR has the potential to lower stress, anxiety and depression, promote relaxation, improve concentration, raise self-awareness and enhance the immune system.

Pre-registration is required for all groups. Call 545-2337 or come to Mental Health Services, 127 Hills North, Monday – Friday, 8 a.m. – 5 p.m.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN



EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself"
–Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Farewell Mitt

John Gruenenfelder

Mitt, we hardly knew ye. Governor Romney, now out of the race for the presidency, delivered his concession speech last Tuesday in front of the Conservative Political Action Committee. If only he had done so with a little more tact.

Speaking in front of the CPAC, his tone is clearly going to lean to the more conservative side of things. There is a line, however, between giving your audience what it wants and woefully disparaging your opponents.

Romney's speech was not long, but in that time, he managed to praise Reagan, call for more God in politics, call for less God in politics, say that liberals have a "celebration of [pornography]," insinuate that Senators Clinton and Obama are cowards, and suggest that either a long campaign or a Democrat in office is surrendering to terrorists. It is quite an accomplishment to be so boastful, vitriolic and wrong in such a short amount of time.

Much of the speech is filled with what you would expect: talk of taxes, government spending and largesse, welfare reform and so on. By reminding the audience of his conservative views, he is surely building an image for a presidential run in 2012. I happen to disagree with most of these views, but that does not make them invalid.

Unfortunately, he goes far beyond conservative issues in his speech.

Particularly insulting is his claim that practicing the voting rights our democracy provides is tantamount to surrender.

He says, perhaps correctly, that continuing his primary campaign "would forestall the launch of a national campaign and make it more likely that Senator Clinton or Obama would win."

That is all well and good, but he goes on to say that he "simply cannot let [his] campaign be a part of aiding a surrender to terror." Conceding now to McCain to aid his national campaign is a laudable choice, but to compare a lengthy primary battle or a Democrat president as a surrender to terror?

Exercising our democratic rights are the very actions which strengthen our country.

Exercising our democratic rights are the very actions which strengthen our country. A lengthy primary season has political ramifications, but it does not harm our country. Does the same hold true of Democratic primaries? If that contest lasts all the way until the August convention, is our nation worse off than before? Certainly not.

Likewise, a Democrat in the White House, while perhaps unpalatable to those CPAC attendees, is not a surrender to terror. This sort of degrading speech, on the other hand, does harm our country. It builds walls and helps to keep the political atmosphere strongly polarized.

Such talk is also surprising coming from the former governor of Massachusetts. As a Republican governor in a liberal state, he had to reach to the other side and compromise. In doing so this state saw good legislation pass into law during his tenure.

In the end, Romney's campaign strategy of leaning further and further to the right (versus his far more moderate governorship) did not win him the support he needed from the many moderates in his party nor from the important independent voters.

Senator McCain's campaign strategy had him remain far more moderate and it has paid off. He is also unwilling to backpedal on some of the choices he made as a senator.

Merely mentioning the word "immigration" to the CPAC crowd brought boos, but he was unapologetic. There are some lessons here for Romney, and he has four years to study them.

America is looking for a more positive message this year. One that is far more positive than the picture Romney has painted. It is no secret that Democrats dislike, to put it lightly, the Bush administration and, to a far lesser degree, the Republican candidates.

But while they may strongly dislike conservative plans and policies, neither Clinton nor Obama has come close to calling a new Republican presidency a surrender to terror or any other such nonsense.

There is a marked difference between "bad for America" and "destroying America." This election has, and continues to be, exciting and a big reason for this is the positive outlook put forth by the left. Be it change, looking forward, or a better tomorrow, the outlook towards the future is good.

Meanwhile, security remains a strong theme from the right. With two protracted wars still underway, it is difficult to be positive about this. Playing the fear card worked well for Bush, but times are, fortunately, changing.

Romney's vitriol is gone now, for a few years at least, so here's hoping that McCain is wise enough to confront the Democrat's positive message of change with an equally positive view. The nation will be better off for it.

John Gruenenfelder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jgruenen@student.umass.edu.

9 OUT OF EVERY 10 UMASS STUDENTS WISH THEY WROTE FOR THE ED/OP PAGE

MAKE YOUR DREAMS A REALITY

Send us e-mail to
editorial@dailycollegian.com

An Egyptian celebration

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES

Greg Collins

Our shouts reverberated throughout the bustling streets of Cairo as the 15 of us American students, along with five or so Egyptians, shouted "Arbah wahid" continuously on one special night last week.

The words "Arbah wahid" translate to "four and one," the score of the soccer game between Egypt and Cote D'Ivoire in the ongoing African Cup, the most famous soccer tournament throughout the entire continent.

When Egypt won this semifinal game last Friday night, all of Cairo literally exploded like a firecracker. I was in a friend's apartment when the game ended, and immediately after its culmination, Egyptians flooded the streets of Cairo, chanting "Arbah wahid."

Cars sped throughout the streets, their horns beeping incessantly. Countless locals waved huge Egyptian black, white and red flags on the sidewalks, in moving cars and outside their apartments. Our group eventually ended up in a public area under a bridge near the Nile River.

Here was the most incredible part of our night. At least 300 Egyptians (along with American students scattered throughout the crowd) were chanting "Misr" in unison. Large groups encircled Egyptians who were hoisted up on the shoulders of their friends, waving flags and leading more cheers in colloquial Arabic.

A few friends and I moved ourselves right into the thick of the crowd. Egyptians, recognizing the presence of foreigners, grabbed our arms and started dancing with us in a circle. Keep in mind that this occurred as innumerable cars and passengers continued to drive by the area, beeping, yelling and waving their own flags without stopping.

Cairo is inhabited by almost 20 million Egyptians, so imagine 40 million eyes glued to television sets in "sheesha" shops throughout the city, silence permeating every crevice at one moment. And then the next moment, an explosion erupts whose intensity would put any UMass riot to shame. This was one of those singular moments that define your study abroad experience.

On a deeper level, the celebration showed how nationalism can be used in a positive manner to unify one's own people without creating divisiveness with another group. History has proven the deadly effects of having pride only in one's own ethnicity.

But there are cases, such as the one I experienced, which remind us never to forget to distinguish between oppressive governments, like Mubarak's regime, and the people, whose spirit never dies even under a dictatorial power. The pure joy evident on the 300 or so Egyptians' faces during the celebration confirmed this belief.

This was one of those singular moments that define your study abroad experience.

Less memorable, but no less satisfying is the food I recently consumed in Alexandria, the famous ancient city founded by Alexander the Great of Macedonia. A seaport of the Mediterranean Sea, "Alex," as it is known here, contains amazing seafood restaurants, along with historic citadels, remnants of Roman temples, and the second largest library in the world (behind the Library of Congress).

On Saturday night, we ate at a local place called El Baron, where we consumed hummus, salad, fish filets, fried calamari, seafood rice and a special tomato seafood soup, costing £432 in total.

During the meal, our three waiters kept bringing out more and more fish filets and calamari, even though we hadn't ordered any extra of these dishes. Their desire to please us Americans, their guests, embodied the hospitable spirit ubiquitous in Egypt (along with, of course, their desire to persuade us to give them money).

Now to an unabashed carnivore like myself, the seafood, along with the popular chicken, lamb and beef dishes, was heaven. Yet my favorite meal so far has been cooked pigeon, which I ate at a local Cairo restaurant with some American students and my Arabic teacher. They smirked at us at first while we were trying to figure out the best way to find the actual meat.

To Tejal Patel, my UMass friend who is also studying abroad here, it is a little more difficult to find the perfect meal, since she is a vegetarian. In fact, on the flight to Cairo, she was trying to learn how to say, "I don't eat meat," in Arabic, but of course forgot the phrase once we landed.

In any event, she has discovered delectable hummus dishes and other tasty vegetarian concoctions unique to the Middle East, meals that rival the flavor of the meat dishes I frequently consume.

Eating authentic Alexandrian seafood, downing Cairo pigeon, and dancing with 300 Egyptians – it has been an incredible week. This week may be even better – Egypt is playing Cameroon in the African Cup championship on Sunday.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu

Cross the street at your own risk

Devon Courtney

You would think that multiple stern warnings from the UMass Amherst Police Department would keep pedestrians from being dumb enough to waltz carelessly into the crosswalks.

Yet day after day, accidents happen. In the past year alone, at least 40 million people have died or been injured in the crosswalks on Massachusetts Avenue. That 100 percent true fact was not procured from a reliable source in the UMPD, but instead retrieved from the accurate statistical archives which are located in my imagination.

Regardless, most pedestrians are completely oblivious to the statistics, and probably delete the public safety bulletins lovingly enclosed in their student inboxes.

These e-mails contain important but extremely physically exerting suggestions such as to "look left, look right and then left again" before entering the crosswalk.

As far as I can tell, most people like nothing more than to make a beeline across the perilous street without so much as giving their two lazy eyes a painless flick to the side.

Pedestrians here in the Pioneer Valley have an undeserved sense of entitlement. I would like to personally address each soulless robot that crosses the street completely enveloped in his or her own universe.

I want to send a succinct message to every man and woman dressed in funky-colored UMass sweatpants, who are listening to their iPods, and chatting on their cell phones as they step haphazardly into the street.

Before I decide to slam my foot onto the gas pedal and make you into my new hood ornament, I just want you to understand the allowances that we motorists have made specifically for you. We drive humbly, in constant fear that a never-ending parade of brainless and inconsiderate ducklings will file across the street just a few feet in front of our bumpers.

Your right of way is not a substitute for your safety. Just because you're in the crosswalk does not mean you have a force field around you, protecting your skin from the onslaught of a speeding car.

If my brakes fail, your ribs aren't protected by the magical aura of the crosswalk. If the road is icy and slippery where you're crossing, there is a good chance that pompously forfeiting your caution will send you first class to the great crosswalk in the sky.

Pedestrians here in the Pioneer Valley have an undeserved sense of entitlement.

The suicidal tendencies of the Pioneer Valley street-crosser have recently drawn enormous grants from public safety campaigns. Orange-wearing, stop sign holding, traffic-halting crossing guards now garrison the crosswalks where the greatest amount of people have no regard for their own lives.

For me, it hearkens back to an elementary school memory. I had a crossing guard in my neighborhood, a friendly smiling accompaniment to the important lessons I was learning in kindergarten about traffic safety.

I still carry those lessons with me today, but I can't seem to figure out why everyone else here has seemingly forgotten them. Hundreds and thousands of lemmings wearing backpacks are throwing themselves into the streets without looking, and it makes the child inside me very sad.

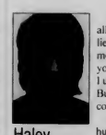
This summer, I was pulled over by a police officer, who insisted that there was a pedestrian approaching the crosswalk. I was baffled, because I didn't recall seeing anyone closer than 10 feet away from the street. As I graciously accepted the $200 ticket and promised to change my life, I began to realize that I may not have been the proverbial "squeaky wheel" that "needed the grease."

The police are more than willing to throw the book (usually filled with tickets) at any motorist who may or may have not been completely self-sacrificing for the sake of a careless pedestrian. Why shouldn't it be the other way around?

There are, after all, two unique sides contributing to this problem. Why don't you ever see officers handing tickets to jaywalkers? Or even better, why can't an officer stand at one end of the crosswalk and write ticket after ticket for pedestrians who are "walking to endanger?"

The accidents are still happening. It seems that tightening the noose on drivers or ordering battalions of crossing guards to hit the streets hasn't been curbing these incidents. Sorry about the pun.

I suppose that the only thing left for people to do is to take responsibility. As a pedestrian, I encourage others to stop and look both ways before darting out in front of a car. In that respect, I can safely assure that I and others around me won't go tumbling gracefully over someone's hood.



Here are some words of wisdom you should keep in mind before you approach the street, courtesy of Leslie Nielsen:

"Like a midget at a urinal, you'll have to stay on your toes."

You'd do well to listen.

Devon Courtney is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu

Finding the right job

Haley Navarro

I love money. We all do. Don't try to lie and say you hate money because it buys you food and clothing. I used to lie about it too. But now I guess I'm coming clean.

Money isn't really a huge necessity for me during the semester, but sometimes it's nice to have. Money can't buy happiness – it's true – but it can buy me new clothes. The only thing I really don't like about money is the things I have to do for it.

Any job you can think of, I've probably held it. I sold extremely hormonal pregnant women their cow-shaped cookie holders at Linen's N' Things, I've said the nicest things about Pad Thai for three years (still going strong), and I've steamed your milk for your cappuccinos. These are all reputable jobs.

I don't mind making minimum wage and barely being able to cover my gasoline expenses, as long as I'm having fun doing it. At my coffee shop job, I mostly just drank free drinks, moved pastries around on their respectable trays and listened to whatever music I wanted. I felt sort of bad for the customers though, as I'm sure they weren't as into the Spice Girls as I was.

I'm not incapable of keeping a job. I've had a couple jobs in my life but whether or not I choose to stay with them is the issue, not incapability. Around finals week last semester, hours at my Thai restaurant were scarce, so I decided to find another job, and to Craigslist.org I went.

Honestly, with a tagline like, "Base Pay – $20/Hour!" nobody is going to pass that up. I called the number and scheduled an interview. To get you to come to the appointment, they don't tell you what the job is. I guess in retrospect, this was some sort of investigative journalism.

The way that the company preys on college students is unprofessional.

I went into the interview in my "professional attire," and I still didn't know what I was being interviewed for, but I really liked the sound of $20 per hour. Turns out, my job was to hawk "Cutco" to customers face-to-face.

What is Cutco exactly? They're knives. They're alright knives. They're expensive knives. Point is, I had to make them seem like the best knives in the world in order to sell them.

In the end, I was only able to work for about a week and a half. Like I said, I'm not incapable of keeping a job, but it this case, I thought I was going to have an anxiety attack.

The job consists of showing your friends and family knives over college breaks. Knowing your family, they probably aren't going to say no, and that's what the company counts on.

The way you make money is appointments. You call your acquaintances that are of a specific age and you ask them if they'd like to see a presentation and you set a date and time. If I had scheduled six appointments for the next two days, my managers would be down my throat about why I didn't schedule more.

I would have to call the office multiple times a day to let the suits know how much I sold that day. If I reported that I made no sales for that day, their usually chipper voices would sort of go down to a somber tone and they'd want to know what I did wrong. I orally my answer was "nothing," but since their knives "sell themselves," it must have been my fault.

In the company's favor, I ended up selling about $4,000 in those 10 days I worked. That's what they expect. They bribe you with dream vacations, free cutlery, and even free pizza (that's what got me), to do the best you can with sales.

It's sort of the perfect equation for them. The $20 plus they pay for each presentation you do is nothing compared to how much the company makes a year.

The economy right now is in the trash. Gas is almost $3 per gallon sometimes. Sure, people can afford the knives, even if some of them are ridiculously expensive, but the way that the company preys on college students is unprofessional.

Most college students make $7 to $8 an hour at work-study jobs to do tedious things like data entry or put plants in soil. Some students even have off-campus jobs where they can make more, but the usual hum I hear from friends is "I need a job."

Companies like this one are throwing parties at the thought of this. They want to offer an alternative and a light at the end of the tunnel, but to be honest, I would rather steam a thousand lattes before reading a script in front of my family and friends again.

Haley Navarro is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnavarro@student.umass.edu

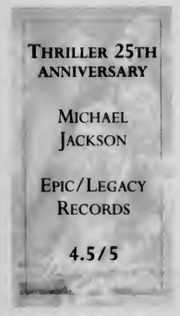
"GOOD THING YOU HAD ALL THOSE CREDIT CARDS!"

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Thriller' gets facelift



Modern remakes, original disc combine for 25th anniversary

BY STEPHANIE MCPHERSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

There was a time, more than 20 years ago, before he dangled his baby over the railing of a hotel balcony, before the infamous Neverland ranch scandal, before he transformed himself from a black man to a white woman, when Michael Jackson was in the record players of teens all over the world.

It's easy to write Jackson off in recent years, due to scandal after more salacious scandal, but looking back to the golden age of "Thriller," which was recently inducted into the Grammy Hall of Fame, proves that, at least at one point, Jackson deserved his multitudinous awards.

The two-disc, 25-year anniversary edition of "Thriller," in stores today, is better than ever. Along with the original song list, there are six new song collaborations, four music videos, and a 48-page color booklet, complete with lyrics, Jackson's thank-yous and great color photos from the hugely successful "Thriller" music video.

The CD kicks off with the original nine songs from the 1982 release, including "The Girl is Mine," a duet with former Beatle Paul McCartney, "Billie Jean," "Beat It" and, of course, "Thriller," to which classic horror actor Vincent Price lends his distinctive voice.

It was with this line-up that Jackson earned himself 12 nominations and eight wins in the 1984 Grammys, a record that has yet to be beat. In 1985, The Guinness Book of World Records named "Thriller" the Best Selling Album of All Time, and in the two-year period after its release, Jackson dominated the charts all over the world, with single after single striking musical gold. In the early 1980s, learning the "Thriller" dance was akin to knowing the "Macarena" in the 1990s or the "Soulja Boy" today.

On tracks 11 through 15 of the newest "Thriller," modern artists will.i.am, Akon, Fergie, and Kanye West give their interpretations to classic Jackson songs, two of the better being "Wanna Be Startin' Somethin' 2008" with Akon and will.i.am and "Beat It 2008" with Fergie. Other remixes include "The Girl is Mine 2008," "P.Y.T. (Pretty Young Thing) 2008," and "Billie Jean 2008." The final song on the first disk, "For All Time," is a previously unreleased love ballad that was recorded during the original "Thriller" sessions.

Popping in the DVD disc is a time travel back to the early days of MTV, when the station actually played music. There are four music videos to choose from, including the original "Thriller" short film, in which Jackson chases his terrified girlfriend around a dark street with a horde of dancing zombies behind him. This 15-minute video was revolutionary, released right at the birth of MTV. It's "considered the most important video clip in music history," according to the Rock 'n' Roll Hall of Fame Web site.

Also included on this disc is the legendary "Billie Jean" performance from the "Motown 25: Yesterday, Today, Forever" television special, which is considered to be the world premiere of the Jackson trademark "moonwalk" dance. This performance secured Jackson's validity as a solo-artist, and earned him an Emmy nomination.

The booklet included in the deluxe, limited edition of "Thriller" starts with a note from Jackson to his fans, written specially for this release. He says, "As we celebrate the 25th anniversary of 'Thriller,' I know that I would not have been able to reach any of the historic accomplishments associated with this album, without the love and continued support of you ... my fan."

The booklet is vibrantly colored and full of pictures of "Thriller"-era, pre nose job Jackson from music videos and photo shoots. Lyrics to the original nine songs are included, and the middle section is page after page of photos from the "Thriller" video.

No matter what he's done in recent years, there is no denying that Jackson has made an indelible mark on modern music. This anniversary CD is a showcase of his talents as a musician and entertainer.

And as long as he refrains from naming any more children after linens and steers clear of plastic surgery for a while, it's safe to say he's solidified his position as one of the greatest entertainers of all time.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcphers@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY MICHAEL JACKSON.COM

The most succesful album of all time, "Thriller" by Michael Jackson, is being re-released for its 25th anniversary. Aside from the original tracks, the disc also features six new song collaborations, music videos and a booklet.

Exploring art, artists in new exhibit

Latest collection from Huws comes to University Gallery

BY SOPHIA PASTORE
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Welsh artist Bethan Huws and her collection were introduced to the University of Massachusetts community at an opening reception last Wednesday night.

Huws is an award-winning artist who has been featured in solo exhibitions all across Europe since 1989. She was the recipient of the prestigious B.A.C.A. Europe Laureate Prize in 2006. This exhibition is her first in the United States.

This presentation of her collection, which will be housed in the University Gallery until Mar. 29, was preceded by a public conversation between Huws and guest curator Gregory Salzman.

In the answering of Salzman's questions, Huws revealed some of the inspiration behind her craft as well as the intent with which she creates. She also spoke of her evolution as an artist, saying of the thought behind an early project, "At that stage I didn't know how to think ... you don't think much when you're young."

At present, Huws seeks to provoke thought with her pieces. Traces of this can be seen in her early work as well, in which she focused on "subtle intervention" of a space to create meaning with minimal variety in material and maximum utility of space.

To exemplify this concept, she described one studio exhibition done in her early years as an artist in which she was given three connected, concrete-floored rooms.

She erected wooden platforms over approximately half of the floor space. This platform was irregularly laid out, with most of the wood in the center room, less in one adjacent room, and still less in the room on the other side. She described this space as a representation of a tree – most sun shining on the top of the tree, and less shining through the branches.

"I am interested in being very concise," says Huws of her work. "I am always working ... to make it look easy."

She speaks of her pieces as complex although compact, and requiring space.

Some of her pieces literally have a message. One piece was a rubber board in an aluminum and glass frame with plastic letters saying, "That artists don't have much to say: proves that they are speaking."

Another, similarly presented, says, "What's the point of creating more artworks when you don't understand the ones you've got?"

These pieces of art echo the thoughts of their creator, who said, "People who don't like my work are normally people who don't keep a lot of things in their head."

She spoke also of people who enjoy her work, saying, "They're full of their own thoughts ... they have plenty of material in their head ... this person survives well in an exhibition of mine."

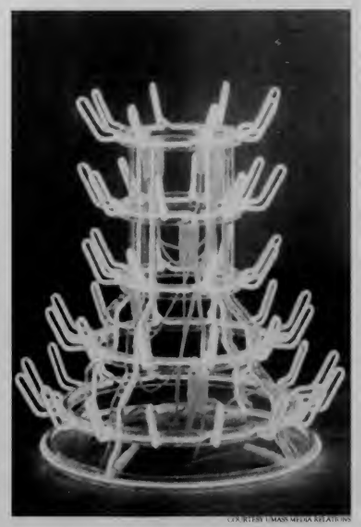
Watercolor was also featured as a medium. A series of paintings featured patterns of concentric circles. These were described by Huws as imitations of droplets falling into water.

Also featured were six large bound notebooks that were Huws' main project for a four-year period in which she did not work on exhibitions and instead focused on reading, writing and contemplating. These notebooks were full of what Huws called "notes." Included in these notes were writings, diagrams and typed lists.

Pieces of sculpture were also featured on pedestals as well as on the floor. These included a plant, an onion and a Russian doll, and a series of small boats made from long pieces of grass called "rushes."

These rushes hold a special significance for Huws. As a child in Wales, she was taught to make a boat from a single rush, which she would then race down a stream with other children. In her days as an art student, she was assigned to create a piece that answered the question, "What is art?"

In response to this question, Huws constructed many of these rush-boats. She connects this action with her cultural identity as a native of Wales. She says that making these small sculptures is a way to create a tradition of Welsh sculpture where there has previously been none.



She summed up her feelings on the subject during her interview, saying, "If anything is art, then the boat is art."

Huws seeks not only to provoke thought in the consumer of her art, but she also gains personal benefit from the making of it as well. Speaking of the process of re-creating the rush-boats of her childhood and also of the process of making any inspired object, she said, "I want to know where the thing came from, for myself."

This inquisitive nature, along with the fruits of deep reflection, is what makes the work of Huws memorable and worthwhile. She seeks to inspire thought in her audience while also expanding her own experience. Her work is simple in form yet complex in its implications.

On Feb. 27 at 4:30 p.m., the University Gallery will host an event called "In Conversation." Alexander George, Amherst Philosophy Department Chair, Mario Ontiveros, Art/Art History Department Chair, and Cathy Portuges, director of Film Studies will meet to discuss the work of Bethan Huws and its relevance to modern thought. This event is open and free to the public.

Sophia Pastore can be reached at spastore@student.umass.edu

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Bethan Huws is displaying her latest collection at the University Gallery. It is the first time she has done an exhibit in the United States.

Magnetic Fields still charged in new disc

BY BRIAN WOOD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Following a four-year lull, a perplexing Volvo jingle, and much anticipation, Stephin Merritt has returned with The Magnetic Fields and released "Distortion," a nearly 40-minute haze of 1960s pop, soothing melodies and reverb-infused instrumentation.

"Distortion's" opening track, "Three-Way," serves as the perfect introduction to separate the Fields' latest offering from its more electro-pop centric predecessor, 2004's "i." Gone from the equation are the heavy usage of synth notes and flashes of new wave, replaced by an unequivocally surf inspired number, heralding Merritt's intentions on "Distortion" from its very incipiency.

"Distortion" is an album dissimilar to any The Magnetic Fields have produced in their 17 year history. Full of 1960s pop grooves, and an overwhelming amount of fuzz, the album proves to be an ambitious, and highly successful, departure for the band.

Never before has Merritt's voice, long renowned for its unique delivery and deep tone, sounded better than it does here. With a musical backdrop fitting of the album's title consisting of distorted percussion and heavily fuzzed-out guitars, Merritt's vocals memorize as they are ushered to the forefront and it is next to impossible to resist.

Merritt's sense of blunt wit is displayed full force on "Too Drunk to Dream," with its comical acapella hymn introduction and bouncy choruses. The subtle squealing feedback slowly escaping the surplus of reverb heavy, yet upbeat, instrumentation aids in the track's momentum that ultimately culminates in an impeccable crescendo that pays off in all the right ways.

While Merritt's vocal contributions are certainly worth considerable praise, "Distortion" shines its brightest when Shirley Simms, Merritt's heavenly voiced counterpoint, assumes the vocal duties. Luckily for listeners, Simms is prominently featured..

Simms' initial offering, "California Girls," is an infectiously catchy and acrimoniously worded rebuke to the Beach Boys classic of the same name. Continuing with the theme of catchy composition, "Drive on Driver" is another upbeat highlight that lyrically forces comparison to the bands earliest works. With its more country-based, open-road imagery, "Drive on Driver" touches on themes that haven't been prominent in the band's lyrics since their 1994 release, "The Charm of the Highway Strip."

Transitioning from the more pop-influenced selections, "Till the Bitter End" is an entrancing slow-down piece, Simms voice hitting all the points of the spectrum missed by Merritt's beloved baritone, which are at there best subsequently on the album's follow up, "I'll Dream Alone."

Perhaps the album's brightest moment comes when Merritt and Simms share the spotlight on "Please Stop Dancing." A simplified backbone beat carries the call and response structured piece but is cleverly complicated by the inclusion of enough atmospheric noise to span an entire record, accented by select and delicate notes surfacing throughout. Despite its highly repetitive verses, the contrast created by the dueling vocals delivers almost a whirlwind effect, encapsulating the listener in its quirks and charms.

"Distortion" is an album filled with consistent high points, gorgeously delivered vocals, and a backdrop of blissful dissonance. Well worth the wait, "Distortion" is arguably The Magnetic Field's best offering since 1995's "Get Lost," and will surely satisfy their patient fan base to the fullest extent.

Brian Wood can be reached at bjwood@student.umass.edu

Grammy Awards still strong after 50 years

West, Winehouse big winners while Hancock pulls shocker

BY PETER RIZZO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's the beginning of a new year, and along with the unavoidable flowering of spring comes the equally unavoidable and far less anticipated season of award shows. The very utterance of the phrase "award show" may be enough to get some viewers running from their television sets.

Okay, that might be a little extreme; however, the fact remains that award shows are among both the most loved and hated yearly television events. The Grammys, music's biggest award, are no different than their award show brethren in the fact that they have the unique ability to shock, entertain and bore the viewer often at the same time.

The Grammy Awards, which celebrated its 50th birthday on Sunday night, proved at the very least that they can still provide entertaining television, though not always for the intended reasons. The event, which aired on CBS, clocked in at just under four hours and featured performances spanning all genres – from hip-hop to classical, from rock to soul.

However, before the awards could be handed out, it had to be noted to the audience that these are the 50th Grammy Awards and the show wasted little time tooting its own horn. Throughout the night, the Recording Arts Academy of America gave out numerous lifetime achievement awards, presumahly to artists snubbed in their own time, and repeatedly name checked its laundry list of former winners.

The show started off on the right foot with a performance that blended the past and the present, with a duet between Alicia Keys and the late Frank Sinatra singing "Learnin' the Blues." The duet, which featured the always-likeable Keys trading lines with the former Rat Pack member via digital effects, proved that the Grammys, though 50 years old, are not without the capacity for original ideas.

Unfortunately, the rest of the show was unable to go off as smoothly as the first performance. The Grammys wasted no time attempting to satiate its audience's wide variety of tastes. However, the night did come complete with some moments that seem ripe for water cooler gossip.

The first such moment came when Kanye West took the stage, backed by indie/techno icons Daft Punk, wearing glow-in-the-dark sunglasses and sporting the word "Mama" shaved into the back of his head. After they teamed up for West's song "Stronger," the always controversial rapper took the stage alone to perform his song "Mama." The tune, which was dedicated to his late mother, provided a touching moment and prompted a standing ovation from the crowd.

The rapper would later go on to win "Best Rap Album" for his third disc, entitled "Graduation." When accepting the award, the orchestra began to play in an attempt to shoo the outspoken West off the stage as quickly as possible. Instead of leaving, he continued to speak calmly, thanking his supporters and lastly, his mother. This prompted him to say angrily, "It would be in good taste to stop the music," and on command the music quickly stopped.

Though West did his best to steal the show, the main focus was on the missing Amy Winehouse, who racked up a total of five awards. The troubled songstress was denied a visa and was unable to attend the ceremony, but did appear via satellite. Winehouse, backed by a large ensemble of musicians in a concert hall in England, played her hit song "Rehab," which would later be crowned both "Record of the Year" and "Song of the Year."

Winehouse looked authentically shocked at the news of her win and spent several minutes hugging her band before getting up to the microphone to deliver a virtually unintelligible speech in her native cockney accent.

The Foo Fighters played with a lucky fan, chosen by audience voting in one of the more bizarre attempts by the show to appease its youthful audience. Older R&B greats Tina Turner and Aretha Franklin showed that they could still perform with the best of them. Turner and Beyoncé Knowles teamed up for three songs, including "What's love got to do with it" and "Proud Mary," while Franklin took part in a gospel segment.

The Awards also crafted a unique two-song tribute to the Beatles, which featured music from Cirque de Soleil's "Love," as well as music from "Across the Universe."

The Grand Prize for "Album of the Year" was the last to be awarded and featured the most surprising win of the evening. The award went to Herbie Hancock and his newest album "River: The Joni Letters." A former jazz great, Hancock thanked the academy for selecting his album for album of the year, the first jazz album to win the prize in 43 years.

The biggest winners of the night were Winehouse and West, who received a total of nine Grammys.

The show, which normally wastes its time presenting awards that no audience member is interested in, and indulging in the sterilized celebrity banter that proceeds handing out any award, was able to stay entertaining by focusing mainly on performances. This change of pace kept the show fresh and entertaining. And while the show does violate the old maxim "If you try to please everyone, you'll end up pleasing no one," you have to at least admire the scope of their effort.

Peter Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu.

Grammy 2008 winners

ALBUM OF THE YEAR
River: The Joni Letters, Herbie Hancock

RECORD OF THE YEAR
"Rehab," Amy Winehouse

SONG OF THE YEAR
"Rehab," Amy Winehouse, songwriter (Amy Winehouse)

NEW ARTIST
Amy Winehouse

RAP ALBUM
Graduation, Kanye West

ROCK ALBUM
Echoes, Silence, Patience & Grace, Foo Fighters

COUNTRY ALBUM
These Days, Vince Gill

R&B ALBUM
Funk This, Chaka Khan

The 50th Grammy Awards featured highlights including Kanye West and Amy Winehouse as big winners, Herbie Hancock shocking with album of the year and performances by Tina Turner, Aretha Franklin and Foo Fighters.

VISITING COLLEGE CHEF SERIES

Welcome Back
Chef Ralph Coughenour
University of New Hampshire , CEC, AAC, CFBE

WILDCAT FAVORITES:

- Corn Chowder
- Stout Glazed Short Ribs
- Baked Salmon & Gorgonzola Butter
- Chipotle Honey Glazed Pork Loin
- Herb Roasted Vegetables
- Vegetables au Gratin
- Ugly Mashed Potatoes
- Turtle Bar

UNHDining gotta have it!

Tuesday, February 12, 2008
Berkshire DC from 5–9 pm

2007 Grand Prize

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst

FoodManagement's BEST CONCEPTS

umass.edu/diningservices

Dine & Win!

Enter to win a trip for two with $500 spending money.

UMass Dining, Coca-Cola®, and American Airlines® want to fly you and a guest to any destination during Spring Break in North America including 48 states and Canada!

Enter between January 28 and February 12, 2008 at any UMass Dining Commons or retail location.

Drawing will be held Wednesday, February 13 at 6 pm at Worcester Dining Commons

*Official Rules
• No purchase necessary
• Must be 18 years old or older
• Open to UMass Dining customers

*For details, umass.edu/diningservices OR see entry boxes

YCMP RESIDENTIAL FoodManagement's BEST CONCEPTS

BRIAN TEEFEY/COLLEGIAN

Ricky Harris is the second-leading scorer on the Minutemen but has struggled recently. The sophomore guard is averaging 12.2 points and shooting 29.5 percent from the floor in the team's last five games.

Turnovers hinder Minutewomen

W. BASKETBALL from page 8

ROAD WOES

The loss at URI gave UMass a 2-9 record overall away from the Mullins Center. The Minutewomen have been great at home, sporting a 9-2 overall record. At home they are averaging 72 points per game, while on the road they only average 58.9.

At the Mullins Center, they have compiled two record-scoring nights this season. They scored 91 against URI back on Jan. 11 and two weeks later tied the mark by scoring 91 against Yale.

"We know how tough it is to play on the road, we haven't been a great road team," Dacko said at practice before the URI game

TURNOVER TROUBLE

Though the Minutewomen cut down on their turnovers (12) in their 66-63 Feb. 6 win over La Salle, they reverted back to turning the ball over heavily against Rhode Island this past Saturday.

UMass committed 20 turnovers in the 75-64 road loss, with 11 coming from its two best players Mills and Rosanio. The former had four turnovers while the latter committed seven.

Dacko was unpleased that both seniors and leading scorers led the team in turnovers. When these two players commit 11 turnovers it becomes difficult for the team to win, but the statistic can be deceiving because the ball is so often in the pairs' hands.

Rosanio leads the team with four turnovers a game but is also second in assists with 3.4 per game, while Mills is second in turnovers with three per contest but also averages 3.1 assists, good for third on the team.

The Minutewomen remain one of the most unselfish teams in the country, as is evidenced by their conference-leading 17.3 assists per game. They also lead the conference in field-goal percentage (44.8 percent)

However, they also average 18.3 turnovers per game and this limits the amount of shots they're able to take.

URI also committed 18 turnovers in the win against UMass, so shot attempts were virtually equal in the game. In the game against St. Joseph's on Feb. 3, the high turnover rate came back to hurt the Minutewomen.

The Hawks turned it over 16 times, but didn't near the total of the Minutewomen (25). Due to this turnover disparity, St. Joe's took 11 more shots and won the game by six points, despite shooting nine percent less from the field than UMass.

Steve Games and Mike Connors can be reached at sports@dailycollegian.com

UMass to play on national television guard Ricky Harris has been mired in a shooting slump the past five games.

M. BASKETBALL from page 8

Harris's scoring average was at 20.6 following the matchup with the Hawks, but has dipped below 19 points per game during this stretch. In the five games (three losses) Harris has averaged 12.2 points per game on 29.5 percent shooting from the field.

His struggles from the 3-point line are even more pronounced, with Harris shooting at a 17.9 percent clip (7-of-39) from the perimeter over the last five games. His 3-point field goal percentage has dipped from 38.8 percent to 34.1 percent over that stretch.

Harris has scored 61 points in the five games, attempting 61 shots.

ONE IN 6,782

The 6,782 fans that came to the Mullins Center on Feb. 7 to watch UMass take on URI went home happy. Gary Forbes made sure of it.

"I was just trying to please the fans; they came out in great numbers and supported us and cheered the whole way," he said after the game.

Forbes scored a game-high 26 points and added 13 rebounds in the 78-76 victory for the Minutemen over the Rams. The senior forward struggled from the field (11-of-30) but was extremely aggressive all night, constantly powering into the lane looking to get close baskets and to draw contact.

Forbes seemed to have a higher level of intensity all game long, prompting questions in the post-game press conference whether one particular person in attendance led to his performance.

"I saw him, definitely. You can't help but notice him," Forbes said, referring to Boston Celtics General Manager Danny Ainge, who was sitting on press row throughout the game. "But I didn't really focus about that, I was just trying to get a win, a big win for this team.

"I got eight games left in the regular season of my college career, right now I'm just trying to have fun with it and play as hard as I can."

ESPN x 2

The Minutemen will have two upcoming games televised nationally on ESPN2, starting on Thursday at 9 p.m. against Fordham. The second game will air on Feb. 21 at 7 p.m., a road matchup with the Rams.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

Mass Attack endures struggles on power play

BRIAN TEEFEY/COLLEGIAN

Senior forward P.J. Fenton is second on the Minutemen with 14 assists in 26 games on the season. He also has five goals and hold a +4 rating.

HOCKEY from page 8

the Minutemen qualify for and win the Hockey East Tournament, they'll receive an automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament; otherwise their resume of wins and losses will determine their fate.

The Minutemen won season series with Boston College and New Hampshire along with four consecutive wins over Maine that bolstered UMass's resume for the selection committee.

UMass has some impressive wins this time around, including the wins over CC and Notre Dame but not much else works in favor of the Minutemen at this point.

The Minutemen have already lost season series to Providence and UMass Lowell who are ahead of them in the Hockey East standings, PWR and both national polls.

Remaining games with Northeastern, Boston University and Maine are vital for the Minutemen for a number of reasons. Not only would wins shoot UMass up its conference table but they would increase the likelihood of an at-large bid.

SPECIAL TEAMS

Before BC's Dan Bertram beat freshman goaltender Paul Dainton in the third period of Saturday's loss to the Eagles, the Minutemen had killed off 11 of their last 12 penalties. UMass is consistently one of college hockey's least penalized teams, averaging 11.7 penalty minutes per game.

The three major penalties UMass has taken this season skews its penalty minutes per game number but not by so much that the number is unreliable.

While the penalty kill has improved, the UMass power play has not followed suit. UMass is three of its last 24 on the man advantage which is the main reason for the problems they've had on offense during recent games.

In consecutive games, a win over Maine and loss to Northeastern, the Minutemen were 1-for-12 on the man advantage.

Seniors Mike Kostka and P.J. Fenton man the point on UMass's primary power-play unit, and developed strong chemistry together. Kostka leads the Minutemen with five power-play goals. His last came during a 5-on-3 against Vermont on Jan. 26; sophomore Martin Nolet scored on the back end of the two-man advantage.

UMass's power play ranks fifth in Hockey East at 15.9 percent efficiency. They're more than capable of scoring on the power play; it's just been a tough stretch in all aspects of the game for the Minutemen.

INJURY REPORT

Injuries have been a struggle for the Minutemen for most of the season. Junior John Wessbecker hasn't played since the 0-0 tie with Cornell on Nov. 30, forcing Cahoon to rotate redshirt senior Patrick Dineen, redshirt freshman Kevin Kessler and freshman Doug Kublin in his spot.

Ortiz, Nolet and sophomore Brett Watson have all missed time this season with injuries. Kostka suffered a broken finger earlier in the season, and although it no longer bothers him, he said it took him a while to get comfortable shooting earlier in the season.

In the second game of season, sophomore goaltender Dan Meyers suffered a pulled groin muscle and missed considerable time. Dainton stepped in and emerged as one of college hockey's premier young goaltenders.

The latest addition to UMass's injury list was freshman Chase Langeraap who went down in second period of Saturday's loss to BC.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com.

Disney college program
IS COMING TO YOUR CAMPUS!

University of Massachusetts - Amherst
Thursday • February 14 • 5:00PM
Friday • February 15 • 12:00PM
Campus Center Room 917

Come discover why the Disney College Program is an opportunity you just can't miss!

Are you a college student who is looking for:

- A paid internship opportunity that will stand out on a résumé?
- A chance to build your résumé and gain real-world experience with a world-renowned company?
- A custom-designed learning curriculum that could earn you college credit?
- An opportunity to meet people from around the world, make lifelong friends, and have fun?

Can't make our presentation? View our online E-Presentation disneycollegeprogram.com/epresentation

Dream it. Do it. Disney.
© Disney • EOE • Drawing Creativity from Diversity

Butterfly
Chinese & Japanese Restaurant
WWW.BUTTERFLYHADLEY.COM
Vegetarian Menu Available
Enjoy drinks at the full bar!
Free Delivery Hadley (Min. $15.00) Out of Town (Min. $20.00)
(413) 585-8989
Mon. – Thurs. 11:30am – 10:00pm | Fri. & Sat. 11:30am – 11:00pm
Sunday 12:00noon – 10:00pm
48 Russell St (Rt. 9) Hadley, MA 01035

Auto Express
Fast, Quality Service
Student Discount
20% off oil change

SUNDAY SPECIAL (Every Sunday from 10am to 4pm) : Full Service Oil Change $19.95
FREE WIRELESS INTERNET
Auto Express is your one stop for MASS STATE INSPECTIONS
with extended hours for your convinence!
Monday, Wednesday & Friday 8 am to 6pm
Tuesday & Thursday 8am to 7pm
Saturday 8 am to 5 pm
Sunday 10 am to 4pm
Axels • Brakes • Batteries • Mufflers • Tune-Ups • Full Service Oil Changes
118 South East St. Amherst, MA 01002
413-253-0056

Chilli "Chilli Factor" Sanders-Jones
[illegible] a 1990 d. February 1, 2008

Chilli was a [illegible] love and joy into the [illegible] He was especially fond of [illegible] and exploring the insides of [illegible] admirers. He was a free-spirited furball [illegible] hobbies included sniffing, hiding, and [illegible] "The Chill" knew how to have a good time, [illegible] occasionally bit off more than he could [illegible] The weirdest things he ever ate were some [illegible] button lint and a taco. Chilli had a full and [illegible] fying life, surrounded by food and good [illegible] He is survived by his brothers Matt and [illegible] and many friends from around the world. There will be a public candle-lighting [illegible] ceremony Wednesday afternoon at 6pm [illegible] Crestview Apartments near the woods to cel[illegible] ebrate the life of this rodent rapscallion. [illegible] send letters of sympathy and condolences to the bereaved c/o Comics at the Daily Collegian. Adios Chilliman.

We'll miss you. Much Love.

ACROSS
1 Fencer's weapon
5 Bat wood
8 Bohemian dances
14 Small valley
15 School org.
16 Glacial epoch
17 Run in neutral
18 Table scrap
19 Tidy
20 Flow in a small, gentle stream
22 Break with force
23 Antagonistic
24 Keep within limits
27 Medicated liquids
29 Cellular letters
30 Yuletide song
34 Pool stick
35 Process flour
36 Yemeni port
37 Friendship
39 Joint protected by the patella
40 Float up
41 Coiled coiffure
42 Coffin stands
43 Actor Marvin
44 Mystery writer Allingham
47 Be superior in military status
49 Signifies
54 Trust-busting Roosevelt
55 Everlasting
56 Ohio city
58 ___ Lanka
59 Nora's pooch
60 1 and 1, side by-side
61 Gone by
62 Sheep fat
63 European vipers
64 Cub Scout pack unit
65 Pianist Myra

DOWN
1 Archie's wife
2 ___ of Aragon
3 New York island
4 Vote into office
5 Harlem hot spot
6 Mason's Della
7 Derby or boater
8 Cash for incidentals
9 Immense quantities
10 Smallest possible
11 Hepburn of Hollywood
12 Ripen
13 D.C. bigwig
21 Turn off, as an engine
22 Tonto's horse
25 Deduce
26 Thurmond and Archibald
28 Frosting
30 Director Ponti
31 Farewell in Bordeaux
32 Colonized anew
33 Individual
35 Schuss
37 Forsakes
38 Dark and dim
42 Unit of memory
44 Bright red
45 Become obvious
46 Allotted amount
48 Writer of "Still Me"
50 Rubbish
51 Follow in order
52 Costs per unit
53 Venetian blind strips
56 Afternoon affair
57 Advanced in years
58 Blue

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

In repetition there is comfort.

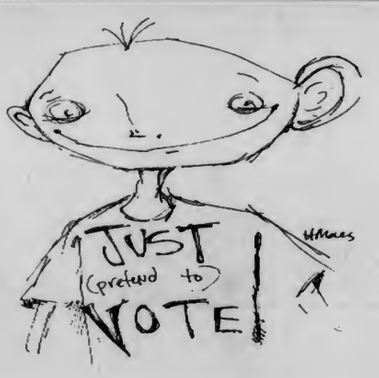
	9			3		4
		5	6			2
4			9			6	3
	7					1		3
		9		8
2	1					8
	9	8		2				6
	2			8	9
	7		3			9

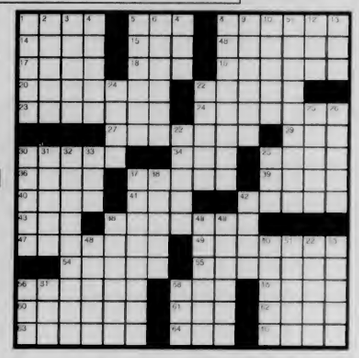
QUOTE OF THE DAY

"When we die, our bodies become the grass, and the antelope eat the grass. And so we are all connnected in the great Circle of Life."

-Mufasa

MEN IN THE BOX BY DANIEL LUCEY





TO BE CONTINUED

RETRO GEEK BY STEVE DICKENSON AND TODD CLARK

ILLUSTRÉ BY HEATHER MAES

Still looking for the PERFECT summer job?

We CAN help!

Grotonwood and Oceanwood two Christina summer camps looking for qualified college students to be a part of a life-changing ministry this summer.

SPECIAL NEEDS UNIT LEADER - The perfect position for a Special Education major that wants to gain more experience working with special needs adults, and develop their leadership skills. Summer salary of $3,100 + room/board

COUNSELORS - This is an awesome opportunity to make a difference in the lives of kids this summer. Challenge the campers to grow while developing your leadership and teaching skills. Summer salary of $2600 + room/board

For more information and an application, go to our website - www.grotonwood.org and look under the "summer staff" tab

Grotonwood - Oceanwood
167 Prescott St
Groton MA 01450
978-448-5763
office@grotonwood.org

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18

[illegible] you were wearing a mood ring it would [illegible] a pink color. This good my angry little [illegible], not good at all.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20

This page is colorful. Just like you.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19

Attempt to engage in at least three positive social interactions today. You are currently operating at roughly -5.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20

You are lazier about schoolwork than UMass is about fixing the thousands of giant potholes that riddle our streets.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21

At this point, there is no need to show any of the Backstreet Boys the meaning of being lonely. They get it.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22

You loved as hard as you could, given your propensity of flaccidity.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22

It's better to have loved and lost than never to have impulsively accepted ownership of a truly magical Chinchilla.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22

Pretentious outdoorsmen will claim that mittens are better than gloves, but really, lighting your hands on fire works best.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22

If you're getting sick of your GF, don't cheat. Suggest role play.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21

You only drink as a means to excuse yourself from having standards when selecting a mate. In short, you love the goggles.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21

Give yourself a pat on the back for having the self awareness not to nosepick in public.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19

Quit being so negative!

The best answer to your mourning wood: the comics page.

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT. FOR RENT

Center of Town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further.

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today toll free at 1-888-684-2267 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab.linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

THE GREATEST SUMMER OF YOUR LIFE CAMP PONTIAC is coming to UMASS! Located in NY State Camp Pontiac, a premier co-ed overnight camp in New York, is looking for fun, enthusiastic and mature individuals who can teach and assist in all areas of athletics, aquatics, the arts, or as a general bunk counselor. Interviews will be held on Thursday, Feb. 21st 9:00AM-11:30AM Campus Center/Student Union Complex-Room 901. Please email: stefanie@camppontiac.com or call Stefanie at 516-626-7668 to set up an interview

CAMP TAKAJO, Naples, Maine, Picturesque lakefront locations, exceptional facilities, Mid-June thru mid-August. Counselor positions in tennis, swimming, land sports, water sports, tripping, outdoor skills, theatre arts, fine arts, music, nature study. Call Camp Takajo at (866) 356-2267 Submit application on-line at www.takajo.com. Will be in the Campus Center -Job Fair Feb 14th

EMPLOYMENT

RAFT GUIDES
Zoar Outdoor is seeking adventuresome people to be full and part-time summer raft guides. Learn how to guide a raft during our training program and spend the summer on the Deerfield River. Applicants should have customer service experience and a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independently. Application deadline: Feb. 15th. Call

EMPLOYMENT

800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.
Rent us your ears!

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing,

SERVICES

STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential. Affordable. Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

Spring Break 08 Hot Deals, Hot Destinations, Hot Parties. Ask about Group Deals and FREE TRIPS. 1-800-426-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com

TRAVEL

WHAT ARE YOU DOING FOR SPRING BREAK?
Want a cooler Spring Break than the typical Cancun? Travel to Amsterdam, Paris, Italy, or Prague and get a FREE Ipod Shuffle and $100 off! Contact your Contiki Umass Reps at pbordona@student.umass.edu or cromano@student.umass.edu or go to the STA Office for more

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass struggles to score

Multiple players in scoring droughts for Mass Attack

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The hallmark of teams coached by Massachusetts hockey coach Don Cahoon has always been a stingy defense and an offense based more on taking advantage of opponent mistakes rather than actively pursuing offensive chances.

During the 2006-07 season, the Minutemen had more luck producing offense on a consistent basis, and after a 5-4 win over Colorado College on Dec. 30, the Minutemen looked to be building on the success of last season's team.

Since, however, the Minutemen have suffered a scoring drought that has seriously hurt their chances at securing home ice in the first round of the Hockey East Tournament.

In its last nine games, UMass has scored 18 goals compared to the 18 they scored in the five before that.

Cahoon commented after Saturday's loss to Boston College that his players were making the right decisions mostly but failed to finish plays off on both ends of the ice. In the five games — four wins and a tie — from Nov. 25 through Dec. 30, the Minutemen averaged 40 shots per game; since the New Year, however, UMass averaged 28.8.

As such, several players are in the midst of lengthy scoring droughts.

UMass Hockey

Sophomore winger Will Ortiz led the teams with six goals after a 4-2 loss to Vermont on Nov. 20. That was 13 games ago, and it was also the last time Ortiz scored. He missed the following game, a 5-2 win over Union, with an undisclosed injury, but hasn't found stride since.

Senior Matt Burto and junior Alex Berry are having similar problems scoring goals. Burto hasn't scored since netting the game-winning goal in the win over CC, and Berry hasn't in that same stretch. Both players did miss one game during that span but not for injury purposes.

Cahoon looks for his forwards to do other things for the Minutemen, but Burto, Ortiz and Berry are such talented offensive weapons that their lack of production is something the Minutemen cannot win without.

HOW THE MIGHTY HAVE FALLEN

After the win over CC in the championship game of the Lightning College Hockey Classic, the Minutemen reached the highest point they ever have in the USCHO/CSTV Division I Men's poll at No. 5.

In the latest edition, the Minutemen had fallen completely out of the poll and sat 20th in the PairWise Rankings — hockey's answer to basketball's RPI. Should

See HOCKEY on page 6

BRIAN TSUCHIDA/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore forward Will Ortiz has six goals on the season but has failed to put the puck in the back of the net the last 13 games.

Recent slide clouds NCAA tourney hopes

Upcoming games at Mullins Center crucial for Minutemen

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Syracuse, Boston College and Dayton on the road; Rhode Island, Charlotte and Houston at home – the Massachusetts men's basketball team has racked up some impressive victories this season.

And not-so-impressive defeats, including IUPUI, Northern Iowa, Saint Louis and Saint Joseph's twice.

The Minutemen (15-8, 4-5 Atlantic 10) finished the non-conference portion of their schedule at 12-2, with huge wins against the aforementioned Syracuse, Houston and BC. After losing close games to then-undefeated Vanderbilt and to Saint Joseph's in the A-10 opener, UMass beat Dayton (nationally ranked at the time) and Charlotte in consecutive games.

UMass M. Hoops

The NCAA Tournament was looking like a very distinct possibility. But since the win over the 49ers, UMass has lost four of its last six games and are currently tied for eighth place with three other teams in the conference standings.

In order to avoid a second-straight NIT appearance, the Minutemen will have to finish strong in their remaining seven A-10 games and make a strong run in the conference tournament in Atlantic City.

The Minutemen are 4-6 in their last 10 games, and that comes after winning six in a row and nine-of-10. They have alternated wins and losses in the last five games.

UMass does have an advantage having already faced the consensus top-teams in the conference – Xavier, Dayton, Charlotte, Duquesne and Saint Joseph's twice. However, one key game remains in a rematch with the Rams, but this time it's in Rhode Island.

The Minutemen finish the regular season with home games against Fordham, Saint Louis, St. Bonaventure and La Salle and road matchups with URI, Richmond and George Washington. Of the seven remaining games, five of them come against teams below UMass in the standings.

SHOOTING SLUMP

After scoring a career-high 30 points in a 81-77 loss against the Hawks on Jan. 23, sophomore

See M. BASKETBALL on page 6

Mills wins A-10 award again

Senior forward wins fourth player of the week honor

BY STEVE GAMES AND MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last week, senior forward Kate Mills added her fourth player of the week honor in the Atlantic 10. Mills averaged 26.5 points, 11 rebounds, four assists and three steals per game.

Mills led the Minutewomen to a 1-1 record last week as they beat Fordham on Jan. 30 in the closing seconds, 61-59. Mills scored 26 points while adding four assists. In a 72-66 loss to Saint Joseph's, Mills recorded a double-double with 27 points and 10 rebounds.

UMass W. Hoops

Mills has also increased her range this season by hitting 41 percent of her 3-point attempts. UMass coach Marnie Dacko said Mills is by far the best player she's ever coached.

"She has the ability, she's coachable and she's just coming into her own with confidence," Dacko said about Mills. "You wish kids have five years because once they have it going it's a little too late then they're graduating and out the door. When they finally get their confidence, they understand what a coach wants they're walking out."

Even though Mills has put together great numbers this season, there are still things Dacko would like to see her improve on before the season ends.

"I would still like her to attack more on offense, I would still like her to be a stronger rebounder [and] I'd still like her to take care of the ball when she has it," Dacko said. "But I think she has given us everything she can and she's still growing. I can say that with the few games remaining on our schedule she's still getting better."

POINT GUARD SITUATION

With sophomore point guard Kim Benton out with an injury, guard depth for the Minutewomen is slim. Backup and former starter Sakera Young can fill the role as full-time starter, as she has averaged 3.9 assists during Atlantic 10 play.

Young has a different style than Benton. Benton is an outside shooting threat while Young is a player that drives to the basket looking for the open player and sometimes shooting a pull up jumper inside the paint.

When Young is out of the game and Benton is hurt, Dacko has no more options at point guard. When Young was in foul trouble against Rhode Island, Dacko was forced to use a combination of senior forward Pam Rosanio and junior forward Stefanie Gerardot.

Sophomore guard Diatiema Hill could have helped the team as a third point guard but has been out this season recovering from a torn ACL.

"Sakera didn't help herself, I think initially when she was in I thought she forced some passes," Dacko said about Young's performance against URI.

See W. BASKETBALL on page 6

BRIAN TSUCHIDA/COLLEGIAN

Kate Mills recently won her fourth A-10 Player of the Week award. The Minutewomen host George Washington Wednesday night.

BRIAN TSUCHIDA/COLLEGIAN

Gary Forbes and the Minutemen need to win more A-10 games if they want a chance to receive an at-large bid for the NCAA Tournament.

Diggs leads GW in OT; XU keeps winning

MICHAEL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

Xavier is averaging 77.8 points per game this season while limiting opponents to 62.8 points. The Musketeers record stands at 20–4.

BY SAM GROSSACK
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

For the first time in school history, a men's basketball player at Duquesne posted a triple-double in a regular season game. Junior forward Shawn James scored 17 points, 11 rebounds and 10 blocks as the Dukes pulled away for a decisive win over Atlantic 10 leader Saint Joseph's.

James now ranks third all-time in career NCAA triple-doubles with five, he is one behind leaders Michael Anderson and Shaquille O'Neal.

The win gave the Dukes their first win over St. Joe's in the last 10 years, and it was fueled by a 19-0 run going into halftime when they led 49-27. The Dukes were led by James, Kojo Mensah and his 19 points, and Aaron Jackson who had 18 points, six rebounds and six steals.

After the game Dukes coach Ray Everhart praised his team for executing the game plan, and bouncing back from two hard losses to Massachusetts and St. Bonaventure.

The Dukes lead grew to 25 points midway through the second half before the Hawks responded thanks to the shooting of senior forward Pat Calathes, who scored a game-high 23 points and brought the Hawks back to within 13. However, the rally fell short, and the Hawks dropped a game behind the A-10 leader Xavier.

GW BEATS BUZZER

The Colonials snapped a seven-game losing streak Saturday when junior guard Wynton Witherspoon nailed a 3-point shot with 1.9 seconds left to give his team the lead and the 57-54 win.

A-10 M. Hoops

The win brought the Colonials out of the bottom of the standings in the A-10, improving their record in conference play to 2-7.

Junior forward Rob Diggs led the Colonials with a career-high 29 points and 11 rebounds, plus Witherspoon's 19 points off the bench fueled the team. In addition, senior captain Maureece Rice went scoreless for the second straight game.

Dayton came out fast to open the game with a six-point lead early but quickly lost the momentum and ended the half down by five – eventually falling behind by 12. Brian Roberts led the Flyers with 20 points in the losing effort, as the Flyers dropped to 4-5 in conference play.

XAVIER STAYS IN THE LEAD

A tip in by Derrick Brown at the buzzer is all that saved No. 12 Xavier from defeat and a tie for first place in the conference Thursday, as it left Saint Louis victorious 70-68. After cruising to an 11-point lead at halftime, Xavier almost blew the entire lead to SLU in the last minute.

In the final minute, the Billikens got 12 of a game-high 25 points from Kevin Lisch, who tied the game with 35 seconds left.

Five Musketeers scored in double figures, most notably Josh Duncan and his 15 points. Strong defense in the first half kept the Billikens shooting at 27 percent – good for the second worst output for a half in school history, only ahead of the 14.6 percent effort in their 47-20 loss against George Washington on Jan. 10.

UGLY NUMBER 20 FOR URI

Rhode Island managed to win its 20th game of the season in 24 tries on Sunday afternoon, the quickest the school has ever reached that mark after an incredible ending in a 65-63 win at Fordham.

Up two with just over five seconds left, URI's inbounds pass was tipped away; after a scramble Fordham's Bryant Dunston missed a 3-point shot as the buzzer sounded to seal the game for URI.

Rhode Island missed 10 of its first 11 3-point shots to open the game, but woke up in the second half to go on a 10-0 run leading to its first lead of the game with seven minutes left.

Senior Will Daniels led Rhode Island with 18 points in one of their sloppiest games of the year; the Rams turned the ball over 16 times.

Fordham squandered what was once a 13-point lead as it fights to stay in the A-10 Tournament, as the Rams are currently the 12th seed in the conference.

XAVIER WINS 20 GAMES AGAIN

For the third season in a row, 11 times in the last 12 years and 20 times in the last 25 years, the Xavier Musketeers have won 20 or more games in a season thanks to Sunday's 76-72 win over St. Joe's.

Sam Grossack can be reached at sgrossac@student.umass.edu.

INSIDE: MINUTEWOMEN HOST NO. 14 COLONIALS | PAGE 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

FREEZING RAIN : HI: 44 LO: 23 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 2008

Third UM lacrosse player arrested

Casey taken in for outstanding warrant

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Three University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse players have now been arrested for alleged involvement in an off-campus incident at 304 N. Pleasant St. on Feb. 1.

Christopher R. Casey was arrested in Duxbury, Mass. – his hometown – over the weekend.

"[Casey] was arrested by the Duxbury Police Department," Amherst Police Detective Gabriel Ting said. "He didn't turn himself in; he was placed under arrest for an outstanding warrant."

Duxbury Police refused to comment on the arrest.

Casey, 19, was charged with assault and battery, as well as breaking and entering during the nighttime with intent to commit a felony. He was arraigned Monday at Eastern Hampshire District Court in Belchertown, pleading not guilty.

He joins teammates Christian Haggerty and Ryan Marcus, the other individuals arraigned for the alleged crime. Each pled not guilty.

The three are accused of participating in a beating of three college-aged males with lacrosse sticks and bottles at the North Pleasant Street residence. Each was suspended from the men's lacrosse team on Feb. 2, along with five other teammates.

Court documents revealed the conditions of each individual's release until their pre-trial hearings. The conditions include: staying away from the scene of the alleged crime, avoiding contact with the victims of the attack and maintaining a nightly curfew.

Haggerty's provisions mandate that he must live with his parents if he is suspended from the University. He also must surrender weapons to police and avoid drugs and alcohol. Unlike Marcus and Casey, the sophomore was charged with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon in addition to the other two felonies.

University spokesman Ed Blaguszewski was not available for comment.

Amherst Police declined to say if its ongoing investigation could lead to additional arrests. The original release from the department cited approximately 12 alleged assailants.

The five other suspended lacrosse players continue to maintain that status, according to UMass Athletics Sports Information Director Jason Yellin. Juniors Jim Connolly and Justin Kelleher, redshirt sophomore Jordan Hendry and freshmen Jay Lucas and Alex Whitney are in that group.

COURTESY OF UMASS ATHLETICS

Casey is the third UMass lacrosse player to be arrested in connection with an assault.

However, Yellin would not confirm that the suspensions of the three arrested players were related to the North Pleasant Street incident.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu

UMass students react to alleged violence by athletes

BY SHRUTI SEHGAL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The recent arrests of three University of Massachusetts varsity lacrosse players for an alleged assault at 304 N. Pleasant St. last Friday have invoked mixed reactions from the UMass student body.

"Part of my first reaction to this information was disappointment with how the athletes are representing us," said UMass senior Thomas Holubiak. "They are the elite of our school. They have a lot more of a duty to uphold a respectable image of the University."

Lacrosse players Christian M. Haggerty, Ryan Marcus and Christopher Casey have been arrested.

Several other UMass students expressed similar concern for the reputation of the University.

"When I think of athletes, I think of them being a little more rounded," said freshman legal studies major Suzanne Redlich. "They are role models. Everyone in the public eye needs to be held up to a greater standard."

"Athletes represent our community and school," said computer science major Emiliano Salazar. "The lacrosse team will be placed in a bad light for some while."

Nevertheless, some UMass students were not informed about the incident.

"I feel like the assault is random and not very sportsmanlike," said UMass student Caitie Sullivan. "Every one kind of plays up the violence at UMass, but I haven't heard about anything serious until now. It's kind of ridiculous that people do such violent things."

When asked if this level of

See STUDENT REACTION on page 2

Panel to discuss love and conflict

BY KATE OLESIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The infamous "day of love" is approaching quickly – and along with the flowers and box of chocolates can come conflict, stress and heartache.

But there are those at the University of Massachusetts who are looking to help those in loving relationships sort out their problems.

Today at 5:30 p.m., University Health Services, the Women of Color Leadership Network, the Everywoman's Center, the Stonewall Center, Student Legal Services and the Graduate Women's Network at UMass will host "Where's Love 101: Managing Conflict in Loving Relationships."

"Conflict in relationships is not really something that we talk a lot about in this country, and everyone knows that there is conflict in loving relationships – that's in the deal," said Sandy Mandel, associate director of the Everywoman's Center and one of the coordinators for the event.

What event organizers hope to remind people is not to have false impressions about relationship conflict.

"My general impression is that most of us learn about relationships from the role models in our lives and also from the media," said Marianne Winters, the director of the Everywoman's Center. "And we learn the myths, like living happily ever after, but there's very little that teaches us how to live and operate in a relationship."

The event will be a discussion led by panelists, real-life couples and those who work with relationship conflict from the community. In addition, the event will open with a presentation from "Body Politics 2007," a production created by WOCLN.

"We wanted to pick people that would show some diversity of opinion, different kinds of relationships and length of time they've been together," said Winters.

Panelist Joyce Berkman is a UMass history professor currently on sabbatical who has been with her husband for over 40 years.

"Some individuals may find some of our strategies worth trying; others will find encouragement in the solidity of our marriage for many years," said Berkman.

As a sponsor, the Everywoman's Center helped influence the agenda of the panel and along with the other sponsors, helped to create diversity among the panelists.

"Because of all the different dynamics that people bring to relationships we wanted to be able to have a broad spectrum [of panelists]," said Mandel. "You want to have a panel where, if you walk into it, there may be someone like you. It's racially diverse, also in sexual orientation and with their ethnic identifications."

Various groups at UMass are sponsoring the event, "Where's Love 101: Managing Conflict in Loving Relationships," a panel discussion to help students realize that fighting with a loved one is normal.

The goal of the Valentine's Day event is to educate the community about the prevalence of conflict, why it's normal and how couples can get through it.

"Audience members will have an opportunity to connect their experiences with ours, find reasons to laugh, have hope, maybe increase desire to experiment with new ways of relating and in general to learn that conflict is often very good," said Berkman.

"It should be interesting, compelling and fun," said

See RELATIONSHIPS on page 2

Human origins subject of talk

BY GISEL SAILLANT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Ifmore John paved a road to students' roots in his lecture "Exploring the mystery of race: Footsteps to Africa" last Wednesday night.

The Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students and the Malcolm X Cultural Center hosted the lecture.

John, a graduate student studying mathematics and engineering, is currently working on his doctorate degree through the School of Education at UMass. He admits that reading was his weakness, until he picked up the autobiography of Malcolm X.

"I haven't stopped since I opened the book," he said.

John considers Malcolm X one of the best orators that ever lived.

"I made it my duty to hear his speeches," he said.

Using Malcolm X's words as inspiration, John began his research in the origins of Africa, pre-Columbian evidence of Africans in the Americas and African influence in Europe.

"We are children of Africa," John said as he began to explain how modern humans originated from Africa. According to John, modern humans migrated from Africa to Southeast Asia, and then to China. These migration clues are found in gene patterns, and are used to plot migration routes.

John went on to criticize history books for documenting Christopher Columbus as the first to discover America.

"[There] lays an African presence in the Americas before Columbus," John said. He suggests that there is overwhelming evidence to prove this theory, yet it might sound shocking to believe because "history has taught a Eurocentric point of view, an error of translation of history," John said.

According to John, there were at least two voyages

See AFRICA on page 2

Hadley meeting to discuss Iran politics

BY LISA DEBENEDICTIS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The topics that will be addressed at the Hadley town meeting next Wednesday, Feb. 20, encompass much more than the town's needs.

Hadley citizens will be discussing the U.S.'s current relationship with Iran and what they can do as a community to help.

Organized by the Pioneer Valley Coalition to Prevent War on Iran, the meeting will take place at 7 p.m. at the American Legion Post 271, at 162 Russell St. The coalition's primary goal is to stop the war in Iraq from moving into Iran.

"This administration's past assumption of war powers beyond what the Constitution grants means that we urgently need our representatives to take these stronger initiatives to prevent war," said Norma Akamatsu, spokesperson for the Pioneer Valley Coalition to Prevent War on Iran.

Massachusetts Democratic Congressman Richard Neal will attend the meeting. He co-sponsored congressman Walter Jones' (NC-R) proposed resolution demanding the White House to attain the approval of Congress before declaring war on Iran.

The coalition plans to not only extend its support for Neal, but to discuss the situation further, including the potential for an investigation into the suppression of information on Iran's weapons programs. In addition to Neal, Congressman John Olver may attend, and representatives for Sen. John Kerry and Senator Ted Kennedy have been invited.

"We are delighted that Congressman Neal is coming, and we are hoping that this meeting will focus on the congressional resolution he is sponsoring," said Dr. Ira Helfand, past president

See HADLEY MEETING on page 2

Patrick takes up education reins

BY KRISTEN HEALY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts governor Deval Patrick has been given more control of the state education system, through a bill recently approved by the state legislature.

The bill was approved by the Senate on Feb. 7 by a vote of 33-5 and will be put into place on March 10. It also creates a cabinet-level education secretary. Patrick plans to give more details of the education governance bill further in the week.

With this bill, Patrick has the authority to name the chairman of the University of Massachusetts' Board of Trustees, as well as give the secretary of education approval for hiring commissioners for the three levels of the education system, according to the Boston Globe. These include early education, elementary and secondary school, and higher education.

Patrick will also gain control of the Board of Education, which will be known as the Board of Elementary and Secondary Education, and increase the number of members from nine to 11. One of these new members will be the secretary of education, who will be immediately appointed.

In addition, the bill removes two positions from the board, the chancellor of higher education and the commissioner of education.

Legislation was filed on Feb. 10 by Patrick to reinstate the cabinet-level position of education secretary. The position has already been eradicated twice before, once in the 1970s and again in the 1990s, by the legislature because of the confusion it caused over who supervised all levels of education in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

By forming this position again, Patrick wants to be able to coordinate policies throughout the three levels of education. According to the Boston Globe, he also plans to have the education secretary oversee a newly instated Executive Office of Education, which would serve as a voting member of the three levels of education governing boards.

See EDUCATION BILL on page 2

JENNA TEWKSBURY/COLLEGIAN

A bill approved by the Senate gives Gov. Deval Patrick more control over the Massachusetts education system.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 83

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3649 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szagin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenowaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ASST. WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Huston

COPY EDITOR
Greg McCarthy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Local residents to address war of the Physicians for Social Responsibility, who will speak at the meeting.

HADLEY MEETING from page 1

Tyler Boudreau, former Marine Captain and fellow speaker, agreed.

"It is twofold: we can have a dialogue with him, we can better inform him, and in turn, he can inform us," he said. "That is what this meeting is about – exchanging ideas."

Boudreau will be discussing his personal experiences in Iraq, and the potential for the current war to spread to Iran.

Helfand will be addressing the medical consequences involved with going to war with Iran.

"The U.S. can launch an attack in very little advance, and this will not be ground assault, it will be air warfare. There could be a very large number of civilian casualties with bombs that go astray, radioactive chemicals involved, and we are particularly concerned that the administration will use nuclear weapons in the attack," he said. "I will run a couple of scenarios of what an attack may look like."

Also speaking at the meeting is Michael Klare, Professor of Peace and World Securities at Hampshire College. His presentation includes America's past involvement with Iran and his ideas for resolution using a "grand bargain," namely, a compromise on the part of both countries.

"I will show that the United States has intervened in Iran since 1953, when the CIA helped overthrow the democratically elected government of Mohammed Mossadeq and install the dictatorial Shah, and so produced a culture of paranoid anti-Americanism there," said Klare. "Rather than advance U.S. national interests, this has undermined U.S. interests. By negotiating with Iran on a good-faith basis, we can overcome this legacy of anti-Americanism, and promote our own best interests.

Klare favors what he calls a "grand bargain."

"The United States would ask Iran to stop reprocessing uranium, to stop arming militias in Iraq and to stop arming Hezbollah; in return, the U.S. would agree to foreswear 'regime change' in Iran, to lift economic sanctions on Iran, and to cooperate in regional security affairs," he said.

UMass freshman Josh Sowalsky, who spent the past year traveling in the Middle East and is considering taking on the Middle Eastern Studies major, is hopeful the meeting will help to inform more people about Iran.

"It is really important to be informative, especially when there is a discussion about more military action," Sowalsky said. "I think when it came to U.S. public support in Iraq, we the public let ourselves be seduced by the post 9/11 patriotic rhetoric, which kind of stopped us from caring about the facts."

In-depth understanding is needed to make solid decisions, Sowalsky said. "I think it is extremely important for this country when we are talking about war with Iran that we know how unbelievably complex that part of the world is."

However, when asked about his own personal views in dealing with Iran, Sowalsky came up with a different solution.

"I agree with Thomas Friedman: the president should grant thousands of student visas to the young people of Iran, if Iran will put its nuclear program under UN inspection and stop supporting terrorism," he said. "In the next couple of years, complete with a western education, they [the students] will lead the revolution themselves. They are already rioting in the streets every day there."

Lisa DeBenedictis can be reached at ldebened@student.umass.edu

UM reacts to assault

STUDENT REACTION from page 1

violence was expected at UMass, Holubiak responded differently.

"No, I am not surprised at all," Holubiak said. "I have been going here for four years...his type of thing happens again and again. Even as a freshman, I heard about athletes getting violent. Every semester, there are scandalous acts taking place. It is a violent school and that is unfortunate."

As of yesterday, Haggerty, Casey and Marcus were the only three lacrosse members arrested for the assault.

Another five players have also been suspended from the team indefinitely.

Several students felt that uncertainty surrounding the investigation was a cause for concern.

"When I heard about it, I was confused as to whether all of the lacrosse players [suspended] took part in the beating," said Holubiak. "I would like the University to present us with the facts swiftly and accurately, because things like this jeopardize my safety as a student."

When asked what precautionary measures ought to be taken to prevent such events, all of the students interviewed said firm punishment was the best solution.

"The athletes should be held in higher accountability for being representatives of the student body," said Salazar. "They need to face the consequences of their actions."

"I feel like the University's reaction to this occurrence should be set as a precedent to incidents in the future," said Holubiak. "They should take care of this issue as soon as possible, because when I graduate, my diploma is going to hold a certain amount of value. If students like the lacrosse athletes are not reprimanded, they will make it [the diploma] worth so much less."

Shruti Sehgal can be reached at ssehgal@student.umass.edu

Love topic of V-Day forum

RELATIONSHIPS from page 1

Mandel. "It's the kind of thing that I wish I had when I was in the tentative steps of a new relationship in my twenties."

Panelists include La Wanza Lett-Brewington and Dwayne Brewington; Joyce and Leonard Berkman; Jodie Shapiro and Joanne Gold; and therapist Linda Scott from Mental Health Services.

Joyce Berkman's focus is U.S., British and European women's history. She began teaching at UMass in 1965, both graduate and undergraduate courses. For the past two years she has taught a course on the history of reproductive rights in the United States. She also offers a course on history, autobiography and on oral history. Her husband Leonard Berkman is professor of theatre at Smith College and a consultant for production companies nationwide.

Shapiro is an educator, musician, poet and political activist and directs a program for individuals with traumatic brain injuries. Gold is a dental hygienist, teacher, clay artist and singer with the Amandla Community Chorus. They are parents of a 13-year-old daughter and they have been partners for 32 years and married for four.

La Wanza Lett-Brewington is the executive director of Safe Passage in Northampton. Dwayne Brewington directs the Men's Resource Center at Capitol Community College in Hartford, CT, and is an educator and speaker. They have been partners for 21 years and married for 16.

A similar event was held last year, titled "Where's Love 101: What to Think About When You're Thinking About Getting Serious." Panelists dealt with thinking about moving in with a significant other, marriage, buying a house and other similar topics, according to Mandel.

Mandel knows relationships are "very consuming in our culture," and hopes that the 100-level discussion will be fun and informative.

"We're often drawn to each other because of differences," said Mandel. "You have to kind of work around conflict and maximize what drew you to each other in the first place."

The panel discussion will take place in room 168 of the Campus Center with free refreshments and door prizes.

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin@dailycollegian.com.

Human history discussed

AFRICA from page 1

made to the Americas by Africans.

"It has been documented that two different African Civilizations made the voyage to the Americas, the 25th Dynasty of Egypt (751-656 B.C.E.), and the Mandiga people of the Mali Empire in 1310 and 1311," John said.

He went on to explain that the Atlantic Ocean's currents and winds helped these early African explorers reach the Americas.

"These currents and winds are strong enough to pull a ship off course and move it from one side of the ocean to the other. The two currents are the Guinea Current and the Canary Current," John said.

"African presence in the Americas before the arrival of Columbus [was] not as slaves, but as explorers and traders," John said.

In his lecture, John explained the many similarities Africa and America share in food plants, calendars, linguistics and the art of pyramid making.

"The cotton seeds, banana plants, bottle gourd, jack bean and the West African yam all have African origins, and they suddenly appeared in the Americas without an explanation," John said.

"Europeans did not educate Africans; Africans educated Europeans," John said as he moved his attention to the influence Africa has had on Europe, beginning with the invasion of the Moors into Spain. John argued that the Moor invasion raised educational standards in Spain.

"It was the time of the Moors that Spain had its first university," John said.

"I feel we as a people [of color] spend too much time focusing on the enslavement of our people instead of the contributions to world civilization we have made," said Bryan Khemet, a senior at UMass Boston majoring in Africana studies and cultural anthropology.

"Those who attended the event "Footsteps of Africa" definitely gained some knowledge of self thanks to the [enlightening] research of our beloved brother Elmore John," Khemet said. "He brought us back to the beginning of time, and documented to us the geographical travels, international highlights, attainments and successes of our ancestors of African descent."

Keyon Romeo had a more ambivalent view of the lecture.

"It was all right," he said. "Very informative when he was talking about connections between Africa and countries like China."

Gisel Suillant can be reached at gsaillan@student.umass.edu.

Mass. education undergoes changes

PATRICK from page 1

There is speculation that Dana Mohler-Faria, Patrick's top education advisor and current president of Bridgewater State College, would likely assume the role of secretary.

Paul Reville, chairman of the State Board of Education who has had reservations about the position in the past, supports Patrick's proposal because, as he told the Boston Globe, it is "respectful of keeping some distance between the political process and the education policy-making process."

Christopher Anderson, who was appointed to the Board of Education by former Massachusetts governor Mitt Romney but removed from the position of chairman in August when Patrick appointed Reville, is apprehensive about this secretary position and the amount of power it grants one person.

"The clear line of responsibility has to be articulated," Anderson told the Associated Press. "Ultimately we have already a capacity to coordinate early childhood education, K-through-12 and higher education. That could be enhanced but I'm not quite sure you need to change the underlying statutory authority among any of these three boards to a single individual who now is completely politically appointed."

Anderson questioned adding two members to the Board of Higher Education, which currently has nine members. Patrick justified his idea due to the fact that this board oversees the entire University of Massachusetts system, nine state colleges and 15 community colleges with a total budget of $1 billion.

"Absent any clear and substantive challenge that is being presented by the size of this board, I don't see any justification at this point in time for adding to its size," Anderson told the Associated Press.

According to the Globe, Patrick aims to make education a top priority in 2008 and plans to have this secretary position integrate education reforms at each level; early childhood, K-through-12 and higher education. The secretary would also be in charge of putting Patrick's ten-year strategy into place, which he plans to make public in the spring.

Kristen Healy can be reached at kkhealy@student.umass.edu.

Online Room Selection is coming!

Check out the Room Selection Bulletin delivered to your residence hall mailbox this week and come to one of the Online Room Selection Information Sessions:

The Housing Assignment Office will review online room selection instructions, guidelines, and strategies, and will show you online room selection menus so you can get ready to select your own assignment.

Pick a one-hour information session prior to the room selection period you plan to participate in, and we'll see you there!

Date	Times	Location
Tuesday, February 19	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm.174-76
Thursday, February 28	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 917
Tuesday, March 11	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 168C
Tuesday, March 25	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 168C
Tuesday, April 1	12:00-1:00pm or 1:00-2:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76
Wednesday, April 2	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76
Monday, April 14	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76
Tuesday, April 15	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Pierpont Hall Main Lounge
Wednesday, April 16	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76

www.housing.umass.edu UMassAmherst

your ADVENTURE your BIRTHRIGHT our GIFT
TAGLIT - מגלית BIRTHRIGHT ISRAEL www.birthrightisrael.com

Taglit-Birthright Israel provides free, ten-day trips to Israel for Jewish young adults ages 18 to 26. Register now at WWW.BIRTHRIGHTISRAEL.COM

"It's amazing that the amount of news that happens in the world every day just exactly fits in the newspaper."
- Jerry Seinfield

Then we invented the Internet.

dailycollegian.blogspot.com

THE ARMY ADVANTAGE FUND.
BECAUSE SOLDIERS DESERVE MORE.

Now the Army gives you more choices for your future. Earn up to $40,000 to start the business of your dreams or buy the home you always wanted. Log onto goarmy.com/aaf to learn more about the Army Advantage Fund.

© 2008. U.S. Army Recruiting Command. All rights reserved

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Lost in a sea of punditry

Parisa Saranj

Sometimes in any society, there comes an event which preoccupies the mind of the nation. These eminent matters somehow make everything else seem insignificant and less newsworthy.

The presidential nomination contest, involving the candidacy of a woman and an African-American, is what seems to catch the attention of today's society. It is inevitable that some of us are anxiously following the challenge between the first female and African-American presidential candidates. As much as it is an essential factor for the long-run struggle for women, justice and even civil rights, we tend to forget that there are others who are struggling for the most fundamental basics. Ironically, we are in many ways culpable for their conditions.

Some of them are hundreds of women in the Kurdish region of northern Iraq who have died after setting themselves on fire, as hundreds more who will probably do.

"After the fall of Saddam Hussein and with the continuing violence in nearby Mosul and Diyala province, war surgery is in great demand. So too is the burns unit," wrote BBC correspondent Crispin Thorold on Feb. 9, 2008. What he saw in Kurdistan, which is claimed to be "semi-autonomous and relatively safe," was young women like eighteen-year-old Sana, who has been in the hospital for nine weeks. "Only the tips of her fingers and a small part of her face are visible...the upper part of her body is burnt. So are her head and her arms, as well as one of her thighs."

According to the report, anecdotal evidence from medical sources and women's activists implies that on average a woman a day tries to commit suicide in the Kurdistan region. Some argue that it is due to family problems. Others believe that, "the kerosene heaters that are in every home provide a way to be noticed." Thorold observes that in such a patriarchal society, the pain of women is recognized only through dramatic gestures.

It saddens me greatly to see how easily we forget to look back and to think about those we never hear about in the news.

Yet beyond these reasons, there is a most critical and often overlooked truth. I agree with how the article puts it. "As in other countries at war, it often seems that it is women who suffer most." Today, the challenges facing Iraq are simply incomprehensible. And the question is: what has the American invasion, with the purpose of bringing democracy, done to improve these difficulties?

For many Kurdish women such as Chiman, whose sister burnt to death, there is no hope. "There is widespread bad treatment of women," she told Thorold. And after four years of hearing about the notable changes in Iraq, she added that "the reports in the media are just talk."

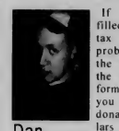
When Thorold heard the human rights minister in the Kurdistan region admitting that immolation is a problem that his government is struggling to deal with, he wrote that "for many Kurdish women the optimism of the minister is not borne out by experience."

The long time struggle of Kurdish women goes back to years before, when The Anfal Campaign against the Kurds, led by Saddam Hussein, left women in 30 years of desolation by killing men and leaving women and children to survive miserably.

Chilura Hardi, who runs the women's radio station and center for war injuries and burns in Irbil, told Thorold it will take a long, long time for changes. She then added, "it is a very slow and painful process."

The "pain" is what I cannot bear to see women endure. Women of any color or country have suffered long enough. It saddens me greatly to see how easily we forget to look back and to think about those we never hear about in the news or on a daily basis.

Now that I see and hear heated conversations and news about the next great American president in every corner I turn to, I wonder how many voters have actually considered how the devastating situation of the Middle East fits into the agenda of their desired candidate. Should it even matter to the West what life is like there?



Maybe if I had not come from that region, I would never have cared to ponder upon the lives of millions in agony and despair. Maybe, if I was caught up with the agenda that does not inform about what goes on beyond one's borders or what changes are going to be made, I would want to remain in my consoling comfort zone, and never want to step out.

"Can you imagine? You put kerosene on yourself and light it," Hardi said to the BBC correspondent. I can only imagine how great the pain of those women, and how immense the devastation of their lives under occupation must be. Only then the twinge of burning seems so small.

And I am so helpless for their woe that I can only see myself standing among this commotion of matters which seem far more important than anything else. Sometimes, I even wonder if anyone reads these things, or cares to do something about it.

Parisa Saranj is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at psaranj@student.umass.edu.

High-tech grassroots get the job done

Dan Nicastro

If you've ever filled out a federal tax return, you've probably noticed the small box in the corner of the form which asks if you would like to donate three dollars to a presidential election fund. In short, it asks you if you would like to support publicly funded elections. I used to check that box, hoping one day that we would live in a country where wealth was not a prerequisite for public office. Then, I came to college as a political science student. Almost every single professor of American politics has assured me that publicly funded elections (at least, as they exist now) will never come to fruition in America. The latest presidential campaign, however, gives me hope for the future.

Publicly funded elections are definitely problematic. Among other things, candidates who accept public funds cannot receive individual contributions, they must accept campaign spending limitations and they must promise not to spend more than $50,000 of their own money. There is, however, another possibility for campaign reform.

Barack Obama raised $32 million in the month of January, almost doubling the largest previous monthly total of the current election cycle. On the surface this seems to be nothing more than another example of the enormous sums of money needed to run for public office. That is, until you realize that over 80 percent of the $32 million raised in the month of January came from Internet donations.

Probably the most astonishing facet of Obama's financial numbers for January is the fact that the Obama campaign enlisted over 170,000 new donors in a single month, most of them giving under $100. Over the span of his entire campaign, Obama has received support from over 650,000 different contributors. By the end of his campaign, it's not unreasonable tnat he will have over one million different donors to his campaign.

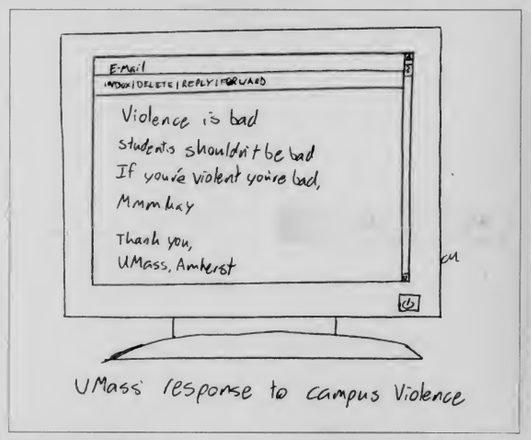
Ron Paul can trace a huge amount of his success to his grassroots Internet campaign (and can possibly trace the rest of it to the "Colbert bump").

The Internet boon is not specific to the Obama campaign. While his campaign faltered, Howard Dean managed to set the stage for internet fundraising in 2004. Ron Paul can trace a huge amount of his success to his grassroots Internet campaign (and can possibly trace the rest of it to the "Colbert bump").

Obama, however, has taken Internet campaigning to the next level. Not only has he been able to electronically raise an incredible amount of money, he's been able to do it witha a vast array of contributors, most of them donating small amounts of money. There is definitely a new type of campaign and a new kind of donor emerging. We've entered the age of Internet populism in presidential campaigns.

There are a few hints as to where the rise of this Internet populism will lead, but most likely it will not drive down campaign costs. As the ease of contributing money to campaigns increases, expenditures for presidential campaigns may rise dramatically. We've already seen some evidence of this, as spending for the 2008 primary season alone has eclipsed spending in seven of the last eight general elections.

This may not be all bad news. Whilecampaign costs may not decrease, we may be able to change how campaigns function. An effect of Internet populism may be the rise of very qualified candidates who would not otherwise consider running for president because of financial reasons.



While this possible over-saturation of candidates could turn ugly very quickly, I think the opposite will happen. Even during this election cycle, there were several very qualified candidates whose campaigns did not get off the ground. While it may be solely because of the way they ran their campaigns, lack of money almost certainly had something to do with their defeat. If candidates really dedicate themselves to expanding web-based funding, and if the Internet really does become the future battleground for elections, modern campaigns may change very quickly.

There are still problems to be worked out. Only three candidates have been truly successful in using the Internet to its fullest advantage, and all three have been charismatic, exciting candidates. Personality will always play a large role in presidential races, meaning (as is currently true) some candidates will be better at soliciting web funds than others.

In the same vein, there is also a chance that the phenomenon is specific to candidates like Obama, who attract a huge, devoted following. This would prevent smaller candidates from breaking through and making a political splash.

To me, however, these problems do not seem to be ones which will continue to slam the door shut in the face of aspiring candidates. A large number of donors giving small amounts to presidential candidates is a much more comforting thought than a small number of wealthy donors contributing very large amounts to presidential candidates.

Dan Nicastro is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dnicastr@student.umass.edu.

UMass' response to campus violence

ED/OP!

For UMass, a good long look into the mirror

Bruce Lerner

February is designated "Black History Month." Thus, it feels rather appropriate to bring up some black history and relate it to UMass. In short, UMass's black history, like this nation's black history, reflects pretty poorly on the school's treatment of blacks. The figures for minority and Afro-American access are dismal and do not look like they are getting much better unless drastic changes occur. This is a tragic and untenable phenomenon that must be dealt with.

If we look around the UMass campus, sometimes it feels like Hitler won WWII and somehow managed to invade and conquer the United States as well. The scene is a veritable ocean of white faces, somewhat similar to a polar bear in a snow storm. Now, as rational college students with very expensive and prestigious educations, we must know that not everybody in the country is of European descent, and that there are people who were brought here as slaves several hundred years ago from Africa. Interestingly, one is hard pressed to find this population represented on campus. In fact, the numbers of African-American students enrolled are shocking. Even though they make up 13 percent of the U.S. population, African-Americans don't top 5 percent of the UMass population.

This is a case of discrimination. Obviously the administration will not admit this blatant fact, but discrimination can take many different forms and can be deliberate or subconscious. An ingenious method of the racist power structure is to change the discrimination from strictly racially-based assessments, such as "we can't take no n---ers here," which did exist, to "we can only consider financially suitable applicants for admission to the University," the current justification for racist admissions policies. One question is, if the University isn't racist, then where are the people who don't look like everyone else?

For upper middle class white kids, the USA is like the world's biggest candy store.

There is an incredible correlation between race and class in this country, the good ol' most racist country in the world, the U. S. of A. Let's not kid ourselves with all of the EPCOT, Mickey Mouse multiculturalism that we see around us, to quote Mike Dyson. The proof is in the pudding, and the pudding is numbers that are easily accessible to college students who all have big brains.

Black people are overwhelmingly poor compared to white people and go to jail in numbers that are vastly disproportionate to their numbers in the population. The means to keep black people poor and incarcerated were taken up on purpose and evidently so.

So, administrators don't need to look at an applicant's race explicitly in order to discriminate against him or her. They only need to look at the family income, thus excluding anyone who can't pay, or their criminal history, thus excluding anyone who was the victim of a wanton police state's draconian policies. Of course, it is important to note that it is a police state for certain groups only, namely ethnic minorities and poor people. For upper-middle class white kids, the USA is like the world's biggest candy store. That is, if the mentioned kids can feel free to ignore their neighbors' problems.

Despite the dismal results of an admissions policy that leaves out vast elements of the population, UMass can say that it is being fair and balanced, like Fox News. This is because they are not blatantly racist, but aversively racist. Down south, at least blacks knew who the enemy was. Here in the North, an enemy looks like a friend and will smile as he keeps you down. The most interesting part of UMass is how hard it tries to project an image of tolerance and yet how deeply prejudiced, as an institution, it really is.

We need to stop pretending we don't live in a bigoted state in a bigoted country, where blacks go to jail at eight times the rate that whites do. These illusions will create false assumptions of security and will perpetuate hatred and ignorance. The first step is to smash assumptions like the following: 1. Laws are always fair, that's why they're laws. 2. Everyone has the same chance to succeed if they try hard enough. 3. Racism's over and it's time for minorities to stop complaining.

Let's remember that African-Americans have contributed to the welfare of this country since 1619, in all possible ways from material to cultural to intellectual. As Kurt Vonnegut realized, the main reason the rest of the world doesn't hate us 100 percent is because of the black American music that unites the whole world, jazz and blues. Given that African-American culture is at the core of what it means to be an "American," UMass has a responsibility to at least allow blacks to learn along with their white counterparts. Anything short of this is ludicrous in the richest country in the world.

Bruce Lerner is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bvlerner@student.umass.edu.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

EMAIL: editorial@dailycollegian.com

FAX: 413-545-3699

MAIL: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003

PONY EXPRESS

CARRIER PIGEON

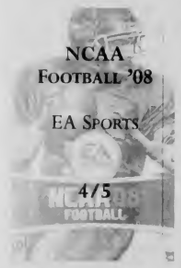
THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Big man on campus



NCAA Football '08 delivers new features, better graphics

By Domenic Poli
Collegian Staff

In the world of sports video games, every year, companies try to come out with a newer, somehow better version than the year before. NCAA Football '08 is no exception.

Always popular Dynasty Mode added new features like preseason coaching, distributing medical redshirts and more hands-on recruiting. Once you start Dynasty Mode, you begin recruiting players who will play for your squad after your first season.

You are now able to scout 15 prospects before the first season begins. This leads right into the in-season recruiting. You are given 100 recruiting hours to dedicate to any of the prospects. During the first season, you will need to continue recruiting these prospects before they decide that another school is a better choice. After week seven you can invite certain prospects to see the team in action and choose whether to comply with demands they have in order to play for you.

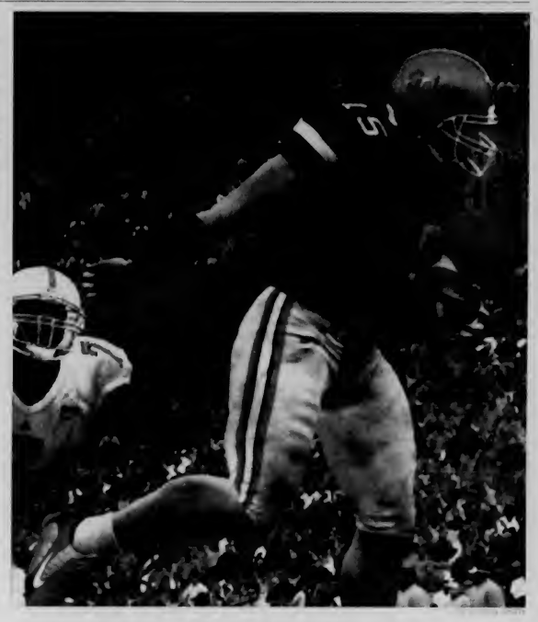
One of the additions to the NCAA Football game modes is Campus Legend. This amazing new feature lets you take the role of a student-athlete. You custom design your player and move on to summer camp, where you try to show college scouts how much potential you have.

Based on how well you did in camp, you're given offers and select which college you will attend. Then you must choose a major. Majors range from easy to difficult and performing well in the classroom allows you to attribute points to certain areas of your game.

Playing Campus Legend, I felt like a real student-athlete at a top football college – without the popularity and barrage of attractive female peers, of course.

Just below Dynasty Mode is another brand new feature called Points Pursuit, in which points are given not for getting into the end zone or splitting the uprights, but for things like yards gained, tackles, receptions and interceptions, broken tackles and forcing an opposing team to go three and out. Keep in mind, however, points are given for user stats only.

There are also new control features to make your virtual football experience more realistic and hands-on.



With the QB Avoidance stick you can greatly reduce the amount of abuse your quarterback takes. Once he takes the snap and defensive players are beating down on your blockers, pull the stick in any direction and the QB will sidestep in that direction.

Another handy trick is the new Highlight stick. Simply tapping it makes your ball carrier either run over a small defender or juke a bigger, stronger one. You have to time it right or the ball carrier will get tackled.

If you manage to work your way out of the pocket you will have the opportunity to send one of your eligible receivers another direction with the Receiver Direct feature, which lets you send your nearest receiver in the direction you choose.

Some adjustments have also been made for defense.

See NCAA on page 6

The latest version of the popular NCAA Football '08 delivers all the highlights of past years and adds new features, like advanced freshman recruiting for Dynasty mode and Campus Hero mode.

Psychedelic sound, but original flair absent

The melodic guitar and hollow vocals cause Dead Meadow's latest release "Old Growth" to fall short of their previous albums. Fans will be forgiven if they skip this latest disc.

By Joe Stahl
Collegian Staff

Dead Meadow's sixth studio album, "Old Growth," is a dive back into the past when Jimi Hendrix and Led Zeppelin ruled the music world. The boys of Dead Meadow got their start in the local DC music scene.

As its third release on the growing Matador Records, Dead Meadow took an unorthodox route to recording their newest work. Half of the album was recorded in a dark and haunted farmhouse in rural Indiana. For the other half of the recording, they flew across the country to L.A.'s Sunset Sound where big names like Led Zeppelin, Joni Mitchell, Beck, Fleetwood Mac and Bob Dylan laid down their records.

Being part of the neo-psychedelic era, Dead Meadow comes off as second best in a genre that is shared with fantastic bands like The Mars Volta, Wolfmother and Of Montreal.

Dead Meadow does take a considerable amount of remnants from the beginnings of psychedelia. This isn't to say that it completely recreates old music. The band strays from falling into the common trap of complete unoriginality, which serves them as their greatest strength.

Jason Simon (lead vocals) gives an exhausted effort as a modern day Jimi Hendrix, while the rest of the gang rhythmically takes influences from Jack Bruce of Cream and more from the contemporary group, Band of Horses.

Despite the melodically strummed guitar with pseudo-surreal rhythms, Simon's vocals come off inhibited and lackluster. One positive result of Simon's unemotional and dreary voice is that it does not shroud the more developed components of the album, like the melodies and tight drums. With or without the intent of doing so, Simon has a forgettable voice, but manages to articulate his lyrics commendably.

From past albums, especially the 2005 release "Feathers," Dead Meadow's music has remained unprogressive. The main factor that sets "Old Growth" apart from "Feathers" is that "Old Growth" is less atmospheric and reverb. Besides this small difference, "Old Growth" is simply a continuation of "Feathers."

"Old Growth" fails to deliver surprise and spontaneity, which is always a component of classic psychedelia. Dead Meadow is as safe as the suburbs here. Expect to hear typical guitar riffs that could only be enjoyable to listen to if there is a bong to smoke.

Dead Meadow goes to show that they may not be gods in the studio, but on the big stage is where Dead Meadow is anticipated to bestow something more appealing and stimulating. Dead Meadow's stoner rock live music has been indulging fans with "good times" ever since the band's beginnings in the late '90s.

Right now, Dead Meadow is on its American tour. The tour began in early February in Texas. The four-piece band will be all over the States until the very end of February, but will not be making any stops in Western Massachusetts until April 21 at the Iron Horse.

If you don't go out and buy the new Dead Meadow album, it would not be the worst thing you could do. This album is definitely expendable and will transmit you to emptiness and a feeling of wasted time.

Joe Stahl can be reached at jstahl@student.umass.edu.

Horror writer speaks at UM

Author Jones reads several stories as part of writers series

By Elizabeth Hawley
Collegian Staff

Author Stephen Graham Jones gave a series of readings Feb. 7 in Memorial Hall at the University of Massachusetts.

Jones is the author of several books, including his latest, "Demon Theory." He also teaches fiction at Texas Tech University and has a Ph.D in writing from Florida State University.

Jones is the first of the Visiting Writers Series, monthly readings supported by MFA Program for Poets and Writers, the Juniper Initiative and the UMass English department.

Jones read one of his few non-fiction works, a short story called "Beastiary," about experiences he's had while hunting, including an incident when a rattlesnake's venom got into his arm and caused the area from his wrist to his elbow to swell up.

Jones also read a story about a man who lost a nipple in an accident, and his son's obsession with the scar where the nipple should be.

"The Many Stages of Grief," which Jones said was "almost more true" than "Beastiary" for him, even though it is not a true story, is about a man who loses an eye when eating dog food because it amused his son. The dog sees the man and attacks. The story is about the aftermath of the incident as the man tries to deal with only having one eye.

In his story "Discovering America," of which Jones claims only one sentence was fiction, he discusses the discrimination American Indians face. At one point in the story, the main character, a Native American of the Blackfeet tribe, is taught how to run over Native Americans by someone who claims to have done it for sport while living near Blackfeet territory.

Jones also read a story titled "Old Me," which he described as a love story about a werewolf. In the story, a husband discovers after decades of marriage that his wife turns into a werewolf in her sleep. Jones said he wrote the story after he went to get into bed and had a fleeting thought that he hoped his wife didn't turn into a werewolf at night.

Jones is a member of the Blackfeet tribe, who said that after he published his first novel he became afraid that "people would think of me as only an American Indian writer." To combat this fear, he began writing "the opposite of what [Jones would] write naturally." The opposite was horror.

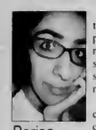
"When I first started writing horror I was so liberated because when I got sick of a character I could cut their heads off," Jones joked.

"A lot of my stories have either body parts flying or animals dying." Jones joked when he'd finished the readings, adding that he hoped people weren't too sensitive to that.

Elizabeth Hawley can be reached at ehawley@student.umass.edu.

Horror writer Stephen Graham Jones was the first in the Visiting Writers Series for the spring semester. On Thursday he read a selection of short stories, both fiction and non-fiction.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN



EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Lost in a sea of punditry

Parisa Saranj

Sometimes in any society, there comes an event which preoccupies the mind of the nation. These eminent matters somehow make everything else seem insignificant and less newsworthy.

The presidential nomination contest, involving the candidacy of a woman and an African-American, is what seems to catch the attention of today's society. It is inevitable that some of us are anxiously following the challenge between the first female and African-American presidential candidates. As much as it is an essential factor for the long-run struggle for women, justice and even civil rights, we tend to forget that there are others who are struggling for the most fundamental basics. Ironically, we are in many ways culpable for their conditions.

Some of them are hundreds of women in the Kurdish region of northern Iraq who have died after setting themselves on fire, as hundreds more who will probably do.

"After the fall of Saddam Hussein and with the continuing violence in nearby Mosul and Diyala province, war surgery is in great demand. So too is the burns unit," wrote BBC correspondent Crispin Thorold on Feb. 9, 2008. What he saw in Kurdistan, which is claimed to be "semi-autonomous and relatively safe," was young women like eighteen-year-old Sana, who has been in the hospital for nine weeks. "Only the tips of her fingers and a small part of her face are visible, the upper part of her body is burnt. So are her head and her arms, as well as one of her thighs."

According to the report, anecdotal evidence from medical sources and women's activists implies that on average a woman a day tries to commit suicide in the Kurdistan region. Some argue that it is due to family problems. Others believe that, "the kerosene heaters that are in every home provide a way to be noticed." Thorold observes that in such a patriarchal society, the pain of women is recognized only through dramatic gestures.

It saddens me greatly to see how easily we forget to look back and to think about those we never hear about in the news.

Yet beyond these reasons, there is a most critical and often overlooked truth. I agree with how the article puts it. "As in other countries at war, it often seems that it is women who suffer most." Today, the challenges facing Iraq are simply incomprehensible. And the question is: what has the American invasion, with the purpose of bringing democracy, done to improve these difficulties?

For many Kurdish women such as Chiman, whose sister burnt to death, there is no hope. "There is widespread bad treatment of women," she told Thorold. And after four years of hearing about the notable changes in Iraq, she added that "the reports in the media are just talk."

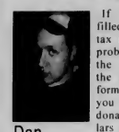
When Thorold heard the human rights minister in the Kurdistan region admitting that immolation is a problem that his government is struggling to deal with, he wrote that "for many Kurdish women the optimism of the minister is not borne out by experience."

The long time struggle of Kurdish women goes back to years before, when The Anfal Campaign against the Kurds, led by Saddam Hussein, left women in 30 years of desolation by killing men and leaving women and children to survive miserably.

Chilura Hardi, who runs the women's radio station and center for war injuries and burns in Irbil, told Thorold it will take a long, long time for changes. She then added, "it is a very slow and painful process."

The "pain" is what I cannot bear to see women endure. Women of any color or country have suffered long enough. It saddens me greatly to see how easily we forget to look back and to think about those we never hear about in the news or on a daily basis.

Now that I see and hear heated conversations and news about the next great American president in every corner I turn to, I wonder how many voters have actually considered how the devastating situation of the Middle East fits into the agenda of their desired candidate. Should it even matter to the West what life is like there?



Maybe if I had not come from that region, I would never have cared to ponder upon the lives of millions in agony and despair. Maybe, if I was caught up with the agenda that does not inform about what goes on beyond one's borders or what changes are going to be made, I would want to remain in my consoling comfort zone, and never want to step out.

"Can you imagine? You put kerosene on yourself and light it," Hardi said to the BBC correspondent. I can only imagine how great the pain of those women, and how immense the devastation of their lives under occupation must be. Only then the twinge of burning seems so small.

And I am so helpless for their woe that I can only see myself standing among this commotion of matters which seem far more important than anything else. Sometimes, I even wonder if anyone reads these things, or cares to do something about it.

Parisa Saranj is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at psaranj@student.umass.edu

High-tech grassroots get the job done

Dan Nicastro

If you've ever filled out a federal tax return, you've probably noticed the small box in the corner of the form which asks if you would like to donate three dollars to a presidential election fund. In short, it asks you if you would like to support publicly funded elections. I used to check that box, hoping one day that we would live in a country where wealth was not a prerequisite for public office. Then, I came to college as a political science student. Almost every single professor of American politics has assured me that publicly funded elections (at least, as they exist now) will never come to fruition in America. The latest presidential campaign, however, gives me hope for the future.

Publicly funded elections are definitely problematic. Among other things, candidates who accept public funds cannot receive individual contributions, they must accept campaign spending limitations and they must promise not to spend more than $50,000 of their own money. There is, however, another possibility for campaign reform.

Barack Obama raised $32 million in the month of January, almost doubling the largest previous monthly total of the current election cycle. On the surface this seems to be nothing more than another example of the enormous sums of money needed to run for public office. That is, until you realize that over 80 percent of the $32 million raised in the month of January came from Internet donations.

Probably the most astonishing facet of Obama's financial numbers for January is the fact that the Obama campaign enlisted over 170,000 new donors in a single month, most of them giving under $100. Over the span of his entire campaign, Obama has received support from over 650,000 different contributors. By the end of his campaign, it's not unreasonable that he will have over one million different donors to his campaign.

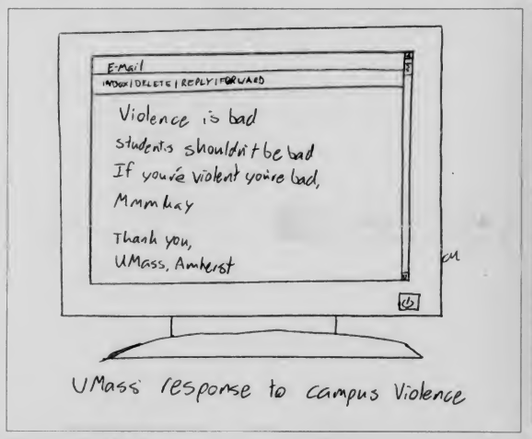
Ron Paul can trace a huge amount of his success to his grassroots Internet campaign (and can possibly trace the rest of it to the "Colbert bump").

The Internet boon is not specific to the Obama campaign. While his campaign faltered, Howard Dean managed to set the stage for internet fundraising in 2004. Ron Paul can trace a huge amount of his success to his grassroots Internet campaign (and can possibly trace the rest of it to the "Colbert bump").

Obama, however, has taken Internet campaigning to the next level. Not only has he been able to electronically raise an incredible amount of money, he's been able to do it witha a vast array of contributors, most of them donating small amounts of money. There is definitely a new type of campaign and a new kind of donor emerging. We've entered the age of Internet populism in presidential campaigns.

There are a few hints as to where the rise of this Internet populism will lead, but most likely it will not drive down campaign costs. As the ease of contributing money to campaigns increases, expenditures for presidential campaigns may rise dramatically. We've already seen some evidence of this, as spending for the 2008 primary season alone has eclipsed spending in seven of the last eight general elections.

This may not be all bad news. While campaign costs may not decrease, we may be able to change how campaigns function. An effect of Internet populism may be the rise of very qualified candidates who would not otherwise consider running for president because of financial reasons.



While this possible over-saturation of candidates could turn ugly very quickly, I think the opposite will happen. Even during this election cycle, there were several very qualified candidates whose campaigns did not get off the ground. While it may be solely because of the way they ran their campaigns, lack of money almost certainly had something to do with their defeat. If candidates really dedicate themselves to expanding web-based funding, and if the Internet really does become the future battleground for elections, modern campaigns may change very quickly.

There are still problems to be worked out. Only three candidates have been truly successful in using the Internet to its fullest advantage, and all three have been charismatic, exciting candidates. Personality will always play a large role in presidential races, meaning (as is currently true) some candidates will be better at soliciting web funds than others.

In the same vein, there is also a chance that the phenomenon is specific to candidates like Obama, who attract a huge, devoted following. This would prevent smaller candidates from breaking through and making a political splash.

To me, however, these problems do not seem to be ones which will continue to slam the door shut in the face of aspiring candidates. A large number of donors giving small amounts to presidential candidates is a much more comforting thought than a small number of wealthy donors contributing very large amounts to presidential candidates.

Dan Nicastro is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dnicastr@student.umass.edu.

UMass' response to campus violence

For UMass, a good long look into the mirror

Bruce Lerner

February is designated "Black History Month." Thus, it feels rather appropriate to bring up some black history and relate it to UMass. In short, UMass's black history, like this nation's black history, reflects pretty poorly on the school's treatment of blacks. The figures for minority and Afro-American access are dismal and do not look like they are getting much better unless drastic changes occur. This is a tragic and untenable phenomenon that must be dealt with.

If we look around the UMass campus, sometimes it feels like Hitler won WWII and somehow managed to invade and conquer the United States as well. The scene is a veritable ocean of white faces, somewhat similar to a polar bear in a snow storm. Now, as rational college students with very expensive and prestigious educations, we must know that not everybody in the country is of European descent, and that there are people who were brought here as slaves several hundred years ago from Africa. Interestingly, one is hard pressed to find this population represented on campus. In fact, the numbers of African-American students enrolled are shocking. Even though they make up 13 percent of the U.S. population, African-Americans don't top 5 percent of the UMass population.

This is a case of discrimination. Obviously the administration will not admit this blatant fact, but discrimination can take many different forms and can be deliberate or subconscious. An ingenious method of the racist power structure is to change the discrimination from strictly racially-based assessments, such as "we can't take no n---ers here," which did exist, to "we can only consider financially suitable applicants for admission to the University," the current justification for racist admissions policies. One question is, if the University isn't racist, then where are the people who don't look like everyone else?

For upper middle class white kids, the USA is like the world's biggest candy store.

There is an incredible correlation between race and class in this country, the good ol' most racist country in the world, the U. S. of A. Let's not kid ourselves with all of the EPCOT, Mickey Mouse multiculturalism that we see around us, to quote Mike Dyson. The proof is in the pudding, and the pudding is numbers that are easily accessible to college students who all have big brains.

Black people are overwhelmingly poor compared to white people and go to jail in numbers that are vastly disproportionate to their numbers in the population. The means to keep black people poor and incarcerated were taken up on purpose and evidently so.

So, administrators don't need to look at an applicant's race explicitly in order to discriminate against him or her. They only need to look at the family income, thus excluding anyone who can't pay, or their criminal history, thus excluding anyone who was the victim of a wanton police state's draconian policies. Of course, it is important to note that it is a police state for certain groups only, namely ethnic minorities and poor people.

For upper-middle class white kids, the USA is like the world's biggest candy store. That is, if the mentioned kids can feel free to ignore their neighbors' problems.

Despite the dismal results of an admissions policy that leaves out vast elements of the population, UMass can say that it is being fair and balanced, like Fox News. This is because they are not blatantly racist, but aversively racist. Down south, at least blacks knew who the enemy was. Here in the North, an enemy looks like a friend and will smile as he keeps you down.

The most interesting part of UMass is how hard it tries to project an image of tolerance and yet how deeply prejudiced, as an institution, it really is.

We need to stop pretending we don't live in a bigoted state in a bigoted country, where blacks go to jail at eight times the rate that whites do. These illusions will create false assumptions of security and will perpetuate hatred and ignorance. The first step is to smash assumptions like the following: 1. Laws are always fair, that's why they're laws. 2. Everyone has the same chance to succeed if they try hard enough. 3. Racism's over and it's time for minorities to stop complaining.

Let's remember that African-Americans have contributed to the welfare of this country since 1619, in all possible ways from material to cultural to intellectual. As Kurt Vonnegut realized, the main reason the rest of the world doesn't hate us 100 percent is because of the black American music that unites the whole world, jazz and blues. Given that African-American culture is at the core of what it means to be an "American," UMass has a responsibility to at least allow blacks to learn along with their white counterparts. Anything short of this is ludicrous in the richest country in the world.

Bruce Lerner is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bvlerner@student.umass.edu.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

EMAIL: editorial@dailycollegian.com

FAX: 413-545-3699

MAIL: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003

PONY EXPRESS

CARRIER PIGEON

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Big man on campus

NCAA Football '08 delivers new features, better graphics

By Domenic Poli
Collegian Staff

In the world of sports video games, every year, companies try to come out with a newer, somehow better version than the year before. NCAA Football '08 is no exception.

Always popular Dynasty Mode added new features like preseason coaching, distributing medical redshirts and more hands-on recruiting. Once you start Dynasty Mode, you begin recruiting players who will play for your squad after your first season.

You are now able to scout 15 prospects before the first season begins. This leads right into the in-season recruiting. You are given 100 recruiting hours to dedicate to any of the prospects. During the first season, you will need to continue recruiting these prospects before they decide that another school is a better choice. After week seven you can invite certain prospects to see the team in action and choose whether to comply with demands they have in order to play for you.

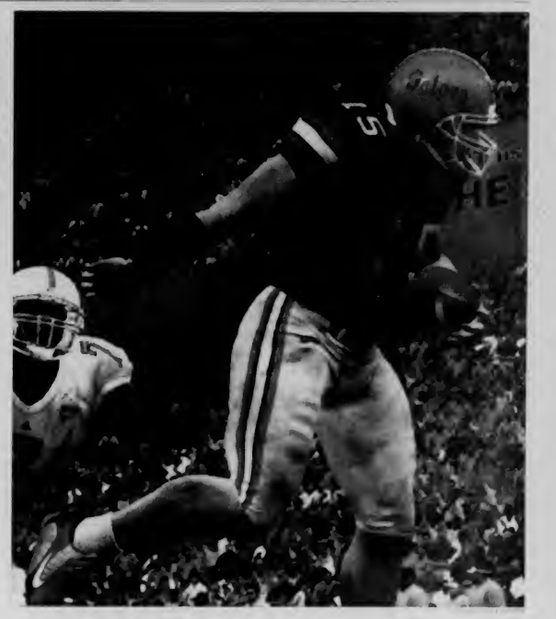
One of the additions to the NCAA Football game modes is Campus Legend. This amazing new feature lets you take the role of a student-athlete. You custom design your player and move on to summer camp, where you try to show college scouts how much potential you have.

Based on how well you did in camp, you're given offers and select which college you will attend. Then you must choose a major. Majors range from easy to difficult and performing well in the classroom allows you to attribute points to certain areas of your game.

Playing Campus Legend, I felt like a real student-athlete at a top football college – without the popularity and barrage of attractive female peers, of course.

Just below Dynasty Mode is another brand new feature called Points Pursuit, in which points are given not for getting into the end zone or splitting the uprights, but for things like yards gained, tackles, receptions and interceptions, broken tackles and forcing an opposing team to go three and out. Keep in mind, however, points are given for user stats only.

There are also new control features to make your virtual football experience more realistic and hands-on.



With the QB Avoidance stick you can greatly reduce the amount of abuse your quarterback takes. Once he takes the snap and defensive players are beating down on your blockers, pull the stick in any direction and the QB will sidestep in that direction.

Another handy trick is the new Highlight stick. Simply tapping it makes your ball carrier either run over a small defender or juke a bigger, stronger one. You have to time it right or the ball carrier will get tackled.

If you manage to work your way out of the pocket you will have the opportunity to send one of your eligible receivers another direction with the Receiver Direct feature, which lets you send your nearest receiver in the direction you choose.

Some adjustments have also been made for defense.

See NCAA on page 6

The latest version of the popular NCAA Football '08 delivers all the highlights of past years and adds new features, like advanced freshman recruiting for Dynasty mode and Campus Hero mode.

Psychedelic sound, but original flair absent

The melodic guitar and hollow vocals cause Dead Meadow's latest release "Old Growth" to fall short of their previous albums. Fans will be forgiven if they skip this latest disc.

By Joe Stahl
Collegian Staff

Dead Meadow's sixth studio album, "Old Growth," is a dive back into the past when Jimi Hendrix and Led Zeppelin ruled the music world. The boys of Dead Meadow got their start in the local DC music scene.

As its third release on the growing Matador Records, Dead Meadow took an unorthodox route to recording their newest work. Half of the album was recorded in a dark and haunted farmhouse in rural Indiana. For the other half of the recording, they flew across the country to L.A.'s Sunset Sound where big names like Led Zeppelin, Joni Mitchell, Beck, Fleetwood Mac and Bob Dylan laid down their records.

Being part of the neo-psychedelic era, Dead Meadow comes off as second best in a genre that is shared with fantastic bands like The Mars Volta, Wolfmother and Of Montreal.

Dead Meadow does take a considerable amount of remnants from the beginnings of psychedelia. This isn't to say that it completely recreates old music. The band strays from falling into the common trap of complete unoriginality, which serves them as their greatest strength.

Jason Simon (lead vocals) gives an exhausted effort as a modern day Jimi Hendrix, while the rest of the gang rhythmically takes influences from Jack Bruce of Cream and more from the contemporary group, Band of Horses.

Despite the melodically strummed guitar with pseudo-surreal rhythms, Simon's vocals come off inhibited and lackluster. One positive result of Simon's unemotional and dreary voice is that it does not shroud the more developed components of the album, like the melodies and tight drums. With or without the intent of doing so, Simon has a forgettable voice, but manages to articulate his lyrics commendably.

From past albums, especially the 2005 release "Feathers," Dead Meadow's music has remained unprogressive. The main factor that sets "Old Growth" apart from "Feathers" is that "Old Growth" is less atmospheric and reverb. Besides this small difference, "Old Growth" is simply a continuation of "Feathers."

"Old Growth" fails to deliver surprise and spontaneity, which is always a component of classic psychedelia. Dead Meadow is as safe as the suburbs here. Expect to hear typical guitar riffs that could only be enjoyable to listen to if there is a bong to smoke.

Dead Meadow goes to show that they may not be gods in the studio, but on the big stage is where Dead Meadow is anticipated to bestow something more appealing and stimulating. Dead Meadow's stoner rock live music has been indulging fans with "good times" ever since the band's beginnings in the late '90s.

Right now, Dead Meadow is on its American tour. The tour began in early February in Texas. The four-piece band will be all over the States until the very end of February, but will not be making any stops in Western Massachusetts until April 21 at the Iron Horse.

If you don't go out and buy the new Dead Meadow album, it would not be the worst thing you could do. This album is definitely expendable and will transmit you to emptiness and a feeling of wasted time.

Joe Stahl can be reached at jstahl@student.umass.edu

Horror writer speaks at UM

Author Jones reads several stories as part of writers series

By Elizabeth Hawley
Collegian Staff

Author Stephen Graham Jones gave a series of readings Feb. 7 in Memorial Hall at the University of Massachusetts.

Jones is the author of several books, including his latest, "Demon Theory." He also teaches fiction at Texas Tech University and has a Ph.D in writing from Florida State University.

Jones is the first of the Visiting Writers Series, monthly readings supported by MFA Program for Poets and Writers, the Juniper Initiative and the UMass English department.

Jones read one of his few non-fiction works, a short story called "Beastiary," about experiences he's had while hunting, including an incident when a rattlesnake's venom got into his arm and caused the area from his wrist to his elbow to swell up.

Jones also read a story about a man who lost a nipple in an accident, and his son's obsession with the scar where the nipple should be.

"The Many Stages of Grief," which Jones said was "almost more true" than "Beastiary" for him, even though it is not a true story, is about a man who loses an eye when eating dog food because it amused his son. The dog sees the man and attacks. The story is about the aftermath of the incident as the man tries to deal with only having one eye.

In his story "Discovering America," of which Jones claims only one sentence was fiction, he discusses the discrimination American Indians face. At one point in the story, the main character, a Native American of the Blackfeet tribe, is taught how to run over Native Americans by someone who claims to have done it for sport while living near Blackfeet territory.

Jones also read a story titled "Old Me," which he described as a love story about a werewolf. In the story, a husband discusses after decades of marriage that his wife turns into a werewolf in her sleep. Jones said he wrote the story after he went to get into bed and had a disturbing thought that he hoped his wife didn't turn into a werewolf in bed.

Jones is a member of the Blackfeet tribe, which split after he published his first novel because he became afraid that people would think of me as a male American Indian writer. To combat this fear, he began writing "the opposite of what [Jones would] write naturally." The opposite was horror.

"When I first started writing horror I was so liberated because when I got sick of a character I could cut their heads off," Jones joked.

"A lot of my stories have either body parts flying or animals dying," Jones joked when he'd finished the readings, adding that he hoped people weren't too sensitive to that.

Elizabeth Hawley can be reached at ehawley@student.umass.edu

Horror writer Stephen Graham Jones was the first in the Visiting Writers Series for the spring semester. On Thursday he read a selection of short stories, both fiction and non-fiction.

The experience that is Hannah Montana

New documentary allows fans access to sold-out national tour

By Skye McIntyre
Collegian Staff

Normally, spending $15 on a movie would be out of the question. However, when the film consists of 75 minutes of my favorite teen sensation parading around a concert stage in outlandish outfits in front of thousands of screaming fans, it had to be done. I spent last Saturday afternoon at the AMC theaters in West Springfield soaking up every fleeting second of the "Hannah Montana and Miley Cyrus: Best of Both Worlds Concert movie."

I've never been bashful about hiding my adoration for all things "pop" – more accurately, my obsession for nearly anything intended for the "tween" set. Therefore, you can imagine my delight when I first learned of the existence of Miley Cyrus, or Hannah Montana, for those of you who know her by her alter ego. For those of you who have no idea who I'm talking about, let me explain.

15-year-old Miley Cyrus (daughter of country crooner Billy Ray Cyrus, of "Achy Breaky Heart" fame) stars in a hugely successful show on the Disney Channel called "Hannah Montana." The show itself is named after the other character Miley plays on the show, a pop superstar.

The program's premise is simple: by day, Miley is a typical teenager, at night, she dons a blonde wig and disguises herself as Hannah Montana, singing superstar. Hilarity and hijinks ensue because Miley leads a double life; only her family and closest friends know her secret.

The show, first aired in early 2006, was an instant hit. Now, nearly two years and millions of dollars in revenue later – the show has a commercial line with items ranging from backpacks to bedding – Disney has decided to turn the cash cow into a cash behemoth. The "Best of Both Worlds Concert movie" was released in theaters Feb. 1.

The documentary, which features footage from three recent concerts on her recently completed nationwide tour with Disney contemporary the Jonas Brothers, was originally promoted as being shown in select theaters across the country for "one week only." However, rabid fans snapped up tickets in remarkable numbers, and the movie will now remain on screens everywhere, indefinitely.

Directed by Bruce Hendricks and Mitch Amundsen (Transformers), the footage was shot using seven 3-D digital cameras, a method resulting in the ability of the audience to feel as if they were in the front row of one of her sold-out shows. Upon entrance into the theater, myself and two friends, (who shall remain nameless), were given pre-packaged 3-D glasses. At that point, my excitement elevated to unprecedented heights.

After scanning the theater to find that we were, by far, the oldest Cyrus enthusiasts, we settled in to enjoy the show. The lights dimmed, a voracious pack of 4-year-olds broke out multi-colored glow sticks and bounced in their seats with anticipation, and Cyrus graced the screen, shown flocked by hair and make-up people backstage at one of her shows.

The following hour and 15 minutes consisted of energetic performances of some of her better-known material mixed with brief interviews with the singer's family and Cyrus herself. Opening with a performance backed by elaborate pyrotechnics, a full band and dancers at least five years her senior, Cyrus started the show with a bang, literally and figuratively.

The movie then regresses to four weeks prior, when show rehearsals began on a palatial soundstage in sunny Los Angeles. Tour director and famed choreographer Kenny Ortega (High School Musical) is featured as being the "glue" that brings and holds the entire production together. In just 30 days, the entire crew packs up for a 54-date journey across the U.S. First stop, St. Louis.

The first half of the movie features Cyrus as Hannah Montana, and she races through crowd pleasers including "I Got Nerve," "We Got the Party," and "Life's What You Make It." Several frantic, fast-paced costume changes and a guest appearance by the dreamy Jonas Brothers later, she emerges from underneath the end of a lengthy runway attached to the front of the stage as herself, to the jet liner-level roar of countless, screeching little girls.

Though the majority of her poppy tunes are quick enough to be danceable, she slows down the pace of the show with "I Miss You." As she strums her acoustic guitar, a montage of photos flashes on a series of screens behind her, depicting a young Cyrus with her deceased grandfather, the one whom she confesses she penned the song for.

The set culminates with a lively rendition of "The Best of Both Worlds," the theme song to the Hannah Montana television show. Accompanying Cyrus on stage is a large video screen showing her as Montana, the image dancing and motioning to the real-life Cyrus.

"Hannah Montana and Miley Cyrus: Best of Both Worlds" is unique not only because it's in 3-D (think drumsticks and guitar picks flying at your face), but because it gives those who missed the opportunity to catch Cyrus in a city near them a second chance to see their idol in her element. For those who (openly or not) love Cyrus, It really is the next best thing to being there. Just one piece of advice: resist the urge to get out of your seat to dance and sing along.

Skye McIntyre can be reached at smcintyr@student.umass.edu.

Hannah Montana has become a national phenomenon ever since her television debut in 2006. The current tour has made headlines not only for its ticket sales, but for the extremes that parents have gone through to get them.

Relive the college football dream

NCAA from page 5

For instance, there is the QB Contain Defensive Hot Route feature. The defender will rush wide, wait for the ball carrier and strike when he approaches.

To help out the defensive backs there is the Smart Zone Defensive Hot Route feature. This makes him play his zone at the first-down yard line, filling any potential holes in the defense.

As with all sports games, this is meant to be enjoyed with friends but one problem has always been the ability to view what play a friend is calling. The folks at EA Sports have solved this quagmire with the new Bluff Play Art/Coach Cam Visuals feature.

The graphics are, like always, fantastic. Tackles vary from crushing blows to wrap ups to shoe-string stops, as well as great new gang tackles.

When you have a holding penalty called against you, just check instant replay and you will see that (almost always) your player did actually commit a holding violation. First-down and touchdown celebrations are also new and improved. Whether it's the simple kneel-down-and-thank-God gesture, a cocky crowd-jeering taunt or group celebrations, the post-score routines are more life-like. But be careful – have your player go too far and you will get flagged for unsportsmanlike conduct.

The game even includes two brand new plays, the "hook and ladder" and the "statue of liberty," and a new kick.

All in all, NCAA Football '08 is bigger, better and badder than any other version out there.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

The advanced graphics in this latest installment allow touchdown celebrations to look more realistic than ever, but taking the dance too far will result in a flag.

Submit your beer related questions to arts@dailycollegian.com, so the Beer Dudes can answer your brew-related queries in the new Beer Dude podcast

Be My Valentine!
Indulge with a Healthy Taste of Chocolate Fondue & More!
Thursday, Feb. 14
All DCs
from 5–9 pm
• Chocolate Fondue with Fresh Fruits
• Chocolate Pizza
• Chocolate Lemon Mousse Cake
• White Chocolate Bark
• Hot Chocolate
ENTER TO WIN THE GRAND PRIZE:
Godiva Chocolates & Red Roses
*Drawing February 13, 2008
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
2007 Grand Prize
www.umass.edu/diningservices

Take out a classifieds ad
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
now offers free online classifieds for students at
WWW.UMASSLIST.COM
• More complete, local and relevant category listings than any and all competitor web sites combined
• Users can setup daily e-mail updates for relevant listings. No more searching for apartments, now they come to you.
• Post unlimited online listings
• Little to no spam
By listing on this site you are supporting your local college newspaper, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Sophomores improve

SWIMMING from page 10

"I came from a high school team that wasn't really big with swimming. So coming here [there was] a big jump from swimming two hours a week to swimming however many hours we swim now."

Improving her times was a goal that Walsh set for herself at the beginning of the season, and in terms of her backstroke events, she has accomplished that goal. Walsh excels in the 200-yard backstroke event this season. In terms of her best time in that event last year, Walsh beat her time by over a second.

According to the Marshfield, Mass. native, the 200 back was the main race that she wanted to improve upon for this season.

"Last year I was just learning how to swim [the event]," Walsh said. "I had never really competed in it before and its kind of an event that you have to learn how to swim and I think that I finally have it down this year."

Walsh wanted to lower her times to make the Atlantic 10 Conference Meet and improve upon last year's effort, in which her best finish was 13th in the 100-yard backstroke. Walsh did, however, swim the second leg of the second-place-finishing 800-yard free relay team.

As just a second year swimmer for UMass, Walsh and the rest of the sophomores live in the same building as the freshman swimmers do. With the current accommodations, grouped with the cohesiveness of the team, the freshmen will learn from Walsh and UMass coach Bob Newcomb's Minutewomen will be in a good position to achieve success.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

UMass looks to knock off GW

W. BASKETBALL from page 10

Though underdogs, it was two years ago that UMass earned a home win over a ranked GW team. The Colonials came to the Mullins Center ranked No. 25 and two Mills free-throws with 10 seconds remaining gave the Minutewomen a 55-53 win.

Dacko is confident UMass can produce a similar result this year.

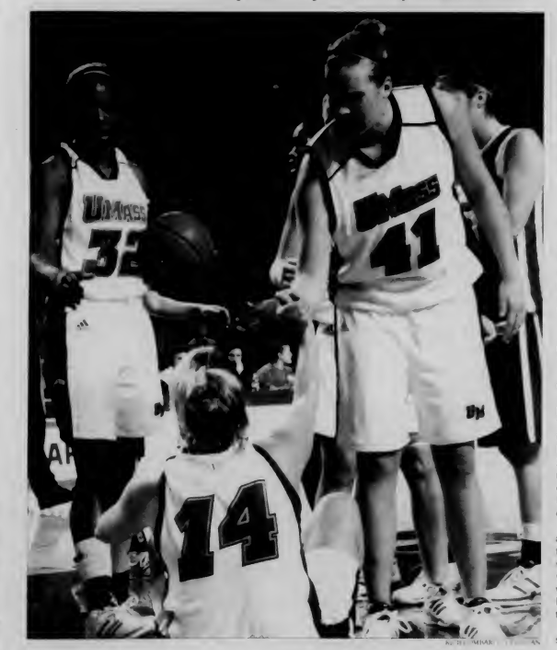
"I think we match up pretty well with them and we're playing at home," she said. "We've got to be on the attack and get to the foul line."

Dacko thinks GW is foul prone, and the Minutewomen, especially Rosanio, have the ability to get to the line. Rosanio has been to the charity stripe 119 times this year, and the team has attempted 104 more free throws than its opponents.

GW has allowed 399 free throws this year, the same amount the Minutewomen have attempted, but have been to the line 431 times themselves.

After Saturday's loss to URI, Dacko was extremely disappointed with the team's production on the glass and described it as, "the poorest rebounding effort of the season."

"The [players] will be the first to tell you our practices are sometimes more intense than what we play on the floor," she said. "We don't make as many mistakes in practice as we do in games and our men's practice team is better than Rhode Island."



It's particularly important the Minutewomen cut down on turnovers tonight. GW has too many scoring threats to be given extra opportunities to score.

UMass has two scorers in double figures, whereas the Colonials have four. Senior guard Sarah Jo-Lawrence averages 13.2 points and 5.1 rebounds, while Antelia Parrish averages 11.8 points and 7.6 rebounds per game.

In addition to taking care of the ball, the Minutewomen also have to box out on the defensive glass. GW averages 13.1 offensive rebounds this season, and UMass opponents average 13.4 per game.

One important player on the defensive glass for UMass is freshman Teya Wright. If Wright avoids foul trouble and can stay in the game, she'll give the Minutewomen a physical presence to match up with the Colonial rebounders.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu

Senior forward Kate Mills and the Minutewomen look to upset No. 14 George Washington tonight at the Mullins Center. The Colonials are the first ranked team UMass will face this season.

UNH moves higher in national rankings

By Ryan Fleming
Collegian Correspondent

Monday afternoon the latest USCHO/CSTV Division I Men's Polls were released.

New Hampshire moved up to No. 4 by continuing its winning ways against Hockey East foes. The Wildcats have won nine straight Hockey East games, outscoring opponents by a combined score of 32-14.

This past weekend UNH swept the weekend series against Maine at Alfond Arena for the first time in the program's history, outscoring them 7-3.

In the recent poll, Boston College moved up two slots past Michigan State and Notre Dame to become the new No. 7. In its last ten games BC is 6-2-2, including a 4-1 win at Massachusetts and a 4-3 overtime victory over Boston University (10-14-4, 8-8-3 Hockey East) in the semifinal of the Beanpot Tournament.

Providence College slid back two slots to No. 14 in this week's poll. This past weekend, the Friars hosted Vermont for two games and split the weekend series, 1-1. In Saturday's overtime win against Vermont, PC's Jon Rheault scored the first goal and the game-winner with only 14 seconds left.

Northeastern (13-10-3, 10-7-2 Hockey East) has struggled recently, and it showed in this week's poll when they slid back one slot to No. 15. In the Huskies' last 10 games they are 4-5-1 and have been outscored 25-29 in that span.

UMass Lowell slid back one slot to No. 18. In the River Hawks' last 10 games they have posted a record of 4-6, which included this weekend's 6-2 loss to Boston University. A bright side for the River Hawks was their power play – it went 2-of-5 against the Terriers on Friday night and the same unit is 3-of-9 in their last two games.

BC's Ferriero tallies 100th career point

Boston College junior Benn Ferriero recorded his 99th and 100th career points Feb. 4 in his team's 4-3 overtime victory over Boston University in the semifinal round of the Beanpot Tournament.

Hockey East

Ferriero now becomes the second active player on BC's roster with 100 collegiate points, joining teammate Nathan Gerbe. Ferriero has tallied 49 goals and 51 assists in 100 career games. Gerbe has totaled 57 goals and 47 assists for 104 points in 105 games.

Ferriero is now tied with former player Bob Reardon (1970-73) for 39th on BC's all-time list.

Boston College escapes with Beanpot Title

If two words could describe last night's 56th annual Beanpot Tournament Championship game between BC (15-6-7, 9-4-6 Hockey East) and Harvard (9-11-3, 7-7-2 ECAC), they would be roller coaster. In front of a sold out crowd of almost 18,000, the Eagles showed up in overtime and came away with the win.

The game started much like anyone suspected, with BC getting the advantage. The Eagles scored 3:51 into the first period with a shot from Brian Gibbons, who beat Harvard goaltender Kyle Richter. It was Gibbons' eighth of the year.

The momentum the Eagles held soon turned toward the Crimson.

Though Harvard was outshot in the first period, 9-5, they took full advantage of their scarce opportunities. A little less than four minutes after BC took the early lead Harvard answered right back. Mike Taylor beat BC freshman goalie John Muse for his sixth of the year.

A few minutes later, riding their momentum, the Crimson scored again. Matt McCollem stole a pass inside BC's own zone and fired a wrist shot that beat Muse top-shelf glove side. It was McCollem's second of the year. Doug Rogers assisted on both goals.

At the start of the second period, BC came out with fire. 1:21 into that period, Brian Gibbons let go a wrist shot from the right circle that beat Richter glove side for his ninth goal of the year.

The Eagles added to their lead later in the second when freshman defenseman Nick Petrecki beat Richter for his first collegiate goal at 9:06 into the period.

The Crimson wasted no time tying the score. Rogers scored the game-tying goal on the power play at 2:35 in the period.

BC scored the next two goals at 5:48 and 10:22 in the third to earn a 5-3 lead. Pat Gannon and Andrew Orpik were the goal scorers.

When it seemed like the game was out of reach, the Crimson fought back to tie the game, similar to the previous period. At 11:14, less than a minute after BC went up two, Jon Pelle put the Crimson within one, beating Muse for his seventh of the season. With less than five minutes remaining in the game and BC still up one, Mike Taylor tied the game with his seventh of the year.

In overtime the Eagles played with more energy than the Crimson.

Petrecki, who earlier in the game scored his first collegiate goal, scored the game winner at 7:07 when teammate Pat Gannon fired a puck off Crimson goalie Richter's left pad that gave Petrecki the opportunity to bank home the winning goal and he converted.

BU earns third place in Beanpot

Boston University rallied behind Colin Wilson's three-point effort to stage a 5-4 come-from-behind win over Northeastern.

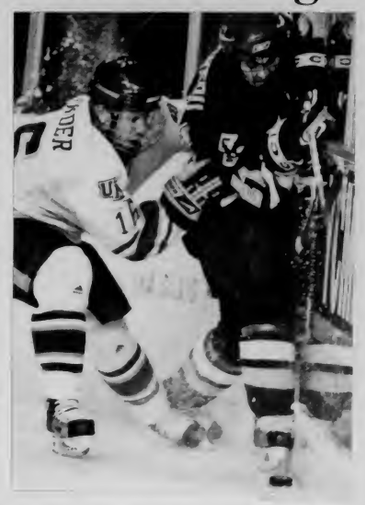
BU was down 4-2 with 6:09 remaining in the second period when Wilson scored his first goal by squeaking it by NU goalie Brad Thiessen.

Matt Gilroy tied the game at four a little over nine minutes into the third. It was his sixth of the year.

Colby Cohen, who notched a goal in the first period, assisted on the game winner scored by Wilson (2g, 1a).

BU's freshman goalie Adam Kraus stopped the last 13 shots he faced and totaled 25 saves.

The Huskies sophomore goaltender Brad Thiessen totaled 46 saves in the losing effort.



BU left-winger Luke Popko tallied two assists.

NU center Ryan Grinard tallied 3 points (2g, 1a) in a losing effort.

Game notes

It was the fourth time in five years that the championship game has gone into overtime. The 11 goals scored were the fifth most in championship history. It was the 14th time that BC has won the Beanpot title and the first time in four years. Harvard was outshot 7-0 in overtime.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at sports@dailycollegian.com.

Boston College forward Benn Ferriero notched career-point No. 100 in the team's 4-3 semifinal victory over Boston University in the Beanpot.

AMHERST / HADLEY
413-256-8911
Rt 9 Across From Stop & Shop
Store Hours:
Open 11am-4am Thurs.-Sat.
11am -3am Sun.-Wed
Mt. Holyoke Location: 593-9500
GREAT ONLINE COUPONS
WWW.DOMINOS.COM
My Wings or Kickers Special
10 Buffalo Wings or Domino's Pizza Buffalo Chicken Kickers® & an Order of Cheesy Bread
$9.99
Three or More Medium 1-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 each
Three or More Large 1-Topping Pizzas
$7.77 each
Doubles
Two 1-Topping Pizzas Plus an Order of Cheesy Bread
$15.99 $18.99
Mega Special
Any Large Pizza
Unlimited Toppings
ONLY $10.99 each
*NO DOUBLE TOPPINGS Expires 3/16/08
WE ACCEPT OCMP
Find Out More About oullamapeaks.org

where style happens
Citizens of Humanity jeans
Seven jeans
Mavi jeans
Free People
Hazel
Juno
Voxx
Miss Me
Madden Girl
Oh...Deer
Chinese Laundry
Yellow Box
Frye
Keds
Reef
Keen
Teva
Dansko
and ...lots of fun necessaries!
ZANA
downtown Amherst

Think BIG 18th Annual
Wednesday
February 20, 2008
10 AM - 4:00 PM
Sioux Falls Convention Center
SOUTH DAKOTA BIG JOB FAIR
Business • Industry • Government
Students at South Dakota member institutions may pre-register for $5
All other candidates $10 at the door
More than 150 employers!
Professional Attire Required For more information visit www.getgrads.com

Butterfly
Chinese & Japanese Restaurant
WWW.BUTTERFLYHADLEY.COM
Vegetarian Menu Available
Enjoy drinks at the full bar!
Free Delivery Hadley Min $15.00 Out of Town Min $20.00
(413) 585-8989
Mon. – Thurs. 11:30am – 10:00pm | Fri. & Sat. 11:30am – 11:00pm
Sunday 12:00noon – 10:00pm
48 Russell St (Rt. 9) Hadley, MA 01035

GW cruises to victory; Fordham still winless

By Sam Grossack
Collegian Correspondent

George Washington continues to make a push to prove why they should be in the Top 10 behind strong defense and even stronger offense.

The No. 14 Colonials cruised to a 27-point victory on the road against Richmond on Feb. 10. Senior forward Jessica Adair led all scorers with 27 points and four of the Colonial starters scored in double figures.

With the win, GW coach Joe McKeown registered career-win No. 501. His Colonials shot 23-of-28 from the free-throw line and turned 24 Spider turnovers into 28 points. The Colonials improved to 19-4 on the season and 7-1 in the Atlantic 10.

The Spiders had struggles shooting the ball, hitting 28.3 percent from the floor. Brittan Shells scored 21 points for Richmond in the losing effort, while the team's second-leading scorer Johanna McKnight was held to only six points.

For the Spiders, their 16 points in the first half matched the number of turnovers they committed in the first 20 minutes, leaving them with a 23-point deficit at the break. Richmond falls into a tie with Rhode Island in the conference at 4-4, it hosts URI Wednesday in a game with playoff implications.

Dayton sets new record

The Dayton Flyers set a new school record on Saturday by winning their 19th game of the season. The Flyers defeated winless Fordham, 56-39, behind strong defense, holding the Rams to 25 percent shooting and 13 percent shooting from three-point range.

A-10 W. Hoops

Dayton never trailed in the game, despite shooting 35 percent from the field. Nikki Oakland led the Flyers with 19 points and Brittany Holterman recorded her first double-double of the season with 12 points and 12 rebounds.

Annie Zopf was Fordham's only scorer in double figures with 11 points while Kristina Bell grabbed seven rebounds for the Rams. Fordham has five more games remaining this season before the A-10 tournament, which they currently don't qualify for.

49ers hot at home

A 20-point lead with five minutes left is extremely difficult to surmount, but St. Bonaventure almost pulled off the difficult comeback against Charlotte on Feb. 9. In the final five minutes, the Bonnies went on a 24-6 scoring run, pulling within two points with one second left. On the ensuing inbound, the Bonnies could not force the steal to try and make a last-second shot.

The 49ers dominated almost the entire game, especially on the boards and in the paint, where they scored 38 of their 60 points. Wendy Stywalt led the 49ers with 12 points and was one of three players scoring in double figures.

Forward Dana Mitchell led the Bonnies with a game-high 18 points, and knocked down a 3-pointer with only one second remaining to draw with in two. Despite committing four fewer turnovers in the game, St. Bonaventure had problems early on defense, enabling the 49ers to have several long scoring runs. The 49ers moved to 6-3 in conference play after hanging on with the victory.

Player honors

The A-10 Co-Players of the Week were senior forward Carlene Hightower of La Salle and senior guard Ashley Morris of Temple. This is the first time either player has won the award.

Hightower averaged 25 points per game this past week, shooting 55.6 percent from the field and 85 percent from three-point range. She also added 5.5 rebounds and 2.5 steals per game, helping end the five-game losing streak for the Explorers on Sunday against Saint Louis.

On Wednesday, Morris scored a career-high 32 points against the 49ers, connecting on 7-of-10 three point attempts. She averaged 23.5 points, five assists and 3.5 rebounds per game during the week.

Averaging a double-double, St. Josephs' freshman Sarah Acker won the A-10 Rookie of the Week honor for the third time this season. Acker averaged 14.5 points and 11.5 rebounds for the Hawks in two wins. Only Xavier's Ta'Shia Phillips (nine times) has won the award more times than her this season.

Sam Grossack can be reached at sgrossac@student.umass.edu.

Fordham junior forward Takiia Earl has started all 24 games this season. The Rams have yet to win a game on the year.

Lawson doesn't play, UNC loses to Duke

With players out, Tar Heels scramble at PG

By Jeff Larnard
Collegian Correspondent

The loss of North Carolina's sophomore point guard Ty Lawson to injury has caused the Tar Heels to struggle in their past two games and drop in the Associated Press poll to No. 5.

Lawson sprained his left ankle in UNC's overtime win at Florida State, and has missed two games since the injury. UNC coach Roy Williams has said that Lawson will likely miss the team's next game against Virginia and that he does not know if there is a timetable for the point guard's return.

Top 25 M. Hoops

UNC (22-2, 7-2 Atlantic Coast Conference) lost, 89-78, to No. 2 Duke at home on Feb. 6 in its first of two games last week. The game was a matchup of the second and third-ranked teams in the nation.

With the loss, the Tar Heels fell two games behind the Blue Devils (21-1, 9-0 ACC) in conference play.

Quentin Thomas, UNC's backup point guard, took charge in the place of Lawson, but did not provide the same play. Thomas had six turnovers in the matchup against Duke, compared to just over two that Lawson has averaged this season. Along with the turnovers, Thomas hasn't matched Lawson's offense, as Lawson provided 13.6 points per game.

UNC's second game of the week came on Feb. 10 against Clemson. It took two overtimes for UNC to pull away with a victory, 103-93. The Tigers (17-6, 5-4 ACC) never trailed in the game until the first overtime.

The victory for the Tar Heels gave them a new NCAA record for longest home winning streak against one opponent. Princeton, with 52 wins over Brown, previously held the mark. UNC is now 53-0 all-time against Clemson at Chapel Hill.

Despite a UNC win, the loss of Lawson was felt as Thomas again did not perform to the level the Tar Heels were used to with Lawson.

UNC has had its struggles at point guard this season. Along with Lawson's injury, backup Bobby Frasor is out for the season with a knee injury, and now Marcus Ginyard is hurt. He sprained his ankle in the double-overtime win against Clemson and has an injured toe to go with his ankle.

Louisville back in the Top 25

Louisville has climbed its way to the No. 23 ranking in the AP Top 25, with two upset wins this past week against ranked conference rivals, Marquette and Georgetown.

The Cardinals (18-6, 8-3 Big East) have not been ranked since they fell from the Top 25 back in week six. They trade places with Marquette, which was the only team this week to drop from the AP rankings.

The two victories moved the Cardinals into third place in the Big East standings, trailing only Georgetown (20-3, 10-2 Big East) and Notre Dame (18-4, 8-2 Big East). The Big East has proven to be a tough conference this season with five teams ranked this week.

Louisville's win at Marquette (16-6, 6-5 Big East) completed the season sweep of the Golden Eagles for the Cardinals. Marquette never had a lead in the game, as Louisville cruised from the outset, winning 71-57.

The Cardinals did not dominate every aspect of the game; they had more turnovers, four offensive rebounds compared to Marquette's fourteen, and were outrebounded overall 32-24.

Against Georgetown, the Cardinals played a solid defensive game, holding the Hoyas to only 20 points in the second half. In a well-balanced defensive game, the Cardinals edged the Hoyas, 59-51.

Georgetown dropped two spots to No. 8 in this week's ranking with the loss.

Texas comes up big again

The Texas Longhorns have a thing for knocking off teams ranked in the Top 10.

This season the Longhorns have had four games against teams ranked in the Top 10 of ESPN/USA Today's Poll and are 3-1 in those games. The only loss for No. 11 Texas in these games came from a No. 10 Michigan State team.

The wins include upsets of then-ranked No. 1 UCLA, No. 7 Tennessee and the most recent against No. 3 Kansas.

This past Monday night when the Jayhawks (23-2, 8-2 Big 12) came into Texas for a Big 12 Conference game, the Longhorns (20-4, 7-2 Big 12) handed them only their second loss of the season, 72-69.

The Big 12 standings, which contain four ESPN Top 25 teams, were shaken up after that game. The Longhorns took over third place in the conference, jumping a half-game ahead of No. 16 Texas A&M. The loss dropped Kansas into a first-place tie with rival No. 22 Kansas State.

All four teams have an equally tough task ahead of themselves, with two of the top four teams in the Big 12 on their remaining schedules. Each team has one of those matchups at home and the other on the road.

With a game and a half separating the top four teams in the Big 12, it's open for any team to capture in the last few weeks of conference play.

Tennessee back in Top 5

The Tennessee Volunteers showed this past week that they can win, regardless of whether their offense is on fire or flat.

First, the Volunteers (21-2, 8-1 SEC) defeated the two-time defending national champion Florida Gators, 104-82. After falling behind by 13 early in the first half, Tennessee came together and ended the night with an offensive explosion.

Sparked by defense, the Volunteers went on to score 60 second-half points in completing the rout. Many of the points scored in the second half came off Tennessee steals. The Volunteers had fourteen steals in the game.

Florida (19-5, 6-3 SEC) also could not stop the Volunteers' 3-point shooting, which was 44.8 percent from beyond the arc.

After the offensive burst, Tennessee took on LSU, who held the Volunteers to 47 points. Despite the offense running a little flat, Tennessee's defense held off the Tigers (8-14, 1-7 SEC) to secure a 47-45 victory.

Tennessee, who is making a strong case for a number one seed in next month's tournament, still has a few opportunities to prove they belong with college basketball's elite.

The Volunteers may have a shot at knocking off the only undefeated team left in college basketball if Memphis can continue its streak. The two teams will play in Memphis on Feb. 23 on ESPN at 9 p.m.

Jeff Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.

Sophomore guard Ty Lawson has missed the past few games for North Carolina, challenging the team's depth.

Chancellor's Election

Nominations:
Open
Feb. 13th 12p.m.
Closing
Feb. 26th 6p.m.

Pick up applications at the SGA office:
420 Student Union

Positions Available:
SGA President
University Student Truste
and
Area Government

NOTE TO SELF

WRITE FOR SPORTS!

sports@dailycollegian.com

University Health Services

Support and Therapy Group Meetings • Spring, 2008

STRESSBUSTERS
Thursdays, 3/13, 3/27, 4/3 and 4/10, 3:30 – 5 p.m.
Learn how to relax, reduce worry, manage your time and sleep better in this four-part series. Space is limited, so register early!

LIVING WITH LOSS
Tuesdays, 4 – 5:30 p.m.
A support group for undergraduate and graduate students dealing with the loss of someone close to them.

CONNECTING ON CAMPUS
Wednesdays, 2:30 – 4 p.m.
An undergraduate therapy group focusing on school adjustments, relationships, anxiety, depression and more.

MINDFULNESS-BASED STRESS REDUCTION (MBSR)
Mondays, 4 – 5:30 p.m. or Wednesdays, 5 – 6:30 p.m.
Mindfulness is a way of paying attention with intention, in the moment and without judgment. With regular practice, MBSR has the potential to lower stress, anxiety and depression, promote relaxation, improve concentration, raise self-awareness and enhance the immune system.

Pre-registration is required for all groups. Call 545-2337 or come to Mental Health Services, 127 Hills North, Monday – Friday, 8 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Seven O's
EVERY WEDNESDAY
KARAOKE
* * * * * *
LIVE BAND
SAT. 2/16/08
FOUR ON THE FLOOR
LOOKING FOR EXPOSURE?
STUDENT BANDS WELCOME TO PLAY AT SEVEN O'S
LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO HAVE A PRIVATE EVENT/PARTY?
CALL 413-530-6996
ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-6786
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN
NEXT TO CLIFFSIDE APTS.

Poo-doku

5								9
	9	4		5	3		7
			2	4
4	2		5	8
	5						6
				7	4		2	3
				2	7
	8		1	3		9	4
2								1

ACROSS
1 Treatise or essay
6 Easiness indices?
9 Stands in line
14 Come to terms
15 Silicon substance
16 Banks of baseball
17 New Orleans pro
18 Pitcher's stat
19 Make amends
20 Sort of loll
21 Some prints
23 Really old
25 Fateful day
27 Polish the text
28 Five before six
29 Color shade
33 Where one lives
36 "Lou Grant" star
37 Capital of Senegal?
38 Put up
40 Victory sign
41 Take the helm
43 Normal
45 Exam
46 RPM part
47 River to the Caspian
48 Love god
50 Betting orders
53 Expert valuations
57 The Greatest
58 Colossus
59 Pie __ mode
60 Metropolitan
62 Red tide and kelp
63 Sleep letters
64 Pooh's creator
65 Does Virginie's dance
66 Vote for
67 Bards

DOWN
1 Spaghetti, e g
2 Once more
3 Potentialqueens
4 Poetic contraction
5 Out of the bus
6 Man in the field
7 Floating ice mass
8 Some woodwinds
9 Operate a loom
10 Manet and Monet
11 Privy to 12 Small, metallic sound
13 Comprehends
21 Go in
22 Summertime refresher
24 Amin of Uganda
25 Fine-feathered duck
26 Come to pass
30 Priceless
31 __-do-well
32 Low card
33 Remainder
34 Italian noble name
35 Required
36 Decorate
39 Needle cases
42 Everlasting
44 West of Hollywood
46 Luau dish
49 Costs per unit
50 Andes beast
51 Factory
52 Trig functions
53 Thickening agent
54 Nuclear reactor
55 Aide
56 Toward shelter
60 Bell caller
61 Carnival city

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

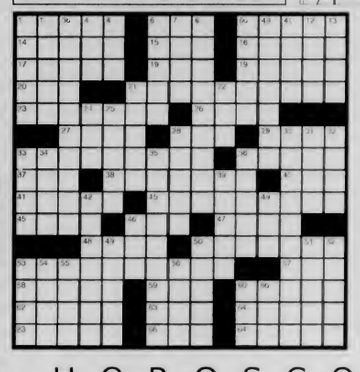
You look like you want to color in a sheep.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"When everyone was trying to outdo the last man, I was just a ghost trying to catch some Ms. Pacman."

-Atmosphere

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe



WONDERMARK By David Malki

LABRAT By Richard Martelly

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 2008
No Matter where you are...
Session I June 2 - July 10
Session II July 14 - Aug 26
Online Gen Ed's
Small Classes
Great Faculty
PLAN AHEAD!
UMassULearn.net

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Aim for the stars. If you miss you'll wind up homeless and dancing at a strip club named "Celestial Cheetahs."

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Accept the comics guy's invitation to a romantic Valentine's Day dinner at McDonald's. He's so dreamy.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Stop calling your friends "dude," "buddy," "brother" and "guy." No one is cool enough to pull that off.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Your bones are becoming brittle and weak. Hook an IV into your arm and plunge the other end into a cow's udder.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Fear is not only an option, it's a very legitimate excuse.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Don't trust anyone with a tongue ring. Their tongue has a hole in it and they're in the market for a new one.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You are a master of the "woo and screw," flawlessy implementing the technique of "pursue and do."

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Starting now, only eat apples for the rest of the day and see how many it takes to keep you alive.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
When the sun is highest in the sky, you will feel an incredible urge to dance. Don't fight it, do the solar salsa.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
NEVER EAT BACON BITS. NEVER!

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Your friends are starting to call you a flaky flounder. Stop ditching them and start being a dependable dolphin.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Are you eating pizza with a fork and knife? You pretentious f@%*.

Get out of class free coupon!!!

Give this to your teacher and he/she will give you an excused absence for the day.

Some conditions apply. Offer not actually valid anywhere.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT. FOR RENT

Center of Town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Hobart condos 3 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. No FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

ROOM 4 RENT

BEDROOM AVAILABLE GREAT DEAL - $525 per month. SHARE 1 Bedroom in a 4 BR, 2 BA apartment! Won't Last!
ALPINE COMMONS - GREAT SAFE LOCATION
All utilities, cable, internet included. New full sized bed and desk available for purchase. Washer and Dryer in apartment. EMAIL mjmctyre@gmail.com or phone: 413-256-0741 to see today!

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab.linguist.umass.edu 545-6837
Listening Experiments $10/hr
English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

THE GREATEST SUMMER OF YOUR LIFE CAMP PONTIAC is coming to UMASS! Located in NY State Camp Pontiac, a premier co-ed overnight camp in New York, is looking for fun, enthusiastic and mature individuals who can teach and assist in all areas of athletics, aquatics, the arts, or as a general bunk counselor. Interviews will be held on Thursday, Feb. 21st 9:00AM-11:30AM Campus Center/ Student Union Complex-Room 901. Please email: stefanie@camppontiac.com or call Stefanie at 516-626-7668 to set up an interview.

CAMP TAKAJO, Naples, Maine, Picturesque lakefront locations, exceptional facilities, Mid-June thru mid-August. Counselor positions in tennis, swimming, land sports, water sports, tripping, outdoor skills, theatre arts, fine arts, music, nature study. Call Camp Takajo at (866) 356-2267 Submit application on-line at www.takajo.com. Will be in the Campus Center - Job Fair Feb 14th

Need a job? At Staffing Now we help students find local clerical & accounting jobs. PT & FT positions available at www.staffingnow.com & www.accountingnow.com Let us help you find a job - meet with a recruiter Feb. 27th at ISOM 9 a.m. or contact us 413-529-7100 to learn more.

UMass Amherst is in search of new tour guides and/or orientation counselors. See us in the Campus Center concourse this week to pick up an application. Applications are also available at the Visitor's Center and at www.umass.edu/new-student/studentjobs/counselor. The application deadline is February 15, 2008. Apply Now.

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable. Safe 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

WHAT ARE YOU DOING FOR SPRING BREAK? Want a cooler Spring Break than the typical Cancun? Travel to Amsterdam, Paris, Italy, or Prague and get a FREE Ipod Shuffle and $100 off! Contact your Contiki Umass Reps at pbordona@student.umass.edu or cromano@student.umass.edu or go to the STA Office for more info! Be a traveler not a tourist!!!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Ranked Colonials visit Amherst

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts women's basketball coach Marnie Dacko is unsure whether starting point guard Kim Benton will play in tonight's home game against George Washington.

If there's one game where the Minutewomen (11-12, 3-5 Atlantic 10) can't afford to lose Benton, it's tonight – Colonial point guard Kimberly Beck ranks near the top of multiple statistical categories in the A-10.

Coming off a junior season in which she was named to the A-10 All-Conference First Team for the second consecutive year, Beck has effectively played floor general for No. 14 GW (19-4, 7-1 A-10) this season. She ranks first in assists per game (6.3) and assist-to-turnover ratio (2.69) in the conference, while her 2.2 steals per game rank third.

Beck can also shoot from the outside; she's tied for the conference lead with 52 3-pointers and averages 13.7 points.

"Kimberly Beck was the defensive player of the year in the A-10 last year – an outstanding point guard who really commands control of her team," Dacko said.

Benton sustained an injury in UMass's last game against Rhode Island, and if she doesn't play, junior Sakera Young will remain the sole point guard remaining on the roster. Dacko used Pam Rosanio and Stefanie Gerardot at point guard Saturday against the Rams, but it's not their natural position.

The Minutewomen will have to contain Beck but also GW's post players. Junior Jessica Adair is fifth in the conference with 16.3 points per game. She is 6-foot-4 and also wider than any of the Minutewoman defenders. Dacko acknowledged that her team will have to help out Kate Mills and Whitney McDonald in the post to limit Adair's offensive production.

While UMass will have its share of defensive responsibilities inside, the Colonials will have difficulties defending Mills. The senior forward is second in the A-10 with 18.1 points per game and uses an effective inside-outside game to keep defenders off balance.

If she can win the battle inside with Adair, she'll give the Minutewomen a chance to remain in the game and pull off the upset.

Rosanio will also need to play effectively for UMass to keep pressure on the Colonials. The senior has been affected by injuries this season but has played through them. She recently underwent an MRI that came out negative and remains the second scoring option for the Minutewomen.

See W. BASKETBALL on page 7

Massachusetts captain Kate Mills (right) gathers her teammates together during a recent home game at the Mullins Center. The senior forward leads the team in scoring with 18.1 points per game and also in rebounding, averaging 7.1 per night.

Sophomore swimmer Elizabeth Walsh swims the lead leg of the 200- and 400-yard medley relays and also anchors the 800-yard free relay team. The Minutewomen next compete on Feb. 20 in the Atlantic 10 Championships.

Walsh makes strides

Sophomore swimmer adjusts to competitiveness of college

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The stat sheet that holds this season's top times shows the depth of the Massachusetts women's swim team at every position. There are no trends in each class, no one class that leads over the others. Plenty of athletes have improved their swimming this season for the Minutewomen.

The term "learning how to swim" is frequently used by the athletes when asked what has improved their abilities in the pool this season. This term is usually used when a swimmer describes the transition from high school swimming to collegiate swimming. Not only do athletes have to adjust to the longer distances, but they also have to sharpen their technique.

The training cycle in collegiate swimming is intense. Each swimmer trains in the pool for at least an hour daily, followed by a weight training session. However, these types of practices also occur in high school swimming, so the most foreign aspect of training for collegiate competition is to conform to the swimming technique instituted by their coach.

Sophomore Elizabeth Walsh was one of those new swimmers last year. Walsh came in alongside fellow sophomore Kathryne Chalikis, who had last year's top time In the 50-yard freestyle. Walsh had the 16th-fastest time.

Walsh also learned her craft by watching then senior Liz Lovejoy. Lovejoy owns the fastest time in the 200-yard freestyle and the third-fastest time in the 100-yard freestyle in school history.

Walsh swam in five different individual events last year, four of which she has top times in this season, namely 100-yard and 200-yard backstroke events. Walsh owns the fastest time in the 50-yard backstroke event as well. Walsh's efforts also earned her team Rookie of the Year honors. In the 100 back, Walsh had the five fastest swims on the team.

Walsh also swims the lead leg of the 200- and 400-yard medley relay, as well as the anchor leg of the 800-yard free relay.

"A big change for me this year was just getting used to the yardage," Walsh said.

See SWIMMING on page 7

Softball team wins; skiers place well

BY DAVID BRINCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts ski teams wrapped up their respective regular seasons last weekend at the Boston College Carnival in Brownsville, Vt.

The women's team finished in fourth place while the men came in third place, solidifying both teams in the Top 3 of the ECSC standings going into the EISA Conference Championships on Friday, Feb. 22.

Sophomore Andrew Hawes had an impressive fourth-place finish in the giant slalom with a time of 1 minute, 22.58 seconds, while sophomore Matt Small rounded out the top ten for the Minutemen, coming in 10th with a time of 1:37.10.

Senior James Green and sophomores Adam Pogorzelski and Travis Hopkins looked sharp, while senior Jason Small, sophomore Ian Hohmeister and junior Paul Lewenberg struggled.

Overall, the team was able to secure a second-place finish in the slalom behind Boston College.

Hohmeister rebounded Sunday, finishing eighth in the giant slalom with a time of 1:31.65, while Matt Small again placed 10th with a time of 1:32.15.

For the Minutewomen, senior Eliza Hawkins and freshman Jamie Taloumis continued their hot streaks, finishing eighth and 13th in the slalom, respectively.

Taloumis took fifth place in the giant slalom with a time of 1:40.61, while Hawkins came in eighth with a time of 1:41.53 seconds.

After the EISA Conference Championships, the team will travel to Waterville Valley, N.H. to compete in the ECSC Regional Championships on Feb. 23-24.

UMASS SOFTBALL

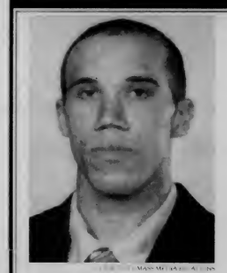
The Massachusetts softball team finished the FAU Kick-Off Classic last Sunday, defeating Florida Atlantic, 5-3, in Boca Raton, Fla.

Junior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter threw a complete game for the Minutewomen, giving up three hits and striking out eight in her second straight win of the weekend.

UMass had eight hits, thanks in part to sophomore first basemen Sarah Reeves, who went 3-for-4 with three doubles and two RBI.

Reeves went on a tear over the weekend with seven hits, including three doubles and two RBI – driving in the first run of the game in the top of the first.

FAU pulled ahead in the bottom of the inning, 2-1, on some defensive miscues by the Minutewomen.



Junior center fielder Davina Hernandez then tied the score for UMass, as sophomore designated hitter Michelle Libby and junior shortstop Carly Morin executed back-to-back bunts to bring the runner in.

Offensively, things started to get rolling for the Minutewomen in the top of the fifth as they scored two runs.

Reeves added an insurance run on her third double of the game in the top of the seventh inning.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

COLLEGIAN SPORTS ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

ETIENNE BROWER, FORWARD, MEN'S BASKETBALL

After a recent string of poor shooting performances, UMass's Etienne Brower has put together two of his better games this season for Travis Ford and the Minutemen.

For his efforts, Brower was named UMass/Dinn Bros. Athlete of the Week. The 6-foot-7 Brower pulled down that honor again as the Daily Collegian's Athlete of the Week.

And it was his ability to pull down rebounds that helped him win it. In a tight, 78-76 victory over Rhode Island on Feb. 7, Brower led players with 17 rebounds. He grabbed five rebounds in the overtime loss against Temple three days later.

Against the Rams, the senior forward recorded a double-double, adding 10 points to go along with his 17 rebounds. Of the 17 boards, seven of them came on the offensive end. Brower also blocked four shots and had two assists.

Brower didn't register a double-double against the Owls, but he scored a game-high 21 points on 8-of-16 shooting from the floor. Although the Minutemen shot well from 3-point territory (particularly Brower, who was 4-of-9), they fell to Temple, 80-70, in overtime at the Liacouras Center in Philadelphia.

Brower is one of four Minutemen averaging double figures in scoring this season, ranking fourth on the team with 12.1 points per game. His 6.7 rebounds per game put him only behind Gary Forbes for the team-lead and he is third on the team in blocks – averaging over one per game.

With his recent hot shooting, only Ricky Harris has hit more 3-pointers than Brower (41) this season.

RUNNER-UP: KATE MILLS, FORWARD, WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Mills, who was a preseason Atlantic 10 All-Conference second team selection, finished the week averaging 20.5 points, 6.5 rebounds and 2.5 blocks as the Minutewomen split road games with La Salle and Rhode Island.

The senior forward's best game of the week came on Feb. 6 in the comeback win against the Explorers. Mills finished with 17 points, eight rebounds, four assists and four blocks.

Three days later, Mills scored 24 points and grabbed five rebounds in the team's 75-64 loss to URI.

Mills, a senior in the School of Engineering, started each game last season, averaging 16.1 points and 6.9 rebounds.

This season, she's improved in both categories – the Elkton, Md., native is the second-leading scorer in the A-10 (18.1 points per game) and also collects 7.1 rebounds per game.

INSIDE: 'REAL WORLD' REJECTION FOR COMICS EDITOR | PAGE 7

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 37 LO: 23 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 2008

Snow, rain and misery

Students trek to class through elements after delayed opening

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Brian Castro, an off-campus senior, was "filled with outrage" when he got to the flooded UMass campus at 3 p.m.

"It looked like the walkways were filled with slush puppies," Castro said.

With water standing in foot-deep puddles, some students and staff questioned why classes hadn't been canceled for the day.

Though some stayed home due to the difficulty, many students decided to go to class anyway. But they wondered why UMass didn't cancel school for the day.

"Some places on campus, the water was up to my ankles and I was completely soaked when I got to class," said junior Meredith Borg. "From my knees down I was completely soaked in water and I had boots on. People who don't have boots [were] probably more soaked than I was."

UMass spokesman Ed Blaguszewski said that the people of the Administration and Finance Department – the group responsible for canceling or keeping classes scheduled – made the best decision they could.

"The challenge is you have to make a decision at a certain point in time, before the university opens for the day based on information that you have at the time," Blaguszewski said.

"It is difficult to predict, will it turn to rain? Will there be a flood? We recognize this is winter in New England and there might be some days where we just have to come to work in bad weather," he added.

UMass officials typically makes a decision to cancel classes or delay the University's opening by 4 a.m., according to Blaguszewski.

The National Weather Service issued a flood warning to the Amherst area yesterday.

Borg, a psychology major from Long Island, N.Y., said she got drenched walking from her dorm in Washington to her English class in Herter Hall. She said her professor had the class read for a few minutes and then let them leave due to the weather.

She said only about 15 of the 30 students showed up.

Though she was frustrated that she forged her way to class only to turn around less than 10 minutes later, she said she is happy she got to return to her dorm without sitting in her wet clothes too long.

She added that, like a snow day, yesterday's weather could

See WEATHER on page 3

Rob Gerber carries Claire Champine on his back along Thatcher Way through yesterday's snow and rain. The resulting slush and standing water flooded portions of the campus' roads and walkways.

Pierpont residence hall in Southwest was the location of an attempted rape and murder on the morning of Feb. 2.

Alleged attempted rape, murder in SW

UMass student arrested in Pierpont after alleged assault

BY SARAH BELANGER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A University of Massachusetts student allegedly attempted to rape a woman in her Southwest dorm room on the morning of Feb. 2.

UMass Police arrested Timothy D. Prata of Hyde Park was arrested in Pierpont residence hall at 2:10 a.m. Prata, 19, was charged with attempted rape, kidnapping, indecent assault and battery on a person 14 and older, attempted murder and assault to murder.

According to Deputy Chief of the UMass Police Department, Patrick Archbald, Prata and the woman were in a room when he allegedly grabbed her around her neck with his hands and did not let her leave.

The victim of the alleged crime, also a student at the University, was treated at the scene by Amherst Fire Department personnel.

Resident Assistants in the Pierpont Dormitory have asked residents to refrain from commenting about the event and to respect Prata's privacy until things get sorted out.

An e-mail addressed to the campus community on Feb. 10 briefly outlined the event among a list of other recent crimes at the University, including the Feb. 3 stabbing of two men in another Southwest residence hall.

Freshman Josh Berkowitz believes that Southwest's size is to blame for the recent rash of violence in the residential area.

"I think it really has to do with population," Berkowitz said. "When you have a lot of people in an area things are going to happen regardless of how much security you have. It's not because there are bad kids in that one area, there just a lot of people there so things are going to happen more often."

"Southwest is like a city and if you need more police in a city, then maybe we need more police presence in Southwest," Berkowitz added. "But at the same time I don't feel like something that extreme is going to happen all the time."

Junior Nicole Desabrais has lived in both Orchard Hill and Central; two areas of campus where she feels are safe.

It's hard to imagine living in that kind of environment," Desabrais said about Southwest. "But I also believe that people's personal decisions have a lot to figure into what happens there."

Jessica Shim, a Pierpont freshman was unaware of the incident that occurred in her dormitory.

"I don't really feel scared when I'm walking around school, but after hearing report after report, it makes me feel less safe on campus," Shim said. "I do get worried sometimes as to why these things continue to happen."

"I think it's good that the Collegian and other news outlets report such things so that other students are more alert and will be more cautious," She added.

Prata was arraigned on Monday in Eastern Hampshire District Court after being held on $20,000 bail. The dean of students has reviewed the case against Prata and disciplinary action has been taken.

Sarah Belanger can be reached at sbelange@student.umass.edu.

SGA appoints election officials

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Undergraduate Student Senate took another step toward next month's student government elections last night, appointing 17 election commissioners to oversee the upcoming electoral process.

"I'm so excited [about the commissioners]," said Senate Speaker Carla Dominguez. "I feel like we have a really big turn out for elections commissioners and in the past it's really hard to get elections commissioners."

The new election commissioners join Chancellor of Elections Emma Pfordresher – appointed during last week's senate meeting – in preparing for the March elections.

Coming from a wide variety of backgrounds, majors and graduation classes, the 17 appointees fielded questions ranging from personal history to Student Government Association bylaws.

"We count the votes, we man the ballot tables and we basically enforce the bylaws to ensure a fair election," said Kevin Harrington, clarifying his understanding of the paid position while answering questions before last night's senate. "It's important that [the election] is fair. The people that are elected and the people who run have the same opportunity as they all should."

The appointments come after the nomination period for SGA elections officially opened up at noon yesterday. Nominations are due by 6 p.m. on Feb. 26.

SGA President, University Student Trustee and area government positions are all up for grabs in the upcoming March 5 and 6 elections.

According to Dominguez, the 17 commissioners will be checking nomination paperwork for the validity of signatures and informing candidates of their eligibility to campaign for open positions within the SGA until the nomination period ends.

Candidates are allowed to campaign from the end of the nomination period to the day of the elections.

"In the past it's been real hard to get elections commissioners so having a full group like this is really going to ensure that the elections run smoothly," Dominguez said.

Derrick Perkins can be reached dperkins@student.umass.edu.

UM Engineers compete in unique car race

BY BEN WILLIAMS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This June, Mechanical Engineering students from the University of Massachusetts will travel to Michigan to race around the Eaton Corporation Proving grounds track in a vehicle of their own design. But the ultimate goal isn't the fastest time or the highest speed; it's the most miles per gallon.

In the fall students can enroll in a class dedicated to the project, led by team advisor and UMass associate professor David Schmidt.

"At the beginning of the year, I explain how competition works, and by the spring semester students are very aware of what they're doing and ready to take charge of the project, then I sit back and help however I can," Schmidt said.

Last year the team hit an astounding 1,125 miles per gallon with their car "Hellraiser." Good enough to place third out of the 32 teams and break the UMass record.

Schmidt acknowledges that this number has to be taken with a grain of salt however.

"We haven't done anything radical; just make small, light cars," Schmidt said. "Any auto maker could do that probably better than we could, but it wouldn't sell here in the U.S. Our car isn't street legal, and we're free to drive at any speed, which inflates the mileage – things you couldn't do in a real car."

While more than 32 teams enter the competition, Schmidt says that many of them are turned away before they even hit the track

See VEHICLE on page 3

UMass engineering students will compete in a race where the goal is to acheive the highest mile per gallon average instead of the fastest time or speed.

In response to recent tragedies, Congress approved legislation to improve dorm fire safety.

U.S. Congress passes college residence hall fire safety laws

BY ALYSSA MONTALBANO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Most college students primarily remember three words pertaining to fire safety. Stop, Drop and Roll. But how much more down they know about fire safety?

In 2000, three freshmen were killed in a residence hall arson fire at Seton Hall University. Shortly following the tragedy, The College Opportunity and Affordability Act was introduced in the U.S. House of Representatives and earlier this month on Feb. 7.

The legislation contains two major elements regarding fire safety on campuses nationwide. The first requires colleges and universities to report fire safety information, including fire frequency, fire-related deaths and injuries, percentage of residence halls protected by sprinklers and alarms and fire safety policies.

The second element involves providing schools with the ability to apply for grants to fund automatic fire sprinklers and fire alarms, as well as other systems.

The legislation mandates that the statistics be reported to the Secretary of Education and will become a public record.

In 2007, the University of Massachusetts, along with Boston University, Butler University, Gordon College and Wesleyan College participated in focus groups for a study commissioned by the People's Burn Foundation of Indiana and Campus Firewatch, a monthly electronic newsletter focusing on campus fire safety, located in Belchertown, Mass. The study found that the 2006-2007 academic year was one of the most fatal. There were 20 campus-related fire deaths identified by Campus Firewatch.

The study asked 402 students, "What steps are you supposed to do if you have a fire in your room?" Ninety-eight of the students responded with the answer "Don't Know."

UMass alumnus Ed Comeau, Publisher of Campus Firewatch and previously the chief fire investigator for the National Fire Protection Association, was closely involved

See FIRE SAFETY on page 3

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
issue 84

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Exter
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Arts & Living Editor Tim McCall
Comics Editor Adam Stagin
Editorial Editor S.P. Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Rice
Features Editor Dave Humphreys
Photo Editor Michael Phillis
Web Editor James Hale
Asst. Business Manager Eric Szymczak
Assistant Advertising Marnea Whooten
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Stephanie McPherson
Asst. Arts & Living Ryan McAuliff
Asst. Arts & Living Skye McIntyre
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Michael King
Assistant News Kate Olesin
Assistant News Holly Seabury
Assistant Sports Mike Connors
Assistant Sports Joe Meloni
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenwaike
Assistant photo Brian Tedder
Arts Web Editor Michelle Abbascianno
Editorial Web Editor Leif Walcutt
News Web Editor Nick Bush
Sports Web Editor Steve Games

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nicholas Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Amber Vaillancourt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Casino proposal stalls

Patrick has reservations about Mashpee Wampanoag plan

By Caitlin Quinn
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick announced Wednesday that he is against a plan to put a casino in Mashpee. The Mashpee Wampanoag tribe wants to put the 500 acres of land intended for their casino and resort in Middleborough, Mass., into a federal land trust.

If the land were to become a federal trust, it would effectively be a part of the tribe's territory, making the state unable to share in the gambling proceeds or regulate any effect it would have on the surrounding area.

The Patrick Administration submitted an official objection with the Bureau of Indian Affairs, stating the lack of regulation available as the reason for his opposition to the proposal.

Specifically, regulation would be needed for "potential adverse impacts on wildlife and natural resources; zoning and land use concerns [...] labor and employment issues relating to wage and benefit protections and the health and safety of employees; public safety, public health, and consumer protection concerns," according to the response's cover letter.

University of Massachusetts student Tracy Kelley is an active member of the Mashpee Wampanoag tribe and reacted strongly to Patrick's decision.

"I think it is completely unacceptable to oppose the request so that [the casino] can be state regulated," Kelley said. "We're the indigenous people of the area. This is one of the routes we've chosen for economic growth. To want to impose state regulations is unacceptable because it should be a matter left up to the tribe."

Patrick is not opposed to the principle of tribal gambling, as shown by his proposal to give state casino licenses to three developers in Massachusetts. It would legalize gambling on that land rather than make them sovereign land.

In a speech last week before the Executive Council of the Massachusetts American Federation of Labor an dCongress os Industrial Organizations (AFL-CIO) – which is endorsing the proposal – Patrick reinforced the benefits he feels can come from his plan.

"With the casino revenue licensing fees and tens of thousands of jobs for the Commonwealth, we can significantly reduce local property taxes for thousands and thousands of homeowners, fund transportation projects to strengthen our overall economic competitiveness and increase local aid to every city and town in this state," Patrick said at the event.

Sovereign land is important for a tribe.

"There can be land to which the indigenous people have complete right over. It is a basis for housing, for families to obtain houses through the tribe," Kelley said.

According to an earlier Boston Globe report, in a July 2007 town meeting, residents from the town of Middleborough voted in favor of the planned casino in exchange for benefits offered by the tribe's leaders. In this deal – offered as a preliminary step in gaining approval for the plan on all government levels – the town would receive about $11 million in yearly payments as well as $250 million in infrastructure improvements.

The Mashpee Wampanoag tribe gained federal recognition last year. The next step towards planning the casino is to gain federal approval, in order to place the Middleborough land into a trust. According to Kelley, this process recently began with preliminary meetings.

Caitlin Quinn can be reached at cquinn@student.umass.edu.

The Student Union – home to many of UMass' student organizations – welcomes the recently founded Big Brother/Big Sister RSO.

Study links sleep loss and smoking

By Lucas Correia
Collegian Staff

A study at Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine recently reported that smoking can affect the quality of a person's sleep as well as their sleeping patterns.

Dr. Naresh M. Punjabi's study shows that medical conditions associated with smoking, such as lung disease, can be related to conditions like sleep apnea, which makes sleep less restful. For a long time, scientists have hypothesized the theory that smoking can lead to these conditions.

People experiencing sleep apnea are short of breath throughout a night of sleeping. The condition makes the sleeper literally miss a breath multiple times during their sleep cycle.

"If smokers have sleep disturbances, smoking probably has an important contribution," Punjabi told the Boston Globe.

UMass freshman Dennis Yip can relate his experience with smoking to this study. Yip recently quit smoking and admitted that sleeping has become "more restful and relaxing" since he quit. He said that when he did smoke, he tended to wake up feeling terribly. He also noted that when he smoked he was more susceptible to illness.

Other UMass students feel differently. Seniors Chris Sawyer and Mike Weigelt acknowledged that they normally feel well-rested after sleeping, despite being smokers.

When asked if he felt smoking could affect sleeping healthily, University of Massachusetts graduate student Mark Fleming replied that he did not think smoking was impeding on his sleep.

Fleming attributed how he feels after sleeping to the fact that he gets an average of five to six hours per night.

Those participating in the study, which consisted of 40 smokers and 40 non-smokers, were monitored with electroencephylogram (EEG) machines while they slept. The results of the observation showed that those who smoked spent more time in light sleep and less time in deep sleep.

One out of four smokers reported not getting restful sleep versus the non-smokers, of whom only five percent did not feel rested.

Lucas Correia can be reached at ljcorrei@student.umass.edu.

UMass students form new RSO

By Jennifer Heshion
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students recently formed a new registered student organization (RSO) to become a Big Brother or Big Sister to local children.

The UMass Big Brother/Big Sister RSO was created to focus on community outreach programs where students can spend time with local children, becoming a mentor and a major influence in the child's life.

The UMass RSO is following in the example of the worldwide Big Brother/Big Sister organization which operates in every state of the United States and in 12 countries, according to the group's official Web site.

In the organization volunteers, or "Bigs" as they are called, spend quality time with a "Little" between the ages of six and 18 for a few hours a day, playing sports or board games, eating food, going to a movie or just hanging out together.

"Basically we are trying to connect Bigs and Littles in the area to form a bond and use campus resources for time spent with our littles," said Molly Stramberg, a UMass student and member of the UMass Big Brother/Big Sister RSO.

According to the organization's official Web site, several studies have shown that having a mentoring relationship with an adult can leave a positive, lasting impact in these children's lives. It argues that many of the children have been known to become more confident in their schoolwork, have better relationships with their families and are less likely to become involved with drugs or alcohol and skip school.

The UMass Big Brother/Big Sister organization is just one of the RSOs at UMass that was formed through the Center of Student Development (CSD) here on campus. According to the CSD official Web site, the University currently has over 280 registered student organizations which are established and run by the students.

The UMass Big Brother/Big Sister RSO held it's first ever meeting earlier this week Feb. 12 and looks forward to welcoming new members who wish to be a part of the organization and become actively involved in the local community.

"We are hoping to get ideas about what people would like the RSO to be like and work on getting together a first event to bring together people in the area," Stramberg said. "Also we are hoping to recruit more members and gain awareness on campus."

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu.

Only 1 in 10 students from low-income communities will graduate from college.

TEACH FOR CHANGING THIS.

FINAL APPLICATION DEADLINE:
Friday, February 15

[Source: Mortenson, Tom. "Family income and Higher Education Opportunity," Postsecondary Education Opportunity, 2005]

TEACHFORAMERICA
www.teachforamerica.org

Morning classes cancelled

WEATHER from page 1

have been hazardous to students.

UMass had a delayed opening yesterday, with only classes held after 11 a.m. kept on schedule. According to Blaguszewski, this buys extra time for the University's Phyical Plant staff to clear roads and parking lots as best as possible so the remainder of classes can be salvaged.

He said factors involved in the Administration and Finance Department's decisions to cancel classes for a day include whether campus can operate safely and effectively, whether commuting students and people going to work can travel, and whether Pioneer Valley Transit Authority buses can function well enough to move people around campus.

He said the administration tries to determine a cancellation as early as possible so students can organize their day as necessary.

"Is it sloppy out? Absolutely. It's winter in New England and there are going to be stormy days and if we are able to make sure the University is open and people can get their classes in that's what we strive to do," he said.

By 4 p.m., Amherst had gotten almost two inches of rain, the equivalent of 20 inches of snow, said Guilford Mooring, Department of Public Works director in Amherst. And heavy rain is much harder to deal with than snow, he said.

"You can plow snow out of the way...but you just can't move water around," Mooring said."I'd take the snow over this because we could actually do something with the snow."

As for other colleges in the area, Amherst, Hampshire and Mount Holyoke colleges had delayed openings until 10 a.m. Smith College stayed open all day.

But Borg was not the only student that felt yesterday's classes should have been canceled.

"[I hate this weather] so much. I'm wearing really tall rain boots and the rain actually went inside of my boots," said freshman Victoria Szydlowski. "I have five classes [on Tuesdays] so that means I'm out from 11:15 [to 5:30] It's disgusting outside. It's not just because it's just wet, but the fact that it's cold and wet."

Chantal Vacher, a junior who lives in Belchertown, noted that although "the roads weren't bad," she still had trouble making it on time to her job at the Worcester D.C. She was an hour and a half late, because of the busses. The first bus that came was full. Luckily, she squeezed onto the second one.

Others were frustrated after making the trek only to find half-empty classrooms.

"My rain boots got so soaked on the walk to my class that I had to wear flip flops in class", said Liz Newman, a sophomore. "I had a 200-person lecture earlier and I counted that only 26 people showed up."

Nicole Carreiro, Lyndsey Woodman and Lisa Norris contributed to this report.

Domenic Poli can be reached at domenic.poli@gmail.com.

A UMass student returns to Johnson residence hall in Northeast while trying to avoid the puddles of slush that formed in many walkways.

Congress passes dorm fire safety legislation with the legislation's creation. Comeau began his fire safety career as a member of the Amherst Fire Department Student Force.

FIRE SAFETY from page 1

Informing parents and students about the levels of fire safety on campus is one of the legislation's main components. It will provide information about which schools are excelling in the involvement of students in fire safety programs, along with those which are not.

"It will serve as an incentive for other schools to upgrade their protection on campus and to implement fire safety education programs," Comeau said.

Campus Safety and Fire Prevention Services Supervisor Mike Swain, also the volunteer director for the Center for Campus Fire Safety explains the preparation that UMass takes pertaining to fire safety.

At the beginning of each semester, the University conducts fire drills in every residence hall, giving students a chance to hear the alarms and learn the correct way to exit the buildings quickly and safely. The drills are observed to see if any improvements can be made.

Resident Advisors are trained on general fire safety, prevention, and extinguisher use. During winter break, room inspections are conducted.

"We try and give the students fire safety knowledge that they can take with them when they leave the University," said Swain. "As part of stressing education in fire safety, we conduct training programs for students caught violating University Fire Safety Regulations."

The Amherst Fire Department responds to situations on campus that deal with fires, explosions and fire alarms. According to Fire Chief Keith Hoyle, most of the fires that the department responds to are small trash can fires, notices burned off of a students' doors or car fires. The last major fire on campus occurred in 2003, which caused the loss of the Conservation building.

"The new legislation that eventually may require upgraded fire protection in college buildings will definitely suppress fires in their incipient stages and give advanced warning to occupants and the Fire Department. Certainly it will save lives."

Alyssa Montalbano can be reached at amontalb@student.umass.edu

Students compete in unique car race

VEHICLE from page 1

due to the competition's 40-plus regulations. Everything from the weight of the driver to the installation of break lights is a criterion for entry.

Schmidt remembers one year when he team made the trip to Michigan only to be excluded from the race – a thought he termed "frightening."

The team has high hopes for this year's competition. Schmidt hopes to top 1,300 miles per gallon by inproving on last year's model. This year the team has dubbed their supermileage car "Homewrecker."

"We're making lots of modifications on Homewrecker, giving it new wheels, gear assembly, crankshaft and even a new chassis," team member Charlotte de Vries said. "It used to have a carbon-fiber chassis, and we're replacing it with a new aluminum chassis."

The aluminum chassis is heavier than the carbon fiber, but Schmidt says the carbon fiber was just too flexible and failed to hold up under the weight of the driver.

Each team starts with the same engine. And while they can modify what Schmidt calls essentially a lawnmower engine, he says the top two factors in getting a good mileage are actually low rolling resistance, and good driving tactics. Therefore, a lot of the engineering focus is on how to make the vehicle roll better.

While the vehicle may not have a lot of practical applications for increasing fuel economy on today's cars, the project is teaching students who may design the cars of the future.

"What really excites me is promoting fuel efficiency, promoting optimization, reducing fuel consumption," team member Marc Santos said. "And I'm interested in applying to graduate school in that general field of environmental engineering. So I have both practical and idealistic reasons for getting involved."

Ben Williams can be contacted at bwilliam@student.umass

Khanna joins SGA as commuter senator

By Derrick Perkins
Collegian Staff

Derek Khanna was narrowly appointed to the Undergraduate Student Senate following questions of his positions on diversity, Student Bridges and his involvement in the University of Massachusetts Republican Club last night.

"In hearing him speak and the way he handled questions it was a big divide in the room along diversity," said Shaun Robinson, internal chair of the ALANA caucus. "Diversity is something that should be on the cusp of all the decisions that I make in regards to Student Government Association, the caucus itself and all kinds of initiatives that might come up on our campus."

Robinson – along with nine other senators – voted against Khanna's appointment to a vacant seat as a commuter area senator. Khanna secured 12 votes, with two abstentions, enough to pass the motion for his appointment.

Khanna told the senate he found the level of diversity on campus "rather good."

"I came from a school that was 99 percent white and I was considered a minority because I'm Indian," he said. "Coming to this environment was great for me. It was a great opportunity to meet a lot of different minorities and work with them closely and develop and understanding and friendship with them. I like the ethnic complexion of this campus."

Khanna served as a senator before, as a freshman.

"Derek has some different political views than a lot of the senators," said Kevin Bulduc, chair of the administrative affairs committee. "I think they just wanted to make sure he was still qualified as a senator."

Bulduc stood by his committee's unanimous decision to approve Khanna's appointment to the vacant senate seat.

"It's good to have political discussion within a senate," Bulduc said. "I felt that the questioning was actually for the better because we got a better idea of what he will be doing as a senator and whether he was qualified or not."

Disappointed by the senate's decision to approve Khanna's appointment to a position with student government, Robinson said the vote surprised him.

"It was a very close vote. I noticed there were two abstentions, so maybe if one of those abstentions becomes a no vote he's not a senator right now," Robinson. "Hopefully, he can make the most out of his opportunity."

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@student.umass.edu

Tel Aviv University invites you to spend your summer in Israel while earning academic credits.

For more information about Summer, Semester, Year, and Graduate opportunities visit:

www.telavivuniv.org
800.665.9828

TEL AVIV UNIVERSITY אוניברסיטת תל אביב

Be My Valentine!

Indulge with a Healthy Taste of Chocolate Fondue & More!

- Chocolate Fondue with Fresh Fruits
- Chocolate Pizza
- Chocolate Lemon Mousse Cake
- White Chocolate Bark
- Hot Chocolate

ENTER TO WIN THE GRAND PRIZE:
Godiva Chocolates & Red Roses
*Drawing February 13, 2008

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst

2007 Grand Prize

www.umass.edu/diningservices

EDITORIAL OPINION

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 2008 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Assaulting privacy

Scott Harris

I'm sick and tired of it.

In 2006, I worked tirelessly to try to elect Democrats across the country. I phone-banked for Claire McCaskill, canvassed for Bob Casey, registered voters for Ned Lamont and helped organize a fund-raiser for Sheldon Whitehouse. I donated more money than I should have and was filled with dork-like glee when my investment was returned to me in the form of the first Democratic majorities in the House of Representatives and the Senate since 1994.

Although they had some successes early, including raising the minimum wage and forcing Republicans into a politically-perilous corner on issues like children's insurance and stem cell research, I have generally deemed their rule as a failure thus far. I have desperately wanted for them to turn the proverbial corner, but there has never been a time quite like this to convince me that it will never happen.

In 2006, it was revealed that, in the weeks and months following the September 11 attacks, the Bush Administration, AT&T, Verizon and other telecommunication corporations were working hand-in-hand to spy on Americans at home and abroad without a warrant or any court approval at all.

The telecoms have plenty of lawyers that could have (and did) tell them that this operation was against the law. Even then-Attorney General John Ashcroft had written several memos questioning whether or not the program was constitutional.

Normally, law-abiding administrations would have followed the rules and regulations put in place by the Foreign Surveillance Intelligence Act (FISA). FISA was passed in 1978 as a means of setting boundaries for the federal government for monitoring communications in the emerging Digital Age. It created a secret court that would check what the government was doing and making sure that it was acting legally. Because of our ever-shifting technological standards, this law was due for a major update.

However, what Congress and the White House are on the verge of signing into law is an affront to our Constitution and a slap in the face of every voter who hit the polls in 2006 looking for change. The FISA "reform" bill that passed on Feb. 12 includes a number of abhorrent provisions, and the Senate rejected any attempt to amend them.

One of the most controversial sections of the bill was one that established retroactive immunity for the telecommunication corporations that broke the law by handing over private information over to the Bush Administration.

Republicans said that the companies were just doing what their government had asked them to do, and that subjecting them to litigation would expose too many state secrets about the program. Unlikely story.

41 U.S. Senators do not believe that Congress should have any absolute lawmaking powers.

Retroactive immunity is in the bill to protect consumers whose privacy may have been violated from discovering what was handed over and pressing punitive liability on the companies for breaking their contracts and legal obligations. Also, it is no surprise that Republicans are seeking to protect companies that are awfully generous to them come fund-raising time.

The precedent that American corporations can break the law and get bailed out of trouble as long as the government cries "national security." is a terrible one – one that is not compatible with the Democratic ideology of corporate accountability.

There was an attempt to strip this provision from the bill, but the Senate rejected it 31-67 (including 18 Democrats). That is 67 of your United States Senators who felt that protecting telecommunication corporations was more important than protecting the privacy of U.S. citizens.

Various amendments aimed at improving this shoddy bill were shot down by a faux-compromise between Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid (D-NV) and the Republican minority. Democrats agreed, essentially, to a 60-vote threshold for any amendment that had majority support (to ensure that it did not pass) and Republicans agreed to allow a simple majority vote for amendments that did not have 50 votes.

One amendment, termed as an "exclusivity agreement", would have established that the FISA reform law was the law governing how surveillance could be conducted against American citizens and that any other practice or operation was strictly prohibited. This amendment failed 57-41, under the 60-vote "agreement."

I will repeat that for you: the U.S. Senate rejected an amendment that would have said simply that the law they passed was the law and that the Bush Administration could not operate outside of its boundaries.

The original FISA law, of course, had an exclusivity provision in it. This new law will reject that and create an environment where no one will really know the law regarding surveillance because the law in the so-called "PROTECT Act" may not actually be the law at all.

To boil it down, 41 U.S. Senators do not believe that Congress should have any absolute lawmaking powers.

After weeks of partisan debate, legislative delays and "compromise," what has the Democratic majority given its hard-working supporters? Exactly what the Bush Administration wanted; no more, no less.

Because of Democratic complicity and Republican arrogance, the new FISA bill is likely to grant a wide swath of powers to the executive with little or no mechanisms for accountability. Your privacy, your Constitution – shredded for political convenience.

Our Congress is supposed to be the people's legislature tasked with protecting the freedoms and liberties we hold dearest in America. With the passage of the FISA "reform" bill, the Senate has spectacularly failed at this task.

Scott Horris is a UMoss student.

Friendly fire for G.I. education

Nick Milano

Reminiscent of World War I veterans marching onto Washington D.C. in 1932 to protest a pitiful lack of benefits, President Roosevelt wanted to be sure he provided World War II veterans with proper benefits. What resulted is popularly known as the G.I. Bill.

Along with the Federal Housing Act, the G.I. Bill spawned suburbia through guaranteed loans and the 30 year mortgage. Its education and training benefits enabled millions of veterans to acquire advanced learning in preparation for life.

In essence, the G.I. Bill is largely credited with creating the middle class as we know it. Now, the current version of the G.I. Bill is hanging thousands of men and women out to dry with benefits that do not even cover the costs of a good education.

As an article in the Boston Sunday Globe detailed, college tuition is no longer a given if one has bravely served in the armed forces. Far from it. The best case scenario is $9,500 a year for four years. The benefits were cut down from full coverage of tuition during peacetime, but the military has been in battle since the invasion of Afghanistan. Even as we approach the five year anniversary of the beginning of the Iraq War, benefits have not seen a boost.

The lump sum that veterans hope to receive would not even cover four years here at UMass Amherst – much less a private, top of the line college. A plan to upgrade the benefits has been pressed by Senator Jim Webb, but to no avail.

At a cost of $2.5 billion, there are only three Republicans among Webb's 31 co-sponsors. This issue should not be one that divides Congress in the gridlock that is Capitol Hill. The G.I. Bill is outdated and needs to be reassessed. It is rife with problems from forcing aspiring students to struggle from paycheck to paycheck to a bureaucratic paper chase that saps the energy of the most dedicated students.

The G.I. Bill's antiquated college benefits point to a larger and more glaring problem: the ever rising cost of college itself.

These two issues seem to be hidden among the current debates raging throughout the presidential campaign. The burdens of attaining a college education have sharply increased for all save the richest among us.

Institutions of higher education in the United States are among the best in the world, but as the trend continues to put the squeeze on the middle and lower classes, their quality begins to border on irrelevance if they are not affordable.

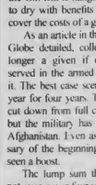
It is clear that college must be made more accessible for people from all walks of life, but serving those who serve for us must be at the top of the list.

World War II veterans were treated to an affordable – if not free – education and training, and the reward was astounding. The economic depression of the 1930s was squarely in the rearview mirror as the economic boom of the 1940s and 1950s took over.

As private experts predict that a recession has already begun and government experts warn of slowing economic growth, the value of education should not be forgotten. It is clear that college must be made more accessible for people from all walks of life, but serving those who serve for us must be at the top of the list.

Boosting benefits for veterans fighting abroad is obviously a necessary plan of action that cannot come soon enough. The cost may be high, some $2.5 billion, but what does this cost in the face of the many, many billions the current war has taken from taxpayers' pockets?

The Boston Globe article that shed light on this important issue quoted the director of the Iraq and Afghanistan Veterans of America saying that the U.S. spends this amount in just 36 hours. The money should not be an obstacle. It wasn't for World War II veterans who numbered in the millions; it should not be for the Iraq and Afghanistan veterans who number in the thousands.



Presidential candidate John McCain claims that he has talked to countless number of veterans who steadfastly believe that the war in Iraq must be won. Without addressing the pros and cons of staying in Iraq, one would be hard-pressed to hear what Senator McCain has to say about the antiquated G.I. Bill. Senators Obama and Clinton have plans to give all college students a tuition scholarship, but where do they stand on the G.I. Bill? Sadly, the issues are not being heard on the campaign. To find out, you have to navigate each candidate's website. How is such an important issue delegated to the back burner?

The men and women of the armed forces sacrifice too much everyday they are in battle; it is necessary and proper for the government to sacrifice $2.5 billion to give them proper thanks for all their hard work.

Despite the fact that only three members from the Republican Party, that party that claims to respect veterans more than anyone, have agreed to cosponsor Senator Webb's legislation, the G.I. Bill is not a partisan issue. The U.S. Congress would be wise to get its act together, if only to give veterans their due gratitude.

Nick Milano writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

Off-color mascots not quite an honor

S.P. Sullivan

There are no sports teams called "The Long Island 1leebs" or "The New Jersey WOPs." If someone started a basketball franchise named "The Alabama Darkies" Al Sharpton's head would explode.

Why, then, do schools in the United States – from elementary right on through college – continue to mock Native Americans via their mascots?

Don't roll your eyes just yet.

I am a fan of all things politically incorrect. I would love to go to New Jersey WOPs games; I'd even buy season tickets. But I know that I am not the litmus test for what's socially acceptable.

I also know the importance of playing fair. If the aforementioned don't make acceptable team names, then names like Redskins and Redmen ought to get the boot post-haste.

The Boston Globe reported this week that the School Committee for the town of Natick, Mass. voted last year to change the name of the town's sports team to something a little less 17th century than "Redmen."

There are plenty of time-honored traditions rendered moot by social progression.

But a vocal group of community members challenged the move, and the Board of Selectmen voted 5-0 this week to put the question to a non-binding public referendum.

This issue hits pretty close to home. Until 1972, our beloved Minutemen were known as the Redmen. The University learned the error of its ways, though; over thirty years before other institutions got the memo.

There have been myriad controversies over the use of Indian epithets by sports teams. Resistance to Native-inspired mascots began in the 1960s, and came to a head in 2005 when the NCAA passed a ban on offensive team names. Some names refer to specific Native nations, such as Seminoles or Choctaws, rendering them less offensive. However, names like Braves and Warriors are questionable, and Savages and Redmen are just downright laughable.

Defenders of the use of these names claim that they "honor" indigenous peoples. I don't know if I buy it – but it's plausible. Some of the worst enemies of Native Americans throughout history have considered themselves to be acting in Natives' best interest. Don't believe me? Google "Dawes Act."

We're not talking about "Braves" or "Chiefs" here, either, though both are debatable in their own right. Any argument that institutions are "honoring" indigenous peoples with these Indian-kitsch names goes out the window when you're talking "Redmen."

Many have also pointed to the Florida State Seminoles in defense of Indian-invoking mascots. In 2005, the Seminole Tribe of Florida gave the university the official go-ahead on continued use of their name for the school's sports team. But that's the Seminoles. This issue concerns the Natick Praying Indians, a people whose heritage and identity are completely different than their compatriots down south. It's the equivalent of calling the Germans "Krauts" because the Poles said it was OK.

It's no surprise that indigenous resistance to these tasteless team names perplexes many non-Indians. Primary education in this country provides mere lip-service to Native American history. Kindergarteners are taught that we had a nice dinner with them when we showed up and then they're not mentioned much until the French and Indian War comes around in sixth grade. What primary education doesn't teach is that the rest of the story reads like a bad marriage: a lot of broken promises and domestic violence.

Couple that with the fact that contemporary Native Americans face misinformed stigmas ("Most Indians are getting rich off their casinos") and have to jump through hoops for federal recognition and land claims ("You're an Indian? You don't look like an Indian"). I'd say it's pretty clear why they're wary of claims that mascots like "Chief Wahoo" are "honoring" them.

Some community members and Natick alumni, including former Redman Doug Flutie, an ESPN commentator and former NFL star, have clamored for protection of the name for tradition's sake. As far as that preservationist argument goes, inertia should not be confused for tradition. There are plenty of time-honored traditions rendered moot by social progression. I'm sure there were a couple mid-20th century entertainers who had to adjust their act once "blackface" was no longer socially acceptable, but the times, they were a-changin'.

The town of Natick will put the issue to vote on their March 25 ballot, according to The Globe. Hopefully, they'll go the way of the University of Massachusetts and ditch the offensive name.

As far as new names go, the Natick School Board formed a committee to consider all possibilities, and "The Hawks" was selected – which ought not to offend anyone except the most staunch animal-rights advocates.

Of course, if the people of Natick want to "honor" another demographic, since those Natick Praying Indians are a bunch of ingrates, they can always turn their admiration inward.

Let's go Honkies!

S.P. Sullivan is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at spsulliv@dailycollegian.com.

Dining with history, part one

Brad Leibowitz

Before the turn of the New Year a friend of mine asked me a hypothetical question which got me thinking. At the time the question seemed an easy one to answer given a few minutes to think. That question: You are in charge of a dinner. At this dinner, you have three chairs to fill. You can fill those chairs with any three historical figures of any historical time period. Who do you chose and why?

Seems simple enough. While you read this, take your time to think about your answers. It can be anyone you want and for any reason or no reason whatsoever. For example, you might want to eat with Gandhi because when he inevitably says, "You're paying because I'm not hungry" you can proceed to punch him in the face. Easy enough.

At first I began thinking about the most interesting historical time periods throughout human history. I deduced those were: the time period in which Jesus lived (anywhere from 7 B.C. to 36 A.D.); the time period in which Plato and Aristotle lived; and, finally, the Dark Ages.

However, I then thought that it shouldn't matter the time period, because as they say, great man shape the times.

With this in mind, I began thinking of men and women who were giants of their time. To name a few: Elizabeth I, Alexander the Great, Cleopatra, Einstein, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, etc.

With this in mind, I decided that who I would invite to my party would be based on five things: the intelligence of said person, the things which they did while alive, the influence they had after death, if while at dinner he or she would create tension with the other invited guests and finally, if could get a laugh out of the rest of us.

You are in charge of a dinner. At this dinner, you have three chairs to fill.

I also momentarily considered the looks of the individual, yet this proved to be circumstantial and vain… and so, with this in mind, I began picking.

After considering all of the aforementioned value methods, I began to weed potential diners out. Obviously, one of my first choices was Jesus. He seemed like a shoe-in, not because I am agnostic or really care for the teachings of Christianity or religion, but because I want to know if he and Mary were really knocking boots (again, your reasons are your own and they don't have to make any sense).

But then I realized that it isn't Jesus that's all that important, its Paul. He wrote everything down, and as such, every Christian or sect thereof is some denomination of Paulinism, not Christianity.

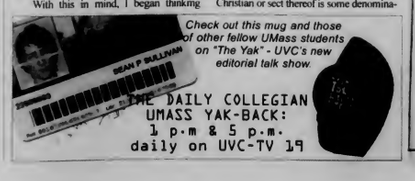
Another first choice: Helen of Troy. But then I realized she would be great to look at yet would have nothing interesting to say…kind of like Halle Berry.

In this regard, Cleopatra immediately came to mind. Not only would she be fantastic to gaze upon, but I am sure she would have the scoop on Julius Ceasar and would have some mighty interesting things to say about Sanskrit and being the last Pharaoh of Ancient Egypt. Also, being as attractive as she was, I would have to ask her what were some Ancient Egyptian pick up lines. So, I stored her away.

Yet after I had thought about the question for a bit of time, my first answer would be Mary Magdalene. I picked her for a few reasons.

One, I would have to ask her if she was doing the holy with the holiest of holies; this seems only natural.

Two, I would be compelled to let Mary know how the church has handled her over the years. I would like to know her opinion on a sexist organization which she either played a tremendous part in creating or no part at all.



Three, either Mary would be an extremely good looking woman to have at the dinner table, or nothing of the sort. I am interested in the answer.

Four, due to her relation to Jesus, it would be much easier determine what the Holy Grail truly is.

Speaking of the Holy Grail: If I did invite Mary to the dinner, it would make sense to then go ahead and invite Leonardo Da Vinci. Finally get to the bottom of that damn painting which everyone is so keen on.

M squared is my first guest. Da Vinci might be good for the second seat, but who fills that seat will be revealed next week. Until then, get to thinking. Who would you invite and why?

Brad Leibowitz is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bleibowt@student.umass.edu.

COUNTER-POINT

"...a forum where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Campus violence: sporadic or status quo?

Walk freely, but tread softly

Devon Courtney

There really is no safer place to be than UMass Amherst. I really love the feeling I get that comes from me saying "Hello" to everyone I see on my way to class. I've never been shot, stabbed, or beaten up here, which is much more than I can say about the place where I'm from. In my four years here, I've come to understand that UMass is safer than a Tupperware party, and twice as fresh.

So why is it that ABC News, Dateline, and the Princeton Review all consider the prestigious University of Massachusetts at Amherst the Fallujah of colleges?

Now, it's true that sometimes things happen around campus. A former suitemate in McNamara returned to his suite and smacked his neighbor with a baseball bat. A UMass athlete was stabbed in the butt after a function at the Student Union. Who can forget the alleged "gay slur" beating that happened on Sunset Avenue last semester?

What I'm saying is that every student must take responsibility for his or her individual actions.

Even recently, the campus is abuzz with talk of the racially-motivated stabbing and then the more recent lacrosse beating, as it is now being popularly referred to. Finally, it's impossible not to understand why scores of riot police line up in Southwest after every sports game ever. You'd really have to be living under an enormous rock to have missed that.

The flat out truth is that about 99 percent of the UMass population is not in any way involved with violence on campus. Your personal odds for getting assaulted by a drunkard/stick-wielding lacrosse player/rioter with extreme sports prejudice/police officer confusing you with a roustabout are around one in 3,000. Those statistics were graciously tabulated by the imaginary statistician who lives in my brain. I had to employ his services because UMass officials seem really hesitant to release statistics about violence, for some odd reason.

When parents send their kids here for an education, they should be smart enough to understand that the tuition check is not a permission slip for four years of merciless beat downs. On top of that, most people aren't randomly assaulted; there's usually a deeper reason that better outlines the individual context of each violent crime.

A beautiful example of this would be after the Super Bowl, in which individuals who were happy about its outcome would parade around Southwest in Giants apparel, antagonizing the angry scores of Patriots fans. News flash: Doing something that dumb is equivalent to dropping blood in the water where sharks are swimming, or kicking a grizzly bear in the junk.

What I'm saying is that every student must take responsibility for his or her individual actions. Many of the recorded acts of violence that our school is scrutinized for could have been easily prevented, if a microcosm of critical thought had been introduced beforehand.

Of course, some of these violent acts are unprovoked and unexpected. This is an unfortunate reality that we humans have to deal with. When random violence does happen, all we can do is rely on the help of campus services and the support of our friends.

There are many violent occurrences here which go unreported, it is a certainty indeed. You might bear witness to party-themed violence, whether it takes the shape of an overenthusiastic partier smashing a bottle on someone or something, or maybe even the beginnings of a somber sexual assault, exacerbated by the consumption of alcohol.

Barring that, though, how much of this violent reputation really is just hype? UMass has had the popular moniker of "Zoomass" since the seventies. The paranoia and out of control rumors surrounding the reputation of the school could just be a game of telephone gone horribly haywire. With each sporadic crime in perfect proportion with our large population, the rumors of violent nature of UMass could Godzilla-stomp all over our city of idealistic academia.

I suppose that if UMass is a school where you are living in fear for your life, then you have bigger problems than either of us can put a finger on. If you really do believe that the dark and spooky path between Orchard Hill and Sylvan, reflexively called "Rape Road" and "The Rape Trail," is a place where foolhardy teenagers go for a hot and tasty rape sandwich, you might just be more impressionable than a toddler.

As long as you are taking precautions and making good decisions, your chances of falling victim to the overblown threat of UMass violence will be safely curtailed. This is a school, not a gladiatorial arena. We should be treating it as such, and if I find that you're not – I'll head butt you.

Just kidding. Gotcha.

Devon Courtney is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu.

Just stay inside

Nicholas O'Malley

You know those campus security e-mails you get about every month or so? It's about time you stopped deleting them and actually took a look at what they say. One quick glance at what's been going on at campus will show that, although your dorm might be a "pretty chill place," many places on campus aren't.

When I came to this school, I was well aware of its reputation for parties, riots, and everything in between, most of which I knew was unwarranted. All of these recent events, however, have taken a toll on what can be considered just an unfortunate aspect of college life instead of a point of concern.

I'm sorry, but I cannot declare a school safe as long as riots are accepted and anticipated every time there is a sports team in a championship game.

UMass has received a number of labels in the public eye: large, liberal, enormous, a party school and, in recent times, violent (did I mention it was big?). Most of the labels are warranted, but violent? If you take a minute to go over the events of the past few weeks, there's plenty of evidence there.

Most students don't even flinch when hearing about the arrests in Southwest

Last semester, we were bombarded with e-mails about faux bombs, baseball bat beatings, stabbings, suspects on the lam; it comes to the point where it no longer fazes the student body.

It could be said that the amount of violence is a product of the school's size-proportions; however, that large amount of violence, the number of incidents, increases the chance that one will get pushed to the extreme, potentially endangering the lives of students.

For most students, nothing will happen; you'll spend your four years, (or more) here without incident. Maybe a scuffle here, an accident there – some cops that one time – but nothing really threatening.

The unfortunate few, on the other hand, have to take the burden of violence that is often overlooked as part of what goes down at this campus.

Most students don't even flinch when hearing about the arrests in Southwest; the police in riot gear and some stabbings here or there. It might even be a positive for some. If someone happens to get shanked on the morning of your 10 a.m. exam, you're getting some extra sleep instead.

Our campus has seen it all. We've had students, athletes, former students, outsiders all commit violence on campus. Honestly, who's left to stab us?

Chancellor Cole's recent e-mail detailed four individual occurrences on and close to campus over the course of three days, which include: assault by eight lacrosse players, sexual assault, assault, and three men injured, two of which were stabbed.

Despite all of this, the administration continues to preach about a "safe, free environment" and how "one act of violence is too much." And with each student that ignores the reposts of these events, they are getting away with it. If there is no student response to what occurs on campus, then there can be no expectations of our administration to do the same.

If it wasn't for this "education" thing we're all supposed be getting here (that, and someone insists on setting my dorm on fire), we'd all be better off in our dorms with the doors locked and windows boarded.

Even scarier than the events themselves is the fact that students are no longer concerned about such events (when stabbings are less concerning than the fact that it's chicken finger day at the DC, there's a problem). When you're tucked away in your nice, quiet dorm, away from the craziness of the towers and the incidents of Sylvan, it's easy to see the events as distant.

Such a lack of concern is hardly a concern when compared to the complacency of the rest of the student body. The events occur week after week, but there is no outcry, no demand for security; rather, there's an attitude towards less police presence on campus. This is a view stemmed from broken up parties, drug confiscation and suppressed riots.

Instead of attempting to work with our police force, our campus continues to fight against their presence. It has come to a point where getting wasted on a Friday night takes precedence over not getting attacked.

It has come to a point where the administration and police that we all despise so much lose their control; how can they address problems we don't care about when they are so many that we do.

These event are not sparked by outsiders, these crimes are committed by students towards students – and are allowed to continue because of the apathy of students.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

WEATHER WOES

Dear editor:

Last night, upon checking My inbox, I received around 19,500 messages from the Western Massachusetts region, all with similar subject headings. Let Me first say that I was delighted at all the correspondence, especially from such a young demographic that doesn't typically convey these feelings. In a measure of good faith, I answered them with one act.

Not since the Red Sea incident have I been able to utilize weather so effectively to get My friends out of a jam. I pride myself on being able to provide such a service from those who request it. So when I set out to do something and it doesn't get done, it's bad for business, and I end up looking like an idiot.

So Collegian, you're probably wondering why I'm writing to you. To be honest, I am not so sure myself. I pride Myself on My omniscience, but now for the first time since I gave Adam and Eve the boot, I am at a loss. My actions were clear, and I expected a clear response from the administration. However, it seems that they too wanted to play God.

Do you know how annoying it is to brush your teeth while 19,500 young souls are cursing your name? Really annoying.

I guess I'm writing to you because there's no real better way to get "The Word" out. I promised a cancellation, and I did not deliver. I know this role-reversal might seem strange, but please forgive Me, I felt confident no one would have to trudge through the wintry mix. Mike, I'm sorry you slipped in front of that girl from your nutrition class and now you have no chance. Janko, let's face it, you weren't going to pass that test anyway. Colleen, I'm sorry you had to skip your class in order to pick up $20 galoshes at Marshalls. And Adam, you smelled like a wet dog all day. For that I'm not sorry. It was pretty funny, and people were making clever jabs, which cheered Me up.

It doesn't often happen, but this was beyond My control. I endowed man with the power of free-will, and sometimes it comes back to bite Me. So for every squishy sock, and every slushy step, you can point the blame inward to your own power to choose. I wasn't the one who made you go out there.

So here's the deal for next time: you promise not to interrupt Me brushing My teeth, and I promise to break some records.

The Bigg Dog
Channeled through Tucker Merrick
Matt Sloan
UMass students

Dear editor:

This is what my friend and I went through this morning. I walked from Washington to Bartlett having my pants become completely soaked up to my knees in freezing cold water and snow going up my leg, just to be there for less than 10 minutes.

One of my friends had to walk from Washington to Herter Hall in sneakers. She walked from the door of Washington to the door of JQA and her feet were already completely soaked. By the time she got to class her pants were drenched up to her knees and she had to sit in class for 50 minutes freezing and is probably going to become sick from it.

I really hope that who ever is in charge of closings gets the chance to read what having classes today put the students, the ones who didn't have rain boots, through.

M. Borg
UMass student

DON'T JUMP THE LAX STICK

Dear editor:

Re: "UMass students react to lacrosse arrests," News, Feb. 13, 2008.

I would like to voice a complaint about the article in The Collegian about students' reactions to the lacrosse scandal. I think this is an unfair and demeaning article to UMass Athletics. I am on the field hockey team, and as a member of the athletic department I am insulted that in this article, athletes were referred to as "violent."

Not all athletes are violent; this situation is involving eight individuals. I am in no way condoning their actions, but to refer to the entire student athlete body that way is unfair. Also, it was quoted from someone that athletes should be held to a higher standard than the rest of the student body because we are a representative of the student body and in the spotlight.

The coverage about the lacrosse players has made front page news all week, yet the stabbings outside of Mackimmie received almost no publicity. Does that mean that it's OK for normal students to stab people but not OK for an athlete to?

We all attend this university and we are all a representative of the student body. These reactions that are happening right now should not be limited to situations in which only athletes are involved. Every act of violence on this campus should be treated this way, and not just passed over until someone that is "in the spotlight" does something wrong, because wow, that must mean it's really wrong.

I think that this article should have showed both sides of the story. Many people already have hostilities towards athletes as it is, because they think we are cocky, because we are on scholarship, etc.

But they've never taken the time to research the fact that over the course of a year; a full scholarship athlete would not even make minimum wage if they were being paid for the hours they put in. This one scandal is not a representative of all athletes, and as a newspaper I think that should be your objective to tell the public.

Lauren Gillespie
UMass student

Dear editor:

Re: "Lift the veil," Ed/Op, Feb. 7

I can't help but be angered by Thursday's editorial that essentially criticizes the administration for the way in which they've handled the lacrosse players' suspension.

Despite the eight suspensions that have already occurred, the article does not hesitate to insinuate inaction on the university's part. I find it extremely difficult to believe that those of you at The Daily Collegian don't remember the Duke Lacrosse scandal of 2006.

Three young men's lives were ruined (not to mention their families and friends) and a coach was forced to resign all due to an unfortunate rush to accuse. Maybe the University is acting responsibly by wholeheartedly considering the vast repercussions of their actions.

As you reported, you have very little information regarding both the suspensions and the incident that occurred on North Pleasant Street. I wonder if it ever struck any of you that perhaps there is another side to this story; a side that doesn't cast student athletes as weapon bearing assailants.

I have never understood why athletes are held to standards much higher than those applied to any regular student. They work exceptionally hard day in and day out to provide the student body with entertainment and school spirit. I wish people would not be so quick to attack student athletes, a population who give so much back to this school.

Stephanie Crabtree
UMass student

CORRECT ONE FOR THE GIPPER

Dear editor:

Re: "When will someone stop this Regan [sic] Mania?" Ted Rogers, Ed/Op, Feb. 4, 2008

The first version of this letter had 1,650 words. I had to trim more than 1,100 words to get it published, so imagine how much more detail I would like to include in my response to Ted Rogers' editorial regarding Ronald Reagan's record as president.

I want to make it clear that I will defend to the death Mr. Rogers' right to express his opinion, but I feel an equally strong impulse to correct the many falsehoods he used to support his contention that Reagan was not a good president.

Rogers' blames Reagan for the Osama bin Laden being a threat to us. Reagan shares responsibility for arming the Afghan rebels during the Soviet occupation of that country, but Ted's belief that Reagan was responsible for denying aid to Afghanistan after the Soviet pullout is verifiably false. The U.S.S.R. completed its withdrawal in February of 1989, and it was the George H.W. Bush administration, along with the Democrat-controlled House and Senate, that cut off funding to the Mujahidin.

Rogers' also claims that Reagan's economic policies were ineffective and unfair. Maybe it is because he does not remember the misery of the late 70s and early 80s, but he clearly does not understand the magnitude of the economic woes Reagan inherited or the monumental efforts required to fix them.

The Carter years were marked by "stagflation," denoting a period of very poor economic performance caused by both high unemployment and inflation. In other words, many Americans were miserable because they did not have jobs, and many of the ones who did could not earn enough to keep up with inflation.

When Reagan was elected the unemployment rate was 7.2 percent and the inflation rate was 13.6 percent, but when he left in 1988 those figures were down to 5.5 percent and 4.1 percent respectively.

During that same time, GDP rose from about $2.7 trillion to over $5.1 trillion, an increase of 83 percent, which greatly exceeds the performance of Bill Clinton in that respect (55 percent increase from 1992 to 2000). Rogers' is correct about the large deficits of the 1980s, but his simplistic analysis ignores the complexities of the times. It would take many multiples of the number of words I am allowed here to even begin a thorough analysis of the costs and benefits of government spending during that time.

One can argue that "Reaganomics" did not produce an absolutely equal distribution of economic improvement to each and every American, but there can be no doubt that getting unemployment and inflation under control provided the greatest benefit to the majority of Americans. In fact, even as Reagan cut taxes for all Americans, the share of the tax burden paid by the "richest" 10% rose from 49 percent to over 57 percent, while the burden on the "poorest" 50 percent of Americans fell from over 7 percent to 5.7 percent.

I would like to go on and on (and on), but I must conclude this. I hope that everyone will take some time to find the truth. All the correct information is readily available on the Internet. History is about learning from the past, and that requires an honest appraisal of the facts. Ted has a right to his views, but the historical record belongs to us all, and an informed opinion is one that is firmly rooted in truth.

Ben Rudnick
Undergraduate Historian

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian encourages reader responses. Letters to the editor should be no more than 350 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com. We regret that not all letters make the print edition; additional letters to the editor can be found online at dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Recipe for DC romance

Cheap, tasty treats for V-day

If you are like most college students, you may be strapped for cash this Valentine's Day. And as much as you want to strut your stuff for that hottie down the hall by taking him or her out on the town, your parents simply refuse to send you money this early in the semester. You may be out of money, but not out of luck.

Mary-Frances Heck

In fact, you already have reservations for a romantic dinner at a spot just a short walk from your dorm. So put on that cute outfit reserved for Saturday nights and head to the nearest dining hall.

Now I am sure many of you are skeptical of the potential success of a dining hall date. I will look like a cheapskate, you say. However, like Valentine's Days in the past, the dining halls are featuring chocolate fondue. Chocolate, a product of the cacao bean, was first cultivated by Mesoamerican tribes who associated it with a fertility god.

Cacao beans may have been used as currency as well as a luxury food. It was introduced to Western conquerors in the form of a bitter drink created by Mayans and Aztecs. Chocolate is still used in Central and South America as an ingredient in sauces and beverages, most notably mole.

Mole is a concoction of over 20 ingredients including chilies, cinnamon, tomatoes and, of course, chocolate.

When chocolate hit the European scene, spicy chilies were traded for sweeteners and chocolate as we know it was born. In the early 1800s, a Dutch chocolate maker developed a simple process of separating cocoa from cocoa butter which could be recombined with sugar in varying proportions to create chocolate candy. In less than two hundred years, chocolate has become one of the most popular tastes worldwide.

Today, chocolate has connotations of romance and is customary for couples to exchange on Valentine's Day. There may be more than tradition behind the practice though. It is thought that chocolate is an aphrodisiac, especially for women. Additionally, heart healthy antioxidants and mild stimulants are found in chocolate, which means you do not need to feel guilty about indulging your craving.

This year, instead of spending money on roses and a fancy dinner, you can look extra thoughtful and creative by fixing one of the following delicious chocolate recipes.

WHITE HOT CHOCOLATE

2 cups milk
1/2 cup white chocolate, melted
Marshmallows (optional)

Place melted chocolate in a paper cup. In another paper cup, microwave milk until very hot, about two minutes. Pour hot milk over chocolate and stir to incorporate chocolate. Sprinkle with milk chocolate shavings or marshmallows and serve.

CHOCOLATE BARK WITH RAISINS AND NUTS

(Note- make before eating dinner so it will be cooled by the time you're ready for dessert)

1/2 cup milk chocolate, melted
1/2 white chocolate, melted
2 tbsp raisins
2 tbsp nuts (pecans, peanuts, or almonds)
Cooking spray (think waffle station)
Dinner plate, knife

Coat plate with cooking spray. Pour melted chocolates, one at a time, onto sprayed plate. Drag knife through chocolates to create intermingling swirls. Arrange raisins and nuts in chocolate before it sets. Go eat dinner. Get a cup of coffee. Break bark into bite-size pieces and share with your date.

PEANUT BUTTER FUDGE BANANA SPLIT

1 banana
2 scoops of your favorite ice cream
Sprinkles, nuts, strawberries, candy, marshmallows, etc.
2 tbsp peanut butter
2 tbsp white or milk chocolate, melted
Large bowl, paper cup, and 2 spoons

Peel banana and place in bowl. Top with ice cream. Reserve dry toppings in a separate dish. Combine chocolate and peanut butter in paper cup. Microwave for 20 seconds or until peanut butter begins to melt. Mix well and pour over ice cream. Add dry toppings and enjoy.

TUXEDO STRAWBERRIES

Whole strawberries (figure three per person)
White chocolate
Dark chocolate
Cooking spray
Plate, skewer

Coat plate with cooking spray. Holding the stem of the strawberry, carefully dip into white chocolate so it is as covered in chocolate as possible. Carefully place on plate and allow chocolate to set, about 10 minutes. Your strawberry will now have a hard base so it will not roll around. Pick up strawberry by stem and dip in sides in dark chocolate so it creates a V on side opposite of the chocolate base. Set back on plate. Using a skewer, create dark chocolate dots in a line down the center of the V to look like buttons. At the top of the V, draw two triangles to look like a bow tie. Now that your date is thoroughly impressed with your skills, give yourself a pat on the back for remembering it is the thought that counts.

Mary-Frances Heck can be reached at mheck@student.umass.edu.

Tuxedo strawberries are a delicious way to end a Valentine's date in the dining commons.

Rainy adventures in Ireland

By Brittany Dalphond
Collegian Correspondent

Editor's Note: This is part two of a continuing series by a University of Massachusetts Amherst student's study abroad experiences in Ireland.

Here I am, reporting back from Ireland under my umbrella (go ahead sing the Rihanna song – I know I would), which apparently is where I will be spending my first few months.... no snow, but plenty of rain.

I chatted with a local at the supermarket, who merely shrugged and made some remark about the rain when I commented on how beautiful her country is. Sometimes people forget to notice the beauty of things right in front of them, even here in Ireland. I asked her if it always rained a lot and she replied in a thick Irish accent: "Pretty much. It gets a bit better starting in March and April though."

That would be why Ireland is so green. I don't mean the kind of green you see on your front lawn, I mean green like you see in those tropical calendars; the kind of green that you think must be digitally edited.

It was January and on our bus ride into the city, we were being welcomed by bright luscious green hills as far as the eye can see. You would think the grounds of the college had been spray painted it was so flawless. It gives a sense of warmth when something is that beautiful regardless of the fact that it is constantly raining and 40 degrees. That may explain why everyone, so far, has been extremely welcoming.

Even our brief stop in London, where we changed planes, was pleasant thanks to the good-natured security man who chatted with us about our trip while making sure there were no explosives in my laptop (there weren't). He gave us three "musts" to add to our list of places to visit: Krakow, Poland, Prague, Czech Republic and Budapest, Hungary.

Once we had settled into our apartment, after spending the night in the 'Hotel de Starbucks,' which had an abundance of wooden chairs and tables in the center of Cork Airport, we began to explore. Just so you know, if an Irish person says, "It's just down the road," you should clarify on their idea of "just down the road." I promise you, "just down the road," could be anywhere from 100 yards to two miles. The locals do in fact use miles to give directions, which makes life a little easier; according to one of our wonderfully chatty cab drivers, it was only two years ago that they changed to the metric system.

In any case, we walked for hours, rarely towards a destination, simply for the journey. We saw castles tucked between houses in the hills and endless horizons of green, and eventually made our way to a mall near our apartment which thankfully had a Tesco Supermarket.

Unfortunately, it wasn't until we had made our way through the checkout line, where cashiers sit in chairs and there are no 'baggers,' that we became aware that those plastic bags you get your groceries in at the stores in the United States are not free in Ireland (20 cents a piece!) and are rarely used. Everywhere I looked, people had their own canvas bags, heavy-duty plastic bags, or backpacks. I thought, "John Gerber would be pleased with this situation. Ireland is very sustainable."

As we headed out, new canvas bags in hands and our backpacks stuffed with pasta and pasta sauces and our favorite finds (peanut butter and strawberry jam), it officially became clear to me that one of the most imperative items I had left on my bedroom floor at home: my umbrella. It would be a few more days, and one day of downpours that left me looking like I had showered with my clothes on, until I would finally buy an umbrella.

Brittany Dalphond can be reached at bdalphon@student.umass.edu.

Even when it's rainy, the Irish countryside is beautiful, with emerald green fields littered with castles and rolling hills.

University of New Hampshire chef Ralph Coughenour returned to the University of Massachusetts Amherst on Tuesday as part of the Visiting College Chef series. Coughenour poses here with some UMass students and Sam the Minuteman at Berkshire Dining Commons.

Frenzy over new artist's debut release

Slow tempos hurt unique sound, moving lyrics of Alison Sudol

By Heather Waxman
Collegian Correspondent

Combine such elements as honesty, passion, and a hint of heartache and you will find yourself face-to-face with the musical proficiencies of 22 year old Alison Sudol, more commonly known by her stage name, A Fine Frenzy.

Raised in Seattle among parents both involved in dramatic arts, early on Sudol developed a passion for the arts herself. Moved by music's conspicuous form of expression, Sudol began fumbling with the piano and soon taught herself to play.

From there, she channeled her literary skills into songwriting. Her love for all genres of music expanded to the Icelandic stylings of Sigur Ros and Bjork as well as British-based favorites like Radiohead, Coldplay, and Keane. As a result of her openness to all forms of music, Alison developed a sound all her own. Her talents got her signed to Virgin Records which snowballed into the release of her first record, "One Cell in the Sea."

A Fine Frenzy's rare sound pairs well with her unique "Alice in Wonderland" vibe. Accompanied by porcelain skin, gorgeous auburn locks and, her incredible beauty is impossible to miss. More importantly, however, is the manner in which she carries herself through her music. She is both humble and relatable in the midst of addressing the tumbling down feeling of love.

Her songs are intertwined with the ever-popular confessions and responses to unrequited love. Through atmospheric instrumentations and haunting melodic lines, her songs ooze a certain purity and truth that only come around once in a blue moon. The lyrics are simple yet profound at the same time.

In her first single, "Almost Lover," Sudol transports the listener to a magical, pensive state while perfectly addressing the loss of love. She allows the listener to truly tap into her emotions, mainly confusion and despair. She wisely croons, "I should've known you'd bring me heartache. Almost lovers always do."

As the album continues, so do the well-written lines. In "Think of You," she reaches out to the heartbroken once more, reminding them to learn from their past experiences. She states, "Just to put your mind at ease. You don't owe me anything. You paid me well in memories." Such lines echo throughout the record, maintaining the simplicity and profoundness.

Despite Sudol's efforts, she fails to please in one area. The consistent andante flow throughout "One Cell in the Sea" becomes slightly redundant. Its lack of variety in tempo leaves the average listener straying off by the time track eight rolls around. With the majority of the songs peaking a lengthy five minutes, it is almost inevitable. If Sudol had placed more focus on variation, she could have easily been recognized with a Grammy nomination.

Overall, A Fine Frenzy's efforts on "One Cell in the Sea" are commendable. She weaves her poetry into14 mini works of art all her own. Sudol is a perfect listen for a long-lasting bubble bath or the ride home after a long day. Having only appeared in the music scene this past summer, it is only the beginning for the talented songstress. One should expect great things from her feathery voice as she hits the road on her first headlining tour this spring.

Heather Waxman can be reached at hwaxman@student.umass.edu.

Real rejection in a 'Real World'

By Adam Szagin
Collegian Celebrity

This May I will be graduating from the UMass and I will be thrust into the harsh existence of post-graduate life like a baby is flung from its mother's womb. Now, before you start to freak out about my future, let me tell you I've got a little bit of a plan for myself. However I must be honest, it's not exactly a concrete plan. In fact, it's about as solid as your last trip to the bathroom after eating at the DC.

Bathroom humor aside, the fast approaching date of commencement has resulted in a higher number of inquiries into my projected future than ever before. Fifteen times a week I am forced to respond to comments such as "Are you applying for jobs?" and "Your political science degree is useless, what homeless shelter will you be staying at?"

The other day my Uncle Abe called me and said "Adam, what are you going to do when you graduate and get into the real world?" Then I remembered my friend telling me that MTV's The Real World was hosting an open casting call on campus. Holy donkey punch Uncle Abe, you're a genius. People had always said "Adam, you are so good looking and more captivating than watching tortoises bang…you should be on the Real World."

My first thought was that I would be a fool not to try out for the Real World. My second thought was sheer excitement about all the puns I would be making to rebut the question "What are you going to do when you graduate and get into the real world?"

The following is a record of my Real World journey thus far:

Monday night

The night before the audition. I was more excited than a school girl with a new teddy bear. What should I wear? I wanted to look cool, but I didn't want to look like I was trying too hard. Then I realized that I don't actually own any clothes and I was really just deciding between two different plaid shirts which, by virtue of being plaid, were basically the same shirt. Ergo, I decided to go with plaid shirt A, a blue t-shirt underneath, my beat up jeans (the only pants I own) and my rainbow colored Adidas zx750s. I capped the whole look off with a backwards Cub Scout hat. There was no guarantee I'd make it on the show, but at least I'd look like a pimp while trying.

Tuesday Morning 10 a.m.

I had been told that the auditions started at this time but that was simply a lie. I had arrived just ten minutes before the fabricated start time, looking good and feeling even better. When I walked in there were roughly 15 people in the room. Not a big turnout. A brief look around revealed about 10 girls, some so good looking I would not have been able to speak to them without a change of pants, and a few guys who were much better dressed than I was. Mostly we sat in silence until I took out an apple and disturbed the silence with my horse-like chomping.

10:30 a.m. (Trim a little)

I have made some friends and the room has become more crowded. I was able to instigate conversation and it seems that everyone in the room stopped watching Real World long ago. Everyone openly acknowledges that going on the Real World, although fun, will ultimately turn out to be more of a mistake than the birth of your little brother. There are horror stories flying around about past cast members as well as speculation about where the show will be held. Additionally, everyone in the room is actively playing the "I don't actually care if I get on the Real World" card. They are all liars. Everyone here is part of a very bizarre group of people, a group of people who think they are cool, good looking, and interesting enough to be on TV and yet have a gaping hole in their self esteem that can only be filled by the approval of MTV and its viewers.

11:00 A.M.

Finally somebody from the Real World has shown up. Good, I've got a schedule to keep. First they give us a form to fill out with the usual questions. Goals, major, issues we care about and other standard crap. I ask for a pen and the guy lends me a pen shaped like a syringe; my future already looks brighter. I fill out the form and suddenly I am whisked away with the first group of ten people.

11:07 A.M.

I am walking towards the group interview table and I am hungry again.

11:08 A.M.

The interview begins. The casting director asks for our names and then encourages us to engage in a variety of political discourse. How predictable. I think this would be a good time to claim that I am a raging alcoholic and improve my chances of getting on the show, but I abstain. Then she asks us each to tell an embarrassing story. I tell a tale of woe in which I accidentally swore at two old nuns in a wholesale club. Everyone laughed and I became the focal point of the interview. Indeed, I was king and all was right with the world. The lady started writing us down one by one. Eventually it was just me and a sickeningly good looking blonde girl that was as a matter of fact the inspiration for my earlier comment about needing a change of pants. My heart suddenly dropped as the lady said my name. Crap! I had lost.

11:25 A.M.

The casting director had told me she liked my style and sent me into the back room to fill out a much more invasive application. The blank bible in front of me was 30 pages and included 65 short answer essays about everything you can imagine. Questions regarding my goals, heroes, habits, and hormones all came up. Just a quick skim through the packet left me feeling more violated than the victim of a very inquisitive alien probe. They also took my picture on the famous Real World audition Polaroid.

11:45 A.M.

I have just finished page one. More people would to come in throughout the day. All would cry at the sight of the blank scroll in front of them.

1:00 P.M.

I am on page 15, but I must go to class. I take the packet with me to bring back after class and finish.

1:01-4:00 P.M.

I am in theater 140. Don't ask me what happened in class, I don't know. I was too busy thinking about what kind of animal I would be and a time when I let a friend down.

4:04 P.M.

I return to the scene of the crime and spend the next hour filling out the rest of the packet. My arm hurts and I want to hire an elf to write for me. The occupants of the room are laughing and having fun but secretly we all want the same thing and there is tension. At one point a redhead tried to bite a blonde in the jugular and eliminate her. Whoa. Fierce.

5:00 P.M.

I have finished the packet and I am pleased with my witty yet brilliant answers. I hand in my packet. I thank the staff and wish everyone good luck. They tell me they will call me around 11:00 PM if they want to schedule an interview. I accept this offer under the condition that they do not ask me to fill out anymore papers. How many trees must die so we can watch attractive fools get belligerent from the comforts of our own home?

11:00 PM

The real world has not called. Unless I end up on Cops, I will not be going on television. Perhaps my answers seemed to stable, or my picture wasn't attractive enough. Maybe I seemed too crazy or too introverted. This must be a fluke. I know. I'm more interesting than the "Mtz." Although the truth may sting like a pepper sprayer, it is still the truth.

Sorry Uncle Abe, I guess I'm just not cut out for the real world.

Adam Szagin was last seen at the most happening bar

University Health Services
Support and Therapy Group Meetings • Spring, 2008

STRESSBUSTERS
Thursdays, 3/13, 3/27, 4/3 and 4/10, 3:30 – 5 p.m.
Learn how to relax, reduce worry, manage your time and sleep better in this four-part series. Space is limited, so register early!

LIVING WITH LOSS
Tuesdays, 4 – 5:30 p.m.
A support group for undergraduate and graduate students dealing with the loss of someone close to them.

CONNECTING ON CAMPUS
Wednesdays, 2:30 – 4 p.m.
An undergraduate therapy group focusing on school adjustments, relationships, anxiety, depression and more.

MINDFULNESS-BASED STRESS REDUCTION (MBSR)
Mondays, 4 – 5:30 p.m. or Wednesdays, 5 – 6:30 p.m.
Mindfulness is a way of paying attention with intention, in the moment and without judgment. With regular practice, MBSR has the potential to lower stress, anxiety and depression, promote relaxation, improve concentration, raise self-awareness and enhance the immune system.

Pre-registration is required for all groups. Call 545-2337 or come to Mental Health Services, 127 Hills North, Monday – Friday, 8 a.m. – 5 p.m.

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
WINE SALE 10% OFF 6 BOTTLES* OF WINE EVERYDAY!! MIX & MATCH REGULAR PRICED 750 ML BOTTLES OF VARIETAL WINES.
We have ICE LUGES!!!
CIGAR SALE!!! -15% off Premium Cigars
Now carrying PIPES!!! -And pipe tobacco & supplies!!!

Jose Cuervo Platino Tequila 750 ml $49.99	Jim Beam Bourbon 1.75 liter $20.99	Bacardi -All Flavors 1.0 Liter $17.99
Glenmorangie Madiera Wood Finish 750 ml $49.99	Jose Cuervo Flavored Tequila* 1.0 liter $20.99 *Citrico, Tropina, Oranjo	Jagermeister 750 ml $17.99
10 Cane Rum 750 ml $26.99	Meyer's Platinum Rum 1.75 liter $19.99	Absolut New Orleans Vodka 750 ml $16.99
Grey Goose Vodka 750 ml $26.99	Pinnacle Vodka 1.75 liter $19.99	Sobieski Polish Vodka 1.75 liter $16.99
Jameson Irish Whiskey 750 ml $22.99	Godiva Liqueur 750 ml $18.99	Captain Morgan Parrot Bay Rum* *Including Coconut, Mango, Pineapple, Passion Fruit 1.0 liter $16.99
Smirnoff Vodka 80° 1.75 liter $21.99	Feckin Irish Whiskey 750 ml $17.99
	Ruskova Vodka 1.75 liter $17.99

Sale 2/14 - 2/27 333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

SUMMER SESSION 2008

EARN EXTRA CREDIT
THIS SUMMER AT NORTHEASTERN

Summer Session at Northeastern is your opportunity to get ahead. Whether you want to transfer credits into your current degree program, stock up on science courses, or enroll in a master's degree program, we have over 300 graduate and undergraduate courses to fit your needs.

- 8- & 4-week flexible course formats
- Courses offered in Boston, Burlington & Online

EVENING, WEEKEND & ONLINE courses start JUNE 2, JULY 7 & AUGUST 4.

For more information, please visit www.spcs.neu.edu/summersession or call toll free 877.6NU.SPCS.

Northeastern University
School of Professional and Continuing Studies

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Recipe for DC romance

Cheap, tasty treats for V-day

If you are like most college students, you may be strapped for cash this Valentine's Day. And as much as you want to strut your stuff for that hottie down the hall by taking him or her out on the town, your parents simply refuse to send you money this early in the semester. You may be out of money, but not out of luck.

Mary-Frances Heck

In fact, you already have reservations for a romantic dinner at a spot just a short walk from your dorm. So put on that cute outfit reserved for Saturday nights and head to the nearest dining hall.

Now I am sure many of you are skeptical of the potential success of a dining hall date. I will look like a cheapskate, you say. However, like Valentine's Days in the past, the dining halls are featuring chocolate fondue. Chocolate, a product of the cacao bean, was first cultivated by Mesoamerican tribes who associated it with a fertility god.

Cacao beans may have been used as currency as well as a luxury food. It was introduced to Western conquerors in the form of a bitter drink created by Mayans and Aztecs. Chocolate is still used in Central and South America as an ingredient in sauces and beverages, most notably mole.

Mole is a concoction of over 20 ingredients including chilies, cinnamon, tomatoes and, of course, chocolate.

When chocolate hit the European scene, spicy chilies were traded for sweeteners and chocolate as we know it was born. In the early 1800s, a Dutch chocolate maker developed a simple process of separating cocoa from cocoa butter which could be recombined with sugar in varying proportions to create chocolate candy. In less than two hundred years, chocolate has become one of the most popular tastes worldwide.

Today, chocolate has connotations of romance and is customary for couples to exchange on Valentine's Day. There may be more than tradition behind the practice though. It is thought that chocolate is an aphrodisiac, especially for women. Additionally, heart healthy antioxidants and mild stimulants are found in chocolate, which means you do not need to feel guilty about indulging your craving.

This year, instead of spending money on roses and a fancy dinner, you can look extra thoughtful and creative by fixing one of the following delicious chocolate recipes.

WHITE HOT CHOCOLATE

2 cups milk
1/2 cup white chocolate, melted
Marshmallows (optional)

Place melted chocolate in a paper cup. In another paper cup, microwave milk until very hot, about two minutes. Pour hot milk over chocolate and stir to incorporate chocolate. Sprinkle with milk chocolate shavings or marshmallows and serve.

CHOCOLATE BARK WITH RAISINS AND NUTS

(Note- make before eating dinner so it will be cooled by the time you're ready for dessert)

½ cup milk chocolate, melted
¼ white chocolate, melted
2 tbsp raisins
2 tbsp nuts (pecans, peanuts, or almonds)
Cooking spray (think waffle station)
Dinner plate, knife

Coat plate with cooking spray. Pour melted chocolates, one at a time, onto sprayed plate. Drag knife through chocolates to create intermingling swirls. Arrange raisins and nuts in chocolate before it sets. Go eat dinner. Get a cup of coffee. Break bark into bite-size pieces and share with your date.

PEANUT BUTTER FUDGE BANANA SPLIT

1 banana
2 scoops of your favorite ice cream
Sprinkles, nuts, strawberries, candy, marshmallows, etc.
2 tbsp peanut butter
2 tbsp white or milk chocolate, melted
Large bowl, paper cup, and 2 spoons

Peel banana and place in bowl. Top with ice cream. Reserve dry toppings in a separate dish. Combine chocolate and peanut butter in paper cup. Microwave for 20 seconds or until peanut butter begins to melt. Mix well and pour over ice cream. Add dry toppings and enjoy.

TUXEDO STRAWBERRIES

Whole strawberries (figure three per person)
White chocolate
Dark chocolate
Cooking spray
Plate, skewer

Coat plate with cooking spray. Holding the stem of the strawberry, carefully dip into white chocolate so it is as covered in chocolate as possible. Carefully place on plate and allow chocolate to set, about 10 minutes. Your strawberry will now have a hard base so it will not roll around. Pick up strawberry by stem and dip in sides in dark chocolate so it creates a V on side opposite of the chocolate base. Set back on plate. Using a skewer, create dark chocolate dots in a line down the center of the V to look like buttons. At the top of the V, draw two triangles to look like a bow tie. Now that your date is thoroughly impressed with your skills, give yourself a pat on the back for remembering it is the thought that counts.

Mary-Frances Heck can be reached at mheck@student.umass.edu

KEITH FLEMING/COLLEGIAN

Tuxedo strawberries are a delicious way to end a Valentine's date in the dining commons.

Rainy adventures in Ireland

By Brittany Dalphond
Foreign Correspondent

Editor's Note: This is part two of a continuing series by a University of Massachusetts Amherst student's study abroad experiences in Ireland.

Here I am, reporting back from Ireland under my umbrella (go ahead sing the Rihanna song – I know I would), which apparently is where I will be spending my first few months ... no snow, but plenty of rain.

I chatted with a local at the supermarket, who merely shrugged and made some remark about the rain when I commented on how beautiful her country is. Sometimes people forget to notice the beauty of things right in front of them, even here in Ireland. I asked her if it always rained a lot and she replied in a thick Irish accent: "Pretty much. It gets a bit better starting in March and April though."

That would be why Ireland is so green. I don't mean the kind of green you see on your front lawn, I mean green like you see in those tropical calendars; the kind of green that you think must be digitally edited.

It was January and on our bus ride into the city, we were being welcomed by bright luscious green hills as far as the eye can see. You would think the grounds of the college had been spray painted it was so flawless. It gives a sense of warmth when something is that beautiful regardless of the fact that it is constantly raining and 40 degrees. That may explain why everyone, so far, has been extremely welcoming.

Even our brief stop in London, where we changed planes, was pleasant thanks to the good-natured security man who chatted with us about our trip while making sure there were no explosives in my laptop (there weren't). He gave us three "musts" to add to our list of places to visit: Krakow, Poland, Prague, Czech Republic and Budapest, Hungary.

Once we had settled into our apartment, after spending the night in the 'Hotel de Starbucks,' which had an abundance of wooden chairs and tables in the center of Cork Airport, we began to explore. Just so you know, if an Irish person says, "It's just down the road," you should clarify on their idea of "just down the road." I promise you, "just down the road," could be anywhere from 100 yards to two miles. The locals do in fact use miles to give directions, which makes life a little easier; according to one of our wonderfully chatty cab drivers, it was only two years ago that they changed to the metric system.

In any case, we walked for hours, rarely towards a destination, simply for the journey. We saw castles tucked between houses in the hills and endless horizons of green, and eventually made our way to a mall near our apartment which thankfully had a Tesco Supermarket.

Unfortunately, it wasn't until we had made our way through the checkout line, where cashiers sit in chairs and there are no "baggers,' that we became aware that those plastic bags you get your groceries in at the stores in the United States are not free in Ireland (20 cents a piece!) and are rarely used. Everywhere I looked, people had their own canvas bags, heavy-duty plastic bags, or backpacks. I thought. "John Gerber would be pleased with this situation. Ireland is very sustainable."

As we headed out, new canvas bags in hands and our backpacks stuffed with pasta and pasta sauces and our favorite finds (peanut butter and strawberry jam), it officially became clear to me that one of the most imperative items I had left on my bedroom floor at home: my umbrella. It would be a few more days, and one day of downpours that left me looking like I had showered with my clothes on, until I would finally buy an umbrella.

Brittany Dalphond can be reached at bdalphon@student.umass.edu.

KATHY FLEMING/COLLEGIAN

Even when it's rainy, the Irish countryside is beautiful, with emerald green fields littered with castles and rolling hills.

KATHY FLEMING/COLLEGIAN

University of New Hampshire chef Ralph Coughenour returned to the University of Massachusetts Amherst on Tuesday as part of the Visiting College Chef series. Coughenour poses here with some UMass students and Sam the Minuteman at Berkshire Dining Commons.

Frenzy over new artist's debut release

Slow tempos hurt unique sound, moving lyrics of Alison Sudol

By Heather Waxman
Collegian Correspondent

Combine such elements as honesty, passion, and a hint of heartache and you will find yourself face-to-face with the musical proficiencies of 22 year old Alison Sudol, more commonly known by her stage name, A Fine Frenzy.

Raised in Seattle among parents both involved in dramatic arts, early on Sudol developed a passion for the arts herself. Moved by music's conspicuous form of expression, Sudol began fumbling with the piano and soon taught herself to play.

From there, she channeled her literary skills into songwriting. Her love for all genres of music expanded to the Icelandic stylings of Sigur Ros and Bjork as well as British-based favorites like Radiohead, Coldplay, and Keane. As a result of her openness to all forms of music, Alison developed a sound all her own. Her talents got her signed to Virgin Records which snowballed into the release of her first record, "One Cell in the Sea."

A Fine Frenzy's rare sound pairs well with her unique "Alice in Wonderland" vibe. Accompanied by porcelain skin, gorgeous auburn locks and, her incredible beauty is impossible to miss. More importantly, however, is the manner in which she carries herself through her music. She is both humble and relatable in the midst of addressing the tumbling down feeling of love.

Her songs are intertwined with the ever-popular confessions and responses to unrequited love. Through atmospheric instrumentations and haunting melodic lines, her songs ooze a certain purity and truth that only come around once in a blue moon. The lyrics are simple yet profound at the same time.

In her first single, "Almost Lover," Sudol transports the listener to a magical, pensive state while perfectly addressing the loss of love. She allows the listener to truly tap into her emotions, mainly confusion and despair. She wisely croons, "I should've known you'd bring me heartache. Almost lovers always do."

As the album continues, so do the well-written lines. In "Think of You," she reaches out to the heartbroken once more, reminding them to learn from their past experiences. She states, "Just to put your mind at ease. You don't owe me anything. You paid me well in memories." Such lines echo throughout the record, maintaining the simplicity and profoundness.

Despite Sudol's efforts, she fails to please in one area. The consistent andante flow throughout "One Cell in the Sea" becomes slightly redundant. Its lack of variety in tempo leaves the average listener straying off by the time track eight rolls around. With the majority of the songs peaking a lengthy five minutes, it is almost inevitable. If Sudol had placed more focus on variation, she could have easily been recognized with a Grammy nomination.

Overall, A Fine Frenzy's efforts on "One Cell in the Sea" are commendable. She weaves her poetry into14 mini works of art all her own. Sudol is a perfect listen for a long-lasting bubble bath or the ride home after a long day. Having only appeared in the music scene this past summer, it is only the beginning for the talented songstress. One should expect great things from her feathery voice as she hits the road on her first headlining tour this spring.

Heather Waxman can be reached at hwaxman@student.umass.edu.

Real rejection in a 'Real World'

By Adam Szagin
Collegian Celebrity

This May I will be graduating from the UMass and I will be thrust into the harsh existence of post-graduate life like a baby is flung from its mother's womb. Now, before you start to freak out about my future, let me tell you I've got a little bit of a plan for myself. However I must be honest, it's not exactly a concrete plan. In fact, it's about as solid as your last trip to the bathroom after eating at the DC.

Bathroom humor aside, the fast approaching date of commencement has resulted in a higher number of inquiries into my projected future than ever before. Fifteen times a week I am forced to respond to comments such as "Are you applying for jobs?" and "Your political science degree is useless, what homeless shelter will you be staying at?"

The other day my Uncle Abe called me and said "Adam, what are you going to do when you graduate and get into the real world?" Then I remembered my friend telling me that MTV's The Real World was hosting an open casting call on campus. Holy donkey punch Uncle Abe, you're a genius. People had always said "Adam, you are so good looking and more captivating than watching tortoises bang…you should be on the Real World."

My first thought was that I would be a fool not to try out for the Real World. My second thought was sheer excitement about all the puns I would be making to rebut the question "What are you going to do when you graduate and get into the real world?"

The following is a record of my Real World journey thus far:

Monday night

The night before the audition. I was more excited than a school girl with a new teddy bear. What should I wear? I wanted to look cool, but I didn't want to look like I was trying too hard. Then I realized that I don't actually own any clothes and I was really just deciding between two different plaid shirts which, by virtue of being plaid, were basically the same shirt. Ergo, I decided to go with plaid shirt A, a blue t-shirt underneath, my beat up jeans (the only pants I own) and my rainbow colored Adidas zx750s. I capped the whole look off with a backwards Cub Scout hat. There was no guarantee I'd make it on the show, but at least I'd look like a pimp while trying.

Tuesday Morning 10 a.m.

I had been told that the auditions started at this time but that was simply a lie. I had arrived just ten minutes before the fabricated start time, looking good and feeling even better. When I walked in there were roughly 15 people in the room. Not a big turnout. A brief look around revealed about 10 girls, some so good looking I would not have been able to speak to them without a change of pants, and a few guys who were much better dressed than I was. Mostly we sat in silence until I took out an apple and disturbed the silence with my horse-like chomping.

10:30 a.m. (Trim a little)

I have made some friends and the room has become more crowded. I was able to instigate conversation and it seems that everyone in the room stopped watching Real World long ago. Everyone openly acknowledges that going on the Real World, although fun, will ultimately turn out to be more of a mistake than the birth of your little brother. There are horror stories flying around about past cast members as well as speculation about where the show will be held. Additionally, everyone in the room is actively playing the "I don't actually care if I get on the Real World" card. They are all liars. Everyone here is part of a very bizarre group of people, a group of people who think they are cool, good looking, and interesting enough to be on TV and yet have a gaping hole in their self esteem that can only be filled by the approval of MTV and its viewers.

11:00 A.M.

Finally somebody from the Real World has shown up. Good, I've got a schedule to keep. First they give us a form to fill out with the usual questions. Goals, major, issues we care about and other standard crap. I ask for a pen and the guy lends me a pen shaped like a syringe; my future already looks brighter. I fill out the form and suddenly I am whisked away with the first group of ten people.

11:07 A.M.

I am walking towards the group interview table and I am hungry again.

11:08 A.M.

The interview begins. The casting director asks for our names and then encourages us to engage in a variety of political discourse. How predictable. I think this would be a good time to claim that I am a raging alcoholic and improve my chances of getting on the show, but I abstain. Then she asks us each to tell an embarrassing story. I tell a tale of woe in which I accidentally swore at two old nuns in a wholesale club. Everyone laughed and I became the focal point of the interview. Indeed, I was king and all was right with the world. The lady started wilting us down one by one. Eventually it was just me and a sickeningly good looking blonde girl that was as a matter of fact the inspiration for my earlier comment about needing a change of pants. My heart suddenly dropped as the lady said my name. Crap! I had lost

11:25 A.M.

The casting director had told me she liked my style and sent me into the back room to fill out a much more invasive application. The blank bible in front of me was 30 pages and included 65 short answer essays about everything you can imagine. Questions regarding my goals, heroes, habits, and hormones all came up. Just a quick skim through the packet left me feeling more violated than the victim of a very inquisitive alien probe. They also took my picture on the famous Real World audition Polaroid.

11:45A.M.

I have just finished page one. More people would to come in throughout the day. All would cry at the sight of the blank scroll in front of them.

1:00 P.M.

I am on page 15, but I must go to class. I take the packet with me to bring back after class and finish

1:01-4:00 P.M.

I am in theater 140. Don't ask me what happened in class, I don't know. I was too busy thinking about what kind of animal I would be and a time when I let a friend down.

4:04 P.M.

I return to the scene of the crime and spend the next hour filling out the rest of the packet. My arm hurts and I want to hire an elf to write for me. The occupants of the room are laughing and having fun but secretly we all want the same thing and there is tension. At one point a redhead tried to bite a blonde in the jugular and dramatic her Wbna fierce

5:00 PM

I have finished the packet and I am pleased with my witty yet brilliant answers. I hand in my packet. I thank the staff and wish everyone good luck. They tell me they will call me around 11:00 PM if they want to schedule an interview. I accept this offer under the condition that they do not ask me to fill out anymore papers. How many trees must die so we can watch attractive fools get be[illegible]rent from the comforts of our own home?

11:00 PM

The real world has not called. I guess I end up on Cops. I will not be going on television. Perhaps my answers seemed to stable, or my picture wasn't [illegible] enough. Maybe I seemed too crazy, or too [illegible]. I must be a fluke. I know I'm more interesting than "Meh." Although the truth may sting like a purple [illegible] it is still the truth.

Sorry Uncle Abe, I guess I'm just not cut out for the real world.

Adam Szagin was last seen at the mic[illegible]

University Health Services
Support and Therapy Group Meetings • Spring, 2008

STRESSBUSTERS
Thursdays, 3/13, 3/27, 4/3 and 4/10, 3:30 – 5 p.m.
Learn how to relax, reduce worry, manage your time and sleep better in this four-part series. Space is limited, so register early!

LIVING WITH LOSS
Tuesdays, 4 – 5:30 p.m.
A support group for undergraduate and graduate students dealing with the loss of someone close to them.

CONNECTING ON CAMPUS
Wednesdays, 2:30 – 4 p.m.
An undergraduate therapy group focusing on school adjustments, relationships, anxiety, depression and more.

MINDFULNESS-BASED STRESS REDUCTION (MBSR)
Mondays, 4 – 5:30 p.m. or Wednesdays, 5 – 6:30 p.m.
Mindfulness is a way of paying attention with intention, in the moment and without judgment. With regular practice, MBSR has the potential to lower stress, anxiety and depression, promote relaxation, improve concentration, raise self-awareness and enhance the immune system.

Pre-registration is required for all groups. Call 545-2337 or come to Mental Health Services, 127 Hills North, Monday – Friday, 8 a.m. – 5 p.m.

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
WINE SALE 10% OFF 6 BOTTLES* OF WINE EVERYDAY!! MIX & MATCH *REGULAR PRICED 750 ML BOTTLES OF VARIETAL WINES.
We have ICE LUGES!!!
CIGAR SALE!!! -15% off Premium Cigars
Now carrying PIPES!!! -And pipe tobacco & supplies!!!

Jose Cuervo Platino Tequila 750 ml $49.99	Jim Beam Bourbon 1.75 liter $20.99	Bacardi –All Flavors 1.0 Liter $17.99
Glenmorangie Madiera Wood Finish 750 ml $49.99	Jose Cuervo Flavored Tequila* 1.0 liter $20.99 *Citrico, Tropina, Oranje	Jagermeister 750 ml $17.99
10 Cane Rum 750 ml $26.99	Meyer's Platinum Rum 1.75 liter $19.99	Absolut New Orleans Vodka 750 ml $16.99
Grey Goose Vodka 750 ml $26.99	Pinnacle Vodka 1.75 liter $19.99	Sobieski Polish Vodka 1.75 liter $16.99
Jameson Irish Whiskey 750 ml $22.99	Godiva Liqueur 750 ml $18.99	Captain Morgan Parrot Bay Rum* *Including Coconut, Mango, Pineapple, Passion Fruit 1.0 liter $16.99
Smirnoff Vodka 80° 1.75 liter $21.99	Feckin Irish Whiskey 750 ml $17.99
	Ruskova Vodka 1.75 liter $17.99

Sale 2/14 - 2/27 333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

SUMMER SESSION 2008

EARN EXTRA CREDIT
THIS SUMMER AT NORTHEASTERN

Summer Session at Northeastern is your opportunity to get ahead. Whether you want to transfer credits into your current degree program, stock up on science courses, or enroll in a master's degree program, we have over 300 graduate and undergraduate courses to fit your needs.

- 8- & 4-week flexible course formats
- Courses offered in Boston, Burlington & Online

EVENING, WEEKEND & ONLINE courses start JUNE 2, JULY 7 & AUGUST 4.

For more information, please visit www.spcs.neu.edu/summersession or call toll free 877.6NU.SPCS.

Northeastern University
School of Professional and Continuing Studies

Silver screen romances set high expectations

Hollywood love stories leave viewers disappointed with reality

BY STEPHANIE MCPHERSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"All you need is love," right? At least that seems to be the general message rampant not only in theaters today, but in many movies since the beginning of filmmaking.

Year after year, movie after movie is released centered on the pining and whining of unrequited love, or the ecstasy of ending up with the one that you want. They range from comical (the famed diner-orgasm scene from "When Harry Met Sally") to tragic (who can forget Ewan McGregor's sob at the end of "Moulin Rouge?")

Some are great, like the British made, wonderfully acted "Love Actually," and some are simply terrible, for example, Sandra Bullock's "Hope Floats." Cartoons aren't even safe. Some of Disney's most famous animated films are about lovers' attempts to overcome seemingly insurmountable obstacles, be it a mermaid in love with a human hunk, or a cinder-covered servant girl lusting after a prince.

But what have we gotten from all these movies, other than the obvious fact that falling for a prince is the way to go? Have all these love-based movies provided America with an unrealistic and potentially disappointing view of love?

It seems as though people base their expectations for falling in love on characters and relationships they see in movies. Films provide guidelines for how love should be – complete with magic and fireworks – for those of us who have never experienced this "true love."

As Ben Sharton, a junior at University of Massachusetts says, "I've never had any experience with real love, so all I have to base it on is stuff from the movies." The two most common and most sought after relationships seem to be a growing love between friends, and the meant-to-be couple who are passionate from the start.

The friends-to-lovers ideal seems the most popular, which points back to the classic example of "When Harry Met Sally." Sally and Harry first meet on a road trip from Chicago to New York City where they then part ways. The two met up again years later and become best friends, eventually falling in love. Alicia Beane, an undergrad at Southern New Hampshire University, says that her ideal relationship would mirror that of Harry and Sally because, "there is a past between them, and it seems like that is the way [love] should be."

The well known love at first sight isn't highly regarded. Amanda Lund, a sophomore at UMass says that kind of love "seems superficial;" more of a lust at first sight. However, Elana Williams, a University of Maryland political science major, believes that an "interest at first sight" is more than highly probable, as is the case in "The Notebook."

Allie and Noah, two young adults from vastly different social circles meet one fateful summer in the south. After an initial meeting in which Noah expresses his desire to be with an uninterested Allie, they quickly grow to love each other, and it is a love that lasts their whole lives. This was Williams' ideal relationship: "it's beautiful" she laughs. "It's not based purely on lust, like love at first sight is, and it's not idealistic, like some people might think. It's possible, and it happens."

When asked if movies have altered their views on love, the overwhelming answer was "yes." According to Beane, movie goers "wish what has happened in the movies will happen to [them] because they can make it perfect since real life isn't." The movies make love look so wonderful, it seems as though it is necessary to life.

"I've come to idealize it as the one thing that I want more than anything because of how movies make it so beautiful, especially old movies…it's made me want it more than riches or power or fame," said Beane.

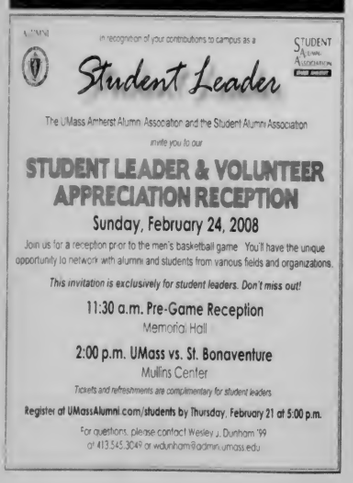
Not everyone is ,so easily affected, however. One of Lund's favorite movies is "Casablanca," but it isn't because of the love shared between Humphrey Bogart and Ingrid Bergman. It's because "he lets her go, he knows that Victor Laszlo is better for her. I don't really like movies with happy endings…they always end at the peak of happiness, and everything has to come to an end." When asked if she believed movies altered her view on love, Lund simply stated, "They're just movies."

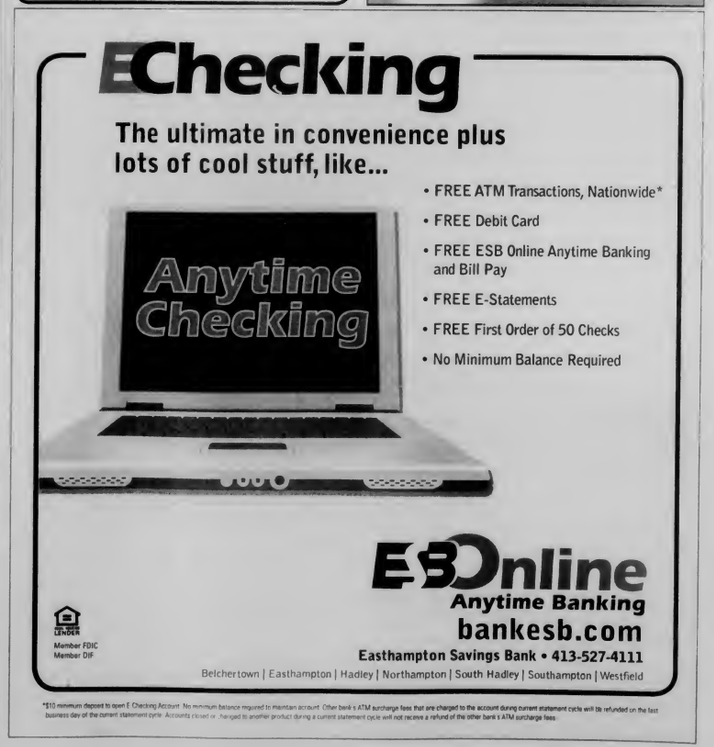
Believe in movie-love or not, it is everywhere, especially at this time of the year. Movie theaters are flooded with so-called "chick flicks" and other movies about love, like "27 Dresses," "P.S. I Love You," and "Definitely, Maybe," starring Ryan Reynolds in theaters today. Each movie has a different plot and different characters, but they all seem to leave us with the same idea.

As Williams says, "Movies make love seem like once you attain it, it's the one thing that makes you happy." But, love it or hate it, want it or need it, Hugh Grant says it best in "Love Actually" "Love actually is all around." We can't escape it, so we might as well embrace it.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcpherson@student.umass.edu

"Moulin Rouge" (above) and "The Notebook" (below) are two romantic movies in which the main characters fall passionately in love at first sight.





In "When Harry Met Sally," two New Yorkers meet, become best friends, and fall in love. They cultivate a strong relationship through a series of lights and funny moments, including a fake orgasm in a diner (pictured above.)

UMass takes on Huskies

Goaltender Paul Dainton stopped 23 of Northeastern's 24 shots in the teams' last meeting on Feb. 1. UMass lost that game, 1-0.

HOCKEY from page 12

play against BC last week. Whenever the Minutemen gained the BC zone, the Eagle penalty killers had little trouble winning possession of the puck and clearing it.

Cahoon and his coaching staff worked with the team all week to increase the success rate on the power play. For the season, the Minutemen convert at 17.1 percent efficiency but have struggled lately, converting on three of their last 24 chances.

A lack of consistent offensive production is partially responsible for UMass's 1-7-1 record in its last nine games. But Cahoon sees other things in his team that he believes are the true reasons for the decline.

"We're putting a lot of emphasis on the nuance of the game to make sure that there is more on their minds than not scoring," Cahoon said. "Because my contention is that if we go out and execute the little things then we'll start scoring.

"When you get into situations like we've been in, you start to look too much at the bigger picture and say 'we're not scoring and that's why we're not winning,' when that's not really the reason. It's definitely a problem, but it's a sidebar to the fact that we're not doing other things well. Therefore we're not creating the scoring opportunities we need to."

The Huskies rely on opponent mishaps to manufacture scoring chances. Any turnovers or sloppy puck play by UMass players could quickly result in goals. Junior forward Joe Vitale leads NU on offense with 27 points – nine goals, 18 assists – and is the type of player that can make a play on the defensive end and quickly turn it into a chance in the offensive zone.

Vitale is the Huskies' most dangerous offensive threat, but NU has a well-balanced offense with nine players recording at least 10 points this season.

The Minutemen are currently seven points behind the fourth-place Huskies in the Hockey East standings. With eight games remaining, the four points at stake this weekend are something the Minutemen can't afford to miss out on.

"The clock is ticking. We realize that we have limited time to right our wrongs. Because of that, there is a little more sense of urgency," Kostka said.

"I've just been making sure that all the guys are staying positive, staying on each other and holding everyone accountable for what we do because ultimately, we are the X-factor. And we're going to decide the route the rest of the season takes."

INJURY UPDATES

Freshman forward Chase Langeraap will miss the remainder of the season with an injury to his left leg. The exact problem is unknown, but he had a brace on his left knee as he worked on a stationary bike during the team's practice yesterday.

It also looks as though junior John Wessbecker will not play again this season. He hasn't played since a 0-0 tie against Cornell on Nov. 30. Wessbecker spent a lot of time paired with junior Topher Bevis for the Minutemen who missed last Saturday's loss to Boston College due to an undisclosed injury. Bevis's status for this weekend is uncertain.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com

Rams come to Mullins

M. HOOPS from page 12

23rd birthday.

Fordham's Bryant Dunston did record a double-double in that game, scoring a game-high 18 points to go along with 10 rebounds. Now a senior, Dunston has been putting up those numbers on a daily basis for Rams coach Dereck Whittenburg.

Dunston leads the team in rebounding (9.5 per game) and narrowly ranks second in scoring (14.9) behind fellow senior Marcus Stout. In fact, four Fordham starters are in their final season, and all four of them started in last year's meeting.

The one non-senior who usually starts for Fordham, sophomore guard Brenton Butler, played 31 minutes last year against UMass, scoring 14 points. Senior point guard Kevin Anderson is averaging just 2.4 points per game this season for the Rams, but provides a veteran stabilizing presence on offense.

Playing in all 20 games (18 starts), he has just 30 turnovers, compared to 60 assists. He's only taken 31 shots all season, despite playing over 27 minutes per game.

Fordham was defeated by Rhode Island, 65-63, in its last game on Feb. 10. The Minutemen beat URI three days prior to that in another close game (78-76) but fell to Temple, 80-70, also on Feb. 10.

Most of the recent struggles for UMass can be attributed to collective shooting slumps, particularly from sophomore guard Ricky Harris. In his last five games, Harris has averaged 12.2 points per game – his average prior to that was over 20 – on 29.5 percent shooting from the field. He was 7-of-39 from 3-point range during that span.

Harris and others still have the green light to keep shooting from UMass coach Travis Ford.

"Everyone knows on our team that I don't mind if you shoot," Ford said during his weekly teleconference. "We've got into a bad habit the last two weeks in taking more bad shots; we have to do a little bit better job of that.

"I am someone who doesn't gripe a lot about offense as much as I do defense, but our offense has put us in a bad situation lately."

NOTES

The first 1,000 fans that file into the Mullins Center for tonight's game between Fordham will receive t-shirts that read, "UMass loves ESPN" … UMass's road matchup with Rhode Island on Feb. 21 can also be seen on ESPN2. That game will start at 7 p.m. Counting tonight's game, the Minutemen have seven games remaining in the regular season, five of which are against teams below them in the standings.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

Gary Forbes was held to just 11 points, three rebounds and one assist in last year's meeting with Fordham, a 74-59 UMass win.

More rebounds needed from centers

Etienne Brower averages 6.7 rebounds per game.

REBOUNDING from page 12

sometimes the ball bounces my way."

However, the Minutemen have received only limited production from the center position. The two players who see the most time at center, senior Dante Milligan and junior Luke Bonner, have struggled to stay on the court with foul trouble at times.

In tonight's Atlantic 10 matchup with Fordham, the Minutemen will have their hands full with power forward Bryant Dunston. He leads the league in 9.5 boards per game.

Last season, Milligan played one of his better games against Fordham with an 11-rebound performance. However, Milligan played off of front-court mates Stephane Lasme and Rashaun Freeman in 2006-07 – two of the best rebounders the team has seen in recent years.

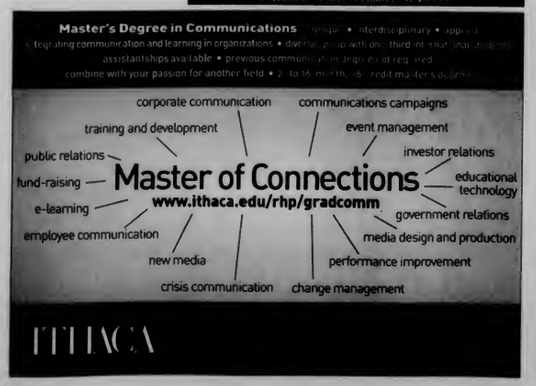
Meanwhile, Dunston scored 18 points and collected 10 rebounds in last year's UMass victory. It remains to be seen if Milligan can keep Dunston in check this time around, as the power forward will be his primary defensive responsibility.

In the Minutemen's victory over Rhode Island last week, Milligan and Bonner combined for 21 minutes and just four of the team's 54 total rebounds. In fact, UMass outrebounded the Rams by three behind strong production from forward.

Senior Etienne Brower and Forbes registered 17 and 13 boards in that contest, respectively. Their combined 19 offensive rebounds were the primary reason for the UMass offense keeping pace with the Rams while shooting under 19 percent from beyond the arc.

"We have a system where [the center, power and small forwards] crash the glass," Forbes said. "I just try to attack the glass and try to get offensive rebounds."

Unless rebound production increases from center, UMass will most likely need an unusually strong performance in order to outrebound the Rams.



As the center and forwards focus on recovering the ball after every shot attempt, Ford wants each player on the court thinking about this aspect of the game. The team has recently made a concerted effort to get the guards more involved in the collection of missed shots.

"It's something that Coach Ford started to emphasize a couple of weeks ago," freshman point guard Gary Correia said. "He told us that as guards we should come up with more long rebounds, especially off 3-pointers."

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu

Student Government Association Election

Nominations:
Open
Feb. 13th 12p.m.
Closing
Feb. 26th 6p.m.

Pick up Nomination Packets at the SGA office:

420 Student Union

Offices Available:
SGA President
University Student Truste
and
Area Government

GW's Allen outruns UM

W HOOPS from page 12

defend pretty well and then what I think happened was that run with [senior forward Whitney] Allen really put us back on our heels, and we never came out of it in the second half," Dacko said.

Allen was unstoppable. She scored 13 points by going a near perfect 6-for-7 from the field, 1-for-1 from the line. She also grabbed 11 rebounds, including six on the offensive end.

"Allen killed us. She was moving very well. They kept her down low in a high-low position. She was running block to block and she just beat us to the boards all the time," Dacko said. "Everything was going her way."

Six-foot-4 junior center Jessica Adair was also giving UMass trouble. She scored eight points and added five rebounds in 14 minutes of play in the first half. Her twin sister junior forward Jazmine Adair was quiet in the first half with two points, but woke up in the second half, scoring nine.

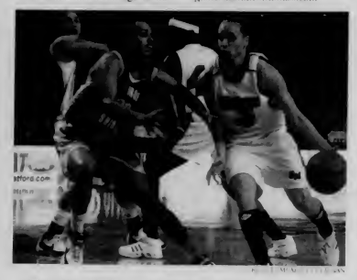
"Jess Adair is very good and her sister went in and they didn't miss a step with her," Dacko said.

The Colonials put the game out of reach early in the first minute of the second half. They went up 40-25 and never let UMass get within 10 points for the remainder of the game.

GW had the advantage of having a player that is 6-foot-4 and the ability to bring another player off the bench that is 6-foot-3. Other bench players contributed for GW, outscoring the Minutewomen's bench 25-12. With the size advantage Dacko tried to get the outside shooting game going by keeping Mosgrove on the floor. Mosgrove went 1-for-4 from 3-point range. The team overall struggled from the outside except for senior forward Kate Mills who went 3-for-3 from the outside. Mills finished with a game-high of 17 points.

"I thought we were going to come out strong in the second half, but they were able to get pretty much whatever they wanted on offense and they out-hustled us," Mills said.

GW outrebounded UMass 43-26 with 18 of the Colonial's rebounds coming on offense. The Colonials scored 18 second-chance points and had 24 points off turnovers, which was also the difference in the final score.



GAME NOTES

Sophomore point guard Kim Benton was unable to practice before the game, but tried to play through injury. She only logged six minutes, which left the Minutewomen once again with one point guard ... Junior point guard Sakera Young had a game-high seven assists, but had five turnovers.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

Freshman forward Teva Wright had eight points to go with a team-high 10 rebounds and a pair of steals last night against the Colonials. Wright's eight points tied for second to Kate Mills' 17. Pam Rosanio also scored eight points.

Sakera Young had four points and seven assists in last night's loss to George Washington, just the third home loss of the season.

Minutewomen not the same

GAMES from page 12

Mills said after the 69-45 loss to GW.

Wright has been a force on the boards this season, but has trouble staying in the game because she commits so many fouls. Wright is only a freshman, but she is built to play 30 minutes a game if she could stay out of foul trouble. Unfortunately, Dacko needs Wright to play beyond her experience to give the team some stability on the boards.

Against GW, she played like a senior, scoring eight points and grabbing 10 rebounds, but her freshman tendencies caught up to her as she had four turnovers and almost fouled out of the game with four personal fouls.

If UMass was able to put together two good halves then it might have a shot at contending with the better teams in the A-10. In the first half the Minutewomen only had six turnovers, but they were unable to rebound well. In the second half they rebounded better, but turned the ball over 12 times.

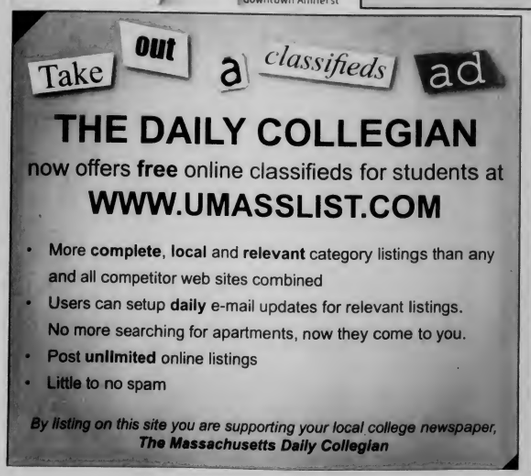
Dacko says that the team plays better in practice than they do in the games. However, she is puzzled why the practices do not translate during the games.

"If I figured that out I'd probably be making millions as a psychologist," Dacko said as the team was preparing for GW on Tuesday.

As the Minutewomen sit closer to the bottom of the A-10 with a 3-6 conference record, they are close to missing the conference tournament. They have five games remaining on their schedule with games against Dayton and Temple – both above .500 in the conference. The other three teams have a combined 10-17 conference record.

"It needs to click soon because we only have five more games left before the A-10 Tournament. If we want to make the A-10 tournament we need to turn this thing around," Mills said.

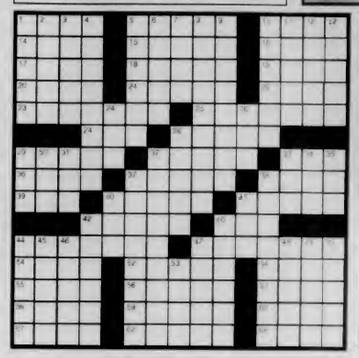
The Minutewomen will need to practice better position on the boards soon or have a fire light under them, otherwise they could find themselves out of the A-10 Tournament. Mills says that it doesn't take skill, and you do not have to take a talented player to get rebounds.



Hustle and determination, however, is a skill that the Minutewomen need to improve upon soon.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

Sudoku is love.



4				7	6			8
	6	8		2		5
			3			6	2
		9			8
	3						7
			1			9
	5	3			7
		6		1		7	8
1			5	9				6

ACROSS
1 Rowan and Rather
5 Ponselle and Parks
10 Roe source
14 Cuddly George Lucas creature
15 Writer Loos
16 Batter Boggs
17 "___ It's Cold Outside"
18 Soda-shop drinks
19 Toledo's lake
20 Turn soil
21 Web locations
22 Mimicked
23 Base thief
25 ___ oxide (anesthetic)
27 Actor Schreiber
28 Utopias
29 Searches for
32 Brittany port
33 Finn's twins?
36 Bando and Mineo
37 Soft hat
38 Historic periods
39 Jackie's second
40 Shadings
41 Took a nap
42 Palm leaf
43 Earl Grey, e.g.
44 Prone to uneven play
47 Pictures on plaster
51 One woodwind
52 Spicy Mexican dish
54 Writer Morrison
55 Putrid
56 Adjutants
57 Frosted
58 Pot starter
59 Frozen rain
60 Arithmetic, e.g.
61 Visionary
62 Uplift
63 Mail event

DOWN
1 Money owed
2 Look forward to
3 Honorable
4 Flying surgeons
5 Formal A.G.
Clark
6 Disc jockey's cue
7 Riverbed deposit
8 Audience
9 Most prone to be impudent
10 Takes an oath
11 Cisco's brother
12 Arrivederci, Andre
13 Monopoly game cards
24 ___ Alamos, NM
26 Explosive letters
28 Miscalculated
29 Retirement grp.
30 Serving of corn
31 Inventor Whitney
32 English sketch comic
33 Before, poetically
34 Siesta
35 Machine yet
37 Library feature
38 Rubber bands
40 Chorus syllable
41 Bishopric
42 Tentative foray
43 Wistful
44 Chesterfields
45 Rip-eye cousin
46 Course taken
47 Collection of warships
48 Moderate brown
49 Shaquille of the NBA
50 Move along laterally
53 Concept

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Submit your comics!
comics@dailycollegian.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"The best love is the kind that awakens the soul and makes us reach for more, that plants a fire in our hearts and brings peace to our minds, and that's what you've given me. That's what I hope to give to you forever."

-Ryan Gosling in "The Notebook"

CORNY ON THE COB By John Costello and Amanda Grafstein

DEXREX By Daniel Lucey

BLISS By Harry Bliss

"Now remember. My dad's obsessed with the weather and will hit on you, and my mother thinks you're a gold digger."

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Today is a day for Barry White and Marvin Gaye, not techno. Actually, no day is a day for techno.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Abstain from romatic gestures of all kinds today on the grounds that such actions would be contrived and unoriginal.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You never run with the crowd because you are much slower than them. But hey, at least you're an individual.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Grunt it out!

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Technically speaking, Dungeons and Dragons do not qualify as a significant other.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Do a soulful impression of Ray Charles tonight when it matters most.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
It's never a bad idea to shoot for a threesome. Being a cameraman can be fun.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Bob Barker is the object of your desire While this disgusts many, it warms your heart and that's all that matters.

libra Sept 23-Oct. 22
That thing you're feeling, that's called an "emotion." Just go with it.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Spice things up by using hot sauce as lube. Although this requires a high pain threshold, it will ultimately be worth it

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Next year buddy, next year...

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You're cute as a button but more dangerous than a zipper on a pair of men's pants.

HAPPY VALENTINE'S DAY...

AND FOR THOSE OF YOU WHO ARE SAD AND LONELY AND CHOOSE TO IGNORE THIS HOLIDAY, HAPPY FEBRUARY 14.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT. FOR RENT

Center of Town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

2 Bedroom apts. in Sunderland. HEAT, HOT WATER, CABLE, and INTERNET INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-665-3856

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab.linguist.umass.edu 545-6837 Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summer-time openings for Land Sports, Waterfront(small crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, HB Riding, Arts&Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today toll free at 1-888-684-2267 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com

EMPLOYMENT

THE GREATEST SUMMER OF YOUR LIFE CAMP PONTIAC Is coming to UMASS! Located in NY State Camp Pontiac, a premier co-ed overnight camp in New York, is looking for fun, enthusiastic and mature individuals who can teach and assist in all areas of athletics, aquatics, the arts, or as a general bunk counselor. Interviews will be held on Thursday, Feb. 21st 9:00AM-11:30AM Campus Center/Student Union Complex-Room 901. Please email: stefanie@camppontiac.com or call Stefanie at 516-626-7668 to set up an interview.

Best Summer Jobs for Amherst Area College Students- Jobs@oc101.com Description: Market Manager. $1400 Base+ potential to earn $8,000. Work hard and get rewarded with free food, ipods, flat screen Tvs, and a company cruise. Work full time over the summer (9:30-6pm Mon-Fri). Must be present in the Amherst area throughout the whole summer. Interested Candidates send cover letter and resume to Jobs@oc101.com

Need a job? At Staffing Now we help students find local clerical & accounting jobs. PT & FT positions available at www.staffingnow.com & www.accountingnow.com Let us help you find a job - meet with a recruiter Feb. 27th at ISOM 9 a.m. or contact us 413-529-7100 to learn more.

UMass Amherst is in search of new tour guides and/or orientation counselors. See us in the Campus Center concourse this week to pick up an application. Applications are also available at the Visitor's Center and at www.umass.edu/new-student/student-jobs/counselor. The application deadline is February 15, 2008. Apply Now.

ROOM FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 6 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage 1.5 mi to campus! $2,925+ www.lincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Studio, 1,2,3,4 Bedrooms Available. Going Fast. Still Guaranteeing For Fall Semester. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

SERVICES

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing STD screening & treatment GYN & breast exams Always Confidential. Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

WHAT ARE YOU DOING FOR SPRING BREAK? Want a cooler Spring Break than the typical Cancun? Travel to Amsterdam Paris, Italy, or Prague and get a FREE Ipod Shuffle and $100 off! Contact your Contiki Umass Reps at pbordona@student.umass.edu or cromano@student.umass.edu or go to the STA Office for more info! Be a traveler not a tourist!!!

Spring Break 08 Hot Deals Hot Destinations Hot Parties Ask about Group Deals and FREE TRIPS 1-800-426-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Surrounded

Minutewomen overrun by No. 13 GW

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's basketball team played one of its strongest opponents all season in No. 14/13 George Washington. GW proved to be better in all facets of the game, especially on the rebounding end as UMass lost 69-45.

GW came into the game ranked No. 8 in rebounding margin at plus-1.9, while the Minutewomen were ranked right behind them. Tonight the Colonials looked like the top rebounding team in the country. In the first half UMass was outrebounded, 25-11. The game, however, was still within reach for UMass, trailing 36-25 at the half.

GW	69
UMass	45

"We had an opportunity to come close at the half to give our kids some confidence in the second half, but [GW] didn't lose anything by subbing and we just couldn't get it going," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said.

The team admittedly came out with too much energy to start the game. The Colonials started the game on a 10-1 run before junior forward Stefanie Gerardot knocked down a jumper to give UMass its first field goal with 15:03 left in the first half.

"I think we came out with a great deal of energy, almost too high," Dacko said. "Every time [senior forward] Whitney [McDonald] got the ball she bobbled it and things like that, and so we couldn't settle down."

They eventually did settle down almost five minutes later when freshman guard Cerie Mosgrove hit a three pointer to make it a one-point game at 14-13, midway through the first half.

"We were able to score and

See W. HOOPS on page 10

KEITH MISKE/COLLEGIAN

Senior forward Kate Mills led the Minutewomen with a game-high 17 points and added six rebounds in the loss to George Washington. She was the only UMass player to score in double-digits.

UM a step back from last season

The Massachusetts women's basketball team cannot put together a quality half of basketball. The Minutewomen can score, they can play defense, but the little mistakes are taking its toll on their season.

Last year the Minutewomen were one of the better teams in the Atlantic 10 with a 17-13 record. Usually when a team returns four of the five starters from the previous season they should come close to that level or exceed it.

Steve Games

"After having a pretty good year last year with 17 wins you think you're going to be much better this year and you can make up for the loss of Tamara Tatham. We haven't done that yet," said UMass coach Marnie Dacko.

Last season as a senior, Tatham averaged 12 points and nine rebounds per game. This season the Minutewomen have tried to make up for Tatham's production with senior forward Whitney McDonald and freshman forward Teya Wright.

The mistakes that really hurt the Minutewomen are the lack of production on rebounding and turnovers. There have been multiple games where UMass has turned the ball over more than 20 times and in each of those games they have lost to teams they could have beaten easily.

When the Minutewomen turn the ball over, it can turn into a six-point swing. The three points they could have had can become three points their opponents could get.

Dacko wants to establish this team as an inside scoring power, but to do that, they must rebound the ball better. On most nights the Minutewomen have scored more points in the paint than the opponent, but to make up for their poor outside shooting they need to get more rebounds on the offensive glass.

In a 69-45 loss to George Washington last night, UMass did a better job on the offensive end, grabbing 11 boards, but continued to shoot poorly from the outside, going 5-for-17. The problem last night wasn't the offensive rebounding, but the defensive rebounding. GW had 18 offensive rebounds and Dacko will not make the excuse that the Colonials had bigger players.

"We've always struggled to rebound," Dacko said. "It is positioning, and it's being hungry, and it's going to the boards. Kate [Mills] is somebody I've said all year that, we need to get more rebounding out of her."

"They out-hustled us, I think they [out]rebounded us 40-20 and that's just inexcusable, especially if we want to have any chance to win against a Top-20 team like GW, you can't make stupid mistakes like that,"

See GAMES on page 10

UMass hosts Fordham tonight

Rams come to Mullins Center, game to air on ESPN2 at 9 p.m.

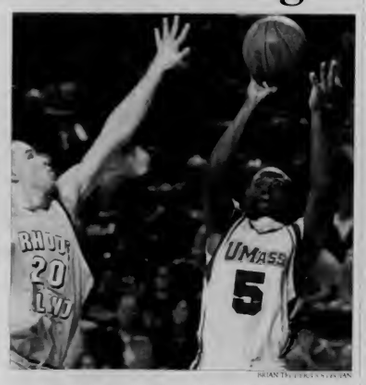
BY ELI ROSENWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's basketball team believes it deserves to make the NCAA Tournament in March.

UMass gets its chance to prove it tonight in front of a large audience.

The Atlantic 10 matchup with Fordham will tip-off at the Mullins Center at 9 p.m. and will air on ESPN2.

The struggling Minutemen (15-8, 4-5 A-10) have alternated wins and losses in their last five games, and can't afford to lose another to a Fordham team that has dropped four straight and eight of its last nine.



"It's a big game. It's on ESPN2, nationally televised, so we shouldn't have any problem getting up for it especially after a loss," backup point guard Gary Correia said yesterday before practice.

UMass has dropped games against seemingly lesser opponents after big wins this season, but this matchup with the Rams (8-12, 2-6 A-10) follows a loss against Temple on Sunday. The Minutemen are currently in a four-way tie for eighth place in the conference. Fordham is just a few spots up from the bottom, ranking 12th in the A-10.

These teams met once last year, with UMass prevailing, 74-59, on Fordham's home floor ending a string of 10 games between the schools in which the home team won. The Minutemen lead the all-time series, 22-10.

UMass's Danie Milligan had one of his best games in that meeting last season, narrowly missing a double-double with nine points and 11 rebounds off the bench on his

See M. HOOPS on page 9

KEITH MISKE/COLLEGIAN

Ricky Harris has struggled shooting recently, averaging 12.2 points per game in the last five. He averaged over 20 prior to that.

Shots, boards both essential

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Entering the season, the Massachusetts men's basketball team knew that the key to their season would be to take as many shots as possible. UMass coach Travis Ford reasoned that as long as his players took enough quality attempts per game, his team would score enough points to win many of its games.

But in order to maximize possessions, you need to be a good rebounding team. At times this season, the Minutemen have struggled on the glass. Statistically, the Maroon and White are the worst rebound defending team in the conference, surrendering an average of 41 boards per game.

UMass ranks third in the A-10 in rebounding offense to create a negative rebounding differential of 2.7 per game. Yet the rebounding statistic is not the sole indicator of the team's success.

For example, the Minutemen outrebounded Temple in a loss Sunday, but defeated Boston College back in December despite losing the rebounding battle by four.

Senior forward Gary Forbes, the team's leader in the category, has been the Minutemen's most consistent rebounder.

Yet Forbes spends most of his time on defense guarding driving lanes and near the perimeter, and not necessarily in the paint. Therefore, he makes the extra effort on occasion to grab rebounds that would otherwise be out of his reach.

"Coach Ford has high expectations for me, but I don't see it as pressure," Forbes said. "We have a few big guys who can rebound, but

See REBOUNDING on page 9

Mass Attack tries to get scoring on track against Northeastern

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When Massachusetts hockey coach Don Cahoon looks at Northeastern, it's almost as if he is looking into a mirror.

The Huskies (13-10-3, 10-7-2 Hockey East), UMass's opponents for a home-and-home series this weekend, play a similar style to the Minutemen (10-10-6, 5-9-5 Hockey East), dedicated to defensive excellence and timely, efficient offense. Both the NU forwards and their counterparts in maroon and white have enormous responsibilities on both ends of the ice.

"They are a lot like we are," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "They've got some players that are not so unlike our top people. Obviously [sophomore Brad Thiessen] is a real good goaltender and a solid guy. And they're playing with a swagger of sorts. [Greg Cronin] is a real good coach, and I think he's instilled a lot of determination and feistiness into his team."

The last time these two teams met – a 1-0 NU win on Feb. 1 – illustrated the demand of both coaches for responsible attacking and flawless defensive execution. The Huskies held UMass to 22 shots on goal, and managed 24 themselves. A power-play goal from Randy Guzior early in the second period and nine third-period saves from Thiessen proved the difference for the Huskies.

NU also did a good job on the penalty kill, holding UMass scoreless on its six attempts. Overall, however, the Huskies are not particularly remarkable when killing penalties – they are tied with Boston College for fifth in Hockey East at 84.1 percent.

"They played hard, but we can obviously execute better [on the power play]," senior captain Mike Kostka said. "I don't think our zone entry was too good and actually getting possession of the puck. That needs to be better than it was last week."

UMass was 0-for-4 on the power

See HOCKEY on page 9

BRIAN TEUTSCH/COLLEGIAN

James Marcou leads the Minutemen with 25 points on eight goals and 17 assists, but has been held without a point in six of the last eight games.

COLLEGIAN
WEEKEND EDITION

FRI H:46 | SAT H:25 | SUN H:38 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 2008

Homelessness in the Valley

BY EDEN UNVER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Homelessness may seem like an issue affecting only major cities and urban areas, but anyone walking the streets of the Five College area can see it is a much more widespread problem.

Massachusetts is one of the few states with a law requiring the numbers of people staying in homeless shelters be monitored, according to a USA TODAY article. There were more families in homeless shelters in 2007 than any previous year since 1983, when the Commonwealth started to track these numbers, the article said.

See HOMELESS on page 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 85

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COPIES EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marnea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenawike
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
ASST. PHOTO EDITOR Brian Tedder
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Laid Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS' CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUES. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. Sullivan

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Write for News!

news@daily collegian.com

No more backpacks in the DC

Berkshire applies rule for late night

By Josh Walovitch
Collegian Staff

Late Night at the Berkshire Dining Common has been a success since the Fall 2006. There have been a few minor problems since its creation pertaining to stolen food, plates and utensils. More recently, however, a more serious problem has occurred.

Students have used their backpacks to sneak alcohol into the Berkshire DC. Employees have found empty beer cans rotating around the tray conveyor, in trash cans and under tables.

Assistant Manager Ryan Pipczynski, along with the Berkshire DC staff have implemented a new rule making it mandatory to leave bags outside the eating quarters of the DC starting at 9:30 p.m.

This problem was apparent to Berkshire DC staff members last semester but they felt it would be much less of a shake-up if the new rule was implemented at the beginning of this semester.

"I am aware of the culture of Southwest and college in general and by no means am I trying to infringe on anyone's civil rights; I am just taking the proper steps so that the DC is safe at night," Pipczynski said.

"People should be able to take their bags anywhere they want so they can keep an eye on their personal belongings," said University of Massachusetts senior Tabari Abdallaa.

Pipczynski is aware of the concerns students have about leaving their valuables unattended and has created a new position, a bag watcher, to solve this issue.

"A few kids have come in with valuables and didn't want to lock them up but other than that people get used to it, we have had this rule for a couple weeks now," said new bag watcher David Anderson.

KEITH HOFFLING/COLLEGIAN

Backpacks must be left outside the eating quarters at the Berkshire Dining Commons after 9:30 p.m. as a result of a new security measure in the Southwest Residential Area.

Since the new rule has been implemented, Anderson has said there has not been any problem with missing bags.

Many students are frustrated with the new policy and some think it could possibly be dangerous.

"I went to a public high school and it was mandatory that if we saw an unattended bag we had to notify administration because there could be a bomb or something harmful inside of it; this new rule could potentially be dangerous," said freshman Sarah Davis.

Pipczynski hopes that students will understand why this rule has been applied and that in the future they will learn not to bring their bags to Late Night.

"If you live in Southwest, the most you will need when going to Late Night is your UCard, cell phone and coat," said Pipczynski. "However we do provide lockers at the DC, so if someone needs to bring their bag with them, they have the option to lock it up."

"I am annoyed with this new rule because I have stuff I need to work on," senior Brian Lindsey commented as he was denied bringing in his school bag to Late Night.

Late Night has been on the chopping block in the past and Pipczynski said if this issue had not been addressed Late Night could have been canceled.

Originally, Berkshire's Late Night was meant to occur on a small scale and take in around only 50-200 students per night with a limited amount of food and seating available. Eventually, it grew into a favorite for UMass students and currently pulls in over 1,000 students a night with a record of over 1,400.

Josh Walovitch can be reached at jwalovit@student.umass.edu.

New registrar appointed at UMass

By Elizabeth Hawley
Collegian Staff

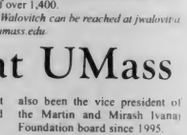
The University of Massachusetts has appointed a new registrar, set to begin Tuesday, Feb. 19.

After a successful national search, John Lenzi will succeed former registrar, Cecelia J. Trachy, who retired last year. Deputy Provost John Cunningham assumed the responsibilities while a committee searched for Trachy's replacement.

The committee conducted a national search before appointing Lenzi, who comes to UMass from Columbia University in New York. Provost and Senior Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Charlena Seymour announced the decision.

In a statement to the UMass News Office, Seymour said "John Lenzi brings decades of experience and strong skills to this key administrative post here at UMass-Amherst. We look forward to having him join the University community."

"I am very excited about my appointment," Lenzi said. "The registrar position at UMass-Amherst represents a unique opportunity for relationship building with students, faculty and administrators to help integrate their goals and make the best of their UMass-Amherst experience."



"We want to bring a strong, qualified candidate," said Ed Blaguszewski, director of the Office of News and Information at the University, describing Lenzi as "someone who rose to the top in a national search."

"The registrar has a variety of responsibilities," Blaguszewski said. The registrar traditionally handles scheduling, maintains student records, issues grade reports and mails out official publications. He said he thought Lenzi's background in IT would be helpful as registrar.

Lenzi worked as the chief academic records officer and University registrar at Columbia from 2001 to 2006. Since 2006 he has served as the assistant vice president in the IT division of the university. Lenzi started at Columbia in 1987. He has previously worked as the associate director in administrative information systems and as the manager of computer operations. He has a bachelor's degree in anthropology from Columbia and a master's in developmental psychology from the Teacher's College at Columbia.

In addition to his work at Columbia, Lenzi was a member of Association of American Universities registrar's group from 2004 to 2006. He worked as an adjunct instructor at Hunter College for two years. He has also been the vice president of the Martin and Mirash Ivana Foundation board since 1995.

Elizabeth Hawley can be reached at ehawley@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY OF MARTIN AND MIRASH IVANA FOUNDATION

John Lenzi will start as UMass registrar next Tuesday.

University hosts annual career fairs

By Amara Anosike
Collegian Correspondent

Career fairs were held in the Campus Center auditorium this week at the University of Massachusetts.

The annual campus-wide fairs were a success despite the inclement winter weather.

The auditorium was packed with companies ranging from Macy's to the Peace Corps and even local businesses – all of which were focused on finding recruits to add to their employee rosters.

"It's great being able to come back and recruit for executive leadership positions and internship positions as well," said Liz Diggin, an alumna of UMass and campus recruiter for Target. "We have already got interviews scheduled; this career fair has been a success."

The fair represented all areas of study with a wide range of opportunities. Associate director of career services and organizer of the fair, Ginger Goldsbury said "This career fair is for employers who are interested in students who are about to graduate, and also for students to educate themselves about careers that they may otherwise have never heard of."

Just as the career fair came to a close, the Asian, Latino/a, African American and Native American (ALANA) career fair began at 5 p.m.

"The ALANA career fair is designed to give students of color exposure to companies that are interested in bringing diversity to the workplace," said Tommy Joyner of the ALANA career fair committee.

A day later, the Summer Co-op Internship Opportunities Fair also took place in the Campus Center auditorium. This fair, held yesterday, focused exclusively on internship opportunities - some offering up to 15 credits toward graduation.

Students gathered in the Campus Center auditorium this week for three career fairs, held at a great time for students about to graduate this May. Opportunities for students of all majors were available.

"This fair has been very successful, the auditorium has been packed. Still though, there are not enough students taking advantage of what this school has to offer. Graduating without experience is crazy," said Jeff Silver, the assistant director of Career Services.

All three fairs are annual and have been for over 20 years. Every Monday and Thursday at 3 p.m. introductory workshops are held in Goodell 508, in which students will be briefed on different career and internship opportunities. There is also the option to take advantage of a walk-in advising session with a career services associate from noon-4p.m. in Goodell 511.

Amara Anosike can be reached at anosik@student.umass.edu.

Eating disorders plague colleges, 40 percent affected

By Allie Moss
Collegian Correspondent

Although having a distorted body image is not uncommon among men and women of all ages, according to the MORE to ME campaign movement, 40 percent of college-aged women nationwide reported having an eating disorder.

Inspired by issues plaguing the female community, this campaign uses an online petition to support the funding of body image programs in schools.

"One goal of MORE to ME is to try and enforce the message into the minds of men and women that there is more to them than their body, such as personal attributes and self-image," said project manager Sarah Silverman.

"We want to build a positive body image into the education of young women," Silverman said. "The goal is two-fold: Not only is it designed to bring general awareness, but also to bring the issue to the forefront of the minds of influential people who are making decisions that impact children's future and perceptions."

Although college students represent a large number of people affected by eating disorders, Silverman said MORE to ME is also aimed at teens and pre-teens.

"Dieting to lose weight and fear of fatness are now common in girls as young as nine-year-olds and [these feelings] escalate dramatically during adolescence," she said.

"I feel as if the standard goal weight decreases every year," said University of Massachusetts freshman Marley Frankel.

"More often than not, people have trouble recognizing and accepting the prevalence of eating disorders because it does not directly touch their lives; yet it affects one half percent to one percent of the population of the University of Massachusetts," said Dr. Jennifer Lexington, a clinical psychologist at University Health Services.

"Pressures from the media and society have added to the fact that not only women, but men as well are constantly obsessing over their physique and forgetting how to appreciate their individual value. However, the problem lies within the real world and in the cyber world of Facebook as well," said UMass freshman Jackie Trombley.

"Tons of girls constantly 'un-tag' pictures [on Facebook] because they think they look fat. It's an obsession," said junior Caroline Moss.

"College is a microscope for young girls," said Trombley. "It is important to grab the attention of college students who have the power to take part in programs like these and try their best to make a difference."

Having a distorted body image may seem very prevalent among women, yet freshman Danny Breeling feels that "girls seem to hide the disorder, so it's hard for people to know it's such a big issue."

"I hope people can be comfortable in their own skin so they can realize that it does not matter if everything isn't perfect, and that is what makes us human in the first place," Breeling said.

COURTESY YOUNGANDHEALTHY.CA

One half to one percent students at the University of Massachusetts are affected by eating disorders.

FEATURES

Unmasking the art of mass manipulation

Student-run classes become reality while addressing campus issues

By Cara Grannemann
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When junior Steve Hoeschele found out there was no class on propaganda offered this spring, he decided to teach his own.

Like Hoeschele, several students at the University of Massachusetts have taken the reins from professors and decided to create their own classes, syllabi and assignments through programs in both the anthropology and Social Thought and Political Economy (STPEC) departments.

According to Hoeschele, his class will critique the ways in which we receive information through propaganda. The class also gives a broader meaning to the word "propaganda."

"Some say our education is a form of 'pre-propaganda' that paves the way for us to accept direct orders in life," he said.

According to Hoeschele, creating his propaganda class was a simple but work-intensive process.

"I drafted a syllabus and made a pitch to the STPEC program. STPEC is a major that offers an array of learning opportunities and places a great value on critical thinking skills, so they gave me the go-ahead," said Hoeschele, who worked about six hours a day over winter break preparing for the class.

"STPEC gave me full academic license. There's a high level of trust and respect that I execute this academic pursuit responsibly," said Hoeschele.

The two-credit pass/fail class will include media of pop culture, war propaganda and an assignment of creating one's own propaganda.

"Many classes will include some kind of medium which we'll analyze, whether it's a Bob Marley song, WWII posters, a vegan brochure, or a 1960s anti-drug film," he said.

Like Hoeschele's class in the STPEC major, the Grassroots Community Development (GCD) program offers student-run classes through the anthropology department.

Amy Kent and Molly Coon are two of the six peer-facilitators for the GCD program. Facilitators lead class discussions, reading-based activities and group presentations.

According to Coon, the GCD class materials prepare students to create community change with limited resources. Materials include books and packets detailing the specific histories of community organizations, ethnographies, and essays.

"All address issues of structural inequality, although many focus most strongly on race and class," she said.

According to both Kent and Hoeschele, student-run classes provide an alternative approach to learning than the one traditionally seen at large universities, and thus pose obstacles for the administration.

"I think they [GCD supervisors] face some challenges because GCD is a non-traditional classroom, and so we have to work hard to demonstrate that good learning is going on [in order] to get funding," said Kent.

I think if people are skeptical of being 'taught' by a student, it's because the banking model of education, where facts are handed down from an authority for us to memorize, has taught them [skeptics] that their own experience and self knowledge is irrelevant," she said.

According to Hoeschele, student-taught classes can fill the gaps left by traditional classes taught by professors.

"Courses should be student-run," he said. "We're the customers here. We ought to speak up when the product is defective... push your professors and other authority figures when they're not giving you what you paid for."

Student-run classes not only provide opportunities for new courses, but according to Kent, they also offer a unique peer experience.

"This program is beneficial to UMass because it is a unique opportunity for students to find meaningful community in the classroom, to talk honestly about serious social issues, to take responsibility for their own learning, to connect theory to experience and to be empowered in the classroom rather than intimidated, bored, or both," she said.

According to Hoeschele, running his own class not only offers an opportunity to teach UMass students about propaganda, but will also be good preparation for his graduate plans.

"I want a teaching experience," he said. "Having taught a course from scratch will surely look better to grad schools than taking a regular independent study."

Cara Grannemann can be reached at cgrannem@student.umass.edu.

BRIAN FEDERICK/COLLEGIAN

University of Massachusetts junior Steve Hoeschele sits in front of his laptop while lecturing his class on different propaganda tactics.

Groups aim to support the area's growing homeless population

Homeless from page 1

"Data from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development suggests there about 750,000 homeless in the nation on any given night, with about 40 percent of those members of homeless families, said Philip Mangano, director of the U.S. Interagency Council on Homelessness," the article reported.

According to the Horizons for Homeless Children Web site, there are at least 96,000 homeless children in Massachusetts as of July 2007. That data provides only information on the amount of homeless children and does not include the amount of homeless adults in Massachusetts.

Although the amount of homeless people in Massachusetts is steadily increasing, there are several places in the Five College area that are combating this growing problem.

The Amherst Survival Center provides food, clothing and other services to homeless people in the Amherst area.

"We serve a nutritious lunch to anyone who comes in ... In addition, each day we're open we distribute hundreds of loaves of bread, fresh vegetables and fruit as well as cookies and pies donated daily from area markets," said Amherst Survival Center Program Director Tracey Levy.

The Center also has a food pantry that income eligible residents of over 12 towns in the region can obtain a monthly food box filled with canned veggies, fruit, meat, soup, pasta, rice, as well as frozen and refrigerated dairy and meats, Levy said.

In addition to supplying food in various ways, the Center also has a free store where people in need can come in and, each day, take a bag of clothes, household items, shoes, books or other necessities.

Services aimed at helping people in need are another aspect of the Amherst Survival Center.

"We have several in-house services at the Survival Center," said Levy. "A social worker works specifically with the homeless population on Thursdays. A case manager comes in once a week to sign up people for health insurance, a secretary from the Salvation Army comes in weekly to write vouchers for people needing financial assistance with particular needs, we have a volunteer hair stylist who has given people haircuts, and we regularly refer people to other services when needed."

Levy also noted that the Center plans to open a free clinic that will be staffed by two physicians and open for a few hours on Mondays and Tuesdays.

Services for the homeless are something that the Horizons for Homeless Children organization knows a lot about, as Colette O'Neill, the communications specialist at the organization said.

"Playspace Programs collaborate with residents and staff of family shelters to design and build age-appropriate, 'kid-friendly' spaces," said O'Neill. "These areas are equipped with libraries, building blocks, art supplies and more to challenge children physically and creatively and allow them to have a place to play and use their imaginations."

According to O'Neill, the organization also has three Community Children's Centers that have a total of 175 preschool children, aged 2 months to 6 years old enrolled full time. While the children are in the classroom, "parents have access to on-site counseling, education, job training, and parenting workshops so they are able to work toward social and economic self-sufficiency," O'Neill said.

The organization also takes on a statewide approach to the issue of homelessness by raising awareness about public policy surrounding this problem.

"Our Policy and Advocacy initiative is designed to impact the political process to effect policy changes so this most vulnerable population has access to the services they need to move to self-sufficiency and to prevent homelessness whenever possible," O'Neill said.

While O'Neill encourages political action, Levy encourages members of the community to come to the Survival Center to volunteer or simply assist in any way possible, noting consumers at the Center often contribute.

According to Levy, "consumers are encouraged to participate and take leadership in developing programs."

The Center also has weekly entertainment nights and monthly outings, which many regular consumers participate in, Levy said.

Although there are many other services for the homeless in the Five College area, there is a lack of temporary or permanent housing for currently homeless single people to utilize.

"At this time, there are no shelters or transitional housing for single people in Amherst – and limited housing options for people anywhere in Hampshire County," Levy said.

Jesse's House is currently the only shelter offering emergency housing for families in Hampshire County, according to the program's Web site. It is located in Amherst and is a program of the Center for Human Development.

Eden Univer can be reached at univer@student.umass.edu.

MICHAEL PHILLIS/COLLEGIAN

Above, a homeless man enjoys a meal across from two volunteers. Left a man relaxes in a lounge area at a Northampton shelter.

DON'T MAKE YOUR GIRLFRIEND MAD AT YOU, WRITE FOR FEATURES.

EDITORIAL OPINION

Brits spying on citizens

Hannah Nelson

Have you ever typed something into instant messenger to a friend on the other side of the world only to pause before sending with the lurking thought of a third party reading it?

OK, well maybe the Patriot Act hasn't made the majority of people that paranoid, but think about how many times a day you go in and out of a residence hall. According to UMass's 2007 annual security report, 328 of the 474 security cameras on campus are located in residence halls.

If that gives you "Big Brother" chills, it's not quite as bad as the infamous claim that the London dweller is caught on some form of security or surveillance camera about 300 times in their everyday ventures. The numbers beg the question, what is too much and what is too little?

British Parliament is facing a new issue of security under the heading of terrorism control. Current laws allow the use of transcripts and recordings that come from bugged vehicles and buildings (including personal residences) to be used in court as evidence.

But it does not cover the use of phone conversations, text messages, e-mail, faxes, or letters, but that could soon change. The fact that these methods are unlawful is surprising considering that Britain has top surveillance technologies and capabilities.

It is however relatively easy to get judge approval for a wiretap or bugging compared to the rest of the world. Part of a plan being proposed by Prime Minister Gordon Brown would diminish the amount, if any, approval that would be needed before allowing such surveillance. It would also broaden the methods by which bugs may be used.

All potential wire tapping would naturally go into effect under the heading of terrorism control.

Much of the hold up until this point has been due to the fear of terrorist techniques being released in court due to copycats. And the fear that others would use the information to avoid being caught.

If Parliament is worried about criminal evasion techniques, then they probably shouldn't be talking about recording devices hidden in prison visiting rooms. It is the intelligence and security agencies which are worried that their methods will be exposed and endanger future cases.

Despite the approval of some civil liberties groups, there are still those who feel like their individual rights are being sent to the guillotine. The bill in its entirety could affect more than just terrorism suspects.

Illegal downloader's could soon be facing lives void of internet connections as punishment as a result of the updated surveillance guidelines. That's right, a life cut off from internet access all because authorities were able to better monitor your downloading and file sharing activities.

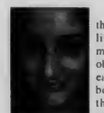
In light of Britain's potential policy change, Bush has announced that he too is looking for a more permanent wiretap bill in order to give telecommunication companies immunity.

All potential wire tapping would naturally go into effect under the heading of terrorism control. In the US, the Patriot Act was born in the name of anti-terrorism, and has snowballed into a privacy debate fiasco. The British counterpart has the same potential.

It certainly seems that Britain isn't trying to win any popularity contests. According to watchdog, Privacy International, Britain's citizens have the least amount of privacy when compared to all other European countries. But they can at least be comforted by the fact that China and Russia still know their citizens better.

The proposal for this tentative bill is following the revelation that Muslim Parliament member, Sadiq Khan, was being bugged by the London police on a visit to prison.

Khan spoke with a man being charged with terrorism who was going to be sent to the U.S. The suspect in question is wanted in the U.S. because of a website he has registered here that allegedly did fundraising for such organizations as the Taliban.



The oddest part of that case is that Khan has served as chairman for Liberty, a human rights group, in the past. Liberty is against the new proposal, citing government loss of personal information and outdated data protection laws as reasoning.

Khan is also a member of the Labour party, the same as Brown, and has been revered for his promise of a long political career. There are assumptions to be made as to why Khan in particular was singled out. Disapproval is coming from all sides at Brown, including from those in his own party.

The opposition in Parliament is hardly taking Brown's plan lightly either, and fully intends to put up a fight. This is unlike the effortless passing of the Patriot Act in the U.S. a mere 45 days after 9/11. Fear is a powerful motivator.

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu.

Real world, real estate

Leigh Greaney

It seems like all the good things in life are so much more difficult to obtain than the easy ones. Maybe because the more that goes into something, the more appealing it becomes.

Maybe it's because we all want what we can't have. But when all you want is to get out of the dorms and into your own humble abode, why does it seem like pulling teeth?

Burden number one lies in the hands of UMass. Whoever came up with the idea to make it mandatory to live on campus until a certain number of credits have been obtained must be unaware of the strife it causes to those living inside of the dorm walls.

Spending forty-five units in residency isn't exactly a death sentence. At the same time, that's two years of your life.

Once you've made it past the finish line of your forty – five credit triathlon, you have a few choices. You could upgrade your living situation and move to the North Apartments, or if you're feeling crazy, you could get yourself an apartment somewhere off campus.

Maybe if you live close enough, you can move back into your house. If you don't live close enough and you're feeling especially fanatical, you can get a house of your own.

There comes a time when you have to pick your poison. You can continue living in the dorms where you hand your freedom over to the residence staff on a silver platter.

You can continue to use the public bathrooms which may or may not be located a football field away from your room. You can continue to battle quiet hours. You can live off dining hall food until 9 p.m. every night and then scrounge for whatever fits into your baby sized refrigerator.

If that doesn't sound like a fate you can stand, you could always get an apartment. That's when you meet the animal known as the 12-month lease. This binding beast reels you in for a year of monthly rent and utilities whether you like it or not.

You can have your own room, your own kitchen, your own bathroom, and your own debt.

If you had plans of only having an apartment while you're in school, then you have to search for places free of this agreement. If you have plans for the summer or breaks that occur outside of the Amherst area, then you are basically out of luck when it comes to paying rent for a space you're not using.

Before you are even able to get an apartment in the first place, you need a guarantor if you've never rented before or if you don't make an adequate income.

This leads to painful phone calls to family members (or anyone willing to be harassed for money) begging for signatures and notaries. If they plan on paying for it, then you're off the hook and sitting pretty for the next year.

If you're paying for it, then your guarantor has gone from a once loving person to someone who will hunt you down every time rent is due with possible death threats and extremely long voicemails.

Basically, you can have the freedom of being outside the dorm, but now the ball and chain has been switched from the residential staff to the land lord. You can have your own room, your own kitchen, your own bathroom and your own debt.

The holes in your pocket only worsen if you live far enough off campus that you require some mode of transportation other than a bus to get to class. Anyone who has ever been a commuter to UMass will tell you, parking services is the antichrist.

After you've paid unnecessary amounts for a parking spot, chances are you won't even get a spot even close to where you're going. If you decide to get honorary and defy the color code of the parking lots, then you'll have a nice parking ticket to add to your collection.

Moving out of the dorms is a hassle. Whether you see it as a part of growing up or a part of your wallet, it's hard to ignore the road blocks on the way to the freedom of living on your own.

The best thing you can do to get out of the dorms is buckle down, get all the information you need, be prepared with any paper work, and win the lottery.

Leigh Greaney is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu.

Misguided American values

Eric Magazu

"He has told you, O man, what is good; and what does the Lord require of you but to do justice, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with your God?" These are the words of Micah, a Prophet of Israel who preached in the eighth century before Christ.

Micah is often publicly quoted in Jewish and Christian contexts because of the eloquence and universality of his words. One such invocation was by Massachusetts Governor John Winthrop, America's first founding father, when the first large group of pilgrims landed on the shores of America in 1630. Therefore, as American patriots, Micah's words should hold meaning with us.

In a time when leading political figures teach us that we are fighting terrorists across the globe because of the threat to our liberty and democracy, and they say we must strive to advance humanity's march towards freedom by expanding Western values throughout the earth, it becomes especially important to examine these values.

It is equally important to analyze the ambitions of our declared adversaries. It is easy for politicians to make broad statements implicating the evil motives of another culture, but reality bears witness otherwise.

While it is true that human nature is corrupted and self-interested, and can be declared to be evil, this is the universal flaw of all mankind, not the unique trait of one civilization. On the contrary, few rational people are able to continue in support of a prolonged cause unless they believe their motives to be right and just.

This is the position in which America finds herself in her declared global war on terror. If a man is sincere in his motives and clear in his conscience, he will find that our declared antagonists are indeed not motivated by evil.

This is not to argue that all of the actions of our adversaries are acceptable, as many of their actions are wrong. It is only to be argued that their motivations have an explanation rooted in justice.

What we have seen in America's cause abroad is not an expansion of the values of Western civilization, but rather of a destitute and corrupt people. The values that America promotes abroad are coarseness in economic exchanges and depravity in social relationships. It is this corruption that induces the most devoted Muslims to choose to fight rather than submit.

Lest anyone object by saying that America only seeks to bring self-rule and democracy to the Middle East, reality testifies that this is not the case. If we offered self-rule, Muslims in the Middle East will invariably choose a way of life guided by Islamic law and traditions.

Rather than self-government, our cause is to undermine the authority of Islam, and in its place to teach people to enjoy the values of sporting events, nightclubs and drinking parties.

We want to teach Muslims that it is more important to go to the mall, buy American products and see American movies, rather than consider what a man ought to do to live rightly before God and his neighbor. Our leaders believe that if they accomplish this objective, the will of Muslims to resist our corrupt way of life will be broken.

If this seems to be an indictment of our American way of life, it is, though the author recognizes that he is often the first in error. We have been conditioned in America to this corrupt way of life through several decades of poor education in our public schools.

The ancient Greeks, and successive generations of wise people, taught us that it is essential to teach the correct values in our schools, because what is taught there will, a generation later, reflect the state of our whole nation.

The values that America promotes abroad are coarseness in economic exchanges and depravity in social relationships.

Since our schools have abandoned God and truth, why should we be surprised when it appears that modern Western civilization has abandoned God and truth?

Our founders had a fondness of believing that America was established as a new order for the ages, as a special nation that would bring the ideals of humanity's highest aspirations to the world.

In a large part, America has accomplished much, but we have lost our way. In what seems to be a common error for nations that have been chosen for a special mission, we have begun to believe that our being a chosen nation is inherent in our very existence, instead of conditioned upon the grace of a sovereign God.

When we consider our cause abroad, and our desire to spread Western ideas to other cultures, we should be able to have confidence that the values we teach are truly those that advance the freedom of mankind.

In our present state of affairs, we are misguided by an ambition that rests on a shallow foundation of pride. Instead of advancing freedom, we are advancing darkness.

If we look to the principles taught by Micah, those of justice, mercy and humility, and follow them, we will find that there is no power that can pose any threat to us. We will restore the light of our cities as a model for the world to emulate.

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at emagazu@gmail.com

APPLY FOR THE MOST EXCLUSIVE JOB ON CAMPUS

SEND AN E-MAIL TO:

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

An oily problem for Exxon

C.A. Chase

Over the last few weeks, news about the Venezuelan oil crisis has presented itself for readers to mull over at breakfast.

Some of the key actors, the champions, politicos and supermodels involved have surely given the reporting more than a cursory glance during the most important meal of the day.

Venezuela, the fourth largest supplier of crude oil to the U.S., has nationalized its oil, and corporate chaos has ensued.

This has brought up questions of American involvement, slicing up Venezuela into a banana republic to sprinkle into the political/corporate cereal (a decidedly non-granola cereal for sure). Is this the breakfast of champions?

I can't say, as I don't like bananas and I haven't taken an econ class yet, but President Hugo Chavez, partly in a GQ interview with hot-tempered supermodel Naomi Campbell, thinks not.

In this case, however, late author Kurt Vonnegut's persuasive tropes would be more appropriate than the rhetorical splendor that is Naomi Campbell.

Campbell interviewed Chavez for GQ Magazine, where she now works as a contributing editor. In her move from the catwalk to questions of oil cartels, she has not broadened her interests to include politics:

"I'd always heard Hugo Chavez was a people's president and I wanted to see if that was true ... I didn't want to judge Chavez, or probe him for his political views, even though he gave them freely."

Some puff quotes of particular note include her calling Chavez a "rebel angel," Chavez calling Bush the emperor with no clothes ("Like the fairy-tale, the emperor [Bush] is naked. We've seen the emperor's ass."), and Castro as the world's best-dressed leader ("His uniform is impeccable. His boots are polished, his beard is elegant").

A perhaps more illuminating source, The New York Times, goes a little deeper than questions of Chavez's personality. On Sunday, he told the U.S. he would stop oil exports if Exxon Mobil is allowed to freeze Venezuelan oil assets, as U.S. courts have ruled.

Chavez nationalized Venezuela's oil, causing Exxon Mobil to withdraw from the country. Chavez has accused of Exxon Mobil and the US of "mounting a conspiracy to destabilize Venezuela," as the New York Times put it.

Someone who undoubtedly focused more on the personality side of Venezuela, given that Chavez is proving to be something of a ladies man, is former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger.

Henry the K, who dated Bond Girl Jill St. John, must be seething with rage at being ousted as a politico player (although Tiffany Case is generally not considered to be the best Bond Girl).

Is it too much to expect Kissinger to mull over advising a lame-duck Bush to stage a coup in Caracas? So don't be surprised if everyone's favorite Republican realpolitiker decides to have a little banana republic with his Wheaties. (Fun fact: Nixon liked to eat cottage cheese with ketchup for breakfast.)

If this seems a little too below-the-Beltway, just remember Kissinger's aphorism, "power is the ultimate aphrodisiac." Whatever works to get the ladies – including getting your hands dirty in an Exxon-Venezuelan oil spill.

Although there is no evidence linking Kissinger to Venezuela and Exxon, no evidence is needed. Kissinger has been on everything from RAND Corporation (1961-1968) to the Chairman of the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America (1983-1984). There was also something called "Operation Condor." Someone should look into that.

If there are links to be invented, they would be all too easy to fabricate. Because once you go Bond, you never go back.

Politics isn't the most glamorous of professions, and if you want to act as an intellectual sugar daddy to the presidents from Nixon on down, then its got to hurt when the supermodels flock to Chavez. What to do, what to do. Now that's political theory.

Although there is no evidence linking Kissinger to Venezuela and Exxon, no evidence is needed.

And as most do not consider Hannah Arnedt to fall into the bond girl/super model paradigm, no one would really blame Kissinger if he nudged Bush towards invading Venezuela.

Kissinger has already advised Bush on the Iraq War (Journalist Bob Woodward has quoted Kissinger as saying "victory is the only meaningful exit strategy" in the Washington Post).

Chavez's political philosophy is that of Bolivarianism. Indeed, the 1999 new constitution changed Venezuela's name to the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela.

Chavez's application of Bolivarianism (taken from Latin American revolutionary Simon Bolivar) is resistance to imperialism via Venezuelan control of the Venezuelan economy and government, bolstering a participatory democracy, promoting social welfare and income redistribution over a free market economy.

How all of this meshes with an oil-rich economy and Venezuela's placement as a stopping point for Colombian cocaine makes for an interesting interview with Naomi Campbell.

Or should have made for an interesting interview with our man Henry the K. I doubt that Campbell, who has been quoted as saying "I hate Bush," would do to well with Kissinger.

I'm not sure what the spectrum of supermodel politics runs, but I doubt you'd find too many willing to play ping-pong diplomacy on K Street.

C.A. Chase is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at cchase@student.umass.edu

Not your usual suspects

BY STEPHANIE MCPHERSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With all the snow and slush and flooding lately, a celebration for winter is the last thing on everyone's minds. Add into the mix some great music and senses of humor, however, and this frigid season might be a little more tolerable.

The University of Massachusetts Vocal Suspects will perform their free Winter Wonderland concert at 7 p.m. at Mahar auditorium Saturday, after over a month-long postponement from last semester. The performance will feature the UVM Topcats and MC Mr. Napkins. Admission is free.

The Vocal Suspects, one of the a cappella groups at UMass, is a fun-loving, costume wearing group of undergrads. Originally established in 1998 by then-student Dave Piper, it has since grown to include 20 students of various interests and backgrounds who share one passion – performing.

"I think we're a group that's about more than a cappella," said Alice Bergin, a UMass junior and the business manager of the Vocal Suspects. "We just really like having fun, and it just happens that we have fun doing a cappella."

This relaxed atmosphere is very much prevalent in their shows, which usually include themed decorations, costumed singers whenever they have the excuse and a lot of dancing. With such a diversity of majors, this group really is about having fun.

"We've got people from ... engineering to English, nursing, communications ... we have every major except music, actually ... we've got one BDIC for musical therapy," said Bergin.

This singing group isn't all fun and games, though, rehearsing at least six hours per week, they know how to get serious, and it's because of this they have earned respect around the UMass campus, and abroad.

According to Bergin, the Vocal Suspects are "becoming a go-to group on campus for professional receptions." Frequently invited to perform at UMass events, word has quickly spread that they are the group to hire, and because those gigs pay, the Suspects are able to put on student performances for free.

Each semester, the Vocal Suspects do at least three concerts. The fall semester includes the "Hollahween" show, the "Save the Turkey" show/canned food drive, and the final concert. In the spring, they arrange an a cappella festival called "Acappellooza," where groups from around campus and around the country are invited to perform at UMass.

The Suspects do more than just perform in the Pioneer Valley. They travel all across the state to do shows and compete. For the past seven years, the group has been competing in the International Championship of A Cappella, a competition that brings a cappella groups from around the world together in one competition. For two of the past three years, the Suspects have won first place in the quarterfinals. On March 1, they return to Wellesley College to compete once more, accompanied by another UMass a cappella group, the Dynamics.

They are currently in the process of recording their third CD. When that is wrapped up, they begin work on a new album, filled with more current songs. These recordings can be found in the campus store, or purchased at Vocal Suspects' concerts.

The songs filling both the CD's and the Suspects' concerts are ones that will be very familiar to anyone who listens to the radio. The group sings popular songs, old and new, that have been arranged by their own members.

In the past, a successful competition song was Imogen Heap's "Hide and Seek," which the Suspects perform in a powerful harmony with all 20 members. Last semester's repertoire included songs like "Zoot Suit Riot" by Cherry Poppin' Daddies, "Send Me on My Way" by Rusted Root, and the all-around favorite "What Goes Around Comes Around" by Justin Timberlake.

Brett Steele, a UMass sophomore and gig manager for the Vocal Suspects, loves when the group performs "What Goes Around Comes Around" "just because we sing it with the most energy, and Danny [Green] does an amazing job on the solo."

The fans seem to agree. Bergin recalled that "when we premiered 'What Goes Around Comes Around,' halfway through the intro the audience realized what we were singing and started applauding."

It's that kind of fan appreciation that makes the Vocal Suspects so happy to perform again and again. "I think it's interaction that makes it a cappella," said Michelle Lee, a senior member of Vocal Suspects.

And of course, the Suspects do everything they do – silly costumes and decoration, hours upon hours of rehearsal and song arrangements – for the students of UMass who love to see them perform.

"We always try to do concerts Saturday night and [there are] many things going on campus, yet people choose to come to our concert; it really makes you feel good that that's what they want to do right now," said Steele.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcphers@student.umass.edu.

Trio hits home-run

Chromatics expand its sound on new LP

BY JOE STAHL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

From Chromatics' past albums to its most recent, "Night Drive", their sound has shifted from Sonic Youth-like post-punk to a more cosmic and synthesized sound similar to AIR or Junior Boys.

Old fans could agree that Chromatics sold out their initial sound, but this does not mean the Chromatics is not good at what they do now. With the help of their contemporaries on their current record label, Italians Do It Better (IDIB), the Chromatics will bedrock you until the morning light.

With the release of "Nite" in 2006, Chromatics dignified their new glamorous sound. On "Nite," they sound like an Italian Daft Punk trying to throw a disco fever party. Before "Nite" was released, Chromatics hadn't come out with an LP in two years.

Over those two years, they've gained and lost members, somehow putting producer Johnny Jewel in the forefront of this newest project. Jewel has taken IDIB artists to great heights in the electronica world. For example, Jewel is credited for the dark electro beats of Glass Candy, a successful IDIB band made up of former Chromatics members.

"Night Drive" is as sexy and seductive as the evocative album cover. Ruth Radalet takes hold of the microphone for the recording.

Radalet has a soft and slightly sensual voice, but often comes off emotionally detached. In "Tomorrow is So Far Away," a song that reminisces something from the "Twilight Zone," Radalet sounds like an ice princess in Alaska where the sun never sets. In the album's entirety, the reverb in the synthesized keyboards makes the music sound as lonely as an empty dance floor.

The trio making up the Chromatics hit a home run on the fantastic Kate Bush cover, "Running Up That Hill." Chromatics almost does it as good as when the Junior Boys did their magic on their reinterpretation of the splendid, "Sleep Tonight", originally created by Stars.

The isolated sound that is made a theme on this record is captured by the nearly sixteen minute minimalist track, "Tick of the Clock." Endless tracks similar to the latter mirror typical music you would hear in a horror movie. "Night Drive" leaves you on edge with eerie electronic staccatos and creepy song titles (eg. "The Killing Spree"). To title this LP "Night Drive" was an accurate move. The digital mysticism that takes over the record is much like the desolation and elusiveness you feel on a drive at night.

Occasionally, Chromatics incorporates down-tempo '80s beats that serve as silver linings from the dreary tones often expressed.

"Night Drive" is without a doubt an introverted and deeply personal record. IDIB label has pushed the trio into being a laptop band, hands down. As a newbie to electronica, Chromatics makes a worthy effort to deserve some attention from fans of bands like Groove Armada, Fatboy Slim or Zero 7. This record is best appreciated in solitude, otherwise you will surely miss out on a plethora of subtle content that shapes this hushed album.

Joe Stahl can be reached at jstahl@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY CHROMATICS

Over the past two years Chromatics has released a handful of albums and EP's, but its latest effort "Night Drive" is its best release to date.

The Source

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of Western Mass.

Friday, February 15

MUSIC

Zolotoj Plyos, a traditional Russian folk group that uses over 20 different instruments, will play the Earle Recital Hall at Smith College. The show starts at 7 p.m. and is free and open to the public.

THEATER

A presentation of "The Vagina Monologues" will take place from 8 p.m. – 10 p.m. in the Chapin Auditorium at Mount Holyoke College. A second performance takes place in the same location from 2 p.m.-5 p.m. Saturday. Tickets are $5.

THEATER

Performances of "Scratch & Burn," a play written and directed by Teo Castellanos, will take place on Friday and Saturday. The original piece links stories of war traditions with hip-hop movement while keeping the question "When is war not the answer?" in mind. Both performances are scheduled for 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Tickets are $15 for the general public, $8 for seniors and $5 for students with valid ID.

DANCE

Saturday, February 16

Salsa Night at Smith College. First, salsa dance lessons will take place in the Carroll Room of the Campus Center from 7-9 p.m. A dance party will follow until 1 a.m. Admission is $3 per person and $5 per couple.

DATING

Saturday, February 16

"Turn Me On – Speed Dating and Black-light Party" is planned for the Chapin Auditorium at Smith College. Hosted by WMHC and The Network, this event starts at 9 p.m. with speed-dating followed by a black-light dance party DJ'd by some of the area's best. The price is $2 if you arrive before speed-dating ends, $3 for Five College Students with ID and $5 for the general public.

MUSIC

The Iron Horse in Northampton, The Primate Fiasco will be performing The Beatles' pivotal album "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band." The show will start at 10 p.m. Tickets are $10 in advance and $13 at the door.

PERFORMANCE

"Grand Tour Flute Concert" takes place Sunday at 4 p.m. in Sweeny Concert Hall at Smith College. The show, free and open to the public, will include international flute pieces performed by flutist Ellen Redman and pianist Clifton J. Noble, Jr.

Compiled by Allie Roth, Collegian Staff

Is your organization having an event? Let us know at Arts@dailycollegian.com.

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 2/15/2008 thru Thurs. 2/21/2008
Purchase Tickets @ cinemark.com

Definitely, Maybe (PG-13)* 1:20 4:00 7:35 10:25
Jumper (PG-13)* 1:00 4:05 7:10 9:35
Step Up 2 The Streets (PG-13)* 1:50 4:45 7:30 9:55
The Spiderwick Chronicles (PG)* 1:40 4:30 6:55 9:25
Fool's Gold (PG-13)* 1:35 4:40 7:25 10:05
Welcome Home Roscoe Jenkins (PG-13)* 1:25 4:20 7:00 9:50

27 Dresses (PG-13) 1:10 4:10 7:05 9:45
Strange Wilderness (R) 1:55 4:55 7:45 9:55
Atonement (R) 1:30 4:25 7:20 10:10
The Eye (PG-13) 1:15 4:35 7:50 10:20
National Treasure: The Book Of Secrets (PG) 1:05 4:15 7:15 10:15
The Bucket List (PG-13) 1:45 4:30 7:35 10:00

* NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVORS
TICKETS AND INFO AVAILABLE AT CINEMARK.COM

Top five worst Best Picture Oscar winners

By Kevin Koczwara
Collegian Staff

With the Oscars scheduled for Feb. 24, it was a good idea to look over the Best Picture winners of years past. After looking over the history, it became very clear that some of the winners just didn't deserve the award and were not the best movie of the year. This is a short list of five movies that won the Oscar for Best Picture and didn't deserve the award.

Rocky (1976)

The good thing about "Rocky" is that the ending isn't predictable. That's about it. The rest is montage after montage. It is a great rainy day movie when the only thing on TV is "Rocky" and "Rambo," but not Best Picture worthy. Let's be serious here for a moment, Sylvester Stallone can't act his way out of a box. His lack of acting talent is the reason to as why there are five "Rocky" movies and another "Rambo" just came out instead of Stallone trying other roles. There is no argument when it comes to the movies that challenged "Rocky" that year for best picture. It wasn't a better picture than Scorsese's masterpiece "Taxi Driver." "Taxi Driver" was robbed of Best Actor and Best Director with a performance of a lifetime by Robert DeNiro and Scorsese's directing.

Forrest Gump (1994)

"Forrest Gump" is somehow remembered as great and always brings a laugh to peoples' faces when mentioned. A laugh for a movie like this, it is like watching a sloth climb to its next sleeping position. Grass grows faster than this movie progresses from start to finish. The movie's concept is admirable and an enormous task to undertake. Telling the story of the second half of 20th century in America through one man is unique, but the movie as a whole wasn't good enough to win Best Picture in 1995. People either love or hate "Forrest Gump." A Best Picture should have some middle ground in the opinions of people. "Forrest Gump" beat out "Pulp Fiction," "Quiz Show" and "The Shawshank Redemption" for the award "The Shawshank Redemption" is by far a better movie, and Morgan Freeman narrates it. Maybe it was a joke by the Academy and if it it was, it wasn't funny and It's time to stop the joke.

The English Patient (1996)

"Fargo" didn't win best picture this year. "Fargo" is a film noir that packs in quirky dialogue, deep Minnesota accents, murder, Steve Buschemi, William H. Macy and, most importantly, the Coen Brothers' writing and directing into an hour and a half. "The English Patient" is another three-hour epic like "Titanic," that the Academy seemed to love.

It is also another love story and it takes three hours to resolve the ending. What happened to great love stories like "Casablanca" where it didn't take an entire afternoon to feel the true impact of love and friendship? "The English Patient" is like getting a root canal: It just doesn't seem to end, and when it does, you're numb.

Titanic (1997)

